Here shall they make their ransome on the sand,
Or with their blood staine this discoloured shore.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 1.

The best soile commonly yields the worst aire, a dry sandy plat is fitest to build upon, and such as is rather hilly than plains full of downes, a cotswold country, as being most commodious for hawking, hunting, wood, waters, and all manner of pleasures.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 260.

Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grasing the tender herb, were interpos'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

When we came as high as the South Foreland, we left them standing on their course, keeping on the back of the Goodwin Sands: and we luft in for the Downs, where we anchored September 16, 1691.
Dampier. Voyage. Conclusion.

On the 11th [June 1771] we run up the channel, at six in the morning of the 12th we passed Beachy Head, at noon we were a-breast of Dover, and about three came to an anchor in the Downs, and went a-shore at Deal.
Cook. First Voyage. Conclusion.

DOWN, ad. } Tooke agrees with Camden
Down, prep. } that this word has proceeded
Do'WNWARD. } from Dufen,—a British word
Do'WNWARDS. } in the opinion of the former,—a Saxon word in that of the latter, and the past part. of the A. S. verb, Duf-ian, mergere, to sink, to plunge, to dive, to dip. The corruption, he conceives to have proceeded thus, duf-en, dun, dun, don, down. He adds, "in most of the passages in which the preposition or adverb down is used in English, the sense of this past part. is clearly expressed, and, without the least straining or twisting, the acknowledged participle may be put instead of the supposed preposition; although there may perhaps be some passages, in which the preposition down is used, where the meaning of the participle may not so plainly appear," (Diversions of Purley, i. 450.) Down, the noun, he asserts to be the same word, though he does not explain how a word, which, according to himself, means, "sunk, depressum, deep, or low," is to be applied to "a hill, a rising ground."

The editor of the 8vo edition of the Diversions of Purley suggests that down, adown, is a contraction of A. S. Ofdune, of, or from hill, down hill: of dune, he adds, is interpreted by Lye, Deorsum, downward, and he quotes a passage from Boethius, with the A. S. translation by Alfred, and the English by Chaucer, to shew that the same Latin word (pronum) is by the one rendered of dune, and by the other adown.

Down is sometimes used as a verb, and is equivalent to,—to sink, to depress, to suppress, to subdue.

It is also used with a subaudition of the verb as in Locke: Bread will down; i. e. go down. Down with them; i. e. pull them, throw them, knock them down.

Down, literally, always expresses descent either in space or time, (met.) from a higher to a lower, superior to inferior, better to a worse state or condition.

It is also much used in composition, and gives birth to some words of great force.

For that me schulde ys chauntement yse,
He lette hym make wyngon, an hey for to fle.
And tho he was y flowe an hey, & ne cowthe not a ligte,
A doun mid so gret eir to the erthe he fel and pigte,
That al to peses he to rof, that beter hym hadde y be,
Haue bi leued ther doune, than y lerned for to fle.
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

The saetares [shooters] douward all uor nogt vaste alowe to grounde,
So that Herald thoru the neye [eye] yssotte was dethe's wounde.—Id. p. 362.

But my fadir geueth you verry breed of heauen. For it is verry bred that cometh doun fro heuene, and gyueth lyf to the world.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 6.

Take any thing that heauy be,
As stone or lead or thing of weight,
And bere it neuer so hie on height,
Let go thine hand, it falleth downe.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

Right so say I by fire or sowne,
Or smoke, or other things light,
Alway they seke vpward on height,
Light things vp, and downward charge. (i. e. weight.)
Id. Ib.

Whan that she fill, so as she might,
Her clothes with hir honde she right,
That no man dounewarde fro the knee,
Shuld any thynge of hir see.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Furthermore I hearing the voyce of his wordis, as I had bene oppressed with sleape, was casten downe groueling vpon the erthe.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 10.

The mountaynes shall consume vnder him, and the valleyes shal cleue asunder: lyke as waxe consumeth at the fyre, and as the waters runne downeward.
Bible, 1551. Micheas, c. 1.

The hidden beauties seem'd in wait to lie,
To down proud hearts that would not willing die.
Sir P. Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

A stranger knight, said he, vnknown by name,
But known by fame, and by an Hebene speare,
With which, he all that met him, downe did beare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

And you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking: if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down.—Shakes. Mer. Wives of Windsor, Act iii. sc. 5.

For it appeares by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriu'd against the very life
Of the defendant; and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearst.
Downe therefore, and beg mercy of the Duke.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act iv. sc. 1.

Whom universal nature did lament,
When by the rout that made the hideous roar
His goary visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?
Milton. Lycidas.

Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing,
Such notes, as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek.
Id. Il Penseroso.

Whose presence as along she went,
The pretty flowers did greet,
As though their heads they downward bent,
With homage to her feet.—Drayton. Eclogue 9.

Michael, the warlike prince, does downwards fly,
Swift as the journies of the sight,
Swift as the race of light,
And with his winged will cuts through the yielding sky.
Cowley. The Plagues of Egypt.

If he at any time calls for victuals between meals use him nothing but dry bread. If he be hungry more than wanton, bread alone will down; if he be not hungry it is not fit he should eat.—Locke. On Education, s. 14.

This said, with nectar she her son anoints:
Infusing vigour through his mortal joints;
Down from his head the liquid odour ran,
He breath'd of heav'n and look'd above a man.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Lord Argyll, who was then in Holland, asked at first twenty thousand pounds for buying a stock of arms and ammunition, which he afterwards brought down to eight thousand pounds and a thousand horses to be sent into Scotland.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1683.

The monks in those houses abounding in wealth and living at ease and in idleness did so degenerate, that, from the twelfth century downward, their reputation abated much.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1559.

Ever in motion; now 'tis Faith ascends,
Now Hope, now Charity, that upward tends
And downwards with diffusive good descends.
Dryden. Eleonora.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye,
And when his chariot downward drives to bed,
His ball is with the same suffusion red.
Garth. Ovid. Met. b. xx.

Let no dank Will mislead you to the heath:
Dancing in mirky night, o'er fen and lake
He glows, to draw you downward to your death,
In his bewitch'd, low, marshy, willow brake.
Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands.

DOWSE. Skinner says, from the Dut. Douwen, to strike with the fist on the back. A douce in the face is used in vulgar speech for a blow in the face. To douce is used (met. by Hammond) as equivalent to—

To plunge, to immerse.

I have wash'd my feet in mire or ink, douz'd my carnal affections in all the vileness of the world, and how shall I defile them with grace, pollute them with chastity, defame or profane them with any thoughts of holiness.
Hammond Works, vol. iv. p. 515.

For anointed hee was very often and used to sweate before a light fire, and then upon it to be douced [perfundebatur] in water lake warme, or else heated with long standing in the sunne.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 75.

Clow. My master means him there that's cast down.
Lap. How sweetly does this fellow take his douse.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act iv. sc. 1.

It is no jesting, trivial matter,
To swing i' th' air, or douse in water
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

DOWSETT. Douced, (in Chaucer) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, may be a corruption of doucete, which is the name of a musical instrument, in a poem of Lydgate's. MS. Bodl.

There were trumpes and trumpetes
Lowde shallys and doucetes.

Dousett of a deer,—Fr. Douset, sweet, from Lat. Dulcis, cibus gratissimus et suavissimus.

And many an other pipe
That craftely began to pape
Both in douced and in rede
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

Fresh cheese, and dowsets, curds and clouted creame
Spic'd syllibubs, and cyder of the best.—Drayton, Ecl. 9.

As for my father's anger, now thou dar'st fight, ne'er fear it, for I've the dowsets of his gravity fast in a string.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act iv. sc. 1.

DOXOLOGY. Mid. Lat. Doxologia; Gr. Δοξη, glory, and λογος, a word or saying. See the examples, which explain the usage.

The ancient Greek copies have not those words of doxology; and there is reason to think that they came in out of the liturgies of the Greek Church, where (as now in many places) the custom was, when the Lord's prayer had been recited by the Presbyter, for the people to answer, by way of doxology, (as after the reading of every Psalm a [Glory be to the Father,] &c.) For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 76.

We do I say hereby partly acknowledge, and praise the supereminent perfections of God above all things in all kinds of excellency, joining in that seraphical doxology (which to utter is the continual employment of the blessed Spirits above) who incessantly day and night cry out Holy, Holy, Holy.—Barrow. On the Lord's Prayer.

DOXY. Skinner says, I know not whether from the Dut. Docken, to give quickly.

Moll. Sirrah, where's your doxy? halt not with me.
Omnes. Doxy! Moll, what's that?
Moll. His wench.
Middleton. The Roaring Girl, Act i. sc. 1.

Hear. Rogue enough, tho', to offer us his what d'calls, his doxies.—Brome. The Merry Beggars, Act ii.

Whilst you, my dainty doxies, take possession of her privileges and enter the territories with colours flying.
Otway. Friendship in Fashion, Act v. sc. 1.

DOZE, v. } Dut. Duyselen,—to stupify, to DO'ZINESS. } be stupid, (Skinner.) And see DO'ZY. } DAZE.

To be or cause to be stupid, dull, heavy, sleepy.

Dos'd with his fumes, and heavy with his load,
They found him snoring in his cork abode;
And seiz'd with youthful arms the drunken god.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 6.

A man who by a violent fit of the gout in his limbs finds a dizziness in his head, or a want of appetite in his stomach remov'd, desires to be eased too of the pain of his feet or hands (for wherever there is pain, there is a desire to get rid of it).—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dizzy head to raise.
Dryden Persius, Sat 3.

The one side resembles Cerberus barking for a sop; the other resembles him, when, after he has received it, he wraps himself up in his own warm skin, and enjoys a comfortable doze.—Knox. Ess. No. 9.

DO'ZEN. } Fr. Douzaine; It. Dozzina,
DO'ZE-PEERS. } dozzena. Duodecim, duo et decem, two and ten.

Douse, doce, doze-peers, i. e. dozen-peers. See the quotation from Fabian.

Of Peyto, and of other two, and dozze pers of France.
R. Gloucester, p. 200.

The duze pers of France were that tyme at Parys.
R. Brunne, p. 81.

Of which ther was a dozein in that house,
Worthy to ben stewardes of rent and lond
Of any lord that is in Englelond,
To maken him live by his propre good,
In honour detteles.—Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 580.

And tho that beare bowes in their hond
Of the precious laurer so notable
Be such as were I woll ye vnderstond
Noble knights of the round table,
And eke the douse peris honourable.
Id. The Floure and the Leafe.

And this conclusion hath he halfe a doze tymes in his boke, that the will may compell the witte and captiuate it, to beleue what a mã listeth.—Tyndall. Works, p. 338.

And whan the realme of Fraunce was fallen to him, he was crowned by the assent of the twelve douse-piers of Fraunce.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 31.

For to brynge this warre to the more effectuall ende, he [Charles Martel] chase, xii. perys, which after some wryters, are callyd douzeperys, or kynges, of ye which vi. were bisshopys, and vi. temporall lords.—Fabyan. Works, vol. i. c. 155.

The third article of the charge, viz. In the case between Hody and Hody, he received a dozen of buttons of the value of £50. about a fortnight after the cause was ended.
State Trials. Lord Bacon, an. 1620.

Pops in the town more easily will pass;
One story makes a statutable ass:
But such in plays must be much thicker sown,
Like yolks of eggs, a dozen beat in one.
Dryden. Prologue to Sir Martin Mar-all.

The trades which employ but a small number of hands, run most easily into such combinations. Half a dozen wool combers, perhaps, are necessary to keep a thousand spinners and weavers at work.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. i. b. i. c. 10.

DRAB, v. } Scortum, prostibulum, elegans
DRAB, n. } vocabulum, (says Skinner,) from DRA'BBER. } the A. S. Drabbe; D. Drabbe;
DRA'BBING, n. } Ger. Draber, fæces, (dregs, lees)
DRA'BBISH. } q.d.; fex populi, the dregs of DRA'BBLING. } the people; perhaps from A. S. Draf-an, drif-an, expellere, ejicere, to drive out, cast out. (See DRAFF, infra.) Applied to—

Dirty, vulgar, and depraved women.

To drab,—to associate with, keep the company of drabs; follow their habits or manners. Drabbling is the diminutive.

Now then louest not thou thy husband, because he is coupled vnto thee by God's lawes, & God's commaundment, but because thou art vsed vnto his loue before? so doe drabbes and harlots, whiche for like cause loue their louers: and thou art not far vnlike vnto those drabbes.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 16.

And as the flame did grow in bulke,
and gan for to increase:
So did the waxen image (lo)
by smale and smale decrease.
I markte the drabbishe sorceters, and harde their dismall spell.—Drant. Horace, b. i Sat 8.

And if the consequent of this objection bee now admitted: then men might by the self-same reason run to brothels, dice-houses, taverns, alehouses, to whore, to drab, to drink themselves drunke, and cast away all their estates at one desperate throw.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. sc. 2.

The miserable rogue must steal no more,
Nor drink, nor drab.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act iii. sc. 2.

And to what do'st thou addict thy time now, more than to those antique painted drabs that are stil affected of young courtiers.—Marston. The Malcontent, Act i. sc. 3.

——— I well know him
For a most insatiate drabber.
Massinger. The City Madam, Act iv. sc. 2.

——— Which of all the virtues
(But drunkenness, and drabbing, thy two morals)
Have not I reach'd to.
Beaum. & Fletch. Four Plays in One.

He loves a nasty, foul-fed, fulsome drab.
Otway. The Atheist, Act iii. sc. 2.

And who should all this rabble meet,
But Gnossy, drabbling in the street.
King. Art of Love, pt. iv.

A lord his youth in ev'ry vice
Indulged, but chief in drabs and dice,
Till worn by age, disease and gout:
Then nature modestly gave out.
Cambridge. A Dialogue between an M.P. and his Servant.

DRAB-CO'LOUR, i. e. Drape-colour; the colour of Fuller's earth. See DRAPE.

The man was about fifty-two, had a small cane under his arm,—was dress'd in a dark drab coloured coat, waistcoat and breeches, which seem'd to have seen some years service.
Sterne. Sentimental Journey, The Mystery.

DRACHM. Lat. Drachma; Gr. Δραχμη, from Δραττεσθαι, that is, to contain; because it comprised as many small coins (called Κερματα) as any one could hold, or contain, or shut up in the hand. See the quotation from Plutarch. Applied to—

A small portion or quantity. See DRAM.

And it seemeth they did use of old time, certain little iron money, and in some places copper money, called obeliscs, from whence the small pieces of money now extant are called obols, whereof six made a drachma, so termed for that it was as much as the hand could gripe.
North. Plutarch, p. 378.

I've but a drachm of learning, and less wit,
Yet that's enough to fright my wealth from it,
As if those two seldom or never meet,
But like two generals that with bullets greet
Brome. To his Friend, Mr. J. B.

What a deal of hypocrisy is everywhere to be met with, men making a mighty noise with religion, and being zealous, even to bigotry, for that mode of it which they have taken up, and yet not having one drachm of inward sense of that which it obligeth them to.—Sharpe, vol. vi. Ser. 5.

This basket, says he, cost me at the wholesale merchant's an hundred drachms, which is all I have in the world. I shall quickly make two hundred of it, by selling it in retail.
Spectator, No. 560.

Demosthenes and Æschines, with eight more, were sent ambassadors to Philip of Macedon, and their appointments for above four months were a thousand drachmas, which is less than a drachma a-day for each ambassador.
Hume. Ess. Of Populousness of Ancient Nations.

DRAD, i. e. Dread, (qv. infra.)

And he sei wel, that he moste nede for honger dye
Or gelde hym to the emperour, as al vs pien seye,
And the emperoure's prison he dradde eke ful sore.
R. Gloucester, p. 57

The kynge's brethren, Aurele and Ambroxe,
Dradde, for here eritage, ymorthred for to be.—Id. p. 110.

In all nedes for the touns werre
He was and ate the first in armes dight
And certainly, but if that bokes erre
Saue Hector, most ydradde of any wight.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

This lorde a worthie ladie had
Unto his wife, which also drad
Her lordes death.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

He could not more effectually teache that, that nothing is to be drad of those that stedfastly beleue in Him
Udal. Marke, c. 4.

So from immortall race he does proceed,
That mortal hands may not withstand his might:
Drad for his derring doe, and bloudy deede,
For, all in bound and spoile is his delight
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Lyster the lewde captayne of this rout, thought that this man was meete to be a captaine among them, to the intent they might be the more dradde and feared of the people
Grafton. Edw. II. an. 1.

DRAFF. } Dut. and Sw. Draf. Skinner
DRA'FFY. } says, from Dralde, dregs, lees.
DRA'FTY. } (See DRAB.) Wachter thinks from the A. S. Drif-an, also written Draf-an, (to drive,) expellere, Draf-ed, draft, expulsus, expelled, cast out, cast away, winnowed away. Ihre thinks that this etymology does not account for the draff or dregs of beer; because they remain till the beer is drawn off; but, it may be observed, they are then expelled or cast out. Applied, metaphorically, to—

Any thing vile, and worthless.

—— Draf were hem levere
Than al the precious perreye, that eny pice weldeth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 163.

Why should I sowen draf out of my fist,
When I may sowen whete if that me list.
Chaucer. The Personas Prologue, v. 17,346.

Mine eres aken of thy drafty speche.
Id. Prologue to Melibeus, 13,851.

He suntred him, and hath his nedes spedde,
And I lie as a draf sak in my bedde.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4294.

For these commaundementes are but the verye lawe of Moses (the draffe of the Phareseis gloses clensed out) interpreted according to the pure word of God.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 200.

The all maner Monkes and Fryers and like draffe took dispensations of hym for the ordinaunces of theyr old fouders.—Id. Ib. p. 350.

No, give them grains their fill,
Husks draff to drink and swill.
If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine.
Jonson. The Just Indignation of the Author.

Not feeding the people with husks and draffe, with colocynths and gourds, with gay tulips and useless daffodills, but with the bread of life, and medicinal plants springing from the margin of the fountations of salvation.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

The dregs and draffy part, disgrace and jealousie,
I scorn thee, and contemn thee.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act iv. sc. 1.

Which all within is drafty sluttish geere,
Fit for the oven, or the kitchen fire.—Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 2.

DRAFT. Draw or draugh, drawed or draughed, draugh'd, draught, draft. (See Dravgt, and Draw.) Lit.—

Any thing drawn; as sea-charts, plans, &c. Any attraction.

Kyng Richard arose (for this communicacion had he sittyng on a draffe, a conuenient carpet for suche a counsail.)—Hall. Rich. III. an. 1.

So great a mistresse of her art shee was,
And perfectly practis'd in woman's craft,
That though therein himselfe he thought to pass,
And by his false allurements wylie draft,
Had thousand women of their love beraft,
Yet now he was surpris'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

These thoughts, I say, put our men on thinking where to go, and the drafts or sea-plats being first consulted, it was concluded to go to certain islands lying in lat. 23° north, called Piscadores.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

DRAG, v. } Written by Chaucer Drugge.
DRAG, n. } A. S. Drag-an, trahere, vehere, to DRA'GGLE. } draw, to carry; Dut. and Ger. Tracken; Sw. Drag-a. Draggle is the diminutive. To draw, pull, hale along.

And at the gate he proffer'd his service,
To dregge and draw, what so men would devise.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1418.

Yet doth frere Barns as farre outrunne him in raylyng, as he draggeth behinde him in reasoning.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 735.

The saide large people of the king may have and enjoy their free passage in the said riuer (that is to say, of the Seuerne,) with flotes and droppes, and all maner of marchandises, and other goods and chattels at their will, without disturbance of any.—Rastall. Old Statutes, p. 241.

Therefore they sacrifice unto their net, and burn incence unto their drag; because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous.—Bible. Habakkuk, i. 16.

Howbeit their bodies were afterwards drawne foorth of the loch with drags.
Holinshed. History of Scotland. Malcolme, an. 1034.

Oft ers are dragg'd away, or must be driven,
She only saw her time and stept to heaven.
Carliwright. On a Virtuous Young Gentlewoman.

To which may be added the great riots, committed by the Forresters and Welsh on the draymen of Severn, hewing all their boats to pieces.—Hale. H. P. C. c. 14. s. 7.

These nets, though woven by their hearts, yet were to catch his heart, which when framed once, they used as draughs to draw him into such sins as otherwise were against his heart ever to have committed.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 446.

But as their quarrell was trayterous, so their hearts were soone quelled, each one saving himselfe by flight, wherein about twenty of those bemired souldiers were slaine, and no other cry heard, but down with the draggle-tails.
Speed. Q. Maria, b. ix. c. 22. s. 43.

While Arcite lives in bliss, the story turns
Where hopeless Palamon in prison mourns.
For six long years immured, the captive knight
Had drag'd his chains, and scarcely seen the light.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

His dragging tail hung in the dirt,
Which on his rider he would flirt,
Still as his tender side he prickt
With arm'd heel, or with unarm'd kickt.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

—— And now had Menelaus won
Immortal fame, his rival dragg'd away,
But Venus mark'd the moment, snapp'd the brace,
Though stubborn, by a slaughtered ox supplied,
And the void helmet follow'd as he pull'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

DRA'GON, n. } Fr. Dragon; Sp. Dragon; It. Dragone, dracone; Lat. Draco; Gr. Δρακων, from DRA'GONESS. } δρακον, by transposition for DRA'GONET. } εδρακον, from δερκειν, that is, βλεπειν, to see; quod
DRA'GONISH. } dracones acute cernant, immo et insomnes sint; because they are keen-sighted, and ever awake, (Vossius.)

Dragon,—the plant, so called because spotted like the dragon, (Skinner.)

Out of the dragone's mouth twel leomes ther stode there.
R. Gloucester, p. 151.

In an isle, that called was Colcos
Beyond Troie eastward in the see
That there was a ram, that men might see
That had a flees of gold, that shone so bright
That no where was there such an other sight
But it was kept alway with a dragoun.
Chaucer. Legend. Of Hypsiphile & Medea.

Behold from Tenedos aloof in calm seas through the deepe
(I quake to tell) two serpents great with foldynge great do sweepe.
And syde by side in dragone wise, to shore their way they make.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. ii.

This beastes dragonishe speache maye well be esteemed, and taken for none other but for ye bloudye, murtheringe, suspendynge, excommunicatinge and banyshinge of the good Emperor of the Grecians, because he dyd take al images out of the churches.—Usual. Revelacion, c. 13.

Whom when they had taken knowledge of, by the purple ensigne of a dragon fitted to the top of a very high haunce, as if it had been the pendant alough of a serpent, a certaine tribune of one troupe stood still, &c.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 14.

Th'soones that dreadfull dragon they espie
Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill,
But all so soone, as he from farre descride
Those glistering armes, that heauen with light did fill,
He rous'd himselfe full blythe, and hast'ned them vntill.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

One that would wiser seeme then all the rest,
Warn'd him not touch: for, yet perhaps remain'd
Some ling'ring life within his hollowe brest,
Or in his wombe might lurke some hidden nest
Of many dragonets, his fruitfull seed.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 12.

—— Instantly she gaue command
(Ill to ill adding,) that the dragonesse
Should bring it vp.—Chapman. A Hymn to Apollo.

And it may be, that the delicate-coloured dragon flies may have likewise some corrosive quality.
Bacon. Natural History, s. 729.

Ant. Sometime we see a clow'd that's dragonish,
A vapour sometime, like a beare, or lyon.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 12.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with unchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence.
Milton. Comus, v. 395.

On a rising ground above the tents is St George on a brown steed striking with his sword at the dragon, which is flying in the air, and already pierced through the forehead with a spear, on which is a flag with the cross of Saint George.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 1.

So when great Cox, at his mechanic call,
Lets orient pearls from golden dragons fall,
Each little dragonet, with brazen grin,
Gapes for the precious prize and gulps it in.
Mason. An Epistle to Dr. Shebbeare.

DRAGO'ON, v. } In the decline of the empire, certain standard bearers were called Dracenarii, i. e. bearers of the Standard of the Dragon. (See the quotation from Holland's Ammianus, under the word Dragon.) And hence the name appears to have been perpetuated, after the cause had ceased. Skinner thinks that, in modern times, dragoons are so called because they are as destructive as dragons, and like them seem to vomit fire.
DRAGO'ON, n.
DRAGO'ONADE.
DRAGO'ONER.
DRAGO'ONING, n.

Reports and judgments will not do't,
But 'tis dragoons, and horse and foot:
Words are but wind, but blows come home;
A stout tongu'd lawyer's but a mome,
Compar'd to a stout file leader.
Brome. On Sir G. B. his Def.

Sir Nicholas Slanning with three hundred musqueteers, had fallen upon, and beaten their reserve of dragooners.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 283.

I do not doubt but you will easily imagine that if in Italy, Spain, Portugal, &c. the inquisition, and in France their dragooning, and in other parts those severities that are used to force men to the national religion, were taken away; and instead thereof the toleration proposed by the author were set up, the true religion would be a gainer by it.
Locke. Second Letter concerning Toleration.

She by degrees began to look upon me as a very silly fellow, and being resolved to regard merit more than any thing else in the persons who made their applications to her, she married a captain of dragoons, who happened to be beating up for recruits in those parts.—Spectator, No. 261.

To which such clear answers were writ, that what effect soever that artifice might have, where it was supported by the authority of a great king, and the terror of ill usage, and a dragoonade in conclusion, yet it succeeded ill in England.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1686.

The mode of inquisition and dragooning is going out of fashion in the old world; and I should not confide much to their efficacy in the new.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

Persecution is not more virtuous in a Protestant than a Papist, and while we blame Lewis the Fourteenth, for his dragoons and his galleys, we ought, when power comes into our hands, to use it with greater equity.
Johnson. The Patriot, (1774.)

DRAIL. Corrupted from draggle, the dim. of drag, (qv.)

The footemen which are a chosen number out of the youth, and placed before the battell, neither going too hastily before the horsemen, nor drailing after, but marching in proportionable measure with them.
Steele. Tacitus, p. 250.

The old man, whose tongue wags faster than his teeth
(For old age by nature doth drivel and drail)
Will stir and will fling like a dog in a string,
If he warm his cold blood with a pot of good ale.
F. Beaumont. The Excoriation of Ale.

If we would keep our garment clean, it is not sufficient to wash it only, unless we have also a continual care to keep it from drailing in the dirt.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 12.

DRAIN, v. } Skinner and Junius from Fr.
DRAIN, n. } Trainer; Lat. Trahere, to DRA'INER. } draw: Tooke from A. S. Dryg-
DRA'INING, n. } an, exuere, expellere, and, therefore, siccare, Drag, (y in dryg-an, being changed into a broad) is the regular past tense of dryg-an; by adding to it the participial termination en, we have drag-en, drag-n, dran or dracn; applied to that by which any fluid (or other thing) is excussum or expulsum, shaken off or expelled. (See Tooke, ii. 225.)

To draw off, to cause to run or flow off, to exhaust, to empty, to dry.

Get the palme, and beare away the prize
Touching this thing, set atwene vs twaine
Of life or death, which we shall draine.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

Hence all land drained from the sea belongs, by the common law, to the crown (as Stanford says) de jure gentium.
State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

He himself through terrour permitted those of Rome to exhaust and drain the wealth of England.
Camden. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1596

Here also it receiueth the Baston dreane, Longfot dreane, Deeping drrane, and thence goeth by Wickham into the sea, taking withall on the right hand sundry other dreanes.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 15.

But I am informed that the drayners of the fenns have of late, with incredible care, cost, art, and industry, wrested the mace out of this bayliff's hand, and have secured this county against his power for the future.
Fuller. Worthies. Bedfordshire.

No marvell, if the drayning of water by descent doth make it fresh.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 2.

Who [the Phœnix] not by corn or hearbs his life sustains
But the sweet essence of amomum drains:
And watches the rich gums Arabia bears,
While yet in tender dew they drop their tears.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xv.

It [the meat] was then laid in such a position as to permit the juices to drain from it, till the next morning, when it was again salted, packed into a cask, and covered with pickle.—Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. b. iii. c. 8.

DRAKE. 1. Sea drake, draco marinus, quia mare et fluvios ut draco terram populatur. 2. An engine of war, (q. d.) draco: because like a dragon it vomits forth fire, (Skinner.)

The common bird, perhaps from the Ger. and Dut. Dreck (dreg) mud; because it delights in mud.

And for to speaken ouer this,
In this parte of the aire it is,
That men full ofte sene by night
The fire in sondrie forme alight.
Sometyme the fire drake it seemeth.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And as hee wolde awei fle
His thoughte ther stode Diveles thre,
Al brennyng as a drake.—Ritson. Kyng of Tars, v. 408.

Alon. You have scap'd by miracle, there is not in all Spain, a spirit of more fury than this fire drake.
Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife & have a Wife, Act i. sc. 1.

Play at duck and drake with my mony.
Id. The Chances, Act iv. sc. 2.

The twelfth is the dark drake fly, good in August, the body made with black wool, lapt about with black silk, his wings are made with the mil of a black drake, with a black head.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 5.

But finding many to fall, and there was no probability of doing any good, they retreated, leaving two drakes behind them.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 114.

DRAM, n. (See Drachm.) Applied literally and metaphorically to—
A very small portion or quantity.

Duke. I am sory for thee, thou art come to answere
A stonie aduersary, an inhuman wretch,
Vncapable of pitty, voyd, and empty
From any dram of mercie.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iv. sc. 1.

Thy face is no true table of thy mind:
And thou wouldst neuer show thyselfe so kind,
Wert not thy thoughts are hatching some deceit:
Whilst with vaine hopes thou go'st about to fill me,
I wot whereto those drams of fauour tend,
Least by my death thy cruelties should end,
Thou think'st by giving life again to kill me.
Stirling. Aurora, Son. 43.

Let but fond parents humour their little offspring, and indulge their children to sip wine frequently, and they will generally grow up to the love of it long before nature needs it, and by this means they will imagine drams are daily necessary for their support, by that time they are arrived at the age of man or woman.—Watts. On Education, s. 3.

A lady in China, who indulges a passion for gaming, often becomes a drunkard; and by flourishing a dice box in one hand, she generally comes to brandish a dram-cup in the other.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 101.

DRA'MA, n. DRAMA'TICK. DRAMA'TICAL. DRAMA'TICALLY. DRA'MATIST. } Lat. Drama; Gr. Δραμα, from the Dor. Δραν, i. e. agere, to act, wherefore also the parts or divisions of the drama are called acts. (Vossius.)

The Scripture also affords us a divine pastoral drama in the Song of Solomon, consisting of two persons, and a double chorus, as Origen rightly judges.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. 2. Introd.

Who [Jonson] in opinion made our learn'dst to stick,
Whether in poems rightly dramatic,
Strong Seneca or Plautus, he or they,
Should bear the buskin or the sock away.
Drayton. Elegies. To Henry Reynolds, Esq.

Dramaticall, or representative [poesy] is as it were, a visible history; for it sets out the image of things, as if they were present; and history, as if they were past.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii.

But God Almighty is that skilful dramatist, who always connecteth that of ours which went before, with what of his follows after, into good coherent sense; and will at last make it appear, that the thred of exact justice did run through all, and that rewards and punishments are measured out in geometrical proportion.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 879.

It helps to adorn the great drama and contrivances of God's providence, and ministers to excellent ends, tho' we, poor creatures, do little apprehend how it makes for them: as indeed it is impossible we should, unless we had the whole comprehension of things in our minds, and saw the entire scheme of God's government from the beginning to the end.
Sharpe, vol. i. ser. 13.

From hence, in my judgment, it proceeds, that as the Iliad was written while his spirit was in its greatest vigour, the whole structure of that work is dramatick and full of action.—Pope. On Homer, Postsc.

They are chiefly collected from his favourite author Cicero, who is known to have been an intimate friend of Roscius the actor, and a good judge of dramatical performances, as well as the most eloquent pleader of the time in which he liv'd.—Spectator, No. 141.

This plea, though it might save me dramatically, will damn me biographically, rendering my book from this very moment, a professed romance.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 8.

But the only poet, modern or ancient, who in the variety of his characters can vie with Homer, is our great English dramatist.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 5.

DRAPE, v. DRA'PER. DRA'PERY. DRA'PET. DRA'PING, n. } Draper, Skinner says, from the Fr. Drapier; It. Drappiere, panni mercator, (Sp. Trapera; Dut. Drapiere,) from the Fr. Drap, pannus, (It. Drappo; Sp. Trapo; Mid. Lat. Drappa, drappus. See Du Cange, and Spelman. Dut. Drapieren, exercere lanificam,) either, Skinner adds, from the verb, draper, to polish or fine wool by the art of the fuller; or from trampeten, to trample upon, tread upon; or from the Lat. Trapetum: trapetum itself is from τραπ-ειν, to tread.

"Fr. Draper,—to make or work cloath; to dress or full cloath; (Fr. Fouler, to tread,) to beat or thicken, as cloath in the fulling.—Of draperie, Cotgrave says, also, "a flourishing with leaves, and flowers in wood, or stone, used especially in the heads of pillers, and tearmed by our workmen drapery or cilery." In statuary or painting it is applied generally, to—
The dress, the fall or flow of the dress.

Ich have mad mueny knyght, bothe mercer and draper.
Piers Ploughman, p. 99.

For Spanish wooll in Flaunders draped is,
And euer hath bee.—Hackuyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 188.

By drapering of our wooll in substance
Lueth her commons, this is her gouernance,
Without wich they may not liue at ease.—Id. Ib. p. 189.

Cornehyll warde was sessyd at ccc. xv. li. wherof John Colynge & Robert Manhale, drapers, bare that one c. li. and ye laste, c. marke, & the rest was leuyed of xx. persones of ye sayd warde.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1389.

And so they repayred ye towne in certaine places, and determined to abyde the Heynowes, [Hainaulters] and to defende the towne, the which was a gret towne and full of drapery.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 45.

He [Hen. VII.] made also statutes for the maintenance of draperie, and the keeping of wools within the realme.—not prescribing prices, but stating them not to exceede a rate, that the clothier might drape according as he might afford
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 76.

——— When they come
Begin you first, and let the rest subscribe
Hard by your side, give 'em as little light
As drapers do their wares.
Beaum. & Fletch. Woman's Prize, Act iv. sc. 1.

Complaint was made in all humble manner, of many disorders, outrages, and oppressions committed upon occasion of letters patents granted to the Duke of Lenox, for searching and sealing of stuffs and manufactures, called by the name of new draperies.
State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Such the use thereof [Fuller's earth] in drapery, that good cloth can hardly be made without it, foreign parts affording neither so much, nor so good of this kind
Fuller. Worthies. Bedfordshire.

Thence she them brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables faire dispted,
And ready dight with drapets festuall,
Against the viands should be ministred.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

They had, however, outward distinctions amongst themselves, the merchant's wife made a better appearance than the draper's, the draper's than the cheesemonger's, and the cheesemonger's beyond the handy-craft tradesman's.
Female Tatler, No. 24.

Dick Serge was a draper in Cornhill, and passed eight years in prosperous diligence, without any care but to keep his books, or any ambition but to be in time an alderman.
Adventurer, No. 53.

It requires the nicest judgment to dispose the drapery, so that the folds shall have an easy communication, and gracefully follow each other, with such natural negligence as to look like the effect of chance, and at the same time show the figure under it to the utmost advantage.
Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. 4.

He op'd his gates, the naked exile led
Beneath his roof; a decent drapet thrown
O'er her cold limbs, and soothe her undeserved woes.
Fitzosborne. The Transformation of Lycon & Euphormius.

DRA'STICK. Gr. Δραστικος, able to act, efficacious. Applied to medicines acting strongly upon the intestines.

Within three or four days after this single taking of the drastick medicine had done working, he began to recover some degree of sight, and within a fortnight attained to such a one, that he himself assured the relater, he never was so sharp-sighted before his blindness.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 190.

DRAUGHT, n. DRAUGHT, v. } The past part. of Drag-an, to draugh, (now written, to draw.) Draughed, draugh'd, draught. See Draft, and To Draw.
Any thing drawn.
Upon this past part. the verb to draught has been formed; which is almost entirely restricted to men, or bodies of men, drawn off, with-drawn, from any place; or to horses, cattle, &c. It is not unusually prefixed, as draught-beast, &c.

Brittrick hir lord, that scho nouht wiste,
Unwarned drank therof a draught als him list.
R. Brunne, p. 13.

Ich counte conscience no more, by so ich cateche selver
That ich do to drynke, a draut of good ale.
Piers Ploughman, p. 403.

And doune on knees he gan to fall
And forth his necke and heed out straught
To drinke of that well a draught.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

At the chesse with me he gan to play
With her false draughts ful diuers
She stale on me. Id. Dreame.

——— He was wroth
And bent his bow, and forth he goth
Apace or two, and euen there
A large draught, vp to his eare
He drew, and with an arrow ground
Sharpe and new, the queene a wound
He gave. Id. Ib.

And tho' she [Medea] yafe hym drinke a draught,
Of whiche his youth agayne he caught
His head, his herte, and his visage
Liche vnto twenty wynter age.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

As for Democritus, he raised a great name of Apollonides Captidenes, and Dardanus of Phœnicia, as well by the books of Dardanus, his master, (which he fetched from out of his sepulchre, where they were bestowed,) as also by publishing commentaries of his owne, which were extracts and draughts out of those authors and their writings.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxx. c. 1.

And thus poetry and the writer's art, as in many respects it resembles the statuary's and the painter's, so in this more particularly, that it has its original draughts and models for study and practice; not for ostentation, to be shown abroad, or copy'd for publick view.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. i. s. 3.

Such are thy pictures; Kneller, such thy skill,
That nature seems obedient to thy will;
Comes out, and meets thy pencil in the draught;
Lives there, and wants but words to speak her thought.
Dryden. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

No less than forty thousand Negroes are annually imported on the king's account, to dig the mines, and we were credibly informed, that the last year but one before we arrived here, this number fell so short, probably from some epidemic disease, that twenty thousand more were draughted from the town of Rio.—Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 2.

As this plan was taken from the Spaniards, I cannot answer for its accuracy, but having seen two or three other Spanish draughts of the place, I conceive, by comparing them together, that this I have here inserted is not very distant from the truth.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 10.

DRAW, v. } A. S. Drag-an, (see DRAG, and DRAUGHT,) to draw, pull or DRA'WER. } hale.
DRA'WER.
DRA'WING, n.

To draw is opposed to, to push: to push denotes a motion from; to draw, a motion to or towards: it is distinguished from, to lead: to draw, includes physical force; to lead, does not. See DRIVE.

To draw away from; to abstract; (met. to detract,) to abduce.

To draw to or towards; to attract, to induce, to allure, to entice.

To draw in, to inhale; to draw out, to exhale.

To draw out of; to extract, to educe, to exhaust.

To draw out; to protract; to produce; to deduce or derive, and also to prolong, to delay.

To draw, (sc.) a line or superficies; to delineate, to describe, to sketch, to depicture, to portray.

To draw out, (sc.) in writing; to write, to set or put down; to sketch, (sc.) certain thoughts or notions; to take them from books or writings; and thus, also, to describe or delineate; to compose.

To draw off or withdraw, to retire, to retreat.

Drawing-room,—a room to which the company or part of the company withdraw, or retire from another room or apartment.

Tuelf ger he byleuede the here wyth nobleye y nou;
And heuxte [highest] men of mony loudes aboute hym vaste drou.—R. Gloucester, p. 180.

Alle the north ende was in his kepyng,
& alle the southe ende tille Edmunde thei drouh
R. Brunne, p. 32.

These lolleres latche drauceres, [drawers of latches] lewede eremytes
Coveyten the contrarie.—Piers Ploughman, p. 157.

And he wente and drough him to oon of the cyteseynes of that cuntre, and he sente him into his toun, to feed swyn.
Wicif. Luk, c. 15.

And sith thend is euery tales strength
And this mater is so behouely,
What should I paint or drauen it on length
To you that ben my frend so faithfully.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

The euen drauht of the wyer drawer, maketh the wyer to ben euen, & supply werching, & if he stinted in his drauht the wyer breaketh asonder.—Id. The Testament of Loue, b.iii.

But of vertu, whiche therof cam
Jason the dragon ouercam
And he anone the tethe out drough,
And set his oxen in his plough.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

—— Slouth,
The fourth drawer and the norice
To man of many a dreadfull vice
Hath yet another last of all, [sc. desperation]
Whiche many a man hath made to fall.—Id Ib. b iv.

And Chrisostome sayth very well, God drauweth vnto him, but he draweth the willing. For God will haue our good will, to be ioyned with his calling.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 76.

And there shall not cease to bee of you, bondemen and hewers of woode, and drawers of waters vnto the house of my God.—Bible, 1551. Joshua, c. 9.

They haue their wynes, spyces, and good breed, and we haue the drawyng out of the chaff, and drinke water.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 381.

He cast him downe to ground, and all along
Drew him through durt and mire without remorse
And fouly battered his comly corse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

The finest drawn-work cuff that ever was worn.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act ii. sc. 1.

So that this victorie chanced to King Henrie, without the drawing foorth of his sword and in such wise, that he could neuer haue wished for better or more speedie successe therein.
Holinshed. Hen. II. an. 1171.

Of this nature are the spirit of obsignation, belief of particular salvation, special influences, and comforts coming from a sense of the spirit of adoption, actual fervours, and present complacencies in devotion, spiritual joyes, which are but the drawings aside of the curtains of peace and eternity, and antepasts of immortality.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, s. 3.

—— Or thick as insects play,
The wandering nation of a summer's day,
Whom, drawn by milky steams, at evening hours,
Fly gather'd swarms surround the rural bowers.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The joiners in this country may not compare their work with that which the Europeans make; and in laying on the lack upon good and fine joined work, they frequently spoil the joynts, edges, or corners of drawers or cabinets.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

These are the ancient busts: the trunks of statues: the pieces of anatomy, the masterly rough drawings which are kept within; as the secret learning, the mystery, and fundamental knowledge of the art.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. i. s. 3.

Since we shall meet with persons every now and then who will be drawing us aside from the plain road of common sense into the wilds of abstraction, it is expedient for us to get acquainted with the country beforehand, to examine the windings and turnings of the labyrinth, or else they will mislead and perplex us strangely.
Search. Light of Nature, Introd.

In common speech, such bill is frequently called a draft, but a bill of exchange is the more legal as well as mercantile expression. The person, however, who writes this letter, is called in law the drawer, and he to whom it is written the drawee.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 30.

Draw-backs were given upon two different occasions. When the home manufactures were subject to any duty or excise, either the whole or part of it was frequently drawn back upon their exportation; and when foreign goods, liable to a duty, were imported, in order to be exported again, either the whole or a part of this duty was sometimes given back upon such exportation.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 1.

When they conceived a subject, they made a variety of sketches; then a finished drawing of the whole; after that a more correct drawing of every separate part,—heads, hands, feet, and pieces of drapery; they then painted the picture, and after all retouched it from the life.
Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. i.

DRAWL, v. } Dim. of Draw, (or corruption DRAWL, n. } of Draggle,) Ger. Draelen,—
To draw along slowly, tediously, idly; to draw out the words (to speak) in a slow, lingering tone.
Drawler, n. is in common usage in speech.

He enters into such a tedious and drawling tale of burning and burning, and lust and burning, that the dull argument itself burns too for want of stirring; and yet all this burning is not able to expel the frigidity of his brain.
Milton. Colasterion.

We should endeavour to go off with a good grace, not to end with a languishing and drawling sentence; but to close with dignity and spirit, that we may leave the hands of the hearers warm, and dismiss them with a favourable impression of the subject and of the speaker.—Blair, vol. ii. Lect. 23.

He, who in earnest studies o'er his part,
Will find true nature cling about his heart.
The modes of grief are not included all
In the white handkerchief and mournful drawl.
Lloyd. The Actor.

DRAY, n. A. S. Drag-an, to draw, (qv.) Barrett has, "A dray or sledde, which goeth without wheels." Also applied to—
A carriage with low, heavy wheels, dragged heavily along, as a brewer's dray.

We had proved there were 1400 weight of match, besides a dray-load more of match in the castle itself, when surrendered.—State Trials, an. 1648. Colonel Fiennes.

The Earl of Warwick himself, though he ventured to marry his grandson to one of Cromwel's daughters, would not be persuaded to sit with Col. Hewson and Col. Pride, whereof the one had been a shoemaker, and the other a dray-man: and had they driven no worse trade, I know not why any good man should refuse to act with them.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 139.

To descend lower, are not our streets filled with sagacious dray-men, and politicians in liveries?—Spectator, No. 307.

The morning came, when neighbour Hodge,
Who long had mark'd her airy lodge,
And destin'd all the treasure there
A gift to his expecting fair,
Climb'd like a squirrel to his dray,
And bore the worthless prize away.—Cowper. A Fable.

DRA'ZEL, or } A dirty slut, (South.)—
DRO'SSELL. } Grose and Ray.

Now dwels ech drossell in her glass
When I was yong, I wot
On holly-dayes (for seldome els
Such ydell times we got)
A tubb or paile of water cleere
Stood vs insteede of glas.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 47.

Who takes it for a special grace
To be their sully for a space,
That when the time's expir'd, the drazels
For ever may become his vassels.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

DREAD, v. } "A.S. Adread-an, timere, to fear, to be afraid; to DREAD, adj. dread or stand in fear of," (Somner.) "Ic hit eom, nellen ge eoth on-dræden. Yam-nyle ye drede, (Wiclif, Mark, c. 6.)
DREAD, n. } Dread-ful; full of dread or fear; fearful, timorous:
DRE'ADER. } also, causing dread, awe,
DRE'ADING, n. } fear; frightful, terrible, awful.
DRE'ADINGLY. } Dread-less; without dread, fear, or doubt. Out
DRE'ADFUL. } of drede,—out of doubt. See DOUBT.
DRE'ADFULLY. }
DRE'ADFULNESS. }
DRE'ADLESS. }
DRE'ADLESSNESS. }

Syre noble erl, he sede, & ge noble knygtes also,
Myd God wylle ic thanky gou, as ic wel aute do,
That ge me so muche loue shewyth & kun dede,
And syweth me in such pereyl, & in dethe's drede.
R. Gloucester, p. 452.

And an dredsul dragon from the west, come myd hym to fygte.—Id. p. 202.

Edward told William of Alfred all the case,
And praied him of help, for he dred harder pase.
R. Brunne, p. 32.

Mercy suld non haue Symon on his sonnes,
No raunson suld tham saue for doute of drede eftsones.
Id. p. 220.

The stones were of Rynes, the noyse dredfulle & grete.
It affraied the Sarasins. Id. p. 174.

Thei count nat of curryng. ne holy churche dreden.
Piers Ploughman, p. 136.

—— Ge sholde rath deye
Than eny dedliche synne do, for drede othr for pyere.
Id. p. 181.

—— Asyde he gan drawe
And dreadfulliche with drow hym, and dorst go no nerre.
Id. p. 324.

Lo the Aungel of the Lord apperid in slep to him and seide Joseph the sone of David nyle thou drede to take Marie thy wyf, for that thing that is born in hir is of the Hooly Goost.
Wiclif. Matt c. 1.

And thei gheden out and fledden fro the sepulcre for dreadde and quaking hadde assvlid hem, and to no man thei seiden eny thing for thei dredden.—Id. Mark, c. 16.

For whi sum abyding of doom is dredeful and the suyng of hir which schal waaste aduersaries.—Id. Ebrewis, c 10.

Thei dreden shame, and vices they resigne.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

The effect is this, that Alla out of drede
His moder slew, that moun men plainly rede,
For that she traitour was to hire ligeance.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5313.

O Golias, unmesurable of length,
How mighte David maken thee so mate?
So yonge, and of armure so desolate,
How dorst he loke upon thy dredful face?
Wel may men seen it was but Goddes grace.
Id. Ib. v. 5357.

And whan he saw his time, anon right he
With dredful herte and with ful humble chere
Salued hath his soveraine lady dere.
Id. The Frankeleine's Tale, v. 11621.

Ful tenderly beginneth she to wepe
She rist her vp, and dreadfully she quaketh
As doeth the branche that Zephirus shaketh
Id. Legend of Hypermnestre.

For dredeless me were leuer die
Than she of me aught els vnderstood
But that, that might sownen into good.
Id. Troilus, b. ii.

For dredeless it is not worth the while.—Id. Ib.

The poet of Thrace Orpheus, maked the hartes and hyndes to loynen dreadless her sydes to cruel lions.
Id. Boecius, b. iii.

Wherof thei dreden hym the more,
And brought nothynge to his ere,
But if it trouthe and reason were.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The kynge therof was full wo,
And for he molde hym fayne withdraw,
He told him many a dredefull sawe. Id. Ib. b. v.

My minde earnestly bent to the knowledge of navigation and hydrographie from my youth (most excellent my dread soueraigne) hath eftsoones beene moued by diligent studie to search out the chiefest points to them belonging.
Hacklyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 417.

These considerations may helpe to suppresse all dreads rising of hard euents in attempts made this way by other nations.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 145.

Oh! nuembre of false Babylon!
The shop of craft, the denne of ire!
Thy dredful dome drawes fast uppon:
Thy martyres blood by sword and tyre
In heaven and earth for justice call.
Surrey. Against London.

The residue [of the Bible] (with the New Testament) is to be reuerently touched, as a celestiall iewel or relyke, hauynge the chiefe interpretour of those bokes, trewe and constant faith, and dreadfully to set hands thereon, remembrynge Oza.—Sir T. Elyot, Governor, b. I. c. 11.

Sometymes makynge them afrayed with dreadfulnes of the great iudgement that was to come, eftsones appeasyng them.—Udal. Acles, c. 4.

If ye shal vpō the dreading of man, grow cleane out of kinde from the sincerities of preaching the ghospel: while ye labour to eschew light & transitorie misaduentures, ye shall fall into harmes for euer to endure.—Id. Luke, c. 12.

That dreadlesse hart which durst attempt the thought
To win thy will with mine for to consent,
Maintaines that vow which loue in me first wrought;
I loue thee still, and neuer shall repent.
Gascoigne. Flowers, the Constancie of a Louer.

But the lion, seeing Philoclea run away, bent his race to her ward, and was ready to seize himselfe on his prey, when Zelmane (to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessenes, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery) with swiftnesse of desire crossed him, and with force of affection struck him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. I.

And thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or if they sing, 't is with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's neare.
Shakespeare, son. 97.

——— And let be seene
That dreaded night in brightest day hath place,
And can the children of faire light deface.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 5.

[Dr. Hammond] chearfully went; telling the person that happen'd to be present, whose dreads in his behalf were not so easily deposited, that he should be as much in God's hands in the sick man's chamber as in his own.
Fell. Life of Dr. Hammond.

Be well aware, quoth then that ladie milde,
Least suddaine mischiefe ye too rash prouoke:
The danger hid, the place vnknowne and wilde
Breeds dreadfull doubts.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 1.

Who rising vp at last in ghastly wise,
Like troubled ghost did dreadfully appeare
As one that had no life him left through former feare.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 7.

He that never repents till a violent fear be upon him, till he apprehend himself to be in the jaws of death, ready to give up his unready and unprepared accounts, till he sees the judge sitting in all the addresses of dreadfulness and majesty, just now (as he believes) ready to pronounce that fearful and intolerable sentence of [go ye cursed into everlasting fire.] this man does nothing for the love of God, nothing for the love of virtue.—Bp. Taylor, pt. II. Ser. 6

Mistruatfully he trusteth, and
He dreadingly did dare,
And fortie passions in a trice
In him consort and square.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi c. 33.

A mightie lyon lord of all the wood,
Hauing his hunger throughly satisfide,
With pray of beasts, and spoile of liuing blood
Safe in his dreadless den him thought to hide.
Spenser. Visions of the World's Vanity, 10.

——— Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder.
Shakespeare. King Lear, Act iv. sc. 7.

If we desired his favour, and dreaded his displeasure above all things, we should overcome almost all temptations.
Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. II. s. 3.

A threatning rod did his dread right hand poize,
A badge of rule and terrour o'er the boys.
Otway. Windsor Castle.

——— And when
We shall our shining blades agen
Brandish in terrour o'er our heads,
They'll straight resume their wonted dreads.
Hudibras, pt. I. c. 3.

Whom, in her wrath to heav'n, the teeming earth
Produc'd the last of her gigantic birth;
A monster huge, and dreadful to the eye,
With rapid feet to run, or wings to fly.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

For this reason (that man may repent) it is that he hath annexed so many dreadful threatnings against the breakers of his law, and so many gracious promises to them that keep it.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. II. Ser. 37

Meantime, from every region of the sky
Red burning bolts in forky vengeance fly;
Dreadfully bright o'er seas and earth they glare,
And bursts of thunder rend th' encumber'd air.
Brome. Ecclesiasticus, c. 42.

By thine agony and bloody sweat.—This was the first scene of his dolorous passion, and is a great demonstration of the dreadfulness of his sufferings.
Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. II. s. 2.

Back on his son the father looks,
Praising his swift and even strokes,
Now dreadless, with bold art supplied,
He does on airy billows ride
And soar with an ambitious pride.
King. Art of Love, pt. vi.

Dread is a degree of permanent fear: an habitual and painful apprehension of some tremendous event.
Cogan. On the Passions, c. 1. s. 3.

And now as we are strangely apt to apply every thing wrong, too many, instead of the extreme of despondency, run into that profane boldness: and are very near looking upon sin, as nothing to be dreaded.—Seeker, vol. I. Ser. 20.

"His blood, said they, be on us, and on our children," a most fatal imprecation, and most dreadfully fulfilled upon them at the siege of Jerusalem, when the vengeance of heaven overtook them with a fury unexampled in the history of the world, when they were exposed at once to the horrors of famine, of sedition, of assassination, and the sword of the Romans.—Portens, vol. II. Lect. 22.

DREAM, v. } Dut. Droomen; Ger. Traumen; Sw. Dröma. Somniare, by metathesis from Lat. Dormire, to sleep, (Skinner.) Ihre thinks from the Celtic, Drem, visio, (q.d.) a nocturnal vision. The A. S. equivalent term is "Swefen—a vision in one's sleep," (Somner.)
DREAM, s.
DRE'AMER.
DRE'AMING, s.
DRE'AMINGLY.
DRE'AMFULL.
DRE'AMLESS.

To think during sleep; to think as if asleep; vainly, lazily, drowsily, sluggishly.

——— Long tyme ich slepte
Of gurles and of gilli laus [glory and praise] gretliche me dremede.—Piers Ploughman, p. 339.

How Daniel dymnede, and undude the dremeles
Of King Nabugodonosor.—Id. p. 163.

Let who so list a fole me call
For this trow I, and say for me
That dremes significance be
Of good and harme to many wights,
That dremen in her slepe a nights
Ful many things couertly
That fallen after all openly.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

No dreme, quod he, may so my herte agaste,
That I wol leten for to do my thinges
I sette not a straw by thy dreminges,
For swevens ben but vanitees and japes.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 13,055.

And other while I dreme, and mete,
That I alone with hir mete,
And that daunger is lefte behynde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And he awoke out of his swouen,
And clepeth, and men come anone,
And told his dreme.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Moreouer Joseph dreamed a dreame, and tolde it vnto his bretheren: wherfore they hated them yet the more, and he sayde vnto them: heare, I pray you, this dreame which I haue dreamed.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 37.

And when they sawe him afarre of before he came at them, they toke coūcel against him, for to slay him, and sayde one to another; Beholde this dreamer cōmeth.—Id. Ib.

They rather preferre their owne fancies before others experience, and deeme their owne reason to be cōmon welth, and other mens wisedome to be but dreaminge.
Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Two gates of sleepe there be, the one men say is made of horne,
Wherthrough by passage soft do sprites ascende with senses right.
That other gate doth shine, and is compact of yuery bright.
But false deceitful dreames that way the soules are woont to send.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

Ah, silly man who dream'st that honour stands
In ruling others, not thyself! thy slaves
Serve thee, and thou thy slaves;—in iron bands
Thy servile spirit with wild passions raves.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 8.

Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried.
Shakespeare. The Rape of Lucrece.

Dreams follow the temper of the body, and commonly proceed from trouble or disease, business or care, an active head and a restless mind, from fear or hope, from wine or passion, from fulness or emptiness, from phantastick remembrances or from some Dæmon good or bad.
Bp. Taylor, vol. I. Ser. 9.

Diuiners, dreamers, schoolmen, deep magicians,
All haue I try'd and all gave several meaning.
Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleased, Act iv. sc. 1.

And when we look upon this, we dreamingly affirm, that every thing that is, must of necessity be in some place and possess a certain room and space, and that whatsoever is not somewhere, either in earth or in heaven, is nothing.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 771.

Likewise all other nations except the savages of Mount Atlas in Barbary, which were reported to be both nameless and dreamelesse.—Camden. Remaines. Names.

When choler overflows, then dreams are bred
Of flames, and all the family of red;
Red dragons, and red beasts in sleep we view,
For humours are distinguish'd by their hue.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

I grant that the soul of a waking man is never without thought, because it is the condition of being awake: but whether sleeping without dreaming be not an affection of the whole man, mind as well as body, may be worth a waking man's consideration; it being hard to conceive, that any thing should think, and not be conscious of it.
Locke. Hum. Und. b. II. c. 1.

The dreams of sleeping men are, as I take it, all made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together.—Id. Ib.

The vision said: and vanish'd from his sight:
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright
Then pull'd his drowsy neighbour, and declar'd
What in his slumber he had seen and heard.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

He [Virgil] then gives us a list of imaginary persons, who very naturally lie within the shadow of the dream tree, as being of the same kind of make in themselves, and the materials (to use Shakspeare's phrase) the stuff of which dreams are made.—Tatler, No. 154.

But Christ himself neither saw a vision or dreamed a dream, but had intimate and immediate communication with the Father; he was in the Father's bosom; he and no man else, had seen the Father.
Sherlock. Works, vol. iv. Dis. 6.

While Reason sleeps, bending the vigour
Of manly actions down, through mournful shades
Of listless pleasing woe, she [Melancholy] impious leads
The dreamful fancy.
Michel. The Siege of Marseilles, Act v. sc. 1.

Even the remembrance of our dreamings will teach us some truths, and lay a foundation for a better acquaintance with human nature, both in the powers and in the frailties of it
Watts. The Improvement of the Mind, pt. I. c. 2.

"Tell me no more of fancy's gleam,
"No, father, no, 'twas not a dream;
"Alas! the dreamer first must sleep,
"I only watch'd, and wished to weep;
"But could not, for my burning brow
"Throbb'd to the very brain as now."
Lord Byron. The Giaour.

DREAR, adj. } A. S. Dreori, dreorig. Mœstus, dolens, tristis, lugubris. Sad, sorrowful, pensive, dreery. Dreorignysse,—sadness, pensiveness, sorrowfulnesse, dreerinesse, (Somner.) Ger. Traueren; Dut. Treuren, mœrere, dolere, tristari, to mourn, to grieve, to be sad or sorrowful.
DREA'RY.
DRE'ARILY.
DRE'ARIMENT.
DRE'ARINESS.
DRE'ARYHEAD.

Mournful, sorrowful, sad, full of sorrow, sadness or grief, melancholy, gloomy, dismal, distressful.

Tho seyde yeh myd drery mode, gyf hit welleth turne her thogt,
An sory be, & bete [abate] her synne, wolle vr Louerd vorgyue him ogt.—R. Gloucester, p. 351.

Ther is dreorneese and dredo. & the devel maister.
Piers Ploukman.

Thus chilling with her drerie destenie
Weping, she woke the night fro end to end.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

And hertis heauie for to recomfort
From drerihed, of houis nightes sorowe
Nature hed hem rise, and hem disport
Ayen the goodly glad grey morowe.
Id. The Black Knight.

For vnto wo accordeth complaining
And doleful chere vnto heauinesse
To sorow also, sighing and weping
And pitous mourning vnto dreerinesse.—Id. Ib.

And then he rose with drery chere
And goeth hym forth.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And since the storye is both new and trew,
A dreary tale much like these lotles of myne
I will assaye my muze for to renewe,
By rymyng out his froward fatall fine.
Gascoigne. Weedes. The Fruit of Fetters.

Or wherefore telles my toung, this dreary doleful tale—
That euery eare might heare my griefe and so bemone my bale.—Gascoigne. Complaint of the Greene Knight.

So that we were faine to cut our cables and hang ouer boord for fenders, somewhat to ease the ship's sides from the great and drery strokes of the yce.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 41.

He at the length was slaine, and lay'd on ground:
Yet holding fast 'twixt both his arms extended
Faire Pastorell, who with the self same wound
Lanc't through the arme, fell downe with him in drery
swound.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

Ah my deare daughter, ah my dearest dread,
What vncouth fit, said she, what euill plight
Hath thee opprest and with sad drearyhead
Changed thy lively cheare, and liuing made thee dead?
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

Onely what next to strifefull Hyle borders,
Particular visables deaths drearyhood
Can seize upon.—More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 4. s. 9.

With folded hands and knees full lowly bent
All night she watch't, ne once adowne would lay
Her dainty limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

There an huge heape of singults did oppresse
His struggling soule, and swelling throbs dispeach
His foltring tongue with pangs of dreariesse,
Choaking the remnant of his plaintife speach,
As if his dayes were come to their last reach.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 11.

His heart was drear, his hope was cross'd,
'Twas late, 'twas far the path was lost
That reach'd the neighbour-town.
Parnell. A Fairy Tale, in the Ancient English Style.

Alecto's breast with rage and envy glows,
To see the world possess'd of sweet repose,
Down to the dreary realms below she bends,
There summons a cabal of sister fiends.
King. Rufinus, or the Favourite.

Ye think, I doubt not, of a homeward course,
But Circe points me to the drear abode
Of Proserpine and Pluto, to consult
The spirit of Tiresias, Theban seer.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

I see, where late the verdant meadow smil'd,
A joyless desert, and a dreary wild.
Sir W. Jones. An Elegy from Petrarch.

Passing on through the dreariness of solitude, we found a party of soldiers from the fort working on the road, under the superintendence of a sergeant.
Johnson. A Journey to the Western Islands.

DREDGE, v. }
DREDGE, n. }
DRE'DGING, or }
DRE'DGING-BOX. } Dredge (Mr. Grose says) is a mixture of oats and barley, now little sown. Used met. by Holland and Brende, for a mixture or medley. By the latter, perhaps, for dreg.

To dredge or drudge, is—to scatter flour, sand, dust, &c.

Onely the Athenias, which euer defended obstinately the lyberties of their cõmon wealth, & which had not been accustomed to liue vnder the obedience of any, but vnder the lawes & customes of their country, would not agree, yt suche dredge of men [colluuionem hominum] should liue amongst them.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 293.

Your husband in an age was rising by burnt figs dreg'd [dredg'd] with meal and powdered sugar.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 1.

Dredge you a dish of plovers, there's the art on't.
Id. The Bloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 1.

And verily like as our naturall seed (as Zeno said) is a certain mixture and composition, derived and extracted from all the powers and faculties of soul; even so, in mine opinion, a man may say that choler is a miscellane seed (as it were (ε συναμμα) and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 108.

He shall be published, with all his comments, useful glosses, and indexes, of a vast copiousness, with cuts of the basting ladles, dripping pans and drudging boxes, &c. lately dug up at Rome, out of an old subterranean scullery.
King. Art of Cookery, Let. 5.

DREDGE, v. }
DREDGE, n. }
DRE'DGER. } A dredge, or dredge-net, is a drag or drag-net. Dut. Dreghnet.
To dredge, is—to drag.

The oysters [besides gathering by hand, at a great ebb] haue a peculiar dredge; which is a thick strong net, fastned to three spils of iron, and drawne at the boates sterne gathering whatsoeuer it meeteth lying in the bottome of the water.
Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 30.

In the houses we refreshed ourselues, and were all imbarked to come away, and then had sight of a brigandine or a dredger, which the general tooke within one houres chase with his two barges.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 786.

In the mouth of May the oysters cast their spaun, (which the dredgers call their spats,) it is like to a drop of candle, and about the bigness of a halfpenny
Sprat. History of the Royal Society, in Pennant.

In the month of May, the dredgers (by the law of the Admiralty court) have liberty to catch all manner of oysters, of what size soever.—Id. Ib.

Most of our coasts produce them [oysters] naturally, and in such places they are taken by dredging, and are become an article of commerce, both raw and pickled.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Oyster.

DREG, n. }
DRE'GGY. }
DRE'GGISH. } Ger. Dreck and druse; Dut. Dreck and droessem; Sw. Dragg; Eng. Dregs, dross; A. S. Dresten, faeces, dreggs, lees, grounds, or thick substance of any thing settled in the bottome. A. S. Dros, sordes, fæx, filth, draggs, lees, drosse, (Somner.) Wachter thinks from the Goth. Driusan, (A. S. Dreos-an,) to fall, and applied to that which falls, sinks, or settles to the bottom. Applied, consequentially, to,—

The foulness, or filthiness, the muddiness "of any thing settled in the bottom." Any thing foul, sordid, low, base, mean, worthless.

——— For ich couthe selle
Bothe dregges and draf, and drawe at one hole
Thicke ale and thynne ale.—Piers Ploughman, p. 267.

And here perceine yet the false wilnesse of the Deuill in vttering of his dreggys & poisoned draught.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 374.

So that there is nothinge that stoppeth this matter, saue only a few fryers, and such like, which, with the dreggys of our Englishe papistrie lurkinge amongys them, studye nothing els but to brewe battaile and strife betwixt both the people.—Ascham. Works, p. 111. Toxophilus.

Troy. What too curious dreg espies my sweete lady in the fountaine of our loue?
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 2.

And yet we see in her such pow'rs diuine,
As we could gladly thinke, from God she came.
Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame.
Drayton. Immortality of the Soul, s. 6.

As if one should attend only to this earth, which is but the lowest and most dreggy part of the universe.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 880.

And in England, I believe our much use of strong beer, and gross flesh, is a great occasion of dreggying our spirits, and corrupting them, till they shorten life.
Felthom, pt. 1. Res 95.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strongo.
Harvey. On Consumptions.

——— But with timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest them too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer to dispart
The husky, terrene dregs, from purer must.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Aireen, a Saracen philosopher and Mahometan in profession, speaks with abhorrence of those dreggy low delights, and on the contrary asserts, that the height of happiness is in the perfections of the soul united to God.
Bates. The Christian Religion proved by Reason, c. 1.

This manner, however, of drawing off a subject, or a peculiar mode of writing to the dregs, effectually precludes a revival of that subject or manner for some time for the future, the sated reader turns from it with a kind of literary nausea.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World. Let. 96.

DRENCH, v. }
DRENCH, n. } A.S. Drenc-an, adrencan; mergere, immergere, ingurgitare, to drown, plunge, or overwhelm, to drench, (Somner.) See DRUNK.

Dreint,—drenched, drench'd, drencht, drent or dreint.

To merge or immerge, to soak or steep, to souse or plunge, to drown, or overwhelm.

A drench,—any thing drunken.

Slakes of yrn mony on he pygte in Temese gronde,
Aboue scharpe & kene ynow, bi nethe grete & ronde
That, gef ther eny schippes come er me y war were,
Heo schulde picne hem thorn out & a drenche hem so there.—R. Gloucester, p. 51.

He gef hym a luther drench, & tho he hadde dronke yt so,
He bed hym lygre & slepe wel, that yt myghte do bet hym do.—Id. p. 151.

So that Homber Kyng of Hungri soththe bigan to fle
Into a gret water ther, & a dreynt hym self with schame.
R. Gloucester p. 24.

And after that the kyng deyde thorgh a drenche whiche vnwytyng the quene he dranke of hure makyng.
R. Brunne, p. 12. Note.

As some hongen hem self, and other while drencheth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 174.

But whoso sclaundrith oon of these smale that bileven in me, it speditb to him that a mylne stoone be hanged in his necke and he be drenchid in the depnesse of the see.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 18.

The folk was cast down in the see a tweye thousand, and thei weren dreynt in the see.—Id. Mark, c. 5.

O death, sens with this sorowe I am a fire
Thou either doe me anon in teares drenche
Or with thy cold stroke minue harte quench.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

Wel may men know, it was no wight but he
That kept the peple Ebrayke fro drenching,
With drye feet thurghout the see passing.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4609.

Min is the drenching in the see so wan.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2458.

What helpeth it to wepen full a strete
Or though ye both in salt teares drent
Bet is a time of cure ere thou of plaint.—Id. Troil. b. iv.

Him thought a man stood by his beddes side,
And him commanded, that he should abide.
And said him thus, if thou to morrow wende,
Thou shalt be dreint: my tale is at an end.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,088.

The stone was worth all other thinge:
He said, whiles he wold it weare,
There might no perill hym dere:
In water maie it not be dreint.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The shipmen stoode in suche a fere,
Was none that might himselfe bestere
But euer awaite vpon the lere
When that thei shulden drenche at ones.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

And this mischieuous membre, the tongue, is so farre outrageously wilde, and violent, nether is it vnruly only, but also drenched with deadly poyson.—Udal, James, c. 3.

We, sayle not now in a still and a quiet sea: but we have bene drenched and in a manner drowned with some stormes alreadie; and therefore we ought to have exceeding great care, and be wel advised aforehand, whom we have to be the steeres man.—Holland. Livie, p. 514.

Some with lettice-caps, some posset-drinks, some pills,
Twenty consulting here about a drench.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act v. sc. 1.

Ped. But what is't? French trash, made of rotten grapes,
And dregs and lees of Spain, with Welsh metheglin,
A drench to kill a horse!
Massinger. Great Duke of Florence, Act ii. sc. 2.

Which would not only retard my course, but endanger sickness also among my men, especially those who were ill provided with cloths, or were too lazy to shift themselves when they were drench'd with the rains.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1699.

Good shepherds after shearing, drench their sheep
And tarr their flocks father (forc'd from hurn to leap)
Swims down the stream, and plunges in the deep.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 3.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd;
And through a horn, the generous juice infus'd
Which timely taken op'd his closing jaws:
But, if too late, the patient's death did cause.—Id. Ib.

And now, Mars, driven from the dreadful field,
That he had drench'd with blood, Jove's awful spouse
And Pallas, reascending sought the skies.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Efficient causes may be exciting and disposing, as when hunger excites a horse to eat, or a farmer holds hay to his mouth: but when a farrier constrains him to take a drench, this is a compelling and constraining cause.
Watts. Scheme of Ontology, c. 10.

DRESS, v. }
DRESS, n. }
DRE'SSER. }
DRE'SSING, n. } Fr. Dresser; It. Drizzare; Lat. Dirigere, to direct, to set right or in order. See ADDRESS.

To set or put in order, to direct, to guide, to regulate, to rectify, to adjust; and further, to prepare, to provide, to furnish, to trim, to deck, to adorn; and also, to clothe: also to prepare (sc.) for food, to cook it.

In Chaucer to dress, is to address or direct oneself, to apply.

Dresser,—that which dresses; and also, that on which any thing is dressed or prepared.

The castelle now is golden, the kyng dos wardeyns wise
To kepe the lond & dres the folk for to justine.
R. Brunne, p. 327.

And schrewid thingis schulen be into dresnde thingis: [And croked thinges shall be made streyghte. Bible, 1551.] and scharpe thingis into pleyn weyes.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 3.

And the Lord dresse ghoure hertis [gyde your heartes. Bible, 1551.] in the charite of God, and in the pacience of Crist.—Id. 2 Thessalonians, c. 3.

For if a rich man him dresse,
To think to moch on richesse,
His hert on that so ferre is sette
That he his Creator doth foryette.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

No more of this make I now mentioun,
But to Griselde agen I wol me dresse,
And tell hire constance, and hire besinesse.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8883.

At alle times thou shalt blesse God, and prese him to dresse thy wayes.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

The lampe must be dressed and snuffed dayly, and that oyle poured in euery euening and morning, that the light goe not out.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 453.

Thē said he to the dresser of his vyneyarde, beholde, this thre yeare haue I come and sought frute in this fygge tree, & fynde none, cut it down.—Bible, 1551. Luke, c. 13.

Syr Kyng, Cryste greetyth the wele, and hys mylde moder Mary, with also John Baptyst & Peter, comaunde ye streyghtlye, yt no markettes nor scruyle warkys be holden vpon ye Sonday, in ye londys of thy lordeshyp—out take that longeth to dressynge of mete.—Fabyan. Works, vol. i. c. 237.

For the dressing of wooll hath beene euer an honest occupation for a good woman.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 2.

Women by nature pitiful, have eat
Their children (dress'd with their own hand) for meat.
Donne. Lamentations, c. 4.

Clar. Yet women sure, in such a case, are ever
More secret than men are.
Sil. Yea, and talk less.
Rom. That is a truth much fabled, never found.
You secret, when your dresses hide your vanities'!
Ford. The Fancies, Act iii. sc. 3.

Pul. I am glad of it.
Command my dresser to adorn her with
The robes that I gave orders for.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East.

Car. I will make one myself, and foot it finely;
And summoning your tenants at my dresser,
Which is, indeed, my drum, make a rare choice
Of the able youth.—Id. The Guardian, Act i. sc. 2.

The store of every fruitful field,
Ye nymphs at wid possessing,
From that variety they yield
Get flowers from every dressing.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 5.

And jealousy suffus'd, with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all she view'd, in tawny dress'd,
Down look'd, and with a cuckoo on her fist.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

And as hair to quadrupeds, so feathers are as commodious a dress to such as fly in the air, to birds, and some insects; not only a good guard against wet and cold, and a comfortable covering to such as hatch and brood their young, but also most commodious for their flight.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12.

I had not been there above a month, when, being in the kitchen, I saw some oatmeal on the dresser.
Spectator, No. 431.

But Christianity does not aim at what it is here falsely said to do: it does not attempt to take place of natural religion, on the contrary, it serves to support it: nay it is that very religion itself in a better dress, and with fences about it for its greater strength and efficacy.
Pearce, vol. i. Ser. 15.

The shepherd, the sorter of the wool, the wool comber or carder, the dyer, the scribbler, the spinner, the weaver, the fuller, the dresser, with many others, must all join their different arts in order to complete even this homely production.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 1.

When the cook brings out her flour, her sewet, her sugar, her raisins, they still are but what they were before, though laid ever so close upon the dresser.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 2.

DRETCH, v. } In Chaucer, Junius says, is,
DRETCHING, n. } to prolong time, to linger, to delay. Sw. Dröja, cunctari, which Ihre derives from Drag-a, trahere, trahere moras, to draw or prolong time; (to dredge,) and see Dr. Jamieson, in v. Dreich.

To prolong, to protract, to delay, to linger, to weary; to be tedious or tiresome, wearisome or troublesome, to trouble, to harass.

They don nought after Dominik, but dreecheth the puple.
Piers Ploughman. Crede

This Chaunteclere gan gronen in his throte,
As man that in his dreme is dretched sore.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,893.

For nece mine, this writen clerkes wise
That peril is with dretching.—Id. Troilus, b. iii.

And euer his [the hypocrite's] chere is sobre and softe,
And where he goth he biesseth ofte,
Wherof the bynne worlde he dretcheth.
Gower. Con. A b. i.

And for his doughter sende ageyn,
And praid hir fayre, and gan to sayn
That she no lenger wolde dretche,
But that she wolde anone forth fetche
Hir harpe, and don al that she can
To glad with that sory man.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

And if it so bytide this nyght,
That the in slepe dreche any wight,
Or any dremis mak the rad,
Turn ogayn, and say i bad.—Ritson. Ywaine & Gawaine.

DRIB, v. }
DRIB, n. }
DRI'BBER. }
DRI'BBLY, v. } To drip or drop, (b for p,) to do any thing by drops or drops; to do any thing by small degrees; to give or take small portions; to do any thing, to act, in a trifling or ineffiecacious manner.
DRI'BBLET. }
DRI'BBLING, n. }

To dribble is the diminutive.

Mr. Steevens, upon the passage below from Measure for Measure, says, "A dribber, in archery, was a term of contempt, which cannot be satisfactorily explained." But see the example from Ascham.

I saw diuers that were caried away thens in cribbes
Dasyng after dotterels, lyke drunkards that dribbes.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Not at the first sight, nor yet with a dribbed shot,
Love gave the wound.
Sidney. Arcadia. Stella & Astrophel.

So if a man be never so apt to shoote, nor never so well taughte in his youth to shoote, yet if he geue it over, and not use to shoote, truly when he shall be eyther compelled in warre time for his country's sake, or else provoked at home for his pleasure sake, to faule to his bowe; he shall become of a fayre archer, a starke squyrter and dribber.
Ascham. The School of Shotinge.

Duk. No: holy Father, throw away that thought,
Beleeue not that the dribbling dart of loue
Can pierce a compleat bosome.
Shakes. Meas. for Meas. Act i. sc. 4.

Howbeit, there passed some dribbling skirmishes betweene the rereward of the Carthaginians and the forlorne hope and vaunt-courriers of the Romanes.—Holland. Livius, p. 597.

For small temptations allure but dribbling offenders! but a great purchase will call such as both are most able of themselves, and will be most enabled hereby to compass dangerous projects.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

He charged each of them shake hands together,
And when they met to say, Good morrow brother;
Thus each quit other all old debts and dribblets,
And set the hare's head against the goose's giblets.
Harrington, b. i. Epig. 91.

And out of all's ill gotten store
He gives a dribbling to the poor,
In a hospital or school house.
Brome. Songs. The Reformation.

She keeps her birth day, you must send the cheer;
And she'll be born a hundred times a year.
With daily hes she dribs thee into cost,
That ear-ring dropt a stone, that ring is lost.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love, b. i.

Do not, I pray thee, the paper stain
With rhymes retail'd in dribbs.—Swift. On Gibbs's Psalms.

We'll take no blundering verse, no fustian tumor,
No dribbling love from this or that presumer,
No dull fat fool shamm'd on the stage for humour.
Dryden. Prol. Union of the two Companies, 1682.

Which receiver, although the corn be put into it by bushels, allows the grain to dribble only in small quantities into the central hole in the upper mill stone.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

DRIE. Scotch, Dree. Lye says,—"Drie, drien, tolerare, pati; A. S. Dreog-an, idem notat," i. e. to endure, to suffer. See Dree, in Jamieson, who considers Dreog-an to be radically the same with drag-an, to draw, to drag along. And see DRETCH.

Drye, in Le Bone Florence, wearisome. Gascoigne writes it Droy.

My Pandarus (qd Troilus) the sorow
Which that I drie, I may not long endure.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

Another time he should mightely
Comfort himselfe, and sain it was folie
So causelesse, such drede for to drie.—Id. Ib

That yet never they ne seygh
Man that myghte dreygh
To justy wyth Gyllroun.
Ritson. Lybeaus Disconus, l. 950.

A stepull then the lady aye,
Sche thoght the wey thedur full drye,
And thereat wolde sche bee.
Id. Le Bone Florence of Rome, l. 1588.

He which can in office drudge, and droy,
And crave of all.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

DRIFT, v. } See ADRIFT. Past part. of DRIFT, n. } Drif-an, adrifan, to drive, (qv.) drived, drive'd, drift.

To drift,—to move or cause to move along, like any thing driven, (sc.) by a stream, by a current of wind or water.

Drift, n. (met.) any thing driven or aimed at, or intended; the aim, intention or purpose.

At night we found much broken yce, and all this night it blewe very much winde, so that we lay in drift with the yce and our drift was south, for the wind was at north all this night, and we had great store of snow.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 450.

Thinking ourselves in good securitie, we were greatly endangered with a piece of drift yce, which the ebbe brought foorth of the sounds and came thwart vs ere we were aware.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 65.

But at the last they found ye meanes to contriue a drift to bring their matters to passe.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 303.

All his [Cardinal Wolsey] felicitie and inward joy hath euer bene to exercise that aungel's wit of his (as my Lord of Lincolne was wont to praise him,) in deuising of such drifftes to beguile all men and to binde the whole world withall.
Id. Ib. p. 373.

For that hereby thou might'st win confidence
With those, whom else thy curse might hap distract,
And all suspicion of thy drift remove;
Since easily men credit whom they love.
Daniel. Civil War, b. i.

The proper work of man, the grand drift of human life, is to follow reason, (that noble spark kindled in us from heaven, that princely and powerfull faculty, which is able to reach so lofty objects, and to atchieve so mighty works.)
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

The pieces of ice, both great and small, which broke from the island, I observed, drifted fast to the westward; that is, they left the island in that direction, and were in a few hours spread over a large space of sea.
Cook. Voyages, vol. iii. b. i. c. 3.

But so strangely perverse is his commentator, that he will suppose him to mean any thing rather than what the obvious drift of his argument requires.
Warburton. On Pope's Essay of Man.

Seeing no land in that direction, I stood back to the eastward about fifteen leagues, and met with nothing but drift-wood.—Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. b. iv. c. 8.

DRILL, v. }
DRILL, n. }
DRI'LLING, n. } "A. S. Thirl-ian, perforare, tornare, terebrare, penetrare: to pierce or bore through, to drill. Belgic, Drillen, trillen: and hereof our drill for a rivolet or watercourse; as piercing, penetrating through the ground for vent or passage." (Sommer.) Hence also a drill, for receiving seed; and the now common word drill-husbandry. Drill-bow and drill-plate, are used in mechanics.

To drill, is also to turn about, drive round, as in the act of boring; and hence, Wachter says, trillen, Eng. Drill, is—to harass or weary; and hence, further, trill-meister, drill-master, who harasses or wearies the soldiers by military exercise; and thus,—to bring or lead, to train, by constant practice or exercise.

Drill, is also a name given to an ape or baboon; perhaps contracted from drivel, (qv.)

Pio. I fir'd it; and gave him then three sweats
In the artillery yard three drilling dues,
And now he'll shoot a gun, and draw a sword, &c.
And fight with any man in Christendom.
Beaum. & Fletch. Martial Maid, Act iii. sc. 2.

——— Arcadius
Hath no acquaintance yet with rugged war,
More fit to drill a lady, than expose
His body to such dangers.—Id. Coronation, Act i. sc. 1.

So does a thirsty land drink up all the dew of heaven that wets its face and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drein of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 6.

He that but saw thy curious captain's drill,
Would think no more of Vlushing, or the Brill.
B. Jonson. A Speech according to Horace.

——— One of the admiral's east captains
Who swear, there being no war, nor hope of any,
The only drilling is to eat devoutly,
And to be ever drinking.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iii. sc. 1.

There was no water on this island but at one place on the east side, close by the sea, there it drills slowly down from the rocks where it may be received in vessels.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

Shall the difference of hair only on the skin, be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape, and want of reason and speech?—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6.

DRINK, v. DRINK, n. DRI'NKABLE. DRI'NKER. DRI'NKING, n. DRI'NKLESS. } Goth. Driygkan; A. S. Drincan, drencan; Dut. Drincken; Ger. Trincken; Sw. Dricka, potare, bibere. See DRUNK and DRENCH.

To draw in at the mouth and swallow, (sc.) any liquid; to draw in or imbibe, to absorb, to inhale, to receive or take in eagerly, like one thirsty; to receive or take in, (sc.) by the senses of hearing or seeing.

Drinkeyl, quoth this kyng agen, & bed hire drinke anon.
R. Gloucester, p. 118.

En tempre he was of mete, & drynke, and of slep also.
Id. p. 429.

The Englyase al the nygt bynore vaste bygon to synge
And spende al the nygt in glotonye & in dryngynge.
Id. p. 360.

Soudan so curteys neuer dranke no wyne.
R. Brunne, p. 188.

Lo Loth in us lyve yorowe lecherous drenke
Wickedliche wroght. âd wratthede God Al myghty
In hus dronkneese. Piers Ploughman, p. 14.

Than ye schulen bigynne to seye we an etun bifore thee and drunkun: and in oure streetis thou hast tauht.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 13.

As to litle children in Crist I ghaf to ghou mylk drynk not mete.—Id. 1 Corynthians, c. 3.

The sone of man cam etynge and drynkynge: and they seyen lo a man a gloutoun and a drynkere of wyn, and a frend of puppliceanes and of synful men.—Id. Matthew, c. 11.

The sonne of mă came eatynge and drynckynge, and they say, behold a glutton and dryncker of wine, and a frende vnto publicans and synners.—Bible, 1551. Matthew, c. 11.

For the tyme that is passid is ynow to the wille of hethene men to be endid, whiche walkidin in lecchories and lustis, in mych drynkyng of wyn, unmesurable etingis and drynkingis, and unleeful worschiping of mawmetis.
Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 4.

But specially I pray thee, hoste dere,
Gar us have mete and drinke, and make us chere
And we sal paien trewely at the full.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4130.

In euery thing, I wot there lieth measure
For though a man forbid dronkenesse,
He nought forbiddeth that euery creature
Be drinkeless. Id. Troilus, b. ii.

The more hydropisie drinketh,
The more hym thirsteth: for him thynketh,
That he maie neuer drinke his fille,
So that there maie no thynge fulfille
The lustes of his appetite. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For Bacchus was a glotton eke,
Hyre for the throte thei beseke,
That he it wolde washen ofte
With soute drinkes and with softe. Id. Ib.

And then he saith: O whiche a sorowe
It is for to be drinkeles. Id. Ib. b. vi.

At those words the kyng was sturred to such wrath, as hee couldie scarcely haue borne beyng sober: but hauynge then hys senses ouercome with drynke, leaped sodainly from the table.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 211.

For whan he gorged had himself with meates and drinkyng drown'd,
He bowed his necke to sleepe, and there he lay along the ground.
An hidious thing to sight.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. iii.

There lives she with the blessed Gods in blisse
There drinks the nectar with ambrosia mixt,
And ioyes enioyes, that mortal man doe misse.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar, November.

They sing loud anthems of his endless praise;
And with fix'd eyes drink in immortal rays.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. i.

Whoso of it [a fountaine] doth but onely taste
All former memory from him doth waste,
Not changing any other worke of nature,
But doth endowe the drinker with a feature
More lovely.—Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

Let every one of us keep the Sabbath spiritually; delighting in the meditation of the law, not in the ease of the body, wondering at the works of God, not indulging to delicious banquets, and softer drinkings or dancings, that do not better the understanding.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

On leaves of trees and bitter herbs she fed,
Heaven was her canopy, bare earth her bed,
So hardly lodg'd: and to digest her food,
She drank from troubled streams defil'd with mud.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

It is true, whilst we are in the body, there are some things necessary to our being in it, though not our being happy; as meat, and drink, and clothing, which are the ordinary means, whereby these houses of clay wherein we dwell, are supported and defended from wind and weather.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 112.

By this means the water would become drinkable with some coolness, from the beginning of the morning to nine or ten of the clock, after which it would grow distastefully hot.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 638.

Of bottles next succeeds a goodly train,
Full of what cheers the heart, and fires the brain.
Each waited on by a bright virgin glass,
Clean, sound, and shining like its drinker's lass.
Otway. Epistle to Mr. Duke.

And yet it is certain, that instead of thought, books, and study, most free-thinkers are the proselytes of a drinking-club.—Bp. Berkeley. The Minute Philosopher, Dial. 2.

To this I answer thus. If the glass be nothing else but an useful drinking-glass, and these words fully express what it is, to treat it accordingly is, indeed, to drink out of it, when there is occasion, and it is truly useful, and to break it designedly is to do what is wrong
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 1.

To this end the person who wanted to drink applied his mouth, and the assistant then taking his hand from the other, and admitting the air above, the cane immediately parted with its contents, which the drinker drew off till he was satisfied.—Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 3.

Stop it down: and in a few days it will be brisk, and drinkable.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. b. i. c. 1.

DRIP, v. DRI'PPING, n. } A. S. Driop-an, droppan; Dut. Druipen; Ger. Trieffen; Sw. Drupa; to drop, to distil. See DRIB, and DROP.

To fall or descend in very small portions or particles; to come in very small quantities.

Having roasted him enough,—let what was put into his belly, and what drips, be his sauce.
Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 13.

Sir God. [At the door.] He drips and drops poor man: alas, alas!—Anonymous. The Puritan, Act iv.

Weep, O ye barrels! let your drippings fall
In trickling streams; make waste more prodigal
Than when our beer was good, that John may float
To Styx in beer, and lift up Charon's boat
With wholesome waves.
Corbet. On John Dawson, Butler of Christ Church.

Who would not take offence to see a face
All daub'd, and dripping with the melted grease?
And though your unguents bear th' Athenian name,
The wool's unsavoury scent is still the same.
Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

But I do think, that it is better to bask in the sun, and suck a fortuitous sustenance from the scanty drippings of the most barren rocks in Switzerland, with freedom for my friend, than to batten as a slave, at the most luxurious table of the greatest despot on the globe.
Anecd. of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 121.

DRIVE, v. DRIVE, n. DRIVER. DRI'VING, n. DROVE. DRO'VER. } A. S. Drif-an, a-drif-an, be-drif-an; Dut. Dryven; Ger. Treiban; Sw. Drifwa. "Adrif-an, repellere, expellere, ejicere, abigere, fugare, to drive away, repell, expell, cast out. Be-drif-an, adigere, cogere, impellere, to compel, to constrain or enforce one to do a thing, to drive or thrust in or upon." (Somner.) See DRIFT, and ADRIFT. Chaucer, in Rom. of the Rose, writes Drife, and Wiclif and others form the past tense Drof.

To drive or force, into motion, into action; to force to proceed or move along; it is distinguished from drag thus;

Any thing driven (the drove) is followed by the driver or drover, and does not imply contact. Any thing dragged follows that which drags, and does imply contact; and there is the same distinction (with respect to place) between pull and push. And see DRAW, ante.

To drive or force, to urge or hurry along.

To drive or aim at, to intend or purpose.

To drive or force, to compel; to drive to or towards, to impel; to drive out, to expel; to drive back, to repel; to drive forward, to propel.

Drive, n. is common in speech, as—to take a drive in the Drive of Hyde Park.

Heo chargede here schippes faste and wel with alle gode,
And wende forth with god wynd and wel dryuing flode;
And driue euer westward, so that in god puis
Heo come here to Engelonde to hauene of Tottenais.
R. Gloucester, p. 20.

The other bi gan to turne ageyn, and drof hym into Walis.
Id. p. 38.

Thorgh out Chestreschire werre gan thei dryue.
R. Brunne, p. 1.

Unkynde and unknowing quath Crist, and with a rop smote hem
And overe turnede in the temple, here tables and here stalies
And drof hem out alle, that there bowten, a (or) solde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 312.

And whanne he hadde maad as it were a scourge of smale cordis, he dreof out alle of the temple, and oxen and scheep.
Wiclif. John, c. 2.

So nigh I drow to dispernunce
I rought of death, ne of life
Whether that love would me drife.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

I rede thee loue away to drive,
That maketh thee reck not of thy liue.—Id. Ib.

And tooke him of his arrowes fiue,
Full sharp and redy for to drive.—Id. Ib.

And in Northumberlonde arriueth,
And happeth than, that she dryueth
Under a castell with the floode,
Whiche vpon Humber banke stood.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Not alwaies ill though so be now,
When cloudes ben driven, then rides the racke;
Phœbus the freshe ne shooteth still,
Sometime he harpes his muse to wake.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Meane Estate (from Horace)

The carts with the drivers, and with the oxen, camels, asses, and mules, with the whole carriage and victuals he tooke and brought with him.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 84.

As it may be proued true, if ye sink a sayle by a couple of ropes, neere the ground, fastning to the nethermost corners two gunne chambers or other weights; by the driuing whereof you shall plainly perceive the course of the water, and current, running with such course in the bottome.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 15.

This king hath 1000 tame elephants, which are kept euen as we keepe droues of oxen, or flocks of sheepe in pasture
Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. i. p. 57.

With that he driues at them with dreadful might
Both in remembrance of his friend's late harme,
And in reuengement of his owne despight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Thither resorted also the baser sort certaine well knowen to Vitellius by means of vnhonest seruices, which in time past they had done him, as buffons, stage-players, and charet drivers; with which kinde of reproachfull acquaintance he was delited wonderfully.—Saville. Tacitus, p. 93.

For betwixt the laity and the clergy there is, as it were, a continual driving of a bargain, something the clergy would still have us be at, and therefore many things are heard from the preacher with suspicion.—Selden. Table Talk, p. 98.

It seemeth that Jubal first gathered together, and made familiar those beasts which formerly were untamed, and brought them into herds and droves.
Ralegh. History of the World, b. i. c. 5. s. 5.

——— For then a certain
Drover of the south comes to pay you money.
Davenant. The Wits, Act i. sc. 1.

The main thing in it, at which it chiefly drives, is, to press the king to finish first a civil league with them, and to leave those particulars concerning religion to be afterwards treated of.—Burnet. History of Reformation, an. 1538. Addenda.

The multitude, or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an heard of oxen, may be managed by any noise, or cry which their drivers shall accustom them to.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

Besides, their pace was formal, grave, and slack;
His nimble wit outran the heavy pack.
Yet still he found his fortune at a stay
Whole droves of blockheads choaking up the way.
Dryden. The Medal.

Divers drovers from Wales, by his means and procurement, had an allowance by order of the house, for £ 000. in satisfaction of losses they had sustained by the enemy.

Parliamentary History. Charles I. an. 1647.

Ten cook's shops and twice the number of barbers, and all within three minutes droving.

Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. vii. c. 17.

We were stopped several times by long droves of mules carrying corn to Valencia; their conductors, most savage-looking fellows, all clad in leather; their broad belts were fastened behind their waist with seven buckles.

Swinburn. Spain, Let. 14.

DRI'VEL, v. }
DRI'VEL, n. }
DRI'VELLER. }
DRI'VELLING, n. } Skinner, — Drivel, saliva, from Ger. Trieffin, treopffeln, stillare, to drop. A drivell or drivle, (one who is driven about any where,) Junius derives from the Dut. Drivel, which Kilian interprets, "Mediastinus servus. Ang. Drivill." Skinner thinks the Dut. Drevel is from the verb Drevelen, itare, frequenter itare, (q.d.) one who is constantly running, (i. e. driven) about; and this evidently from the Dut. Driven, to drive. Drivel, saliva, is itself, (there can scarcely be a doubt) the diminutive of drive, and means expulsum, driven out, as saliva from the mouth.

To drive out, (sc.) the saliva or slaver; as infants, drills, ideots do; to slaver; and thus—

Drivel, or Driveller, (Droil or Drill, qv.) is a slaverer, and consequentially, an ideot, a dotard.

Thus thei dreveles atte deyes. the deyte to knowe.

Piers Ploughman, p. 185.

Lykest thou not this? No, why? for swine so groines
In stye, and chaw dung moulded on the ground,
And driuel on pearles, with head stul in the maunger,
So of the harpe the asse doth heare the sound.

Wyat. How to Use the Court, &c.

What wilt thou more? what wilt thou craue,
Since she is as thou woulust her haue!
Then set this drivel out of dore
That in thy braines such tales doth poure.

Incertaine Auctors. The Lover describeth his whole state, &c.

And yet speake I not this either to encourage the husbande to vse his wife as a vile dreuell, because she is commaunded to obeye, or to discomforte the wife, because she is subject to her husbande.—Coal. Corinth. c. 11.

For, said he, kissing Charita, if thou didst know what a life I lead with that drivel, it would make thee even of pity, receive me into thy only comfort.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

His eyen and mouth faire closed without any staring, gaping, or frowning, also without any driueling or spurging in any place of his body.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 740. Verdict of the Inquest on R. Hun.

Clora Thro' his lean chops a chattering he doth make
Which stirs his staring beastly drivel'd beard,
And his sharp horns he seem'd at us to shake:
Canst thou then blame us though we were afraid.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 10.

But when he spied her his saint,
He wipte his greasie shoes,
And clear'd the driuell from his beard,
And thus the shepheard woos.

Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

Both they vnwise, and wareleese of the euill,
That by themselues, vnto themselues is wrought,
Through that false witch and that foule aged dreuil,
The one a fiend, the other an incarnate Devil.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

No man could spit from him, without it [the tongue] but would be forced to drivle, like some parraticks or a fool, the tongue being a stop-cock to the air, till upon its suddain removal, the spittle is thereby driven away before it.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

This driveling knight, with pockets full,
And proud as any great Mogul,
For his wise conduct had been made,
Director of the jobbing trade.

Somervile. The Happy Disappointment.

This quaint improvement on an Egyptian blunder, by some driveling Greek mythologist, as rank as it is, is one of the chief circumstances on which our illustrious author hath thought fit to support his chronology.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 5.

In life's last scene what prodigies surprise,
Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise!
From Marlb'rough's eyes the streams of dotage flow,
And Swift expires a driv'ler and a show.

Johnson. The Vanity of Human Wishes.

DRI'ZZLE, v. }
DRI'ZZLING, n. }
DRI'ZZLY. } Dim. from Goth. Driusan; A.S. Dreos-an, to fall. (See DROSS.) Ger. Reisen, to fall. Riseln, guttatim cadere, to fall in drops.

To fall in very small drips or drops; to shed, to rain very small drops.

But if some old acquaintaunce cum who hath been long away,
Or sum good honest neighbour cis
through sleetie drisling day
Do cease from woorke, we merry make.

Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

The draffyah declaratyons of my Lorde Boner, with such other dirty dryselings of Antichrist

Bale. Yet a Course, &c. fol. 97.

But see the drisling south, my mournful straine
Answers, in weeping drops of quick ning raine

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Or that these teares that drissel from mine eyes,
Had power to mollify his stony heart,
That, when I had him, we might neuer part.

Marlow. Edw. II.

Sometimes, tho' but seldom, when these winds blow, the sky is over-cast with small clouds, which afford much drizzling small rain.—Dampier. Voyage, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 1.

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
That in the middle of the court up threw,
A stream, high spouting from its liquid bed,
And falling back again in drizzly dew.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

At two in the afternoon the sky became cloudy and hazy: the wind increased to a fresh gale; blew in squalls attended with snow, sleet, and drizzling rain.

Cook. Voyage, vol. iii. b. i. c. 3.

DROIL. } See DRIVEL, supra; and Droile in DROIL, v. } Jamieson.

We will not be of any occupation,
Let such vile vassals borne to base vocation
Drudge in the world, and for their living droyle,
Which have no wit to live withouten toyle.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Finding the ease she had from her visible and sensuous collegue the body, in performance of religious duties, her pinions now broken, and flagging, shifted off from herself the labour of high soaring any more, (the soul) forgot her heavenly flight, and left the dull and droyling carcass to plod on in the old road, and drudging trade of outward conformity.—Milton. Of Reformation in England.

Then I begin to rave at my star's bitterness,
To see how many muckhills plac'd above me;
Peasants and droyls, carroches full of dunghills,
Whose very birth stinks in a generous nostril.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act ii. sc. 1.

DROLL, v. }
DROLL, s. }
DROLL, adj. }
DRO'LLER. }
DRO'LLERY. }
DRO'LLING, n. }
DRO'LLINGLY. }
DRO'LLISH. }
DRO'LLIST. } Fr. Drole, or draule. "Droler, to play the wag, to pass away the time as a good fellow, merrily or carelessly," (Cotgrave.) Kilian and some other etymologists refer to some northern demons, so called. The Dut. Drollen, volvere; Ger. Troll; Eng. Troll, to turn, roll or tumble about, seems a more simple and satisfactory etymology.

To roll or tumble about; to play tumbler's tricks, to make ridiculous gestures, play merry antics, to joke, to jest, to trick.

Shows, called drolleries, were in Shakespeare's time performed by puppets. From these our modern drolls exhibited at fairs, &c. took their name, (Steevens.) And see Drake, (vol i. p. 252.) See the quotations from Beaumont and Fletcher, and from Watts.

As Killegrew buffons his master, they droll on their God, but a much duller way.—Marvell. Works, vol. iii. p. 333.

The old Duke of Main, who was used to play the droll with him, coming softly into his bed chamber, thrust his bald head, and long neck in a posture to make the king merry.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 18.

——— So here,
Will I my drolleries, and bloody landscapes,
Long past wrapt up, unfold, to make me merry
With shadows, now I want the substance.

Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act v. sc. 1.

I had rather make a drollery till thirty,
While I am able to endure a tempest
And have my fights out bravely.

Beaum. & Fletch. Valentinian, Act ii. sc. 2.

To these the Romish factor hath, in the name of the stationer, pleased to give the stile of drollery and piquant sauce.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 61.

For having soon wrought himself dexterously into his patron's favour, by short graces and sermons and a mimical way of drolling upon the Puritans, which he knew would take both at chappel and table; he gained a great authority likewise among all the domesticks.

Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 46.

These whiffers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed by their rude drolling and buffooning to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for.—Hallywell. Moral Sermons, p. 56

The knight, who heard the words explain'd
As meant to him this reprimand,
Because the character did hit,
Point blank upon his case so fit,
Believ'd it was some drolling sprite
That stood upon the guard that night.

Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

In the first place I must observe there is a set of merry drolls, whom the common people of all countries admire, and seem to love so well, that they could eat them, according to the old proverb.—Spectator, No. 17.

And now he is making an experiment by another sort of enemies, and sets the apes and drollers upon it.

Glanville, Ser. 4

Such men as these, are not to be argued with, till they can be persuaded to use arguments instead of drollery.

Clarke. On the Evidences, Introd.

What confusion will one day cover the faces of those that do not only speak slightly and carelessly, but oftentimes contemptuously and perhaps drollingly of the supreme and infinitely perfect Being, to whom they owe those very faculties, and that wit, which they so ungratefully, as well as impiously misemploy.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 156.

These idle drollists have an utter antipathy to all braver and more generous kinds of knowledge.

Glanville. Reflections on Drollery & Atheism, s. 3.

We read in the Alexandrian Chronicle, &c. that Gelasius and Ardaleo, two pantomimes, as they were drolling on the stage, and feigning themselves Christians, were suddenly converted, and suffered martyrdom.

Jortin. Rem. on Eccles. Hist.

When I first received the news of your victory, I could not forbear mimicking a certain worthy friend of ours, and imitating the droll figures those gallant youths exhibited, of whose interest he had so confidently boasted.

Melmoth. Cicero, b. iv. Let. 9.

But to ask for matter of drollery in every thing, and dress up subjects of the utmost importance in ludicrous disguises, to delight ourselves and others with laughing at them, is the silliest affectation of wit, and the most dangerous kind of folly.—Seeker, vol. i. Ser. 12.

This never transported him to any thing which looked like malignancy: yet in the little rubs and vexations of life, 'twas apt to show itself in a drollish and witty kind of peevishness.—Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 12.

Should the senate house where all our law-givers assemble be used for a theatre or droll-house, or for idle puppet-shows?

Watts. The Holiness of Times, &c. Dis. 3.

DRO'MEDARY. Fr. Dromedaire; It. and Sp. Dromedario; Lat. Dromedarius; Gr. Δρομας καμηλος, dromas camelus, dromedary camel. See the quotation from Brende. Δρομας, from δρεμ-ειν, to run. So called from their swiftness.

The multitude of camels shal couer the, the dromedaries of Midiã & Epha.—Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 9.

Abulites there mette Alexander with pryncelye and rich gyftes, and presented hym amongst the reste of other thinges dormedary camels yt were wonderful swift.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 103.

Some one of the ancient kings of Persia that had escaped from the hands of his enemies, flying upon a dromedary camel lodged him in that place.—North. Plutarch, p. 572.

I have often, says he, been present at a show of elephants, camels, dromedaries, and other strange creatures; but I never saw so great an assembly of spectators as were met together at the opening of this great piece of wax work.

Tatler, No. 31.

In the last great battel, Pinkethman is to personate King Porus upon an elephant, and is to be encounter'd by Powel, representing Alexander the Great upon a dromedary, which nevertheless Mr. Powel is desired to call by the name of Bucephalus.—Spectator, No. 31.

DRONE, v. }
DRONE, n. }
DRO'NING, n. }
DRO'NISH. } Skinner thinks contracted from droven, past part. of the verb, to drive. Tooke from the A. S. Dryg-an, exeutere, expellere, to shake off, to drive away. "Drone, excussus, expulsus (subaud. Bee) is written in the A. S. Dran, drane, dran. Drag (g in drag-an being changed into a broad) is the regular past tense of dragan; by adding to it the participial termination en, we have dragen, drag'n, dran (the a broad) pronounced by us in the south, drone," (Tooke, ii. 325.)

To drone, the verb, is formed upon the noun;

to do as the drone does; to live upon the labours of others, sluggishly, lazily; to make the humming noise of the drone.

And right as dranes doth nought but drynketh vp the hony,
Whan bees [bees] with her busynes haas brought it to hepe.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Some time thei loine and all at ones do from their manger fet
The slouthful drones that would cõsume, and nought will do to get.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneades, b. i.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.—Dryden. Ib.

For Poesy is follow'd with such spite,
By groveling drones that never raught her height.
Drayton. Elegies. To Mr George Sandys.

Now blind, dishearten'd, asham'd, dishonour'd, quell'd,
To what can I be useful, wherein serve
My nation, and the work from heaven impos'd,
But to sit idle on the houshoud hearth,
A burdenous drone.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Yet (as it seem'd, they thought (as do the swaines,
Which tune their pipes on sack'd Hibernia's plaines)
There should some droaning part be, therefore will'd
Some bird to flie into a neighboring field,
In embassie unto the king of bees,
To aide his partners on the flowres and trees.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b i. s 3.

Dost thou euer thinke to bring thine eares or stomach to the patience of a dry grace, as long as a table cloth? and dronid out by thy sonne, here, (that might be thy father,) till all the meat o' thy board has forgot it was that day i' the kitchen.—B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act i. sc. 3.

Turn out their droning senate, and possess
That seat of empire which our souls were fram'd for.
Otway. Venice Preserved, Act ii. sc. 3.

For it is to be understood, that in the language of the spirit cant and droning supply the place of sense and reason in the language of men.
Swift. On the Mechanical Operation of the Spirit.

Who having in them little of ingenuity or willingness freely to doe good, [the Jews] would be apt to waxe not onely dronish and lazy but sturdy and insolent: had they not been kept under and inured to something of burthen and toil.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

From such a description one would think that a droning duke, or a dowager duchess, was not possessed of more exact pretension to taste than persons of less quality and yet whatever the one or the other may write or praise, shall pass for perfection, without farther examination
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 36.

——— Ah, notorious as thou art,
Why hast thou shown this vagabond the way
Into the city? are we not enough
Infested with these whining hungry drones.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

DROOP, v. } Skinner thinks from the Dut. Droef, sad; and that from the Ger. Treub, treuben, itself from the Lat. Turbare. But droop is evidently no other than drop; somewhat differently written and applied. See Drop, infra.
DROO'PER.
DROO'PING, n.
DROO'PINGLY.

To fall, to sink, to descend, to depress; and (met.) to faint, to be or become feeble or languid, to languish.

He drouped therfore donne & said the lond were schent
If he tilie Acres gede. R. Brunne, p. 252.

His eien drouped hole sonken in his heed.
Chaucer. The Testament of Cresede.

Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly
His arwes drouped not with fetheres lowe
Id. The Prologue, v. 107.

And yet what is he that is so sower of witte, and so droupstan of braine (I will not say) blockheaded, or insensate, that is not mooued with such pleasure
Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 56.

By this, the drouping day light 'gan to fade,
And yeeld his roome to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle 'gan to shade
The face of earth, and waies of liuing wight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

If he [the historian] be pleasant, he is noted for a iester: if he be graue, he is reckoned for a drooper
Holinshed. Ireland. Stanihurst to Sir H. Sidnee.

Then droop'd the fading flowers (their beauty fled)
And clos'd their sickly eyes, and hung the head;
And, ravel'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Nay, so far are their duties from being less acceptable to God upon this account, that they are not accompanied with such sprightliness of affections, and overflowings of joy, as they were wont, but are performed droopingly and heavily: that on the contrary, I scruple not to say, they are a great deal more.—Sharpe, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Whate'er destroying hand patriots rise,
The times and manners to revise,
And drooping merit raise,
The song of triumph still pursues
Their footsteps, and the moral muse
Dwells sweetly on their praise.
Smart. Ode to the Earl of Northumberland.

Upon her face there was the tint of grief,
The settled shadow of an inward strife,
And an unquiet drooping of the eye
As if its lid were charged with unshed tears.
Lord Byron. The Dream.

DROP, v. } See Drip.
DROP, n.
DRO'PPER.
DRO'PPING, n.
DRO'PLET.

A. S. Droppan; Ger. Triefen; Dut. Droppen or droop-en, stillare;

To fall or cause to fall in drops; to still or distil; and generally, to fall or cause to fall, to descend; to let fall, to let go, to dismiss; to quit the hold of; to quit.

In Milton, dropped with gold; as if gold had fallen in distinct drops or drops; and thus, spotted or speckled.

Drop-meal, i. e. dribdet. Drop, and A. S. Mal, part or portion.

And gut was Wyllam's grace thulke day so gode,
That he nadde no wounde, war thoru he ssedde an drop blod. R. Gloucester, p. 363.

And he was maad in agonye, and preiede the lenger, and his sweet was maade as dropis of blood rennynge doun into the erthe.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 22.

And he was in an agonye, and praied somewhat longer, and his sweate was like droppes of bloude, tryckling doune to the grounde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For thou droppedest euery day in mine eares, and in my thought thinke commaundement of Pythagoras, that is to say, Monne shall seruen to God, and not to Goodes.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

But water that downe runneth aye
But neuer droppe retourne maye.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Men sain that three thinges driven a man out of his hous; that is to say, smoke, dropping of raine, and wicked wives.
Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Sende Lazar downe fro thilke sete,
And do, that he his finger wete
In water, so that he maie droppe
Upon my tonge, for to stoppe
The great hete, in which I brenne.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi

Fro the seconde as bokes seyne;
The moyst droppes of the reyne
Descenden in the middle erth,
And tempreth it to sede and erth. Id. Ib. b. vii.

And this would he to thentent that the thyng whiche euer should bee beleued, might by litle and lytle be stilled, & as it wer dropped into the heartes of men.—Udal. Matt. c. 3.

It stoppeth teares or droppynges of the eyen.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Nay better learne of hem, that learned bee,
And han been watred at the Muses well:
The kindly dewe drops from the higher tree,
And wets the little plants that lowly dwell.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. November.

Yet from the wound no drop of bloud there fell,
But wond'rous paine that did the more enhaunce
His hauty courage to avengement fell
Smart deales not mightie harts, but makes them more to swell. Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

And observe, that if your droppers be larger than, or even as large as, your stretcher, you will not be able to throw a good line, but a beginner should never use more than one fly.—Walton. Angler, pt. ii. c. 5. Note.

—— As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchen stuff,
And barrecking the droppings, and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year
Reliely kept perchance buys wedding cheer.—Donne, Sat 2.

Though thou abhorr'dst in vs our humane griefes,
Scorn'dst our braines flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low graue, on faults forgiuen.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 5.

This humor [snow] therefore not falling forcibly all at once to drowne the root, ne yet washing away the earth from it (but distilling drop meale a little at once in that proportion and measure as thirst requireth and calleth for it) nourisheth all things, as from teat or pap
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 2.

I must take great care of our archbishop's care for a parish church in his province being in danger of dropping down for want of reparation
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift an. 1594.

——— That I grieve, 'tis true:
But 'tis a grief of fancy, not despair!
And if a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood
That sputtering in the flame works outward into tears.
Dryden. Cleomenes, Act i. sc. 1.

That which rises from the bottom of the still is but a vapour, and becomes not a drop till it settles upon the upper part of it.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 1.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Even to the dregs and squeezings of the brain,
Strain out the last dull droppings of their sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

I shall drop these subjects of mortality, with pointing out a single monument of inferior note.
Pennant. London, p. 104.

He concluded with a wish, that "whosoever shall attempt to hinder his union with Ajax might be buried without his bow, and that, in the land of souls, his scull might serve for no other use than to catch the droppings of the starry lamps."
Rambler, No. 186.

DROPSY, n. } Fr. Hydropsie; It. Hydropsia; Sp. Hydropesia; Lat. Hydrops; Gr. Ὑδρωψ, (ab aquosa aspectu,) from ὕδωρ, water, and ὠψ, the aspect, (aspectus, vel etiam oculi, Vossius.)
DRO'PSIED.
DROPSICAL.

See Hydropsy.

And lo a man syk in the dropesye was before him.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 14.

The dropsy drowth, that Tantale in the flood
Endureth ay, all hopeless of reliefe!
Uncertaine Auctors. Hell Tormenteth, &c.

Of to moche drynkynge procedeth dropsies, wherwith the body, & ofte tymes the vysage, is swollen and defaced.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 21.

Full of diseases was his carcasse blew,
And a dric dropsie through his flesh did flow;
Which by muscles daily greater grew:
Such one was Gluttony, the second of the crew.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Virgil and Horace, if inspir'd by thee
Had writ but lewd and pagan poetry;
Dull dropsied lines, or else as dry
And raging as a fever.
Brome. Against corrupted Sacr.

The dropsy, by indulgence nurs'd,
Pursues us with increasing thirst,
Till art expels the cause, and drains
The watery langour from our veins.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ode 2.

Atticus, weary of his life as well as his physicians, by long and cruel pains of dropsical gout, and despairing of any cure, resolved by degrees to starve himself to death, and went so far, that the physicians found he had ended his disease instead of his life, and told him, that to be well, there would need nothing but only resolve to live.
Sir W. Temple. Of the Cure of the Gout.

Skies such as these let every mortal shun
Who dreads the dropsy, palsy, or the gout.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, b. i.

Laguerre towards his latter end grew dropsical and inactive.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

DROSS, n. } A. S. Dross: sordes, fæx, filth, dregs, lees, dross, (Somner.) The past part. of Goth. Drius-an; A. S. Dreos-an, dejicere, precipitare, to cast down, to precipitate, (Tooke.)
DRO'SSY.
DRO'SSINESS.

That which falls, sinks, precipitates, or is cast down; which falls or separates the gross sediment, (sc.) from purer substances; (met.) any foul or worthless refuse; foulness, impurity.

And therfore shal I laye my hande vpon thee, and burne out thy drosse fro the finest and purest, and put oute all the leade.—Bible, 1551 Esay, c. 1.

The churn milke which remaineth of the butter, they let alone till it be as sowre as possibly it may be, then they boile it and in boyling it, it is turned all into curdes, which curds they drie in the sun, making them as hard as the drosse of iron.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 91.

Some scum'd the drosse that from the metall came;
Some stir'd the molten owre with ladles great,
And every one did swink, and every one did sweat
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

And all that pompe to which proud minds aspire
By name of honour, and so much desire,
Seems to them basenesse, and all riches drosse,
And all mirth sadnes, and all lucre losse.
Spenser. An Hymne of Heavenlie Beautie.

So doth the fire the drossy gold refine.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul.

This raging fire which through the masse doth move,
Shall purge my drosse, and shall refine my love.
Dryden. The Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

The supreme authority gives a fictitious and arbitrary value to coin, which is therefore not current alike in all times and in all places; but the real value remains invariable, and the provident man who gets rid as fast as he can of this drossy piece, hoards up the good silver.
Bolingbroke. Reflections upon Exile.

"I know, O Lord [says the Psalmist] that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me," the furnace of affliction being meant but to refine us from our earthly drossiness, and soften us for the impression of God's own stamp and image.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 275.

Great skill have they in palmistry, and more
To conjure clean away the gold they touch,
Conveying worthless dross into its place;
Loud when they beg, dumb only when they steal
Cowper. Task, b. i.

DROSSELL. See Drazel.

DROVE, n. See Drive.

DROUGTH. } A. S. Drug-oth. It was for-
Drou'ghty. } merly written, Dryeth, dryth, and drith. (See under Dry.) Drought is that which drieth, the third pers. sing. of dryg-an, drug-an, arescere, (Tooke, ii. 413.) Wallis says, Dry, siccus, drouth, droughth, dry'th, siccitas.—It is improperly written drought.

That which drieth or parcheth; dryness; thirst.

Right as fishes in flod. wenne hem faileth water
Deyen for dreuthe. Piers Ploughman, p. 83.

After great drought, there commeth a raine.
Chaucer. Balade. Doublenesse of Women.

Whanne that April with his shoures sote
The droughte of March hath perced to the rote.
Id. Prologue.

All the whole armie laye in an open plaine ground, without coverture very nere the citee by reason whereof, thei wer sore cũbered with hete and drought.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

At which thing one of hys chambrelaynes merualylynge, required the cause of hys drouth. To whome he answered merely saiyng, I haue thys nyght bene in the middest of Spayne, which is a hote region, & that iourney maketh me so drie, & if thou haddest bene vnder that hote clymate, thou wouldest haue bene dryer then I.—Id. Hen. VII. an. 17.

Let streaming floods their hasty courses stay,
And parching drouth dry vp the crystall wells.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

Another ill accident is, drouth, at the spindling of the corn; which with us is rare; but in hotter countries common.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 669.

——— Till, lo! at last,
Nature, whose power he had so long surpass'd,
Would yield no more, but to him stronger foes,
Drought, faintness, and fierce hunger, did oppose.
Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Oh! can the clouds weep over thy decay,
Yet not one drop fall from thy droughty eyes?
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

So in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
And first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And, with wet wings, joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

This vine growing on dry hills, in the woods where no water is to be met with, its trunk if cut into pieces two or three yards long, and held by the other end to the mouth, affords so plentifully a limpid, innocent, and refreshing water, or sap, as gives new life to the droughty traveller or hunter.
Dr. Sloane, in Derham. Physico-Theology, b. 10. Note 27.

Then comes the feverish fiend, with fiery eyes,
Whom drouth, convulsions, and whom death surround,
Fatal attendants! if some subtle slave
(Such, Obia-men are styl'd) do not engage
To save the wretch by antidote or spell.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

He turneth the wilderness into a lake of water,
And the land of drought into springs of waters.
Bp. Horsley. Translation. Psalm 107.

DROVY, in Chaucer, says Lye, is filthy, muddy. A. S. Drof, drofi, from drif-an, to disturb. It is, perhaps—draffy water.

He is like to an hors that seketh rather to drink drory or troubled water, than to drink of the cleare well.
Chaucer. Persones Tale.

DROWN, v. } See Drench. A. S. Drenc-
Dro'wner. } ian; druncnian, mergere.
Dro'wning, n. } To sink, plunge or depress; to merge, to immerge; to overflow, to deluge, to overwhelm; and more generally, to overpower.

Emphatically, to drown, is to sink or remain sunk under water till dead. (Met.)

To sink or remain sunk, immersed, plunged, overwhelmed, (sc.) in any pursuit or occupation.

But whosoeuer offend one of these lytel ons, whiche beleue in me, it were better for hym that a mylstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were drowned [Wiclif, drenched] in the depth of the sea.—Bible, 1551. Matthew, c. 18.

Who is he, that shall plucke and withdraw vs awaye from louing them [God and Christ] againe, which so tenderly loue vs? Shall any storm of worldly aduersitie do it? Shall leopardy of drowning, or any like peril chauncyng after lyke sort?—Udal. Romaines, c. 8.

The nourse of dyse and cardes, is werisome idlenesse, enemy of virtue, drowner of youthe.
Ascham. The Schole of Shooting.

And makes a covenant never to destroy
The earth again by flood, nor let the sea
Surpass his bounds, nor rain to drown the world
With man therein or beast.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

——— That wilde rout that tore the Thracian bard
In Rhodope, where woods and rocks had eares
To rapture, till the savage clamor drown'd
Both harp and voice; nor could the Muse defend
Her son.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

He hath promised us those weapons whereby we may withstand the torrent of wickedness in the world, with far greater success than the old Gauls were wont to do in the inundations of their country, whose custom was to be drowned with their arms in their hands.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Every draught to him that has quencht his thirst is but a farther quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases, a drowning of the quickness and activity of the spirits.—South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

——— Eager he catches hold
Of what comes next to hand, and grasps it hard,
Just like a creature drowning.—Blair. Grave.

DROWSE, v. } Dut. Droosen, dormitare; perhaps from the Goth. Driu-
Dro'wsy. } san; A. S. Dreosan, to fall, to Dro'wsihead. } drop or droop, (sc.) the head.
Dro'wsily. } Thus, in the description of Dro'wsiness. } Morpheus:

"He rais'd his tardy head, which sunk again,
And sinking, on his bosom, knocked his chin."
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xi.

To nod in slumber; to slumber, to lull to slumber, to yield or give way to sleepiness, to heavy slumber; to be or cause to be sluggish, heavy, lazy, dull, lethargic.

For albeit his comming vnto his Apostles at that point, dyd not so thoroughly awake them, but that eyther they were stil so heauy, so drowsy, so amased, that scantly could they holde vppe theyr heades and loke on him.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1365.

Their enemies had no harte to set vpon thẽ, whiles they were drowned in this excesse of banqueting, dronkenship, and drowsinesse, but were as muche afraid of their dronken noise, as if they had hard theire crie encountering with them in battaile.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 236.

This deuise was then accounted a fantasticall imagination, and a drowsy dreame.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 167.

——— All thir shape
Spangl'd with eyes more numerous then those
Of Argus, and more wakeful then to drouze,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the pastoral reed
Of Hermes, or his opiate rod.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. xi.

——— There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drowsed sense. Id. Ib. b. viii.

Sir Guyon, mindfull of his vow yplight,
Vprose from drowsie couch, and him addrest
Vnto the journey which he had behight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

——— His eyes then close
Their drowsie lids, and hanging down his head
Oppress with slumber, shrinks into his bed.
Sandys. Ovid. Met. b. xi.

Now when the rosy fing'red Morning faire,
Weary of aged Tithon's saffron bed,
Had spred her purple robe through deawy aire
And the high hils Titan discouered,
The royall virgin shooke off drowsy hed
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

——— The sun to day rides drowsily,
To-morrow 'twill put on a look more fair;
Laughter and groaning do alternately
Return, and tears sport's nearest neighbours are.
Cowley. On the Uncertainty of Fortune.

Wake, our mirth begins to die:
Quicken it with tunes and wine:
Rise your notes, you're out: fie, fie,
This drowsinesse is an ill signe.
B. Jonson. The Poetaster, a. 5.

We sleep and drowse, and suffer our precious minutes to run and waste away doing nothing to any good purpose, till the night is shutting in, till the night of darkness come upon us.—Hopkins. Ser. Phil. ii. 12.

Near the Cimmerians, in his dark abode
Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy God;
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting, visits, nor the lightsome moon.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xi.

Which expressions import a most constant and careful attendance upon this duty: that we do not make it a παρεργον, or by-business in our life, (a matter of small consideration or indifference, of curiosity, of chaunce,) to be transacted drowsily or faintly, with a desultorious and slight endeavour, by fits, as the humour taketh us
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

What reason is there to make us watchful, both against our spiritual enemies, and our own drowsiness, lest security steal upon us without observation; for our hearts are as ready to sin as Satan is to tempt.
Bates. The Sure Trial of Uprightness.

A pleasing land of drowsy-head it was,
Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye;
And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
For ever flushing round a summer sky.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

Above is perpetual gloom; the sun is not seen, nor the breeze felt; the air stagnates, and pestilential vapours diffuse drowsiness, lassitude, and anxiety.—Adventurer, No. 61.

DRUB, v. } Sw. Drubba, ferire, confli-
Drub, n. } gere, to beat, to strike or dash
Dru'bbing, n. } against. Ger. Treff-en, which Wachter thinks may be from the A. S. Torf-ian, to throw, (sc.) ferendi causâ, for the sake or purpose of striking.

To beat, to give a good beating or flogging, to give or inflict blows.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruis'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Id. pt. i. c. 2.

And one of those he had seen, and felt
The drubs he had so freely dealt. Id. pt. iii. c. 2.

Their case seems now like that of some poor wretch under the correction of a merciless bully, who, after having been kicked and despised by all the world besides, is sure to return with interest the drubbings he receives, upon that unhappy creature whom he has had the luck to get the better of.—Middleton. The Present State of Trinity College.

Calish, being a passionate man, gave Alcheic one day a sound drubbing.—Hume. A Dialogue.

DRUDGE, v. } Drudge, (droog, druge,) the Drudge, n. } past tense and past part. of Dru'dgery. } dreogan, ge-dreog-an, agere, to-
Dru'dging, n. } lerare, pati, sufferre, (Tooke,) Dru'dgingly. } to act, to labour, to be patient, to suffer or undergo.

The first folio of Shakespeare, (Timon of Athens,) has drugges, which the commentators think an error for drudges; Junius considers drugge, quoted from Chaucer, under the word drag, (qv.) and drudge, to be closely allied. Baret says, "A drudge or drivell; a seruaunt that serveth in vile offices or things, a kitchen slave." The verb is formed upon the noun;—

To do as a drudge does; to labour hardly, to work laboriously in mean or servile offices; to suffer or undergo or endure continued labour or employment, constant weariness or fatigue.

I toke in hãde to trãslate thẽ at such seldome leasures as I possiblie could frõ mine other prophane trauailes the rather to my drudging vocatio spare, and now at last haue finished thẽ.—Udal. Prologue to Epistles.

They added besides, that suche mariners as caried ye merchauntes, and the drudges of tharmye, through courtesaines of the gold, which had been reported vnto them, landed in the Ilande, and were neuer seene after.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 287.

Hadst thou like vs, from our first swath, proceeded
The sweet degrees that this briefe world affords,
To such as may the passive drugges [drudges] of it
Freely commandst; [command] thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In generall riot.—Shakes. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

And though she be some dunghill drudge at home,
Yet can he her resign some refuse roum
Amidst the well known stars: or if not there,
Sure will he saint her in his Kalendere
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 7.

In black Egyptian slavery we lie;
And sweat and toil in the vile drudgery,
Of tyrant sin. Cowley. The Plagues of Egypt.

There is no life happy but that which is spent in continuall drudging for edification.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Faithful Canaanite.

Nature is not master of that consummate art and wisdom according to which it acts, but only a servant to it, and a drudging executioner of the dictates of it.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 156.

——— So all the vain
And weak productions of man's wit,
That aim at purposes unfit,
Require more drudgery, and worse
Than those of strong and lively force.
Butler. On the Weakness & Misery of Man.

All that I gain is but a threadbare coat,
And that with utmost pains and drudging got.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 9.

In the judgment of the writer De Mundo, it is not so decorous in respect of God neither, that he should αυτουργειν ἁπαντα, set his own hand, as it were, to every work, and immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate instruments.—Cudworth. Intel. Sys. p. 149.

But now I can mount, in the sun-beams I play,
While you must, for ever, drudge on in your way
Cunningham. Pomona. A Pastoral.

A creative imagination disdains the mean offices of digging for a foundation, of removing rubbish, carrying materials: leaving these servile employments to the drudges in science, it plans a design, and raises a fabric.
Reid. Inquiry, c. 1. s. 2.

Nor is it less likely that our vices may debase us to the servile condition of inferior animals, in whose forms we may be severely punished for the injuries we have done to mankind when amongst them, and be obliged in some measure to repair them, by performing the drudgeries tyrannically imposed upon us for their service.
Jenyns. Origin of Evil, Let. 4.

DRU'ERIE. "Fr. Druerie, that is to say, amitié," (Menage.) With the Italians, says Du Cange, druderia is — jocus amatorius. The Low Lat. Drudaria, amicitia. Drudi, amici; from the Ger. Treue, fides; Dut. Drut, druyt, fidelis. Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets it, "courtship, gallantry." Ritson adds, Illicit love.

Wymmen ne kepte of no knygt as in druery,
Bote he were in armys wel yprowed.—R. Gloucester, p. 191.

Hit is as der worth a druwery, as dere God himselve.
Piers Ploukman, p. 17.

Of battaile and of chevalrie,
Of ladies love and druerie
Anon I wol you tell.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,823.

And saith, that for no druerie
He woll not leue his sluggardie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

That somme men clepen sorcerie,
Whiche for to winne his dreuerie,
With many a circumstance he vseth,
There is no point, whiche he refuseth.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Syr, hydyr I com for swych a thyng,
To skere Launfal the knyght,
That he never, yn no folye
Besoste the quene of no druryc,
By dayes ne be nyght.—Ritson. Launfal.

DRUG, v. DRUG, n. DRU'GGER. DRU'GGIST. DRU'GSTER. Fr. Drogue; It. and Sp. Droga; Dut. Droogherrie, droogen, siccare. Drug, the noun, Tooke says, is the past part. of the A. S. verb Drug-an, drug-an, to dry. A name, he adds, common to all Europe, and which means dryed, (subaud. herbs, roots, plants, &c.) When we say any thing is a mere drug, we mean dryed up; that is, worthless, (Tooke, ii. 414.) To drug, the verb, is formed upon the noun,—

To give or supply drugs; any thing having qualities or producing effects similar to those of drugs.

Chaucer once writes Dragg.

Lyf leyvede [believed] that leche craft, lette sholde elde,
And to dryve away deth, with dayes [diets and] dragges.
Piers Ploukman, p. 401.

Full redy hadde he his apothecaries
To send him dragges, and his letuaries,
For eche of hem made other for to winne.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 428.

Withoute blame to be giuen to the physytians, sauynge onely, that some of them [be] not diligent inough in beholdynge their drouges or ingredience at all tymes dispensid and tried.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, Pref.

——— I haue drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature doo contend about them
Whether they liue or dye.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— Oft they assayd,
Hunger and thirst constraining, drug'd as oft,
With hatefullest disrelish writh'd their jaws
With soot and cinders fill'd.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

——— Others take
Drugs to procure a heavy sleep, that so
They may insensibly receive the means
That casts them on an everlasting slumber.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act v. sc. 3.

Fraternities and companies, I approve of as merchants' burses, colledges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.
Burton. Democritus to the Reader, p. 63.

——— He was once a creature
It may be, of God's making, but long since
He is turn'd to a druggist's shop, the spring and fall
Hold all the year with him: that he lives, he owes
To art, not nature; she has given him o'er.
Massinger. The Picture, Act iv. sc. 2.

Then I could rest as still as those
Whom he has drugg'd to sure repose.
Fenton. To the Knight of the Sable Shield.

Fletcher's despis'd, your Jonson's out of fashion,
And wit the only drug in all the nation.
Dryden. Epil. at the acting of the Silent Woman.

As a man never pleads better than where his own personal interest is concerned, he exhibited to the court with great eloquence, that this new corporation of druggists had inflamed the bills of mortality and puzzled the College of Physicians with diseases for which they neither knew a name or cure.—Tatler, No. 181.

In the other place stating the several orders of their citizens, they place their ministers after their apothecaries; that is, the physician of the soul after the druggist of the body; a fit practice for those, who, if they were to rank things as well as persons, would place their religion after their trade.—South, vol. i. Ser. 4.

But O th' important budget! usher'd in
With such heart-shaking music; who can say
What are its tidings? have our troops awak'd?
Or do they still, as if with opium drugg'd,
Snore to the murmurs of th' Atlantic wave?
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Mouffet adds, that Bucklersbury being replete with physic, drugs, and spicery, and being perfumed, in the time of the plague with the pounding of spices, melting of gum, and making perfumes for others, escaped that great plague whereof such multitudes died, that scarcely any house was left unvisited.—Pennant. London, p. 576.

DRU'ID, DRU'IDICAL. DRU'IDISM. DRU'IDYSH. Lye, and others, think is the British Derwidhon, (q.d.) persapientes, very wise men;—Wachter,—(who states copiously the various etymologies that have been proposed) from British Derw, an oak, and wdd, a lord or master; Skinner,—that the Druids were not so called by themselves, but that the name was given to them by the Greek settlers at Marseilles, propter quercuum cultum, from the Gr. Δρυς, an oak. See the quotation from Pliny; the word dry in Somner; and Selden's Illustrations of Drayton, song 9. Du Cange (in v. Arbor), remarks, that long after the introduction of the Christian Religion, the worship of trees and groves so flourished in Africa, Germany, Italy, Gaul, and other provinces, that it cost kings and popes much trouble to root it out.

The Druides are occupied about holy things: they haue the dooing of publicke and priuate sacrifices, and do interprete and discusse matters of religion.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 155.

The Druides for so they call their diuinours, wise men, and the state of their clergie) esteeme nothing more sacred in the world than misselto, and the tree whereupon it breedeth, so it be on oke. Now this you must take by the way, these priests or clergie men chose of purpose such groves for their diuine seruice, as stood only upon okes; nay they solemnize no sacrifice, nor perform any sacred ceremonies without branches and leaues thereof, so as they may seem well enough to be named thereupon Dryades in Greeke, which signifieth as much as the oke-priests. [Ut inde appellatis quoque interpretatione Græca possint Druides eidem.]—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 44.

In all places, where the Druiysh religion was frequented, such was the estimation of the preests of this profession, that there was little or nothing doone without their skillful aduise.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 9.

You, of your ancient princes, have retriev'd
More than the ages know in which they liv'd;
Explain'd their customs and their rights anew,
Better than all their Druids ever knew.
Waller. To a Person of Honour.

In yonder grave a Druid lies,
Where slowly winds the stealing wave,
The year's best sweets shall duteous rise,
To deck its poet's sylvan grave.
Collins. On the Death of Mr. Thomson.

There was a class of the Druids, whom they called Bards, who delivered in songs (their only history) the exploits of their heroes; and who composed those verses, which contained the secrets of druidical discipline, their principles of natural and moral philosophy, their astronomy, and the mystical rites of their religion.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. i. c. 2.

But still the great and capital objects of their [the Saxons] worship were taken from Druidism; trees, stones, the elements, and the heavenly bodies.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

DRUM, v. DRUM, n. DRU'MMER. DRU'MMING, n. DRU'MBLE. DRU'MBLER. DROU'SY. A. S. Drem-an, drym-an, jubilare, to make a joyful noise. Dut. and Ger. Trommelen, pulsare tympanum; Ger. Trommen, sonare, susurrare.

To beat a drum; to have or cause the action or sound of a drum; the rattling, cheering noise of the quick beat, the dub a dub, as Gascoigne calls it, of "the spirit-stirring drum," (Shakespeare;) then to the base hum: and hence, to drum is also to emit a humming, droning, sullen, murmuring sound or noise. See TRUMPET.

For particular applications of the word, see the quotations from Ray, and Paley, and Smollet.

Drumble appears to be merely the diminutive; and in Shakespeare to be applied not to a droning noise, but to a droning, loitering action; in Scotch, drumly is droning, dull, sullen, lowering, gloomy; and thus also dark, thick, and muddy: and so Bacon uses droumy.

Drum-wine,—in the citation below from Massinger, Mr. Gifford says, may be such bad wine as is disposed of by sutlers at the drum-head; or such as was found at auctions or outcries, to which people at that time were summoned by beat of drum: unless, indeed, (which he considers to be more probable,) Dodsley's reading, "stum wine," be correct. Is it not droumy wine?

The drummes crie dub a dub, the braying trumpets blow,
The whistling fifes are seldom heard, these sounds do
drowne the so.—Gascoigne. Flowers.

Which came running to hinder my passage, supposing that we had bene other people, for we caried with vs a fifer, & a drummer, and I was clad in other apparell then I went in before, when they saw me first of all.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 437.

She was immediatly assaulted by diuers English pinasses, hoyes, and drumblers.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 601.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye.
Shakespeare. The Rape of Lucrece.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong, than if you should strike upon the like skin, extended in the open air.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 142.

A parley was concluded, and a drummer dispatched twice to the enemy before they would take notice of it.
State Trials. Colonel Fiennes, an. 1643.

Hark, hark; what drummings yonder! I'll lay my life they are come to present the show I spake of.
Brewer. Lingua, Act ii. sc. 4

Cloris. Violins, strike up aloud,
Ply the gittern, scour the crowd,
Let the nimble hand belabour
The whistling pipe, and drumbling tabor.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 8.

M. Ford. What, John, Robert, John; go, take vp these clothes heere, quickly: wher's the cowle-staffe? Looke how you drumble?

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. s 3.

He was slaine and all his companie, there being but one man the drumslager left alive, who by swiftnesse of his foote escaped.—Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1580.

Item, a collar of good large fat brawn
Serv'd for a drum, waited upon by two
Fair long black pudding, lying by for drumsticks.

Carturight. The Ordinary, Act ii. sc. 1.

Gape round about me, and yet not find a chapman
That in courtesy will bid a chop of mutton,
Or a pint of drum wine for me

Massinger. The City Madam, Act iii. sc. 1.

That protestation of Catiline, to set on fire and trouble states, to the end to fish in drumny waters (turbare aquas)

Bacon. Adv. of Learning, b. ii.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum, and, therefore, by anatomists called also tympanum, to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions or vibrations.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

So strains of a peculiar nature being expected from him [Vane] to prevent that, drummers were placed under the scaffold, who as soon as he began to speak of the public, upon a sign given, struck up with their drums.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1661.

The drum-stick falling upon the drum makes a percussion of the air, and puts that fluid body into an undulating motion.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 25.

He would invite me to the garden by drumming upon my knee, and by a look of such expression as it was not possible to misinterpret. Cowper. Treatment of his Hares.

This is a riotous assembly of fashionable people of both sexes, at a private house, consisting of some hundreds: not unaptly styled a drum, from the noise and emptiness of the entertainment.—Smollet. Adeline, a Satyr, Note 7.

It [the tympanum of the ear] bears no obvious resemblance to the pelt or head of a drum, from which it takes its name.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

It resembles also a drum head in this principal property, that its use depends upon its tension.—Id. Ib.

DRUNK, v. DRU'NKARD. DRU'NKEN. DRU'NKENLY. DRU'NKENNESS. DRU'NKENHEAD. DRU'NKENSHIP. DRU'NKSHIP. } Past part. of drink. Dut. Dronken; Ger. Trunken; Sw. Drucken; A. S. Drunce, druncen, ebrius, inebriatus, tomulentus,—drunke, drunken, overtaken with drink. Drunc-cennysse, drunkennesse, (Somner.) See DRINK.

Drenched or soaked with liquid; having drunk or swallowed, (sc.) too much strong, intoxicating or inebriating liquor; tipsy, fuddled, intoxicated, inebriated. "Dronkelew, adj. Saxon. Given to drink," (Tyrwhitt.)

For let a dronken dasse, in a diche falle
Leet hym lyg. Piers Ploughman, p. 227.

Le Loth in hus lyue, yarowe lecherous drenke
Wickedliche wroghte, and wratthede God Almygtye
In hus dronkenesse. Id. p. 14.

For thei that slepen, slepen in the nyght, and thei that ben drunken ben drunken in the nyght.

Wiclif. 1 Tessal. c. 4.

But take ye heede to yourslf: leste peraventure youre hertis be grouid with glotonye and drunkennesse, and busynesses of this lyf, and thilke day come sodeyn on you

Id. Luk, c. 21.

Lord ngs, right thus, as ye han understond,
Bare I stifly mm old husbondes on hond,
That thus thei saiden in hir dronkennesse

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5963.

Lo howe he can the hertis trouble,
And maketh men dronke al vpon chance,
Withoute lawe of gouernance.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi

There is no lym wyll me serue,
But as a drunken mun I swerue.—Id. Ib.

For thei two through her dronkenhede,
Of witles excitacion
Oppressed all the nacion
Of Spayne. Id. Ib.

Per chance in suche a dronkenship
I may be dead, er I beware. Id. Ib.

For dronkeship in euery place.
To whether side that it turne
Doth harme and maketh a man to spurne,
And ofte falle in suche a wise
Where he percas mate nouht arise. Id. Ib.

A yonge man to be a dronkelewe.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Wake vp ye dronckardes, and wepe: mourne all ye wine-suppers, because of youre sweete wyne, for it shall be taken away from your mouth.—Bible, an. 1551. Joel, c. 1.

Ye shall be droncken, but not with wyne. Ye shall fall, but not thorowe dronckennesse.—Id. Esaye, c. 29.

Then drinke they all round both men and women: and sometimes they carowse for the victory very finely and drunkenly.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 96.

And it shal be requisite for such as take that busines in hand to bee sobre. For dronkenship is hatefesse, and vncircumspecte, and not onelye hatefess, but also rashe and temerarious.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 5

Our stomachs bee neuer cloyed with dronkenship or surfeiting, as is commanded by our Saviour in Luke.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1014. How to Fast truly after Scripture.

He that killeth a man when he is dronke shall be hanged when he is sober.—Camden. Remains. Proverbs.

Still as he rode, he somewhat still did eate,
And in his hande did bear a bouzing can,
Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
His drunken corse he scarce vpholden can,
In shape and life, more like a monster than a man.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Where, in his cups o'ercome with foul excess,
Straightways he plays a swaggering ruffin's part,
And at the banquet in his drunkenness,
Slew his dear friend, my kind and truest heart:
A gentle warning, friends, thus may you see,
What 'tis to keep a drunkard company.

Drayton, Idea 7.

Here it must not be omitted, That the English (who of all the dwellers in the northern part of the world, were hitherto the least drinkers, and deserved praise for their sobriety,) in these Dutch wars learned to be drunkards, and brought the vice so far to overspread the Kingdom, that laws were fain to be enacted for repressing it.

Baker. Elizabeth, an. 1580.

An old drunkard loves a tavern, though he cannot go to it but as he is supported, and led by another, just as some are observed to come from thence.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

The dissolution and drunkenness of that night was so great and scandalous, in a nation which had not been acquainted with such disorders for many years past, that the king, who still stood in need of the Presbyterian party, which had betrayed all into his hands, for their satisfaction, caused a proclamation to be published, forbidding the drinking of healths.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 17.

If the object of belief be single, the belief can scarce be double, unless by a drunkenness of the understanding, like that which doubles the objects of sense.

Warburton. Rem. On Hume's Nat. Hist. of Religion.

DRY, v. DRY, adj. DRY'ER. DRY'ING. DRY'LY. DRY'NESS. DRYTH. } Dut. Drooghen; Ger. Trocknen; Sw. Torka; A. S. Drig-an, adrigan, siccare, tergere, abstergere, exurere, to dry, to dry up, to wipe off or away, to burn up—it. Marcescere, to wither up, (Somner.) Tooke says, the A. S. Dryg-an, is excutere, expellere, and therefore, siccare. See DROUGHT.

Dry is opposed, (lit.) to wet; as water; any moisture; as juice, sap. Consequentially, to be dry is to be thirsty; also, to be barren, unfruitful, unproductive. (Met.) barren, unfruitful; as a dry style, i. e. barren of ornament, destitute of feeling; consequentially, harsh, rigid, severe, unfeeling. To dry is—

To shake off, drive or drain off, to wipe off; or by any means free from moisture; to parch, to scorch, to wither.

To draw dry-foot is when the dog pursues the game by the scent of the foot, for which the bloodhound is famed. See commentators on Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, quoted below, and Gifford's B. Jonson, i. 52.

Thulke zer was thut somer so dreye & so hot,
That sut to this daye of none hattore me not.

R. Gloucester, p. 531.

And yf hus hous be unhetede, and ryne in hus bedde
He seketh and seketh, or he slepe drye.

Piers Ploughman, p. 337.

And other fel on stoons: and it sprunge up, and withide, for it hadde not moisture. (Marcus, 1551.)—Wiclif. Luk, c. 8.

And he entride eftsoone into the synagogue & ther was a man hauynge a drie hond, and they aspieden him if he heelide in the Sabotis to accuse him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 3.

Wherwith they made hem stately fires great
To dry their clothes yt were wringing weat.

Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe

The brode river sometime waxeth drey

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3026.

Thilke lee, whiche that the horsemen bare
To brake, so that a great partie
Was dreint of the chivalrie,
The rerewarde it toke aweie,
Caine none of hem to londe drey.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And thus ye see that these three (faith, hope, and charitie) inseperable in this life haue yet seperable and seuerie offices and effectes, as heat and drith beyng inseparable in the fyer, haue yet their seperable operations.

Tyndall. Works, p. 158.

They [distemperatures] whiche be compounde, are in compounde or myxte qualities as heate and moisture, heate and drythe, cold and moyste, colde and drye

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. i.

Th' one faire and fresh, the other old and dride.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

As one then in a dreame, whose dryer braine
Is tost with troubled sights and fancies weake,
He mumbled soft, but would not all his silence breake.

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 1.

This is another thing likewise to be considered of, that the trees and bushes growing by the streets' sides; doo not a little keepe off the force of the sunne in summer for drieng vp the lanes.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 19.

It looks ill, it eats drily, marry 'tis a wither'd peare.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc. 1.

The soul in all hath one intelligence;
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much dryness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain.

Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 22

Then he would never suffer those sterilities, but himself by a cup of sensible devotion would water and refresh those drynesses.—Bp. Taylor. Set Forms of Liturgy, s. 60.

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well.

Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iv. sc. 2.

This account is very dry in many parts, only mentioning the name of the lover who leaped, the person he leaped for, and relating in short, that he was either cured, or killed, or maimed by the fall.—Spectator, No. 283.

In our methods of surgery, nothing is found of such effect in the case of old ulcers as fire, which is certainly the greatest drawer and dryer, and thereby the greatest cleanser that can be found.—Sir W. Temple. Cure of the Gout.

Some on the leaves of ancient authors prey,
Nor time, nor moths e'er spoil'd so much as they:
Some drily plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

Pope. Essay on Criticism.

One hand sustain'd a helm, and one the shield
Which old Laertes wont in youth to wield,
Cover'd with dust, with dryness chapt and worn,
The brass corroded, and the leather torn

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

The fall of the Angels, by F. Floris, 1554; which has some good parts, but without masses, and dry.

Sir J. Reynolds. Journey to Flanders and Holland.

The poet either drily didactive gives us rules, which might appear abstruse even in a system of ethics, or, trifling'ly volatile, writes upon the most unworthy subjects.

Goldsmith. Of the Augustan Age in England.

Whether it proceed from a mere barrenness of thought, and a native dryness of soul, that he is not able to vary his matter, and to impart beyond the formal topics of an analysis, or whether it arise from affectation of such a way of talking, is hard to say.

Watts. Of Instruction by Preaching, pt. ii. c. 6. s. 2.

DRY'AD. Dryades or nymphs of the woods; introduced into all European languages; Gr. Δρυ-άδες, from δρυς, an oak. See DRUID.

——— [Eve] like a wood nymph light
Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's traine,
Betook her to the groves, but Delia's self
In gait surpass'd and Goddess like deport

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

When Cheerfulness, a youth of healthiest hue,
Her bow across her shoulder slung,
Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
The hunters call to fawn and Dryad known

Collins. The Passions. Ode for Music.

When late the trees were stript by winter pale,
Young Health, a Dryad maid in vesture green,
Or like the forests silver-quiver'd queen,
On airy uplands met the piercing gale.

Warton. On Bathing, Son. 2.

DU'AL. } It. Duale; Lat. Dualis, from DUA'LITY. } duo; Gr. Δυο, two.

This dualitie after determission, is founden in euery creature, be it neuer so single of onhed.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

And so conjovned the unity and duality of the soul, and made out the three substances so much considered by him [Plato.]—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

They absolutely deny, that there can be any more persons in the godhead than only one, and consequently, that a duality, or binary number of persons in it, would, in a Socinian's account, pass for no less an absurdity, than even a trinity itself; the grand article controverted between us and them.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

Pythagoras talked, it is said, of an immaterial unity, and a material duality, by which he pretended to signify, perhaps, the first principles of all things, the efficient and material causes.—Bolingbroke. Human Reason, Ess 2.

All primitive and uncompounded languages seem to have a dual as well as plural, number This is the case of the Greek, and I am told of the Hebrew, of the Gothic, and of many other languages.—A. Smith. Formation of Languages.

Between (formerly written twene, atwene, bytwene,) is a dual preposition, to which the Greek, Latin, Italian, French, &c have no word correspondent; and is almost peculiar to ourselves, as some languages have a peculiar dual number.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. c. 9.

DUB, v. "And dubbade his sunn Henrie to ridere there." And dubbed his son Henry a knight there, (Sax. Chron. an. 1086.) Junius;—from the A. S. Dypp-an, to dip, baptizare, to confer a new name as if by baptism. Hickes thinks the A. S. Dubb-an, creare equitem, to create a knight, (Gram. A. S. p. 151,) is borrowed from the Islandic, dubba, (generally) to strike:—but Ihre says, that he has nowhere found that word used, unless specially,—gladio nudato equitem creandum perstringere; and agrees in opinion with those who think it sprung from the Low Lat. Adobare, which, with Du Cange, he takes from the Lat. Adoptare: giving as his reason, that the ceremony of adoption was performed by a stroke or blow of a sword; that the rank of knight was afterwards conferred by a similar ceremony; and that the individual himself was called Miles Adobatus. The editor of Menage accords with Hickes, and adds in confirmation, that the old Fr. Dauber vel dober signifies, percutere, to strike, (to dab.) Hickes remarks, that, before the introduction by the Normans of creating knights by dubbing (per dubbationem), the ceremony was by consecration; (sc.) by absolution after confession, by vigils, masses, &c. To dubb is, consequentially—

To confer a new name or title.

& an abbot of Scone, that dubbid the kyng.
R. Brunne, p. 331.

——— He lokede
As is the kynde of a knyght, that cometh to be doubed
To geten his gate spores. Piers Ploughman, p. 339.

Certes, the sword that men yeven first to a knight whan he is newe dubbed, signifieth, that he shuld defend holy chirche, and not robbe it ne pille it: and who so doth is traitour to Crist.—Chaucer. Persones Tale.

And when any man is made a knight, he kneeling down, is strooken of the prince, with his sword naked, upon the back or shoulder, the prince saying, sus or sois chevalier au nom de Dieu, and (in times past) thus added St George, and at his arising the prince saith Avancez. This is the manner of dubbing of knights at this present, and that terme dubbing, was the old terme in this point, and not creation.
Smith. Commonwealth, b. i. c. 18.

There him he caused to kneele, and made to sweare,
Faith to his knight, and truth to ladies all;
And neuer to be recreant, for feare
Of perill, or of ought that might befall,
So him him dubbed, and his knight did call.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

But he that temper'd thee, bad thee stand vp,
Gaue thee no instance why thou shouldest do treason,
Vnlesse to dub thee with the name of traitor.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 2.

But are these men (who have thus dubbed themselves true Protestants) in good earnest such mortal enemies to popery, and the popish interest, as they pretend themselves to be?—South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

Should he succeed, you'll give him his degree;
If not, within he will receive no fee!
The college, you, must his pretensions back,
Pronounce him regular, or dub him quack.
Garrick. Prologue. She Stoops to Conquer.

DU'B, v. } See Dub, ante. Fr. Dauber, dober,—
DUB, n. } To strike; to emit or send forth the sound of a stroke or blow, (to dab.)

Dubbing,—see Dab; and the quotation there from Walton.

Wherin I meane to tell what race they rounne,
Who followe drummes before they knowethe dubbe,
And bragge of Mars before they feele his clubbe
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

But shall I say? this lesson learne of me,
When drums are durib, and sound not dub a dub,
Then be thou eke, as mewt as (is) a mayde
(I preach this sermon but to soundiours)
And learn to hue, within thy bravries bounds
Id. The Steele Glas.

For as the smith with hammour beats
His forged mettall, so
He dubs his club about their pates
And sleas them on a row.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 7.

——— But say, Sir Huon,
Now the drums dubbs, and the sticks turn'd bed-staves,
All the old foxes hunted to their holes,
What trade do you mean to follow?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act i. sc. 1.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian, and with Phrygian dubs.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

DU'BIOUS. } Lat. Dubius, dubitare, (q.)
DU'BIOUSLY. } duitare, (i.) In duo itare. (See DU'BIOUSNESS. } To Doubt.) Dubious is equi-
DUBIO'SITY. } valent to the Fr. Doubteux;
DU'BITABLE. } "Doubtful, uncertain, in DU'BITANCY. } suspence: also, variable, in-
DUBITA'TION. } constant, staggering; also ambiguous, perplexed, subject to cavilling or exception, whereof a question may be made, a controversie raised, or divers senses gathered," (Cotgrave.)

This saiyng litel or nothyng pleased the Duke of Burgoyne's messengers, for they thought that it had bene much more profitable to Kyng Edward, to haue circumspectly forsene afore, and prouided to stoppe his landyng, then now sodainly to abide the fortune of battaile, which is euer dubious and vncertayne.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 9.

And as for the trewe Inuocacion of God thorow Cryst, thei haue turned it into a dowtfull dubitacion.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

These relations leaving unsatisfaction in the hearers, do stir up ingenuous dubitantes unto experiment, and by an exploration of all, prevent delusion in any.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 18.

Since those ordinary means of expounding Scripture as searching the originals, conference of places, parity of reason, and analogie of faith, are all dubious, uncertain, and very fallible, he that is the wisest and by consequence the likeliest to expound truest in all probability of reason, will be very far from confidence.
Bp. Taylor. The Liberty of Prophesying, s. 4.

For first, Albertus Magnus speaks dubiously, confessing he could not confirm the verity hereof, but Aldrovandus plainly affirmeth, there can be such inequality [in the badger's legs] observed.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 5.

Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin; and therefore the ground of invocation of saints or angels being at least dubitable, their invocation is sin.
More. Antidote against Idolatry, p. 25.

Only our stupid, undisciplin'd, absurd, illogicall hearts have the skill to avoid it, running headlong and wilfully after the old impurities, even then when they are most fully without all dubitancy resolved, that all the joys of heaven are forfeited by this choice.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 505.

Whereas the right use of reason is, to make things doubtfull—certaine: and not to call things certaine, into doubt. Wherefore I report as deficient a calendar of dubitations, or problemes in nature, and approve the undertaking of such a worke, as a profitable paine.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 4.

But another hypothesis there is in Saint Austin, to which without dubitation he does peremptorily adhere, which I before intimated, viz. that although he admit of purgatory pains after this life, yet none but such as shall be at the day of judgment.—Bp. Taylor. Dissuas. from Popery, pt. ii. b. ii.

Thither to haste, the region to explore,
Was first my thought: but, speeding back to shore,
I deem'd it best to visit first my crew,
And send out spies the dubious coast to view.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

But this relation having been somewhat dubiously delivered to me, I must tell you, that Kely having an unsettled mind, left Oxon abruptly, without being entered into the matricula, and in his rambles in Lancashire, committing certain foul matters, lost both his ears at Lancaster.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Let us therefore at present acquiesce in the dubiousness of their antiquity, and think the authority of the past and present times a sufficient plea for your patronizing, and my dedicating, this poem.—Phillips. The Splendid Shilling, Ded.

This is done by the Goddess, [Minerva] that she may be thought to be really a man, as she appears to be, she speaks with the dubiousness of a man, not the certainty of a Goddess.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. i. Note.

I very readily admit of your excuse in regard to Sempronius, well knowing that your conduct upon that occasion may justly be imputed to those errors to which we were all equally liable, whilst we trod the dark and dubious paths of bondage.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. xiii. Let. 25.

But yet this bright and luminous truth, this judgment of nature, was clouded by such a multitude of superstitious notions that it appeared dubiously
Bolingbroke, Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

It seems almost a self evident proposition that there must be assurance where there is no doubt; but dubitation in the nature of it implies an assent to something if not to the thing doubted of, at least to the reasons occurring for and against it: for if you see none on either side, what can you doubt about?—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 2.

DU'CAT. } Fr. Ducat; It. Ducato, ducat-
DUCATO'ON. } tone; Sp. Ducado. Ducale nu- misma. A ducal coin. See Duke.

As fine as a ducket in Venise,
Of which to lite all in my pouche is.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

There were in the sayd ship fifty-five thousand ducates in redy money of the Spanish king's gold, which the souldiers merily shared among themselves
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. [illegible].

There was one that was very curious in keeping of his beard, and it was reported that hee bestowed euery moneth two dukats vpon the trimming of it. If it be so (said Poole) his beard will shortly be more worth than his head
Camden. Remaines. Wise Speeches

T' other day for six ducatoons she was willing,
Which I thought a great deal too dear.
Cotton. Epigramme De Monsieur Des Portes.

A ducatoon formerly passed at three guilders, and three stivers, or sixty-three stivers.
Locke. Considerations of the Lowering of Interest.

Upon engaging to pay an annual tribute of twelve thousand ducats, and to deliver every year six hundred Christian captives, or in case there being none to release an equal number of Moors, the Moors at last obtained a peace or rather a truce.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 20.

DUCK, v. } Dut. Duyken, ducken; Ger.
DUCK, n. } Ducken; Sw. Dyka, urinari,
DU'CKER. } immergere; which Ihre thinks
DU'CKING, n. } is the frequentative from the DU'CKLING, n. } A. S. Duf-ian, to dive.

To dip, dive or sink; to drop, to plunge, to immerse.

Applied by our older writers to the cringing or bowing of hypocrites or sycophants.

To make ducks and drakes upon the water, is to throw any thing so as to imitate the motion of those birds upon the water; to play at duck and drake with money, is to throw it away as boys (for such purpose) throw stones or other things upon the water; to squander it, spend it wastefully, uselessly.

Then shal thou swim as mery, I undertake,
As doth the white doke after her drake.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3576.

Master William Antony the master of the ship himselfe (when none else would or durst) ventured with danger of drowning by creeping along upon the maine yarde (which was let downe close to the raile) to gather it vp out of the sea, and to fasten it thereto, being in the mean while oftimes ducked ouer head and eares into the sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 164.

He walketh vp & downe all day musing and imagining mischief, a douking hypocrite made to dissemble.
Tyndall. Works, p. 374.

With their countenaunces framed to a grauitie, thei are oftē and much present in the high stretes, & in places of great resort of people, to the intente thei maie there haue much crouching and douckyng made vnto them.
Udal. Luke, c. 20.

The wanton maydens him espying, stood
Gazing awhile at his vnwonted guise;
Then th' one herselfe lowe ducked in the flood,
Abasht that her a stranger did avise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

It is said that then holding divers books in his hand, he did never let them go, but kept them always upon his head above water, and swam with his other hand, notwithstanding that they shot marvellously at him, and he was driven sometimes to duck into the water.—North. Plutarch, p. 609.

Play at duck and drake with my money.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act iv. sc. 2.

Pre'thee goe in (my duck) I'le but speak to 'em
And return instantly.—Id. Spanish Curate, Act ii. sc. 2.

The duck and mallard first, the falconers only sport,
(Of river-flights the chief, so that all other sort,
They only stream-fowl term) in every mere abound,
That you would think they sat upon the very ground.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

——— No, dainty duckers,
Up with your three pil'd spirits, your wrought valours.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act iv. sc. 1.

For my kneeling down at my entrance, to begin with prayer, and after to proceed with reverence, I did but my duty in that; let him scoffingly call it crouching or ducking, or what he pleases.—State Trials. Abp. Laud, an. 1640.

If he be not fain before he dies to eat acorns, let me live with nothing but pollerd, and my mouth be made a duck-ing-stool for every scold to set her tail on.
Watkins. The Inforced Marriage, Act iii.

——— I must have my capons
And turkeys brought me in, with my green geese
And ducklings i' th' season.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Beggars' Bush, Act i. sc. 2.

Yet, ere the armies join'd, that hopeful elf,
Thy dear, thy dainty duckling, had Matilda
Advanced, and stated like Pierre's or Cæsar.
Messinger. The Picture, Act ii. sc. 1.

This was now discovered to have been the blood of a duck, which they renewed every week, and the one side of the vial was so thick that there was no seeing through it, but the other was clear and transparent; and it was so placed near the altar, that one in a secret place behind could turn either side of it outward.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1538.

So have I seen, within a pen,
Young ducklings foster'd by a hen,
But, when let out, they run and muddle,
As instinct leads them, in a puddle.
Swift. The Progress of Marriage.

A gauntess she seems: but, look behind,
And then she dwindles to the pygmy kind.
Duck-legg'd, short-waisted.—Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

At length, on the 18th of September, we crossed the line in the longitude of 8° west; after which the ceremony of ducking, &c. generally practised on this occasion was not omitted. Cook. Voyage, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 1.

The man who can see without pleasure a hen gather her chickens under her wing, or the train of ducklings follow their parent into the pond, is like him who has no music in his soul, and who, according to Shakspeare, is fit for treasons, murders, and every thing that can disgrace and degrade humanity.—Knox, Ess. 158.

DUCT, n.
DU'CTIBLE.
DU'CTILE.
DUCTI'LITY.
DU'CTILENESS.
DU'CTIONS.
DU'CTURE.

Fr. Ductile; Lat. Duc-ere, to draw; Ductilis, (contracted from Ductibilis,) that may be drawn. Consequentially, Ductile is—

Easy to be drawn; easy to be turned or bent; tractable, flexible, pliable; easy to be induced, complying, yielding.

For as Mr. Cowper saith, if we consider in this duct (the thoracic duct) its several divisions and inosculations, its numerous valves looking from below upwards, its advantageous situation between the great artery and vertebræ of the back, together with the ducts discharging their refluent lympha from the lungs and other neighbouring parts, we shall find all conduce to demonstrate the utmost art of nature used in furthering the steep and perpendicular ascent of the chyle.—Derham. Phys.-Theol. b. iv. c. 11. Note (59.)

It [iron] is the most impure of all metals, hardly meltable (but with additaments;) yea malleable and ductible with difficulty.—Fuller. Worthies. Shropshire.

She gilded us, but you are gold; and she
Informed us, but transubstantiates you;
Soft dispositions, which ductile be,
Elixir-like, she makes not clean, but new.
Donne. To the Countess of Huntingdon.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductilness, the application,
The wholesomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free.—Id. Elegy 18.

Gold is remarkable for its admirable ductility and ponderosity, wherein it excels all other bodies hitherto known.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Yet, by the but meanly wise and common ductures of bemisted nature, it would have been no very powerful oratory, to perswade the taking up of our cross to follow him.
Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 66.

The ductile wax with busy hands I mould,
And cleft in fragments, and the fragments roll'd.
Th' aerial region now grown warm with day,
The wax dissolv'd beneath the burning ray.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

But interest, and design, are a kind of force upon the soul, bearing a man oftentimes besides the ducture of his native propensities, and the first outgoings of his will.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 1.

And now, let any one judge whether it is fitter for us to steer our practice according to the ducture of the universal church, or the broken voice of a particular fiction, compared to that, both small in number, and inconsiderable in qualification.—Id. Ib. vol. ix. Ser. 5.

Fourthly, the main pipe, which carries the chyle from the reservoir to the blood, viz. the thoracic duct, being fixed in an almost upright position, and wanting that advantage of propulsion which the arteries possess, is furnished with a succession of valves to check the ascending fluid, when once it has passed them, from falling back.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

Nor do I doubt the ability of Shakspeare to have continued his (Mercutio's) existence, though some of his sallies are perhaps out of the reach of Dryden; whose genius was not very fertile of merriment, nor ductile to humour, but acute, argumentative, comprehensive, and sublime.
Johnson. Observations on Shakspeare's Plays.

There is not yet such a convenient ductility in the human understanding, as to make us capable of being persuaded, that men can possibly mean the ultimate good of the whole society, by rendering miserable for a century together the greater part of it.—Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

DU'DDER, to dodder, (qv.) To tremble, to totter.

'Tis woundy cold sure. I dudder and shake like an aspen leaf every joint of me.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act ii. sc. 1.

DU'DGEON, n.
DU'DGEON, adj.
DU'DGEON-DAGGER.

Skinner says, from Ger. Dolch, pugio, (q.d.) Dolchin or Dolkin; or from Ger. Deagen, degen, gladius, a sword. Junius,—Dudgeon haft; manubrium apiatum; "which means a handle of wood with a grain rough, as if seeds of parsley were strown over it," (Steevens.) Wilkins (noticed by Mr. Nares) says, "Dudgeon,—indignation. Root of Box. Dudgeon-dagger,—short sword, whose handle is of the root of box." Gascoigne in his General Advertisement, "The most knottie peece of box may be wrought into a faire dudgen hafte." Dudgeon is applied to the haft or handle of a dagger or knife, to distinguish it from those which might have more costly hafts or handles; and thus Mr. Gifford thinks it became a term of contempt, and from a simple characteristic of poverty to be frequently employed in denoting the meaner passions. Dudgeon, (lit.) he interprets, wooden. "I am plain and dudgeon," in Beaum. & Fletch.—coarse, rude. "A clapper dudgeon," in B. Jonson,—one who claps his wooden dish at the door for broken meat, &c. (See Gifford's B. Jonson, vol. v. p. 96. Nares's Glossary, and the Variorum Shakespeare, (1821) Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 1, Note 5.) Mr. Gifford is undoubtedly right with respect to the consequential usages of the word; but that it neither means wooden nor root of box is plain from Holland. The word may be applied as an epithet to the box or any other wood, to express some particular quality, and it is not improbable that such quality is strength, Dut. Dooghen; A. S. Dug-an, to be strong, (whence our Doughty; which is also now used, as Dudgeon is, contemptuously;) and thus what Gascoigne calls "the most knottie peece of box" might with propriety be named dudgeon.

Dudgeon is applied, consequentially, to—

Stubbornness, sullenness, quarrelsomeness; offence, ill-will.

Now for the box-tree, the wood thereof is in as great request as the very best: seldome hath it any graine crisped damaske wise, and never but about the root, [raro crispanti, nec nisi radice] the which is dudgin and full of worke.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 16.

I fear no censure, nor what thou can'st say,
Nor shall my spirit one jot of vigour lose:
Think'st thou my spirit shall keep the packhorse way,
That every dudgen low invention goes.
Drayton, Idea 31.

——— I see thee still:
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood;
Which was not so before.—There's no such thing:
It is the bloody businesse, which informes
Thus to mine eyes.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— I fear
This peace will make me something that I love not,
For by my troth, though I am plain and dudgeon,
I would not be an ass—and to sell parcels,
I can as soon be hang'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 1.

Here hee is! and with him—what? a clapper
Dudgeon!
That's a good signe, to haue the beggar follow him,
So neere at his first entry into fortune.
B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act ii. sc. 4.

They'l quarrell sooner for precedence here,
And take it in more dudgeon to be slighted,
Than they will in publique meetings, 'tis their glories.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act ii. sc. 1.

There's ne'r a one of these, the worst and weakest,
(Chuse where you will) but dare attempt the raising,
Against the soveraign peace of Puritans,
A may pole and a morris, maugre maior's
Their zeal, and dudgeon daggers.
Id. The Woman's Prize, Act v. sc. 1.

When civil dudgeon first grew high,
And men fell out they knew not why;
When hard words, jealousies and fears,
Set folks together by the ears.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

He is even ready to fear that divines should take his honest freedom in dudgeon; and that it may possibly procure him in return, some ecclesiastical Billingsgate, to be called infidel, deist, and perhaps atheist.
Warburton. Use of Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. i.

DUE, n.
DUE, adj.
DU'EFUL.
DU'EFULLY.
DU'ENESS.
DU'TY.
DU'TEOUS.
DU'TEOUSNESS.
DU'TIFUL.
DU'TIFULLY.
DU'TIFULNESS.

It. Dovuto, Sp. Debido; Fr. Deu, from devoir or debvoir; Lat. Deb-ere; from de, and habere, quasi de alio habere, to have of or from another. (See DEBT and OWE.) Due, n. (as Debt) is—

Any thing had or held of or from another; his property or right of property; that which is owed, which any one ought to have; has a right to demand, claim or possess; which any one deserves, or has earned by service.

Due, adj. as the French, is, consequentially, "just, fit, right, apt, seasonable, convenient," (Cotgrave.)

Duty and right are reciprocal: if one has the right to command, it is the duty of another to obey.

"Duetee, n. Fr. duty: what is due to any one," (Tyrwhitt.)

The kyng hem vayre vaderrong, and honoured in ech wyse,
An gret druyte tolde of hem, vor her gentryse.
R. Gloucester, p. 313.

And that is no mede, bote amereede
A maner dewe dette, for the doynge.
Piers Ploukman, p. 53.

This wretched worldes transmutation
As weale & wo, now poore and now honour,
Without order or due discrecion
Governed is by fortune's errour.
Chaucer. Balade of the Lak.

Than it is wisdom, as it thinketh me,
To maken vertue of necessite,
And take it wel, that we may not eschewe,
And namely that to us all is dewe.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3046.

But craftily encourage her thereto
By other meanes, as by commending
And not to much, but duely mending
Both praise and blame.—Id. The Remedie of Love.

If holy church after the dute
Of Christ's word ne be not all auised
To make peace, accord, and vnite, &c.
Id. A Balade to King Hen. IV.

And right as Judas hadde purses smale
And was a theef, right swiche a theef was he,
His maister hadde but half his dueire.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 6934.

And euery gouernance is due
To pitee, thus I maie argue,
That pitee is the foundemente
Of euery kynges regimente.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

For but a man's wit be awerued,
Whan kynde is duriche serued,
It ought of reson to suffise.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

I not howe that thei shall amende
The woful world in other thinges
To make peace betwene kynges
After the lawe of charitee
Which is the propre deuetee
Belonged vnto the priesthood.—Id. Ib. Prologes.

And for the honour of the indictment and manifesting the due of their proceedings, Mr Secretary desired their judgments.—State Trials. Sir Christ. Blunt, an. 1600.

To this obiection I answere, that if God of his mercy and thorough the bloud of his sonne Jesus haue not remitted ye payne due vnto that crime, then shall we all be damned for the payne due vnto euery disobedience that is against God, is eternal damnation.—Frith. Workes, p. 11.

And if it [hybernlytye] be well and duely employed, it acquireth perpetualle honour to the gyuer, and moche frute and synguiar commoditie thereby encreaseth.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 10.

Let us heare the end of all: feare God and kepe his commandments: for this is the whole (duetie) of man. For God wil bring euerie worke vnto iudgement, with euric secret thing, whether it be good or euil.
Geneua Bible, 1561. Eccles. xii. 13, 14.

But death for an errour of such kind, in terms and words not altogether dutiful of certain bishops, cannot be but extreme cruelty.—State Trials. John Udal, an. 1590.

I will for ever hereafter forsake all such undutiful and dangerous courses, and demean myself dutifully and peaceably to all authorities both civil and ecclesiastical, established in this realm.—Id. Ib.

You think more liberlie in wilfulness, than wisdome in dutifulnesse, and so run headlong, not to the mischief of other, but to the destruction of your selues.
Sir John Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

To praise Achilles, or the Trojan crew,
Show'd little art, for praise was but their due.
Suckling. An Answer to Verses made in his Praise.

Every third word a lye, duer pay'd to the hearer then the Turkes tribute.—Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

But thee, O Jove, no equall judge I deeme
Of my desert, or of my deufull right;
That in thine owne behalfe maist partiall seeme.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 6.

To whom in sort, as he at first begonne,
He daily did apply himselfe to donne
All dewfull service, void of thoughts impure.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 10.

Yet did those two themselves so bravely beare,
That th' other little gained by the lone,
But with their owne repayed duely were,
And vsury withall. Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 9.

Now then, when God had dissolved that dueness, that debt, (as I may call it,) that obligation, which according to the law of nature, in a way of meetness and comelinesse it was fit for God as a creator, to deal with a creature, there is now room for grace.—Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 199.

So that this dueness imports only what it became God to do, and was worthy of him, in such or such a case; as he useth the word, Hebrews, ii. 10. for it beeame him, &c.
Id. Works, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 21.

——— They both attone
Did dewly to their lady, as became.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Thus spake the kinde and prudent Astragon,
And much their kinde impatience he appeas'd,
For of his griefs (which heavier than their owne
Were born by both) their dutious feare are eas'd.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 2.

——— You yet may, lady,
In recompense of all my duteous service,
(Provided that your will answer your power,)
Become my creditress.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act iii. sc. 1.

If piety goes before, whatever dutiousness or observance comes afterwards, it cannot easily be amiss.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

By this meanes the multitude of the poor needy people (and all such rabble as had nothing to lose, and had less regard of honesty before their eyes) came to be of greater force (because their voyces were numbred by the pole) then the noble honest citizens, whose persons and purse did dutifully serve the commonwealth in their wars.
North. Plutarch, p. 195.

But now the best way to redeem this lost privilege (for which we may giue those thanks only) is to giue all opportune appearance of obedience and dutifulness to his majesty's command.—State Trials. John Hampden, Esq. an. 1601.

Rather than offend them (as he expresses it,) rather than do a thing that might encourage others to refuse the payment of their dues he orders St Peter to lay down the money they demanded.—Sharpe, vol. v. Ser. 2.

Hereby [by temperance and moderation] it comes to pass, that our senses, which are the instruments of our pleasures, are always preserved in that due purity and quickness, that is absolutely necessary for the right performing of their offices, and the rendering our perceptions of any thing grateful and agreeable.—Sharpe, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Could there be greater liberty than for their whole nation to be preserved from all the designs of their enemies, to enjoy their own laws, and matters of justice to be duly administered amongst them? and had they not all these under the government of Moses?—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 7.

A seat, soft spread with furry spoils, prepare;
Due distant, for us both to speak and hear.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

The practical duties, which the Christian religion enjoyns, are all such as are most agreeable to our natural notions of God, and most perfective of the nature, and conducive to the happiness and well being of man
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 10.

A female softness, with a manly mind,
A daughter dutious, and a sister kind.
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd.
Dryden. On a Lady who died at Bath.

This benevolence was presented to the queen in a very humble and dutiful manner in writing, bearing date the same fourth day of March by the archbishop, and signed with his seal.—Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, b. iii. c. 17.

He calls them likewise σεβουενοι, worshippers; such who deliberately resolving and foreseeing what ought to be done, perform it with all dutifulness and diligence.
Id. Life of Sir John Cheeke. A Discourse of Superstition.

It [religion] consists in that love to God, as a being perfectly holy in himself and good to us; and that dutifulness to him, as the author and ruler of the universe; which engage men to seek his favour by imitating his nature and obeying his laws.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

If he sets sacrifice in competition with mercy, as the Jews did, when, under the pretence of rich offerings to the temple, they defrauded their parents in their old age of the support which was their due.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

——— If his speare prevail,
And I fall under him, he shall account
My spoils his own, and bear them to the fleet
But he shall yield my body to receive
Its due funereal rites from Trojan hands.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

As the will of God is our rule; to enquire what is our duty, or what we are obliged to do, in any instance, is, in effect, to enquire what is the will of God in that instance? which consequently becomes the whole business of morality.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. ii. c. 4.

I advised him to persevere in dutifully bearing with his mother's ill humour, till time and her own good sense should disentangle her from the web which ministerial cunning had thrown around her.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 367.

DU'EL, v.
DU'EL, n.
DU'ELLER.
DU'ELLING, n.
DU'ELLIST.
DUE'LLOE.
DU'EL-TRIAL.

Fr. Duel; It. and Sp. Duello; Lat. Duellum; so called a duobus, from two, whence it seems properly to be monomachia, or single combat, quoque est inter duas, urbes gentes et partes, (Vossius.)
See the third quotation from South.

If death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forlorne hope, for the cannon's mouth, for cuirassiers, for fiends to duel with
Hammond. Works vol iv. p. 522.

——— Who, single combatant,
Duell'd their armies rankt in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd
At one spear's length.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And this vast man, besides his wondrous might,
No man as he so skilful is in fight;
Expert in all to duels that belong,
Train'd up in arms, whilst yet he was but young.
Drayton. David & Goliah.

Looking down from the pinnacle of the temple, into the houses, streets, highways, and fields of the world: where I find death acting in so many and so divers postures: methinks there's no one whereby the prince of darkness triumphs more over our humane nature, then (this wherein he imploys our courage, even the vertue of our nature to destroy it self) by the desperate practice of duels.
Mountayne. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 11. s. 2.

Agreeable to which is our style of duellers, challenging to the field.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 29.

I have character'd this spirit of duelling as ugly and deform'd as I could: and surely it is not an improper metre, in this design of death I have in hand, because death is fouler in that shape than in any other.
Mountayne. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 11. s. 3.

Thirdly, his majesty's said attorney-general did, by many reasons which he brought and alledged, free the law of England from certain vain and childish exceptions, which are taken by these duellists.
State Trials. Case of Duels, an. 1615.

This being well fore'd, and urg'd, may have the power
To move most gallants to take kicks in time,
And spurn out the duellers out o' th' kingdom.
Beaum. & Fletch. Passionate Madman, Act iii. sc. 1.

If the business be not decided by this, or that if his majesty is pleased to admit torture before a duel-trial, the paunel is ready with him to bear out the torture, and to be tried thereby, with the said Lord Rea, and let the truth then appear.—State Trials. Lord Ochiltree, an. 1631.

He must at length, poor man! die dully of old age at home, when here he might so fashionably and gentilely, long before that time, have been duell'd or flux'd into another world.—South, vol. ii. Ser 6.

And therefore this duelling practice (what thoughts soever some may have of it) proceeds not from any sense of honour, but is really and truly a direct defiance and reproach to the laws and justice of a government, as if they could not, or would not, protect a man in the dearest concern he has in the world, which is his reputation and good name; but left every slandered person to carve out his own satisfaction, and so to make himself both judge in his own cause and executioner too.—Id. vol. vi. Ser. 3.

A duel, called by the Greeks μονομαχια, and by the Latins duellum, receiving its denomination from the persons engaged in it, is properly a fight or combat between two persons, mutually undertook, appointed, and consented to by each of them.—Id. vol. x. Ser. 7.

I suppose I need not take any paine to prove the unlawfulness, nay, the sottishness of such duellings, where men sold their lives for a crown or an angel; and by a preposterous way of labouring, not to get their living, but to procure their death.—Id. Ib.

Oh, how I hate, abominate, detest and abhor, those perpetual talkers, disputants, controverters and duellers of the tongue.—Dryden. An Evening's Love, Act iii.

You may also see the hope and support of many a flourishing family untimely cut off by a sword of a drunken dueller, in vindication of something that he miscalls his honour.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 3

Him his cotemporary Theseus succeeded in the beargarden, which honour he held for many years: this grand duellist went to hell, and was the only one of that sort that ever came back again.—Tatler, No. 31.

Nothing surely can be more absurd and barbarous than the practice of duelling, but those who justify it say that it begets civility and good manners.—Hume. A Dialogue.

A duellist, you may observe, always values himself upon his courage, his sense of honour, his fidelity, and friendship; qualities which are here, indeed, very oddly directed, but which have been esteemed universally since the foundation of the world.—Id. Ib.

DUE'NNA. Sp. from Lat. Domina. Formerly any widow lady, or mistress of a family; now it is generally taken for a sort of ancient widows they keep in all great houses in Spain for grandeur, and not for any service they do, (Delpino.)

How could I know so little of myself when I sent my duenna to forbid your coming more under my lattice.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy. Slawkenbergius's Tale.

DUG. Lye thinks the origin of this word must be sought in the Isl. Degg-ia, which he interprets lac præbere, to give or yield milk: and thus to mean—

That which yields milk; the teat, the nipple: or may it not be that which is tug-ged; which the sucking young tug?

A harte there was of comely portes and huge with hornes yspred,
Whom Tirrhus children (from the dug withdrawen) for pleasure bred.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii.

She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

Nor will I praise my cattle; trust not me,
But judge yourself, and pass your own decree:
Behold their swelling dugs; the weepy weight
Of ewes, that sink beneath the milky freight.
Garth. Ovid. Met b. xiv.

Meanwhile this hireling wretch (disgrace to swains!)
Defrauds his master, and purloins his gains,
Milks twice an hour, and drains the famish'd dams,
Whose empty dugs in vain attract the lambs.
Beattie, Past. 3.

DUKE.
DU'KEDOM.
DU'KELING, n.
DU'KESHIP.
DU'CAL.
DU'CHESS.
DU'CHERY.
DU'CHY.

Fr. Duc; It. Duca; Sp. Duque. Fr. Duchesse; It. Duchessa; Sp. Duquesa; from the Lat. Dux, from duc-ere to lead.

A leader: now a mere title of rank.

See the quotation from Gibbon.

"Lord Angelo dukes it well;" i. e. acts the part, performs the duties of the duke.

An hey duk of al that studs, he clepede that town ywys
Aftur ys name Gloucestre, as he gut y clepud ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 67.

Albrik was his fadir, a duke of faire fame,
Lord of Wicombe, of Redynges, and of Isame.
R. Brunne, p. 14.

——— A voys aloud seyde
The lord of myght and of man. that made all thynges
Duke of this dymme place. anon undo the gates
That Crist mowe comen in. the kynges sone of Iavene.
And with that breth hell brake.—Piers Ploughman, p. 358.

Ich am hus dure doubeter. duchesse of hevene.—Id. p. 25.

——— A kingdom oth^r ducke
May nat be sold sothly.—Id. p. 50.

Be ye subgett of ech creature of man for god, either to the kyng as to him that is liger in staat, either to duykis as to thilke that ben sent of hym.—Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 2.

Whilom, as olde stories tellen us,
Ther was a duk that highte Theseus.
Of Athenes he was lord and governour,
And in his time swiche a conquerour,
That greter ther was non under the sonne.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale.

She smote thee to ground for all thy cruelties
Wherefore y^e dukeship of Diamedes & dignitie
Unto her great laud and glorie perpetuall
Attributed is with triumph laureall.
Id. Balade. The Nine Ladies Worthie.

And sothly suster mine (qd. she)
Now be we duchesses both I and ye.
Id. Legend of Ariadne.

I rede in old bokes thus,
There was a duke, whiche Spartacus
Men clepe, and was a warriour.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Of these besauntes I haue lernyd there shuld be ii.; that one is called a besaunte imperiall, and ye other a besaũt ducall.—Fabyan, an. 1273.

For firste he gaue him y^e duchie of Berry, and after that whole Normandy, wherof in no long time he bereft him the possession, regimẽt & title, without any cause geuẽ, on the partie of yong Charles.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 12.

In whiche tyme came vnto hym certayne men of the duchie Burgoyne, as lordes of dyuers holdes and townes within that duchery, and gaue vnto hym, to the entent he shulde nat molest or hurte that coũtre, cc.m. floryns of golde.
Fabyan, an. 1359.

——— Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence, he puts transgression to't
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

When they devis'd to link, by wedlock's band,
The house of Suffolk to Northumberland;
Our fatal dukedom to your dukedom bound,
To frame this building on so weak a ground.
Drayton. Lady Jane Grey to Dudley.

K. Hen. Urswick, command the dukeling and these fellows,
To Digby, the Lieutenant of the Tower.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act v. sc. 2.

Petron. Will your dukeship
Sit down and eat some sugar-plumbs?
Massinger. The Great Duke of Florence, Act iv. sc. 2.

From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd,
It miss'd the duke, but his great heart it griev'd:
Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dyed his garment with their scatter'd gore.
Waller. Instructions to a Painter.

The King, before his expedition into England, had promised his eldest son Robert the dukedom of Normandy, in case he conquered the kingdom he then pretended.
Sir W. Temple. Introduction to the History of England.

——— What shall I advise?
Ev'n quit the house, for thou too long has sat in't;
Produce at last thy dormant ducal patent;
There near thy master's throne in shelter plac'd,
Let Will, unheard by thee, his thunder waste.
Swift. On Mr. Pulteney's being put out of the Council, 1731.

The Duke of Lorrain being in this manner dispossessed of his duchy, without any preceding declaration of war on the part of France, filled all Europe with his complaints.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 188.

The titles of counts and dukes have obtained in modern languages so very different a sense, that the use of them may occasion some surprize. But it should be recollected, that the second of those appellations is only a corruption of the Latin word, which was indiscriminately applied to any military chief. All these provincial generals were, therefore, dukes.—Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 17.

In this sense it is distinguished into four quarters, into empires, kingdoms, states, commonwealths, principalities, dukedoms, provinces, &c.
Watts. Geography & Astronomy, s. 12.

'Tis virtue can alone impart
The patent of a ducal heart:
Unless this herald speaks him great,
What shall avail the glare of state
Cotton. Visions. Content, Vis. 4.

But now grown desp'rate, and beyond all hope,
I curse the hall, the duchess, and the pope.
Cambridge. Elegy written in an empty Assembly Room.

The interest of the Duke of Cornwall has given occasion to a regimation nearly of the same kind in that ancient duchy.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 11.

DULCE, v.
DULCE, adj.
DU'LCING, n.
DU'LCET.
DU'LCIFY.
DULCIFICA'TION.
DU'LCORATE, v.
DULCORA'TION.

Lat. Dulcis, quia delicit, id est, delectat. It was first written delces, then deles, doles, and lastly dules. Vossius,—de, and lacere, to draw, to attract.

Dulce, the verb, is not uncommon in our old writers, though now disused. See ADDULCE.

To delight, to be or cause to be delightful, sweet, pleasant, gratifying, agreeable; to sweeten; to soothe; to harmonize.

O howe delicious (sayth David) are thy sayenges vnto my throte! More duleeth thã hony are thy wordes Lorde to my mouth.—Bale Image, T. 7.

And the lawes and exercise therof, beinge in pure Latin or doulce Prenche, fewe men in consultations shuld (in myne opinion) compare with our lawyars.
Sir T. Elyot. Governor, b. i. c. 14.

Framinge himselfe to plye his looke
with lesser greefe of myrthe,
He will see the (my dulcet female)
with warmne westerne wynde.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Numitius.

Not now deere son, from thyne embraxings sweete should I be pluckt,
O dulcet son.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. viii.

And lytle and lytle fro theyr very childhoode to accustome them dulcely and pleasãtly in the meditacion thereof.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1215.

Musick (quoth he) [Aristoxenus] is brought in thither, because that whereas wine is wont to pervert and overturn as well the bodies as the minds of those who take it immoderately, music by that order, symmetry, and accord which is in it, reduceth them again into a contrary temperature, and dulceth all.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1039.

Good reason therefore, that such asperity of the spirit or rather indeed of the vitall breath should be dulced and appeased, by the use of some sweet and pleasant liquour.
Id. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 24.

For there came ambassadors to Rome, which brought letters from King Tarquine, full of sweet and lowly speeches, to win the favour of the people, with commission to use all the mildest means they could, to dulce and soften the hearded hearts of the multitude: who declared how the king had left all pride and cruelty, and meant to ask nought but reasonable things.—North. Plutarch, p. 63.

This we may undoubtedly gather and conjecture by his great dilligence, which he employed in that musick and harmony, which he inferred for the dulcing, taming, and appeasing of the soul.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 54.

Upon his dulcet pipe the merie doth only play.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

I know that a decoction of wild gourd or colocynthis (though somewhat qualified) will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment by an addition of flour or meal.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 11.

The fœtor whereof may discover itself by sweat and urine, as being unmasterable by the natural heat of man, not to be dulcified by concoction beyond an unsavoury condition.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 10.

The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swines-dung above all other dung.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 465.

The fourth is in the dulcoration of some metals; as saccharum, Saturni, &c.—Id. Ib. § 358.

Licymnia's dulcet voice, her eye
Bright-darting its resplendent ray,
Her breast, where love and friendship lie,
The Muse commands me sing in softer lay.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ode 12.

In the former of these cases the medicine may be dangerous, unless it be, after the solution or corrosion ended, exquisitely dulcified from all remainder of the corrosive salt.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 375

Fair water must be so often poured, till you have dulcified the matter therein contained, the sign of which dulcification is (you know) when the water that has passed through it, comes from it as tasteless as it was poured upon it.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 787.

Yet will I view her still, however coy,
In dreams poetic; see her to the sound
Of dulcet symphonies harmonious lead
Her sportive sister graces, Mirth serene,
And Peace, sweet inmate of the sylvan shade.
Whitehead. To the Nymph of Bristol Spring.

They to the dome where smoke, with curling play,
Announc'd the dinner to the regions round,
Summon'd the singer blithe, and harper gay,
And aided wine with dulcet-streaming sound.
Johnson. Parody of a Translation.

DU'LCIMER. It. Dolcimelle; a musical instrument so called a soni dulcedine; from the sweetness of its sound, (Skinner.) And see the quotation from Warton: whence it appears that, in his time, a particular kind of bonnet was called a Dulcimer.

——— The harp
Had work and rested not, the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The females that are guilty of breaking my orders, I shall respectively pronounce to be kits, hornpipes, dulcimers, and kettle drums.—Tatler, No. 225.

With bonnet trimm'd and flounced withal,
Which they a dulcimer do call,
And stockings white as snows that fall.
Warton. The High Street Tragedy.

DULL, v.
DULL, adj.
DU'LLARD, n.
DU'LLARD, adj.
DU'LLER.
DU'LLY.
DU'LNESS.
DU'LSOME.

Ger. Doll, which Wachter derives from Dol-en, dwalen, desipere, delirare, and that from the A. S. Dwol-ian. Tooke derives the Eng. Dull from the same A. S. verb, which he renders Hebere, hebetare, to thicken. Lye and Sommer,—Errare. Skinner thinks from the A. S. Dol-ian, to bear, to sustain. Wachter and Tooke differ only in this, that the former gives the common usage or consequential application, the latter the primitive meaning. See DOLT.

To thicken; to blunt, (sc.) the edge of a knife or other instrument; to thicken, blunt, or deaden (met.) the faculties or powers of the mind; to deaden, to stupify; to diminish the keenness, the lustre, weaken the power of; to damp, to sadden, to drowse, to lethargise.

Right nought am I through your doctrine,
I dull under your discipline.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

I not (qd. she) wherof it serueth thy question to assoil, me thinketh the now duller in wittes, than when I with thee first mette.—Id. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

Sothly the good workes that he did before that he fell in deadly sinne, ben all mortified, astoned, and dulled by the evil sinning.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Therwith her list so wel to line,
That dulnesse was of her a dread.—Id. Dreame.

But byeause that in cunning I am young, and can yet but creepe, this lerid A, B, C, haue I set into lettres, for I cannot passen the telling of three as yet: and yf God will, in short time I shall amend this lewdnesse in ioyning of sillables, which thyng for dulnesse of wytte I may not in three letters declare.—Id. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

I am so rude in my degree,
And eke my wittes ben so dull,
That I ne maie nouht to the full
Attaine unto so high a lore.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The discretion of a tutor consisteth in temperaunce: that is to saye, that he suffre not the child not to be fatigate with continuall study or learning: wherwith the delycate and tender wytte may be dulled or oppressed.
Sir T. Elyot. Governor, b. i. c. 7.

So that neither the hearers be troubled, with confounding of matter, and heaping one thing in another's neck, nor yet their memorie dulled with ouerthwart rehearsal, and disorderly telling of our tale.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 102.

Howbeit they that canne not fynde in theyr heart to commende another mannes good deede, shewe themselfe either enuious or elles of nature verye colde and dull.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1223.

This thing also Hillary, who was himselfe a Frenchmā borne, in his hymnes testifieth, in the same callynge his countreye men dullardes.—Udal. Pref to Galathians.

But that now, for soles and dulleheddes, we be made sobre and wise, that for rebelles we are meke and tractable, that for men erryng out of the way, we are made knowars of the trueth.—Udal. Titus, c. 3.

What answere doth he make vnto it? he sayth he will not answere it fully. In fayth that is spoken very dully.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1029.

Albeit the Galathians are Grecians, yet are they originally descended of Frenchemen, & (as S. Heirome sayeth) in dulnes of witte resemble thē.—Udal. Pref. to Galathians.

Vpon his crested scalpe so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made
The deadly dint his dulled senses all dismaid
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 11.

So (no doubt) even in grafting, for the same cause, the choice of the stock doth much, always provided, that it be some what inferiour to the crons, for otherwise it dulleth it.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 407.

Look in your glass and there appears a face
That over-goes my blunt intention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Shakespeare, Son. 103.

Off with thy pining black, it dulls a souldier:
And put on resolution like a man,
A noble fate waits on thee.
Beaum. & Fletch. The False One, Act iv. sc. 3.

King. Let there be no noyse made (my gentle friends),
Vnless some dull and fauourable hand
Will whisper musicke to my wearie spirit.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 4.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streame of the springing day
With your dull influence, it is for you
To sit and scoul upon night's heavy brow.
Crashaw. On a Foul Morning.

But would I bee a poet if I might
To rub my browes three days, and wake three nights,
And bite my nails, and scratch my dullard head,
And curse the backward Muses on my bed
About one peevish syllable.—Bp. Hall, b. vi. Sat. 1.

But of all, your grace must flie phlebotomie, fresh pork, conger, and clarified whay; they are all dullers of the vital spirits.—Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act ii. sc. 1.

Desire takes wing and straight does fly,
It stays not dully to enquire the why,
That happy thing, a lover, grown,
I shall not see with others eyes, scarce with mine own.
Cowley. The Request.

Then the fat flesh-pots they so much desire,
Whereon in Egypt gluttoning they fed,
When they came hungry home from carrying mire
Which only dullness and gross humours bred
Drayton. Moses his Birth & Miracles, b. iii.

But since we two are brothers, and subscribe
Both volunteers to the poetic tribe,
I dare not do't, lest any dulman says
We by consent do one another praise.
Brome. To his Friend J. B. on his Tragedy.

When the success and courage of the Romans had made them masters of the wealth and pleasures of all the conquered nations round about them, we see how quickly the edge of their valour was dulled, and the rigourous honesty of their morals dissolved and melted away with those delights, which too easily circumvent and overcome the hearts of men.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

Those men that are dullar will be apt to suspect from our being so angry and so waspish, that we have but a bad matter to manage.—Sharpe, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Queen. Honour, a very word · an empty name!
How dully wretched is the slave to fame!
Give me the soul that's large and unconfin'd;
Free as the air, and boundless as the wind.
Otway. Alcibiades, Act ii. sc. 1.

In eldest time, ere mortals writ or read,
Ere Pallas issued from the Thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all possess'd her ancient right,
Daughter of Chaos and eternal night:
Fate in their dotage this fair idiot gave,
Gross as her sire, and as her mother grave,
Laborious, heavy, busy, bold and blind,
She rul'd, in native anarchy, the mind.
Pope. The Dunciad, b i.

——— The brazen flashes dread
Of num'rous helmets, corslets furbish'd bright,
And shields refulgent, meeting, dull'd the eye,
And turn'd it dark away —Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

Through kind infusion of celestial pow'r,
The dullard earth May quick'neth with delight.
Thomson. A Hymn to May.

In stupid indolence my life is spent,
Supinely calm and dully innocent.
Lyttelton. Soliloquy of a Beauty in the Country.

Cards were superfluous here, with all the tricks
That idleness has ever yet contriv'd
To fill the void of an unfurnish'd brain,
To palliate dulness, and give time a shove.
Cowper. The Task, b. iv.

And bloom'd a shade to Cantium's sunny shores
Delightsome, and in cheerful goblets laught
Potent, what time Aquarius' urn impends
To rin the dulsome day —Smart. The Hop Garden.

DUM, or
DUMB, v.
DUMB, adj.
DU'MELY.
DU'MNESS.

Goth. Dumba, or dumbs, mutus; A. S. Adumb-ian, obmutescere, to hold one's peace, to keep silence, to become mute or dumb, (Somner.) Tooke thinks from the A. S. Dam-an, demman, (Ger. Dammen, dammen,) obturare, obstruere, to dam; and that dumb means obturatum, obstructum, dammed; and therefore when those who have been dumb recover their speech, their mouths are said to be opened; the dam being, as it were, removed. The passage from Shakespeare, (Antony and Cleopatra,) he thus explains,—"What I would have spoke was, in a beastly manner obstructed by him," (Tooke, ii. 335.) He remarks that to bar, to blin, and to dam, were originally general terms, having all one common meaning, viz. obstruction; distinguished in their application by custom alone. In Kilian, dom is interpreted surdus, i. e. deaf. Dom en blind. Auribus et oculis captus. The Gr. Τυφλος, is a word of the same kind. In Sophocles, (Œdipus Tyrannus, v. 371,) Τυφλος τα τ'ὠτα, τον τε νουν, τα τ' ομματ' ει. Thy ears, thy soul, e'en as thy eyes, are blind, (Potter.)

Dumb, then is, by usage,—

Having the organs, the powers of speech obstructed; deprived, destitute of the powers of speech, speechless, mute.

For dere thorgh hus doynges, and domb spoke and herde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 372.

And whanne thei weren gon out, lo thei broughten to hem a doumbe man hauynge a deuel. And whanne the deuel was cast out, the doumbe man spak.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 9.

As they went oute, beholde, they broughte to him a domme man possessed of a deuyll. And as soone as the deuyll was cast out, the domme spake.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For trewely comfort ne mirthe is non,
To riden by the way dombe as a ston.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 116.

Rynere ren nat till the sprynge be full,
Better a dumme mouthe than a brayneles scull.
Skelton. Dame Pallas to the Quene of Fame.

This therefore is no spiritual dumbenesse, M. Hardinge: this is no vnprofitable harkening: this is no instinct, or woorke of Sathan.—Jewel. Defence, p. 553.

——— So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arme-gaunt steede,
Who neigh'd so hye, that what I would haue spoke,
Was beastly dumbe by him.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act I. sc. 3.

The goodly queene in bashfull signes
Blusht out a dumb replie:
Which he did constru as she meant,
And kist her reuerently.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 29.

A mouth, but dumb, he hath: blind eyes, deaf ears;
And to his shoulders dangle subtle hairs.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

Where I haue come, great clearkes haue purposed
To greete me with premeditated welcomes:
Where I haue seene them shiuer and looke pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their feares,
And, in conclusion, dumbly haue broke off,
Not paying me a welcome.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. sc. 1.

Are you struck dummerer now? and whine for mercy?
B. Jonson. The Staple of Newes, Act v. sc. 3.

But I can tell that in each grace of these
There lurkes a still and dumb-discoursive diuell,
That tempts most cunningly, but be not tempted.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 4.

His (the ghost in Hamlet) dumb behaviour at his first entrance strikes the imagination very strongly; but every time he enters, he is still more terrifying.—Spectator, No. 41.

Take hence that once a king; that sullen pride
That swells to dumbness: lay him in the dungeon,
And sink him deep with irons.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

I see him ogle still and hear him chat,
Selling facetious bargains and propounding
That witty recreation, call'd dumb founding.
Id. Prologue to the Prophetess.

In the first case the demoniac or madman was dumb; and his dumbness probably arose from the natural turn of his disorder, which was that species of madness called melancholy, of which taciturnity or dumbness is a very common effect.
Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Test. c. 1. s. 5.

DUMP, s.
DU'MPISH.
DU'MPISHNESS.
DU'MPLED.
DU'MPLING, s.

Skinner thinks from Dumb, (supra.) It is (he says) a fixed and serious state of thought in which we stand silent, (i. e, with our faculties dammed, blocked up, or obstructed,) and do as it were remain dumb. Junius interprets Dumpishness, stupor, torpor.

Inertness, dulness, heaviness; dulness of spirits, sadness, melancholy, ill-humour, sullenness; dulness or inactivity of mind.

Applied also, first,—to a doleful tune or ditty, and then—to any tune or ditty.

Dumpling is perhaps the diminutive of dump. A sad dumpling; a sad, heavy pudding.

Dumpy, (sullen: Brockett's Glossary,) is applied to any thing short and thick.

My sinews dull, in dumps I stand,
No life I feel in foot, nor hand
As pale as any clout, and dead.
Surrey. Description of the Restless State, &c.

The blastes Euterpe tunes of instrument,
With solace sweet, hence my heauy dumpes to chase.
Vncertaine Auctores. Of the Nine Muses.

You bee not ignorunt (good vncle,) what heapes of heauynesse hath of late fallen among vs alreadye, with whiche some of our poore familie bee fallen into suche dumpes, that scantelye can anye suche cumfort as my poore witte can geue them anye thynge asswage theyr sorrowe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1140.

The duke demaunded of him what should signifie that dumpishnes of mynde, and inward sighyng, the whiche, by his countenance, manifestly appered and was evident.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 15.

This vyce hath to his contrarie
almost a greater vyce,
Rude dumpishnes, vnmannerlye,
offensyue, and precyse.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Lollius.

Edwine thus perplexed with troubled thoughts in the dead of the night, sate solitary vnder a tree in dumps, musing what was best to be done.
Speed. Saxon Kings, an. 617. b. vii. c. 9. s. 8.

2 Gent. Hee's in a deep dump now.
Leo. I'le fetch him out on't.
Beaum & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 6.

Alexander ye great being dispatched out of the way in the very flowre of his age and of his conquests, all men were stricken in heauye dumpes, and in especially all the citye of Babilon.—Golding. Justine, p. 66.

Sir knight, why ride ye dumpish thus behind,
Sith so good fortune doth to you present
So fayre a spoyle, to make you lovous merriment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

But I feare now I have ouercharged the reader's minde with dolefull, dumpish, and vncomfortable lines.
Camden. Remaines. Epitaphs.

And for dispositions; now do we see one so ragingly furious, as if he had newly torn off his chaines, and escaped; another so stupidly senseless, that you may thrust pins into him, up to the head, and he startles not at it: one so dumpishly sad, as if he would freez to death in melancholy, and hated any contentment but in sorrow.
Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts, § 61.

Sur. I'll do it in a dump, sir.
Mem. In a dog, sir,
I'll have no dumps, nor dumplins: fetch your tools
And then I'll tell ye more.
Beaum. & Fletch. Mad Lover, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— Cook it any way; prithee, leave me.
Greedy. Without order for the dumpling?
Over. Let it be dumpled
Which way thou will.
Massinger. A New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act iii. sc. 2.

To rouse him from lethargic dump,
He tweak'd his nose, with gentle thump
Knocked on his breast, as if 't had been
To raise the spirits lodg'd within.—Hudibras, pt. I. c. 3.

If we consult experience, or observe the world, we shall find this precept very ill obeyed, for do we not commonly see people in heavy dumps; do we not hear doleful complaints?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

Generally a marry'd man is the creature of the world the most out of fashion; his behaviour is dumpish, his discourse his wife and family; his habit so much neglected, it looks as if that were marry'd too.
Dryden. Marriage Alamode, Act v. sc. 1.

This [suspiciousness] renders a man heavy and dumpish, slow and tedious in his resolutions and in his proceedings.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

Whenever he was with me, his short, dumpy, gouty, crooked fingers were continually teizing my spinnet, to his own harmonious croaking.—Student, ii. p 225.

Our honest neighbour's goose and dumplings were fine, and the lamb's wool, even in the opinion of my wife, who was a connoisseur, was excellent.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 10.

DUN, v.
DUN, n.
DU'NNER.
DU'NNING, n.

I believe, adds Skinner, from A. S. Dynan, sonare, strepere, (q.d.) to make a noise in the ears of a debtor. And Tooke,—A dun; who has dinned another for money or anything. (See DIN, and also DUNE.) To Dun is,—Importunely to demand a debt; to persevere or persist in demanding, to make repeated demands: to beat it in.

The Lord Bacon was wont to commend the advice of the plain old man at Buxton that sold besoms: a proud lazy young fellow came to him for a besom upon trust; to whom the old man said, "Friend, hast thou no money? borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly, they'll ne'er ask thee again, I shall be dunning thee every day."
Bacon. Apophthegms.

But when thou dun'st their parents, seldom they
Without a suit before the tribune pay,
And yet hard laws upon the master lay.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 7.

They are ever talking of new silks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay.—Spectator.

For the miser is as much disquieted, dunned, and called upon by the eagerness of his own desires, as he whose door is haunted and rapped at every hour, by those who come crying after him for what he owes them.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

But you have something to add, Sancho, to what I owe your good will also on this account, and that is to send me the subscription money, which I find a necessity of dunning my best friends for before I leave town.
Sterne. Works, vol. iv. Let. 91.

Many married ladies have been constrained to petition the brutes their husbands for the advance of a quarter's pin money, to satisfy the importunate dunnings of a needy honourable gamester.—Adventurer, No. 23.

Yet has he suffered long and much, and lost the beginning of life, the season of rational delight and solid improvement, in distress and fears, in fabricating excuses and pretences, and in flying from the eager pursuit of duns and bailiffs.
Knox. Essays, No. 97.

DUN, v.
DUN, n.
DUN, adj.
DU'NNY.
DUN-FLY.

Dun, color fuscus, a tawny colour. Boetius uses the verb; Storran dunniath, stellæ obscurantur; The stars are darkened. To obscure, to darken; to cause to be dark or gloomy.

She nas not broune ne dunne of hewe,
But white as snowe yfallen newe.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And white things woxen dimme and donne.
Id. Troilus, b. ii.

Then pushed souldiers with their pikes,
And holbarders with handy strokes,
The hargabushe in fleshe it lightes,
And dunes the ayre with misty smokes.
Uncertaine Auctors. Thassault of Cupide, &c.

I weare skinnes of conye
That causeth I loke so donny.
Skelton. Eleanor Rumming.

As to the straw-worm, I am assured, by my friend abovementioned, that it produces many and various flies; namely, that which is called, about London, the withy-fly,—ash-coloured duns of several shapes and dimentions.
Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 25. Note.

The impes name which this examinant sent to destroy the said Bumstead was Margaret; and that the impe, which the said Joyce Boanes sent was a dun'd one like unto a mouse.
State Trials. The Essex Witches, an. 1645.

Dun hackle; body, dun coloured silk, with a dun cock's hackle.—Walton. Angler, Appendix, No. 3. January.

The first is the dun-fly, in March: the body is made of dun-wool, the wings of the partridge's feathers.
Id. Ib. pt. i. c. 5.

They [the sea lions] have no hair on their bodies like the seal; they are of a dun colour, and are all extraordinary fat.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1683.

Oh! send them to the sullen mansions dun,
Her balefull eyes where sorrow rolls around;
Where gloom-enamour'd mischief loves to dwell,
And murder, all blood bolter'd, schemes the wound.
Johnson. Parody of a Trans. from the Medea of Euripides.

DUNCE.
DU'NCEMAN.
DU'NCERY.
DU'NCIFY.

The passages quoted below leave no room to doubt that the word (as severally conjectured by Mr. Tooke and Mr. Todd) was first introduced by the Thomists, or disciples of Thomas Aquinas, in contempt towards their antagonists the Scotists, or disciples of John Scot of Duns. Dunce's disciples, Duncemen, Dunces: and see the quotation from Holinshed, in v. Nickname, and the one from Hobbs here following:

For the first rector of the university of Paris, as I have read somewhere, was Peter Lombard, who first brought in them the learning called school-divinity; and was seconded by John Scot of Duns, who lived in, or near the same time, whom any ingenious reader, not knowing what was the design, would judge to have been two of the most egregious blockheads in the world, so obscure and senseless are their writings.—Hobbs. Behemoth.

Remember ye not how within this xxx. yeares and farre lesse, and yet dureth vnto this day, the old barkyng curres Dunce's disciples & lyke drafle called Scotistes, the children of darkenesse, raged in euery pulpit agaynst Greke, Latin, and Hebrue.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 278.

Here it is open, that the Pelagiãs graunt as much of grace, as my Lord of Rochester doth, and all his Duns men, which learneth that man may haue a good purpose, bonum studium, and a good mynde, & a loue to grace, of his owne naturall strẽgth.—Barnes. Workes, p. 272.

Here is also to be noted, that ye Pelagians, & our Dunsme agree all in one, for they both say, that ye grace of God doth helpe mãs good purpose, so that man doth first intende & purpose well.—Id. Ib.

Now would Aristotle deny such speakyng, & a Duns man would make xx. distinctions.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 88.

How thinke you? is not this a likely answere for a great doctour of diuinitie? for a great Duns man? for so great a preacher.—Barnes. Workes, p. 282.

Talke altogether of most graue matters, or deepely search out the ground of things, or vse the quiddities of Dunce, to set forth God's misteries: and you shall see the ignorant (I warrant you) either fall asleepe, or els bid you farewell.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 201.

Mer. Was ever man but I in such a stocks? well this shall be a warning to me, and a fair one too, how I betray myself to such a dunce, by way of benefit.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coxcomb, Act ii. sc. 1.

I would he had not cast the gracious eye of his duncery upon the small deserts of a pamphlet, whose every line, meddled with, uncases him to scorn and laughter.
Milton. Colasterion.

His father, methinks, should be one of the dunce-table, and one that never drank strong beer in's life, but at festival times.—Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act v. sc. 1.

In school-divinity as able
As he that hight irrefragable;
A second Thomas, or at once
To name them all, another Dunce.—Hudibras, pt. I. c. 1.

——— Say, you, her instruments, the great
Call'd to this work by dulness, Jove and fate,
You, by whose care, in vain decry'd and curst,
Still Dunce the second reigns like Dunce the first:
Say, how the goddess bade Britannia sleep
And pour'd her spirit o'er the land and deep.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. i.

Here you have a fellow ten thousand times more duncified than dunce Webster.—Warburton to Hurd Letter L. 130.

DU'NDER-HEAD.
DU'NDER-WHELP.

Perhaps from Dut. Donder-en, tonare, to thunder, (q.d.) stupified, stupid with din or noise. A stupid head or knoll: a stupid whelp, a stupid dog.

Charles. I mean your grammar, O thou dunder-head.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act ii. sc. 4.

Hol. I must take breath;
Then, like a nightingale, I'le sing his death.
Soph. His death!
Hol. I am out.
Cors. Recover, dunder-head.
Massinger. The Picture, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— What a dunder-whelp,
To let him domineer thus.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild-goose Chase, Act ii. sc. 3.

You know what a dunder-whelp my master is.
Id. Woman Pleased, Act ii. sc. 5.

Why then was it left so? and here, without staying for my reply, shall I be called as many blockheads, numskulls, doddypoles, dunderheads, ninny hammers, &c.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, c. 25.

DUNE. See Down, and the quotation there made from Verstegan. R. of Gloucester uses the verb, dune, which Hearne interprets bent, bowed; but it is more probably the A. S. Dyn-an, to make a noise, to resound: the earth resounded under the steps of the horses. See DUN.

The orthe dunede vnder hem, vor stappes [steps] that harde ware.
The hors neyde and lepte, that yt was gret fere.
R. Gloucester, p. 459.

DUNG, v.
DUNG, n.
DU'NGY.

Ger. Tunghen; Dut. Dunghen; Sw. Dynga; A. S. Dyng-an, stercorare. Tooke says that dyng-an means dejicere, to cast down, and that dung or dong means dejectum, and in that meaning only is applied to stercus.

"And Dowel shall ding him down, and destroi his might," (Vision of Piers Ploughman.) See Tooke. See also To DING.

Thei shulden deluen, and dyken, and dongen the erthe.
Piers Ploughmon. Crede.

On fat londe and ful of donge, foulest wedes groweth.
Id. Vision, p. 29.

Lord, suffre it also this yeer, the while I delue about it, and I schal dunge it if it schal make fruyt, if nay, in tyme comyng thou schalt kitte it doun.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 13.

Salt is good, but if salt vanysche: in what thing schal it be sauered? Neither in erthe, neither in donghille it is profitable.—Id. Ib. c. 14.

Behold my blody woundes, depe and wide,
Arise up erly, in the morwe tide,
And at the west gate of the toun (quod he)
A carte ful of donge ther shalt thou see,
In which my body is hid prively,
Do thilke carte arresten boldely.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Prestes Tale, v. 15,024.

And forth he goth, no longer wold he lette,
Unto the west gate of the toun, and fond
A dong carte, as it went for to donge lond,
That was arraied in the same wise
As ye han herde the dede man devise.—Id. Ib. v. 15,042.

Now fie churle, (qd. the gentel Tercelet)
Out of the donghil, came that word aright
Id. The Assemblie of Fowles.

After the same sorte a diligent husbandman, whan he breaketh vp his ground, whan he donggeth it, whan he soweth it, whan he weedeth it, he is altogether in his worke.
Udal. Timothye, c. 2.

We found nothing in their [white bearcs] mawes: but we iudged by their dung that they fed vpon grasse, because it appeared in all respects like the dung of an horse, wherein we might very plainly see the very strawes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 101.

The dung-farmers seek in every streete by exchange to buy this durtie ware for herbs and wood. The custom is very good for keeping the citie cleare.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 69.

He makes his Laertes a gardener all that while, and seeking his consolation for the absence of his son in the pleasures of planting and even dunging his own grounds.
Cowley. Ess. Of Agriculture.

Would it not vex thee where thy sires did keep,
To see the dunged folds of dog-tayl'd sheep.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 1.

——— Here is my space,
Kingdoms are clay; our dungie earth alike
Feeds beast as man.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 1.

You must not suffer your thoughts to creep any longer upon this dunghill earth, but refine your drossy, and raise up your drowsy spirits to behold, contemplate, and admire the glories that are in heaven.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 137.

Mr. Gibbon comes forward with all the rancour of a renegado against Christianity. He tramples upon it at first with the cloven-foot of heatheniam. He dungs upon it at last from the dirty tail of Mahometanism.
Whitaker. Review of Gibbon's History, p. 256.

On the islands were sea-lions, &c. and such an innumerable quantity of guls, as to darken the air when disturbed, and almost to suffocate our people with their dung.
Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. b. iv. c. 3.

DU'NGEON. Fr. Dongeon. In the modern French, says Wachter, dunes (see Down) are hills of sand on the sea-shore; and donjon, propugnaculum in colle ædificatum, built on a hill. And Du Cange, dunjo, castellatum, minus propugnaculum in duno seu colle ædificatum.

"Fr. Dongeon,—a dungeon; a strong tower, or platform in the middle of a castle, or fort, wherein the besieged make their last efforts (of defence) when the rest is forced," (Cotgrave.) Prisoners being usually confined in these strong towers, the word dongeon was applied to other strong close places of confinement or imprisonment.

& gadred him an oste, and went vnto Wilton,
& did reise in that coste a stalworth donjon.
R. Brunne, p. 121.

I salued her, and enquired what she was, and why she, so worthie to sight, dained to enter into so foule a dongeon, and namely a prison, without leaue of my kepers.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

Finally, see what God promised Joseph in his dreames, these promises accompanyed him alwaies, and went downe with hym euen into the depe dongeon.—Tyndall. Workes, p 5.

For on a day his wary Dwarfe had spide
Where in a dungeon deepe huge numbers lay
Of caytiue wretched thrals that wailed night and day.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

And to that end, caused him [William Tell] to be tied, and thrown into a boat, with intention to see him securely laid in the dungeon of the strong castle of Cusnach.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 107.

The very bed, which, on thy wedding night,
Receiv'd thee to the arms of Belvidera,
The scene of all thy joys, was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains.
Otway. Venice Preserved, Act i. sc. 1.

What gold is to a man in a desart island; what eyes are to a man confined a close prisoner in a dark dungeon; that, or little better, is the best faith without leading a Christian to good works.—Pearce, vol. ii. Ser 16.

DUP, v. To do ope or open, to ope or open.

Grimme. What Devell, iche weene, the porters are drunke, wil they not dup the gate to-day?
Edwards. Damon & Pythias.

Then vp he rose, and donde his clothes, and dupt the chamber dore.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

DUPE, v. }
DUPE, n. }
DU'PERY. } Menage says, duper from decipere; decipere, depar, duper. Cotgrave has "Duper, to cheat. Norman."

To dupe is to cheat or to delude, to trick; and a dupe, one who is cheated, tricked or deluded, (sc.) through his own credulity.

A populace in want, with pleasure fir'd;
Fit for proscriptions, for the darkest deeds,
As the proud feeder bade: inconstant, blind.
Deserting friends at need, and dup'd by foes.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iii.

That man must smart at last whose puzzled sight
Mistakes in life false colours for the right;
As the poor dupe is sure his loss to rue,
Who takes a pinchbeck guinea for a true.
Pitt. Horace, b. i. Ep. 10.

But it seems there is still another lurking hope, akin to that which duped us so egregiously before, when our delightful basis was accepted; we still flatter ourselves that the publick voice of France will compel this directory to more moderation.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

As an actor, confest without rival to shine:
As a wit, if not first, in the very first line:
Yet with talents like these, and an excellent heart,
The man had his failings, a dupe to his art.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

[Machiavel] is pleased with the address with which Cæsar Borgia conducted it; has much contempt for the dupery and weakness of the sufferers; but no compassion for their miserable and untimely death, and no sort of indignation at the cruelty and falsehood of their murderer.
Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. vi. s. i.

DU'PLE, adj. }
DU'PLETS. }
DU'PLICATE, v. }
DU'PLICATE, n. }
DU'PLICATE, adj. }
DUPLICA'TION. }
DU'PLICATURE. }
DUPLI'CITY. } Fr. Dupliquer; Lat. Duplicare, (duo, two, and plicare, to fold; Gr. Πλεκ-ειν, to fold, to intertwine.) See COMPLEX. To duplicate, is—

To double, (qv.) A duplicate is a double, or second, (sc.) copy.

Duplicity, — doubleness: applied met. when one thing is pretended or professed, and another intended or done; insincerity, deceitfulness.

Me semeth by feiture of womanly property
Ye should be trusty and trew of comprimis:
I find in you no false duplicity.
Chaucer. Balade. The Craft of Lovers.

The estates of Bruges little doubted to admit so small a numbre into so populous a company, yea though the numbre were duplicate.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 5.

In this prosperous course and success of affairs, a competent defence of Illyricum was upon a two-fold reason established, the duple greatnesse of which business the emperor having taken in hand, affected both.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 101.

Whereof perhaps one reason is, because there is shewn in this a duplicated power: a contrary stream of power running across and thwart, in its effects in this.
Goodwin. Works, vol iii. pt. i. p 558.

In Easter term this was certified under the hands of all the judges in England, and barons of the Exchequer, in a duplicate, whereof the one was delivered to the lord chancellor, and the other to the lord treasurer to be delivered to the queen.—State Trials. Sir T. Darnel and others, an 1627.

Conscious reason and understanding, being a far higher degree of life and perfection than that dull plastick nature, which does only do, but not know, can never possibly emerge out of it; neither can the duplication of corporeal organs be ever able to advance that simple and stupid life of nature into redoubled consciousness or self perception.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p 173.

However, if two sheriffs appear in one year (as at this time, and frequently hereafter,) such duplication cometh to pass by one of these accidents.—Fuller. Worthies. Barkshire.

They neither acknowledge a multitude of unmade deities, nor yet that duplicity of them which Plutarch contended for, (one good and the other evil.)
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p 231.

Moreover the tenets of these ancient Magi, concerning that duplicity of principles, are by writers represented with great variety and uncertainty.—Id. Ib. p. 291.

That is to throw three dice, till duplets and a chance be thrown, and the highest duplets wins, except you throw in and in, which is called raffle, and that wins all.
Dryden. An Evening's Love, Act iii.

The earth and sun gravitate towards each other, or tend (whatever be the cause of that tendency) towards each other, with a force which is in a direct proportion of their masses, or magnitudes and densities together, and in an inverse duplicate proportion of their distances.
Clarke & Leibnitz. Dr. Clarke's Fifth Reply.

I have dispatched away Mr. Meredith, his majesty's secretary of the embassy here, by the Catherine yacht, and encharged with my main pacquet to the secretary; though I send a duplicate both of it and my last dispatch by the master of the pacquet-boat's hands, that parts the same day.
Sir W. Temple. To my Lord Treasurer, July, 1678.

There remain yet some other pages of Mr. Hobbes's dialogue, wherein he speaks of fire, and cold, and ice, and light, and colours, and fluidity, and hardness, and thickness, and ethics, and politics, and the duplication of the cube, and the quadrature of the circle, and several other subjects.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 234.

What vast sacks and bags are necessary to contain such a collection of water, which seems to issue from the lymphaducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, and exonerating themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

His right-hand man, a brother of our quill,
Prudently chose to show his own goodwill
By the same token, and without much scruple
Made the red-rugg'd collector's income duple.
Byron. Robbery of the Cambridge Coach.

Of all these he [Vertue] made various sketches and notes, always presenting a duplicate of his observations to Lord Oxford.—Walpole. Life of Mr. George Vertue.

The peritoneum also keeps the viscera from confounding themselves with, or pressing irregularly upon, the bladder: for the kidneys and bladder are contained in a distinct duplicature of that membrane, being thereby partitioned off from the other contents of the abdomen.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

And shall we even now, whilst we are yet smarting from the consequences of her treachery, become a second time the good easy dupes of her duplicity: it was not a trifling lustration that would in his mind expiate the perfidy of French councils.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 273.

DURE, v. }
DU'RABLE. }
DU'RABLENESS. }
DU'RABLY. }
DURABI'LITY. }
DU'RANCE. }
DU'RANCY. }
DU'RANT. }
DURA'TION. }
DU'REFUL. }
DU'RELESS. }
DU'RESS. }
DU'RING. }
DU'RITY. }
DU'ROUS. } Fr. Durer; It. Durare; Sp. Durar; Lat. Durare. Vox, (says Vossius,) videtur ab arboribus sumpta; sané Δουρον, olim lignum. And Martinius, from the Gr. Δουριος, ligneus, wooden.

Lat. Durare, — to be or cause to be hard or hardy; to harden; to bear up against hardships; and thus, to last, to abide, (sc.) without yielding, without decay.

"Fr. Durer, — to dure, to last, continue, endure, to abide, remain, persist; also, to sustain, brook, suffer," (Cotgrave.)

Durance and duresse are also applied, to harsh confinement, to imprisonment.

Her adde, lo! thys Cristenmen, as ge ssulle yhure,
Muche wo, the wule [whose] God wolle that yt ssulle dure.
R. Gloucester, p. 403.

Thare biriels he thouht to honoure
With som thing that ay might doure
R. Brunne, Pref. p. 189.

And for to worche goure wil, the wile my lif duyreth.
Piers Ploukman, p. 188.

And eke they had a thing notable
Unto their death, ay durable
And was that their beauty should dure.
Chaucer Dreame.

The wil of a wight disturbeth and constraineth that, that nature alway desireth and requireth, that is to saye, the werkes of generation, by the which generation onely dwelleth, and is sustained the long durablitie of mortall thinges.
Id. Boecius, b iii.

That saine prince and mover eke (quod he)
Hath stablisht, in this wretched world adoun,
Certain of dayes and duration
To all that are engend'red in this place,
Over the which day they no mow not pace.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2994

Loue hath to him great distresse,
He hath no need of more duresse.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

These diseases mowen well by duresse of sorowe, make my life to vnbodie, and so for to die.
Id. Testament of Loue, b i.

So I say, though thou bee put to serue thilke iewell, during thy life, yet is that no seruage of vnderputting, but a maner of trauailing pleasaunce, to conquer and get that thou hast not.—Id. Ib.

And that shrewes ben more vnsely if they were of lenger during, and most vnsely yf they weren perdurable.
Id. Boecius. b. iv.

And so from yt day forwarde: was that made a lawe and a custom in Israel and dureth to thys day.
Bible, 1551. 1 Kinge, c. 30.

Whiche when he [the Lord] is wrothe smitteth the people with durable strokes, and in his wonders he persecuteth them, and tameth them continually.—Id. Esaye, c. 14.

Some wryters accompt the terme of the duraunce of thys kyngdome, from Cerdicus to Egbert, and some to the last yere of Aluredus.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 105.

Right mysty storyes, doughtfull and vnclere
Of names of tymes and of the duraunt yere.
Id. Prologues.

But it is I trow no great maruaile: though I fere, lest those that haue not letted to put them in duresse without colour wil let as lytle to procure their distruccion without cause.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 49.

Of this breakyng of bread, Luke writyng of Paule comming vnto Troades, sayth also, that vpon a sabboth day, when the disciples were come together vnto the breakyng of the bread, Paule made a sermon durynge to mydnight.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 476.

This battell dured three partes of the night, in the which time the Frenchmen gaue fiue great assaults against our men, but at the length they being conquered ran away.
Stow. Edw. III. an. 1346.

Every man seeth (as I said before) new wax is best for printing; new claie fittest for working; new shorn woll aptest for soon and surest dying; new fresh flesh for good and durable salting.—Ascham. The Schole Master.

But shee [Philippa wife of Edward III.] built to herself a monument of more glory and durability by founding, and richly endowing, the colledge called the Queenes in Oxford, which, if it had been finished according to the project, had beene a foundation of marueilous state and magnificence.
Speed. Edw. III. an. 1374. b. ix. c. 12. s. 115.

They all of them vary much from their primitive tenderness, and bigness, and so become more durous.
Smith. Port. of Old Age, p. 186.

For there is neither picture, nor image of marble, nor arch of triumph, nor sumptuous sepulchre, that can match the durableness of an eloquent history, furnished with the properties which it ought to have.
North. Plutarch. To the Readers, p. 1.

As for the timber of the walnut-tree, it may be termed an English shittim-wood for the fineness, smoothness, and durableness, thereof, whereof the best tables, with stocks of guns and other manufactures, are made.
Fuller. Worthies. Surrey.

[The honest heart] is wholly due to God's preventing graces, which have thus fitted the soil for the kindly seeds-time, planted pliableness, humility in the heart, where grace may be deeply and durably rooted.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 687.

It happened also that Numitor himselfe, having Remus in durance, and hearing they were brethren twins, by comparing their age, and avising withall their very countenance and towardnesse, proceeding from no servile and base parentage, bethought himselfe of his sister's children.
Holland. Livius, p. 5.

The souls ever durance I sung before
Ystruck with mighty rage.
More. On the Soul, pt. iii. c. 1. s. 1.

The misery that after death attends the misspent present life, overbalanceth all the good that this life can yield, both in degree and duration.
Hale. Cont. vol. i. The Victory of Faith over the World.

For neither pretious stone, nore durefull brasse,
Nor shining gold, nor mould'ring clay it was.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

But of this composition are all the devout lovers of the world, that they fear all that is dureless and ridiculous.
Raleigh. History of the World, Pref. p. D.

You had ever an ear open to listen for the crack, and were in the same agony for the Powder Plot that Charles V. was in for the Pope's duress, giving order in all his dominions that prayers should be made for his release, when in the mean time he kept and held him in his own hand prisoner.
State Trials. Henry Garnett, an. 1606.

——— These light and vicious persons say
Our soul is but a smoke, or airy blast,
Which during life, doth in our nostrils play,
And when we die doth turn to wind at last.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 30.

As for irradiancy or sparkling, which is found in many gems, it is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactnesse and durity.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

That by the Sion here mentioned is not chiefly meant that material mountain in Judea, but rather that mystical rock of divine grace and evangelical truth, upon which the Christian church, the onely everlasting temple of God, is unmovably seated, is very probable, (or rather manifestly certain,) by the prophets constant acceptation thereof in this sense, when they assign the character of perpetual durability thereto.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 12.

The successive vibrations of the small parts do, even in so solid and close a body as bell-metal, run many times round, as may appear by the durableness of the ringing noise, which seems plainly to proceed from the circularly successive vibrations of the parts.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 30.

Lucifer. 'Tis done,
Sick Nature, at that instant, trembled round;
And mother Earth sigh'd as she felt the wound.
Of how short durance was this new made state.
Dryden. The State of Innocence, Act v. sc. 1.

Whom, known of Creon's line and cur'd with care,
He to his city sent as prisoners of the war,
Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a lingering death to die.
Id. Palamon & Arcite.

That we have our notion of succession and duration from this original, viz. from the reflection on the train of ideas, which we find to appear one after another in our own minds, seems plain to me, in that we have no perception of duration, but by considering the train of ideas that take their turns in our understandings.
Locke. On Humane Understanding, b. ii. c. 14.

More durable than brass, the frame
Which here I consecrate to fame;
Higher than pyramids that rise
With royal pride to brave the skies.
Francis. Horace, b. iv. Ode 30.

A Gothic cathedral raises ideas of grandeur in our minds, by its size, its height, its awful obscurity, its strength, its antiquity, and its durability.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 3.

The durableness of metals is the foundation of this extraordinary steadiness of price.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

An error in physical speculations is seldom productive of such consequences, either to one's neighbour or one's self as are deeply, durably, or extensively injurious.
Knox. Essays, No. 1.

It will not be amiss to take a view of the effects of this royal servitude and vile durance, which was so deplored in the reign of the late monarch, and was so carefully to be avoided in the reign of his successor.
Burke. On the Present Discontents.

DU'RSTINGLY. From Durst. Preterite of Dare, (qv.)

Dirstelie. Boldy, or as we might say, durstingly, of one daring to doe a thing of hazard or difficulty.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 7.

DUSK, v. DUSK, *n. DU'SKEN. DU'SKING, *n. DU'SKISH. DU'SKISHLY. DU'SKISHNESS. DU'SKY. DU'SKINESS. Dut. Duister; Ger. Duster; Sw. Dyster; A. S. Thyster, obscurus.

In Dutch, Duysteren is caligare, to darken; and this Lye thinks is from A. S. Thystrian, tenebrescere, to grow or become dark.

To be or become dark or dim; to darken, to obscure; to be or cause to be gloomy, dull or dingy.

The penonnes and the pomels and poyntes of sheldes
With drawen his deuocion, and dusken his herte.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

The which clothes a darkenesse of a foreleten and despised eld had dusked and darked, as it is wont to darke by smoked images.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Time had somewhat sullied the colour of it with such kind of duskiness, [in Translation, 1609, by J. T., Duskishness,] as we may observe in pictures that have hung in a smoky room.—Translation of Boecius, Oxford, 1674, p. 3.

Dusked his eyen too, and fallied his breth.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2509.

The faithfulnes of a wife is not stained with deceipt, nor dusked with any dissembling, nor yet parted with any charge of the world, but discouered at last by death only, no not by death neither.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 55.

And yet neuertheles the sayd epigrame was not vtterly defaced, but onely duskened or so rased, that it myght be redde, thoughe that with some difficulty.
Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 163.

Wherof is ingendred, duskynge of the eyes, head aches, hotte and thyn reumes, after euery littel surfete, and many other inconueniences.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iii.

Which ascendynge vp into the head, and touchynge the ryme, wherin the brayne is wrapped, causeth head-ache, trembling of the members, duskyshnes of the sight, and many other sycknesses.—Id. Ib.

A showre aboue his head there stoode, all dusky blacke with blew,
Both night and storme it brought, and straight the waters darke their hew. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. v.

Fyrste, of sacietie or fulnesse be ingēdrid paynfull diseases & sicknesses, as squynces, distillatiōs, called reumes or poses, hemorroydes, great bledynges, crampes, duskenesse of sight, the tisike, and the stiche, with many other that come nat now to my remembrance.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 21.

Meanwhile the south wind rose, and, with black wings
Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove
From under heav'n; the hills to thir supply
Vapor, and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

So spake our Morning Star then in his rise,
And looking round on every side beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. i.

But straight the sun that gives me light,
With many duskish vapours cled,
Doth seeme to boast with me some fearful storme.
Stirling. Aurora, s. 6.

The swiftest in consuming was that with saw-dust, which first burned faire till some part of the candle was consumed, and the dust gathered aboute the snaste, but then it made the snaste big and long, and to burn duskishly, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 360.

But see, the smoke mounting in village nigh,
With folded wreaths steals through the quiet air;
And mix'd with dusky shades, in eastern sky,
Begins the night, and warns us home repair.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 5.

For who can it unfold, and trade aright
The divers colours and the tinctures fair,
Which in this various vesture changes write
Of light, of darkness, of thick, of rare
Consistences: ever new changes marre
Former impressions.—More. On the Soul, pt. i. b. i. s. 22.

Prone to the lowest vale th' aerial tribes
Descend the tempest-loving raven scarce
Dares wing the dubious dusk. Thomson. Summer.

It [a spot in the sun] was a very dark spot almost of a quadrangular form, and was inclosed round with a kind of a duskish cloud.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 511.

So may I reach, conceal'd, the cooling flood,
From my tir'd body wash the dirt and blood,
As soon as night her dusky veil extends,
Return in safety to my Trojan friends.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

The sergeant soon after went to him, and ordered him to follow him to the deck; he obeyed him without reply: but it being in the dusk of the evening he slipped from the sergeant and went forward.—Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. i. c. 6.

We all saw an atmosphere or dusky cloud round the body of the planet, [Venus,] which very much disturbed the times of contact, especially of the internal ones, and we differed from each other in our accounts of the times of the contacts much more than might have been expected.
Id. Ib. vol. i. b. i. c. 13.

DU'SSONS, i. e. dozens.

——— If I prix'd life so much
As to deny my act, but that I would not,
Should I try death by dussons.
Beaum. & Fletch. The two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 3.

DUST, v. DUST, *n. DU'STY. DU'STINESS. DU'STER. Dut. Dust; A. S. Dyste or Dust, pulvis, powder, (Somner.) Skinner thinks it may be from the Ger. Durren, to dry, to parch, (as if Durst.) In the Goth. Thaursjan is arescere, siccari, whence also thirst. But the A. S. Thystrian; Dut. Duysteren, to obscure, to darken, seems to present a more probable etymology: Clouds of dust; the dust flies in clouds; are common terms of expression. As now applied, dust is—

Any thing reduced to a dry powder, any thing pulverised. And more generally—to the earth; and met.,—to a low, humble or contemptible state or condition. To dust is—

Either to sprinkle, to cover with dust; or,—to wipe, to clear away the dust.

And the kyng Vortiger was to doust y barn'd ther inne.
R. Gloucester, p. 137.

And when they commyn to hur, she satt vppe, and with her honde sche wypid of her face the doste that was ther on, & spake to hem as holle and sownde as sche was by fore.
R. Brunne, Pref. p. 198.

And who evir resseyveth not you, ne heerith youre wordis, go ye fro that hous or citee, and sprenge off the dust of youre feet.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 10.

In fortune is full trust,
Though he lie in straw or dust,
In hope is all his sustaining.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hills side over against him, and cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and cast dust. [Heb. dusted him with dust.]—Bible. 2 Samuel, xvi. 13.

Men into stones therewith he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Who, soone as she beheld the sudden stound,
Lightly vpstarted from the dusty ground.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 7.

Cle. Then let him be more manly, for he looks
Like a great school-boy that had been blown up
Last night at dust-point.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 1.

The most part of the people abode and dwelt in the country, and such were termed Compodes, which is as much as to say, as dusty-feet, for that when they came down to the city (as a man may conjecture) they were known by their dusty-feet.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 727.

Although the terraqueous globe be of an orbicular figure, yet it is not strictly so.] On account of its hills and vallies. But these are [so] inconsiderable to the earth's semidiameter, that they are but as dust upon a common globe.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii. c. 1. (Note 1.)

Whom nor the prancing steed, nor nond'rous shield,
Nor the hack'd helmet nor the dusty field,
But the soft joys of luxury and ease,
The purple vests and flow'ry garlands please.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

For there are infinitely more assignable real parts on the surface of a particle of light, than there are particles of dust, water and stone, on the surface of the terrestrial globe.
Edwards (Jon.) On the Freedom of the Will, pt. iv. s. 11.

We were taught to play the good housewife in the kitchen and the pastry, and were well instructed in the conduct of the broom and the duster.
Watts. On the Education of Children and Youth, s. 8.

The violet, that, those banks beneath,
Hides from thy scorn its modest head,
Shall fill the air with fragrant breath,
When thou art in thy dusty bed.
Langhorne. The Tulip and the Myrtle, Fable 8.

DU'TY. See DUB.

DWARF, v. DWARF, n. DWARF, adj. DWA'RFISH. DWA'RFISHNESS. } A. S. Dwerg, dweorh; Dut. and Sw. Dwerg; Ger. Zwerg; which Wachter thinks may be the Ger. Zwerch, pravus, perversus; (differently written and applied) in A. S. Thweor, thwar; Eng. Thwart; and thus all from the A. S. Thweor-ian, to thwart, to wrest, to twist. Perhaps originally applied to certain imaginary beings of—

Thwart, cross, crooked, mischievous dispositions; and then (from the stature ascribed to them) to—

Any thing stunted (or perhaps deformed) in its growth, any thing small or diminutive in size or stature; below the usual size or stature of its kind.

To dwarf,—to stint the growth.

Within the court yard were the Turks dwarfes and dumbe men, being most of them youths.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 306.

Dwarfing requireth a slow putting forth, and less vigour of mounting.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 336.

By art likewise we make them greater or taller than their kind is; and contrariwise dwarf them and stay their growth.
Id. The New Atalantis.

Behind her farre away a dwarf did lag,
That lazie seem'd in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his back.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 1.

Their stature neither dwarf nor giantish,
But in a comely well-disposed proportion.
Randolph. The Muses' Looking-glass, Act v. sc. 1.

Of which some dwarfish woods there be,
Some of a larger stature.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 6.

This [Norfolk dumplings] cannot be verified of any dwarfish or diminutive stature of people in this county, being as tall of their bodies, and as tall of their arms too, I assure you, as any in England.—Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

And thus, while every age is but another shew of the former; 'tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

Where virtue like a dwarf in giant's arms,
Cumber'd with words, and manacl'd in terms,
Serves to amuse the philosophic fool,
By method dry, and regularly dull.
Pitt. To the unknown Author of the Battle of the Sexes.

Is he of dwarfish and abortive size;
"Sweet little moppet!" the fond father cries.
Francis. Horace. Satires, b. I.

On a sudden, in the midst of this elegant regularity, you are surprised with an imitation of the negligent beauties of rural nature; in the centre of which lies a spot surrounded with a kind of dwarf plane-trees.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. v. Let. 6.

On reading one of those two productions, I sat down to answer it: but I soon found that I was heating myself with cudgelling a dwarf, and, disdaining such a miserable occupation, I threw my weapons into the fire, and left him to sleep in peace.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 265.

Plant behind plant, aspiring,—in the van,
The dwarfish,—in the rear, retir'd, but still
Sublime above the rest, the statelier stand.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

DWELL, v. DWE'LLER. DWE'LLING, n. } Somner thinks from Dwel-ian, errare, to err, wander or go astray. Ger. Dwal-en. Applied to the wandering mode of life of the ancient northern nations. But this is a mere consequential usage of the A. S. Dwel-ian or dwol-ian; Ger. Dwalen or dol-en, hebere, hebetare, stupere, to be dull, to be a dolt, to be stupid; and therefore errare, to err or go astray. Ihre refers the Sw. Dwaeljas, morari, dwala, cunctari, to dwala, stupor; and this to the A. S. Dwelian, stupere; and, therefore, hærere, to remain fixed, (sc.) in stupor, in stupid astonishment; and then, simply, as the Ger. Dwal-en; Eng. Dwell.

To remain, to abide, to continue to reside; to inhabit; to have or keep a resting or abiding place.

Y dwelled yn the pryorye,
Fyftene gere yn cumpanye.—R. Gloucester, Pref. p. lx.

Sithen he went to Rome, as men of holy wille,
His sonne & he alle that gere with the pape dwellede stille.
R. Brunne, p. 20.

The tother gere next, after his dwelling,
He went home bi France, & spak with the kyng.—Id. Ib.

For ge that ben unhende to hyse, hope ge none other,
Bote to dwelle ther Diws.—Piers Ploughman, p. 334.

——— My dwelling ys some tyme
Whit lered and wit lewede.—Id. p. 93.

In the hous of my fadir ben manye dwellengis, if ony thing lesse, I hadde seid to you.—Wiclif. John, c. 14.

For certes at my devise
There is no place in Paradise
So good in for to dwell or be
As in that gardin thought me.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Ne no wight maie, by my clothing,
Wete with what folke is my dwelling.—Id. Ib.

Mirth is chaunged into tene, whan swinke is there continually, that rest was woont to soiourne and haue dwelling-place.—Id. The Testament of Love, b. I.

That homicide in no degree
(Whiche werreth ayene charitee)
Among the men shulde not dwelle.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

The leparde, and the tygre also,
With hert, and hynd, buck and do,
Had his dwellynge, as the befille
Of Peleon vpon the hille.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

I speake within myself: I shall neuer visit the Lorde God in this lyfe, I shall neuer se man among the dwellers of the worlde.—Bible, 1551. Esaye, c. 38.

There shal no euell happen vnto the, neyther shall anye plage come nye thy dwellynge.—Id. Psalm 91.

He made the Arabians change their manner of living, who are otherwise called Scenites, as much to say, as tent dwellers, because they are vagrant people that dwell in no other houses but tents, which they ever use to carry with them.—North. Plutarch, p. 433.

As day now op'ning fills the hemisphear,
And all at once; so quickly ev'ry street
Does by an instant op'ning full appear,
When from their dwellings busy dwellers meet.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 1.

And as many of the inhabitants of heaven, so, by their instigation, all the dwellers upon earth have rebelled against the monarch of the world, whereby they are become obnoxious to the severest penalties that his justice can inflict upon them.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 141.

The Psalmist then proceeds to the consummation of the church's happiness and the Messiah's glory here on earth, in the marriage of the great king with the wife of his love. And upon this subject the inspired poet dwells through the whole sequel of the psalm; which makes, indeed, the greater part of the entire composition.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

They are, however, upon the whole miserable dwellings, and constructed with little care or ingenuity.
Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. b. iv. c. 3.

DWINE, v. DWI'NDLE, v. DWI'NDLE. } A. S. Dwin-an, tabescere, evanescere; to consume, to waste, to vanish, to dwindle. (Somner.) Dut. Dwinen, attenuare, (see Kilian,) Sw. Twin-a.

To be or cause to be thin; and thus to decay, to perish, to shrink.

All woxen was her body vnwelde
And drie and dwined al for elde.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And yet he can not alowe
His owne skille, but of hede
Thus dwineth he, til he be dede,
In hyndrynge of his owne estate.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Fac. Did you not heare the coyle
About the doore?
Sub. Yes, and I dwindled with it.
B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act v. sc. 4.

His etymology was peculiar to himself, who would have it termed mildew, because it grindeth the grain beforehand, making it to dwindle away almost to nothing.
Fuller. Worthies. Middlesex.

As some trees, some plants, some grains dwindle and die in a disagreeable soil, but thrive and flourish in others, so the all wise Creator hath amply provided for every kind a proper bed.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iii. c. 1.

I grieve that our senate is dwindled into a school of rhetoric, where men rise to display their abilities rather than to deliberate, and wish to be admired without hoping to convince.—Sir W. Jones. Works, vol. i. Mr. Jones to Ld. Althorp.

However inferior to the heroes who were born in better ages, he might still be great among his contemporaries, with the hope of growing every day greater in the dwindle of posterity.—Johnson. Life of Milton.

DY'AD, i. e. Duad. See DUAL.

A point answers to a monad, and a line to a dyad, and a superficies to a triad.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 876.

DYE, v. DY'ER. DY'ING, n. } Also written Die, (qv.) A. S. Deag-an, to dy or colour, (Somner.)

To tinge, to stain, to steep or dip in any thing that tinges or stains; to colour; to give a hue, tinge or colouring to.

Item twelue pence vpon euery cloth dyed without graine
Hacklayt. Voyages, vol. i p 137. Great Charter of Edw. II

The madre and woad, that dyers take on hand
To dyen with.
Id. Ib. The Politie of keeping the Sea, vol. i. p 196

Weaving was the invention of the Ægyptians, and dying wool of the Lydians.—Holland. Pliny, b. vii. c. 56.

He the young practice of new life did see,
Whilst to conceal its toilsome poverty
It for a living wrought, both hard and privately.
Before the liver understood
The noble scarlet dye of blood.
Cowley. Ode upon Dr. Harvey.

For, our souls, they are as free as emperors, all of one piece, there goes but a pair of sheers between an emperor and the son of a bag piper: only the dying, dressing, pressing, glossing, makes the difference.
Marston. The Malcontent, Act iv. sc. 5.

If thy false heart be fond of tawdry dyes,
Go, wed the painted arch in summer skies.
Gay. The Espousal.

We also learned in the dye-houses, that cloth being dyed blue with woad is afterwards by the yellow decoction of wood-wax or wood-wax dyed into a green colour.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p 740.

Besides which, here are dye-woods, as fustick, &c. with woods for other uses, as speckled wood, Brazil, &c.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

Whate'er we spy thro', colour'd light or air,
A stain congenial on their surface bear,
While neighb'ring forms by joint reflection give
And mutual take the dyes that they receive.
Mason. The Art of Painting.

Even white cloths are subject to a duty upon exportation, and our dyers have so far obtained a monopoly against our clothiers.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 8.

DYE. DY'ING, n. DY'INGLY. } See DIE, and DEAD.

Hunger & delinge of men, and muche wrechede com.
R. Gloucester, p. 455.

And alle holy churche honoured for that dyenge.
Piers Ploughman, p. 300.

And we always beare in our bodies the dying of the Lorde Jesus, that the lyfe of Jesu myghte appere in oure bodyes.
Bible, 1551. 2 Cor. c. 4.

That cruell word her tender heart so thrill'd,
That suddaine cold did run through euery vaine,
And stony horrour all her senses fill'd
With dying fit, that downe she fell for paine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

But 'tis impossible to satisfie
You, Leocadia, but by repentance,
Though I can dyingly, and boldly say
I know not your dishonour, yet that was
Your virtue, and not mine.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Pilgrimage, Act iv. sc. 1.

When Holland, by her foes opprest,
No longer could sustain their weight,
To a native prince they thought it best
To recommend their dying state
Waller. To the Prince of Orange.

For since she dy'd, not doom'd by Heaven's decree,
Or her own crime; but human casualty;
And rage of love, that plung'd her in despair,
The sisters had not cut the topmost hair;
Which Proserpine, and they can only know,
Nor made her sacred to the shades below.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

If things should give us the comparative happiness of a struggle, I shall be found, I was going to say, fighting, (that would be foolish) but dying by the side of Mr. Pitt.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. I.

DYKE. } i. e. Dike, (qv.)
DY'KER. }

As dykers & delvers that don here dedes ille.
Piers Ploughman, p. II.

To where Fleet-ditch with disemboguing streams
Rolls the large tribute of dead dogs to Thames,
The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper sable blots the silver flood
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

DY'NASTY. Gr. Δυναστεια, from Δυναζεσθαι, to be powerful.
A power; a supremacy, a sovereignty: a succession or race of sovereigns or rulers.

The account of the dynasties, besides the authority of approved authors, hath this good ground, that it agreeth for the most part, if not altogether, with the histories of the Assyrians, Trojans, Italians, and others, &c.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 2. s. 2.

And wherfore did this mother, the Virgin Mary, give such praise to God in her prophetic song, that he had now by the coming of Christ cut down dynasties, or proud monarchs, from the throne, if the church, when God manifests his power in them, to do so, should rather choose all misery and vassalage to serve them, and let them still sit on their potent seats to be adored for doing mischief.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

At some time or other, to be sure, all the beginners of dynasties were chosen by those who called them to govern.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

DY'SCRASY. } Gr. Δυσκρασια, from δυς, and DISCRA'SED. } κρασις, mixture.
An ill mixture, a distemperature.

In these cases the sayd yonge men muste vse the diet of olde men, or nygh vnto it, vntyll the discrasy be removed, hauing alway respect to theyr vnyuersall complexions.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Lykewise in order of meales, as if he whyche was wont to ete twyse in one day eateth but ones, and thereby is discrased, he must feede not only twyse in one day, but also oftener, hauinge respect to a conuenient quantitie.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

Whereupon presently hee grew weake, distempered in stomach, and could digest no meate, nor other nourishment received, and this discrase or feeblenesse continued for the space of three quarters of a yeare.
State Trials. The Case of Mary Smith, an. 1616.

I shall not, I hope, altogether forget the charge, which you have been pleased to lay upon me, in reference to the consideration of all wiry liquors, their affections, and the several distempers incident to them, with my thoughts about the preserving of them, so as may best retard the quickness of their motion, and hinder their dyscrasy and corruption.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 654.

DY'SENTERY. } Lat. Dysenteria; Gr. Δυσεντερια, from δυς, and εντερον, intestinum.
DY'SENTERIC.
DY'SENTRICAL.
A disordered intestine or a disorder in the intestines. Applied especially to—
A flux, a bloody flux.
See the quotation from Pliny.

For the dysenteric or bloudie flix, the milk that is injected by way of clystre, would be fresh and newly drawn from the udder.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 9.

I remember, I had an opportunity to observe the efficacy of Mercurius dulcis, in a stubborn dysentery, that had baffled the remedies of an ancient physician.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 119.

And causes in the first case a pleurisy, in the second a squinancy, and in the third a flux, for the most part dysenterical.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 766.

[The yellow thistle.] The seeds of this plant are an excellent emetic; and almost as usefull in dysenteric complaints as ipecacuanha.—Granger. The Sugar Cane, Note to v. 114.

This evening died John Macintosh, the carpenter's mate, after having laboured under a dysentery ever since our departure from the Sandwich Islands.
Cook. Voyages, vol. vii. b. vi. c. 3.

E.

THE letter E is pronounced with a mean opening of the mouth, the tongue turned to the inner roof of the palate, and softly striking the upper great teeth. E and I have such a nearness in our tongue, as oftentimes to interchange places, as *en*duce for *in*duce, *en*dite for *in*dite. E is a letter of divers note and use, and either soundeth, or is silent. It serves as an accent to produce the vowel preceding; as in made, stripe, cure. It alters the power of c, g, s, as in hence, swinge, use. It is silent in words where l is coupled with a consonant in the end, as whis*tle*, fic*kle*; or after v consonant, as love, move. Wilkins classes this letter among the lingual vowels; the tongue being put into a posture somewhat convex, towards the palate. See Ben Jonson's English Grammar, and Wilkins, On a Real Character, (p. 3. c. xiv.)

EACH. A.S. Elc, alc; Dut. Elck, ellek; Ger. Etlich, jeglech, unusquisque, every one. In Somner: Æg-whær, everywhere; æg-what, whatsoever; ægh-wether, both the one and the other; æg-wider, on every side; æg-while, every, or every one. Wachter, and others, derive from the Gr. Ἕκαστος. See Ilk, Such, Which.

May not Each be the same word as Eke;—meaning add; and denoting every added, every additional one, of a multitude, every one in addition to—as a separate unit—added? The Latin Qui, qualis, talis, are compounds, and the first parts of them are the Gr. Και, and τε; both signifying and or add.

One distinguished in, segregated from, an aggregate; one reciprocated to another in the same aggregate.

That fule thorn ys prechynge so god wylle nom there,
That hem thogte echewyle fyue, in batayle ar hil were.
R. Gloucester, p. 173.

Bruyt bad Corineus forto chese of eche contre ywis,
Wuch hym were leuest to habbe to hym and to hys.
Id. p. 21.

Myn heye godes, quoth thys mayde, [Gonerill] to wytnesse I take echon,
That y loue more in myn herte thi leue bodi one,
Than myn soule and my lyf, that in my bodi ys.—Id. p. 19.

David listen'd Roberd, to pes fulle ech to drawe.
R. Brunne, p. 117.

Enjoynye hem pees for here penaunce, and perpetuel forgevenesse
Of alle manē actions, and eche love other
Piers Ploughman, p. 86.

Which answeride & seide to him, it is writen not oonly in breed lyueth a man but in eche word that cometh of Goddis mouth.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 4.

And ech that lyueth, and beleueth into me, schal not dye withouten eende.—Id. Jon, c. 11.

To speke of real linage and richesse,
Though that she were a quene or a princesse,
Eche of you bothe is worthy douteles
To wedden when time is.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1833.

For how shuld they love togeder in the peines of helle, whan they hated eche other in the prosperitee of lif?
Id. The Persones Tale.

——— It is in phisike write
Of liuer, of longe, of galle, of splene,
Thei all vnto the herte bene
Seruantes, and eche in his office
Entenden to don him seruice,
As he whiche is chefe lorde aboue.—Gower, Con. A. b. vii.

So soone as Parmenio hadde espyed Polidamus commynge afarre off, wyth a semblaunt of loye (as it appeared by his countenance) [Polidamus] ranne to embrace him, and after salutacion geeuen eche to other, deliuered ye king's letter.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 176.

Let's each-one send vnto his wife,
And he whose wife is most obedient,
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act v. sc. 2.

Milde was the winde, calme seem'd the sea to be,
The skie each-where did flow full bright and faire.
Spenser. The Visions of Petrarch.

He caus'd it each where to be given out,
My journey therefore thither I did take,
To stop their mouths.
Drayton. The Legend of Pierce Gaveston.

And if each system in gradation roll
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.
Pope. Ess. on Man, Ep 1.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
Condemn'd alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain,
The unfeeling for his own.
Gray. On a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

EA'GER, adj. } A.S. Egor; Fr. Aigre; It. Agro; Sp. Agrio. Menage, and Caseneuve, from the Lat. Acer, from the Gr. Ακις, whence also the Lat. Ac-uere, to sharpen. Lye: from the A.S. Eaglian, incitare, stimulare; and this is probably the root of the Gr. and Lat. Eager, (lit.) is—

EA'GERLY.
EA'GERNESS.

Edged, sharp, keen, acid, acrid; (met.) keen, lively, quick, animated, ardent, fervent, greedy, (sc.) in pursuit, in desire.

This Britones were so egre, and wox euer so faste,
That tho Romaynes and here kyng gonne fle atte laste.
R. Gloucester, p. 80.

The kyng & his brother, that hight Alfrede,
Gadred folk togider, ale men that had nede,
& com to the batalle with fulle egre herte.
R. Brunne, p. 21.

Folk inouh redy was gadrid, to the cite
Thei went egreli, & did tho kynges fle.—Id. p. 39.

And sclaundre wives, feble as in bataille,
Beth egre as is a tigre yond in Inde;
Ay clappeth as a mill, I you counsaille.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9076.

She was like thing for hunger deed,
That lad hir life onely by breed,
Kneden with eisel strong and egre,
And thereto she was lean and megre.—Id. Rom. of the R.

The further that my iudgment swerued from the truth in that behalfe, so muche the more vehemently and egerly me thoughte I was astonied, when I knew the truth.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, (by Wood,) p. 7.

And in such a barennesse of vittayle, as must needes come after so rauening a spoyle, it must needs be that some, though few, shall be so knipt with egernesse of famine, that they shall not recouer againe themselues out of so fretting a daunger.—Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Where of it selfe it is a meat most pure and simple, and therefore to some deyntie mouthes vsed to none but fyne termes, to the paynted colours and exornacyons of rhetorike, it seemeth drye and vnpleasaunt, it is nowe by the eagre-dulce sause of the paraphrase, made more lyquyde to runne pleasauntly in the mouth of any manne whyche is not to muche infected with indurate blyndnes of hearte, with malicious cancardnes and wyth toto [too] muche peruerse a iudgmente.—Udal. Pref. to Luke.

The women, eager as their husbands were
With spits and fireworks, swear if they could catch him
It should go hard but they would soon dispatch him.
Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge,
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge.
Shakespeare, Son. 108.

Ham. The ayre bites shrewdly: it is very cold?
Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.
Id. Hamlet, Act I. sc. 4.

As much as the punie nobles insinuated themselves more into the favour and familiarity of the commons: so much more egerly againe on the other side, did the tribunes labour and endeavour with complaints and slaunders, to bring them into suspition and jealosie with the commons.
Holland. Livius, p. 98.

If the thing be but a small matter, he is but in a small measure concerned for it. If it be of greater moment, he believes he may be allowed to be the more earnest about it. But he looks upon it as a rash and foolish thing, and an effect of great ignorance or weakness, to be hot and eager for all things alike.—Sharp, vol. I. Ser. 10.

But here the doctors eagerly dispute:
Some hold predestination absolute:
Some clerks maintain, that heaven at first foresees,
And in the virtue of foresight decrees.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox

For him, ye Gods! for Crastinus, whose spear
With impious eagerness began the war,
Some more than common punishment prepare.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vii.

The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honied spring,
And float amid the liquid noon.
Gray. Ode on the Spring.

——— What millions wouldst thou give
For one more trial, one more day to live!
Flung back in time an hour, a moment's space,
To grasp with eagerness the means of grace.
Young. The Last Day, b. iii.

EA'GLE, n. } Fr. Aigle; It. Aquila, aguglia; Sp. Aguila; Lat. Aquila. Perhaps so called, ab acumine visus, from the sharpness of its sight.
EA'GLET.

Thei answerden and seyden to him, where lord? which seyde to hem, whereuer the body schal be, thidur schulen be gaderid togidere also the egles.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 17.

And they answered, and sayde to him: where Lorde? And he sayde vnto them, wheresoeuer the body shal be, thither wil the egles resorte.—Bible, 1551. Luke, c. 25.

Or if you list to fleen as high in the aire,
As doth an egle, whan him list to sore,
This same steede shal bere you evermore
Withouten harme.—Chaucer. Squieres Tale, v. 10,437.

Wer't not all one, an emptie eagle were set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kyte,
As place Duke Humfrey for the king's protector.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act III. sc 1.

Anton. Rather a bright sun,
Too glorious for him to gaze upon,
That took not first flight from the eagle's aerie.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act I. sc. 1.

Caius Marius in his second consulship ordained, that the legions of Romane souldiers onely, should have the egle for their standard, and none other ensigne.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 4.

The ægle stones, called aetites, be much renowned in regard of the verie name that they carrie, found they are in ægle's nest.—Id. Ib. b. xxxvi. c. 21.

When like an eglet I first found my love,
For that the virtue I thereof would know,
Upon the nest I set it forth to prove,
If it were of that kingly kind, or no.—Drayton, Idea 56.

For the eye of reason, like that of the eagle, directs itself chiefly to the sun, to a glory that neither admits of a superior or an equal.—South, vol. I. Ser. 1.

Truth, which itself is light, does darkness shun,
And the true eaglet safely dares the sun.
Dryden. Britannia Redivivа.

What! shall a Roman sink in soft repose,
And tamely see the Britons aid his foes?
See them secure the rebel Gaul supply;
Spurn his vain eagles and his power defy?
Langhorne. Cæsar's Dream.

As the young eaglet rises self-inspir'd,
Lifts the strong plume, and leaves the world below:
Plays in the solar flame, delights above,
And learns to grasp the bolts of formidable Jove.
Boyse. On the Death of the Marquis of Tavistock.

EA'GRE. Skinner says, Run. Dan. Æger, oceanus, and so the violent tide of the river Trent is called by us.

His manly heart, whose noble pride
Was still above
Dissembled hate or vanish love,
Its more than common transport could not hide;
But like an *eagre rode in triumph o're the tide.
Dryden. Threnodia. August.

* An Eagre is a tyde swelling above another tyde, which I have myself obse ved on the river Trent.—Id. Ib. Note.

Topmost he rode, midst shoals of fools and knaves,
Triumphant, like an eygre, o'er the waves.
Harte. The Courtier & Prince.

EA'LDERMAN. A. S. Ealdor-man, senior, senator, tribunus.

An elder, a senator, a tribune, a statesman. See EARL, and ALDERMAN.

Then all the earles and eldermen of England in order.
Holinshed. England, b. ii. c. 2.

Thus much seems tolerably certain that among the Saxons they [the earls] are called ealdormen, (just elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 12.

EAME, or EME. EMR-CHRISTIAN. } "A. S. Eame, avunculus. The mother's brother, who is to this day so called in Lancashire," (Somner.) Grose adds, "My gossip, compeer, friend." Dut. Oom; Ger. Ohem. Helvigius (see Wachter) thinks from the Gr. Ὁμαιμος (ὁμος, and αἱμα) of the same blood; Skinner, from the Lat. Amita, and perhaps, anciently, amitus. Eme-christian, in Piers Ploughman, is, fellow-christian. Wilson writes, even-christen. (See in v. EASE.) In A. S. Eame-christian; efen or efne-cristen. In A. S. Efen, (i. e. even) efne, and eame, as Lye observes, are used promiscuously. Eame, æquus, æqualis, from the verb, emman, adæquare, to make even or alike, to match, presents a much more probable etymology.

Sobrilit duke of Bratles, high right sister sone he,
He com his eam to socour. R. Brunne, p. 17.

And juge her emcristine Piers Ploughman, p. 29.

——— And schrewede myn emcristyne
Agens the consaill of Crist. Id. p. 91.

Beo unkynde to thyn emcristene. Id. p. 332.

In good faith eme (qd. she) that liketh me.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

Tho Pandarus her eme, right as him ought
With women, such, as were her most aknowt
Full glad vnto her beddes side her brought,
And take his leaue. Id. Ib.

Vnder his seale he wrote his cheere
In such a wyse, and foorthe he gothe
Home to his eme courte againe,
To whome his auenture plaine
He tolde, of that is him befal.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Whan time come he toke his leaue,
That lenger wolde he not beleue,
And praieth his eme he be not wroth Id. Ib.

Heere seest thou me, (I tell thee, though
I praise not gentry now,
Thine eame and of the elder house)
That long ago did vow
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c. 36.

EA'NING. } A. S. Eanian, eniti, to bring
EA'NLING. } forth, as the ewe doth her lambe, to eane, or (as some speake) to yeane, (Somner.) See YEAN.

He stucke them vp before the fulsome ewes,
Who then conceauing, did in eaning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacobs
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 2.

When Laban and himself were compremyz'd
That all the eanelings which were freak'd and pied
Should fall as Jacob's hier Id. Ib.

EAR, n. EAR, v. EA'RLESS. } Lat. Auris; Fr. Oreille; It. Orecchio; Sp. Oreja, Goth. Ausa, A. S. Eare; Dut Oore, Ger. Ohr; Sw. Oera, and Isl. Hyra; which Serenius derives from the Isl. Hyrra or Harra, a word expressive the whispering or murmuring of the air. Wachter, from the Ger. Eren, to take or receive; because the ears receive sounds, or from the Scandic Oa, haurire, quia sonum hauriunt. The verb, to hear, (differing from the noun only in the aspirate) is, Goth. Haus-jan; A. S. Hyr-an; Dut. Hoor-en; Ger. Hor-en; Fr. Ouir; Sp. Oyr; It. Udire; (and Lat. Aud-ire.) Wachter derives the Ger. and Goth. verbs from the respective nouns. Junius, the Gothic verb from the Gothic noun; and that from the Gr. Ους, auris. It is probable that all had one common northern origin.

Ear is used as a verb by Beaumont and Fletcher, (q.d.) To devour, take in eagerly by the ear.

The ear is—

The organ of the sense of hearing; of receiving and distinguishing sounds.

To be by the ears,—to fall or go, to set, together by the ears; to be or cause to be pulling, lugging, tearing each other's ears; and thus, to be or cause to be at strife or variance, to squabble, to scuffle.

A. S. Ear-lappe,—the ear-lip, the lower part of the ear, (Somner.) The A. S. also made a compound of eare-finger, the pick eare finger: and in English, ear is much used in composition.

And rod forth to reason and rouned in his ere
And seide hym as the kyng sende.—Piers Ploughman, p. 64.

He endaunteth a douve. day and nyght here fedde
In a-ther of hus eres Id. p. 294.

That thing that I saye to you in derkenesse, seye ye in the light and preche ye on houses that thing that ye heeren in the ere.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 10.

What I tell you in darkenes, that speake ye in lyght. And what ye heare in the eare, that preache ye on the house toppes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

By God he smote me ones with his fist,
For that I rent out of his book a lefe,
That of the stroke myn ere wax al defe
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6218.

With eyen full of wofull teares
Her heare hangynge about her eares
She wepte, and no man wist whie.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

The wyse man also counsaileth vs to hedge in our eares with thornes, saying, Noli audire linguam nequam. That is to say, yf thou heare any thinge spoken that sounded to envy, or as not worthy to be spoken, as the Deuylles temptacion, take thornes, so muche to say, with stronge temptacions resyste and battayle, wherewith the Deuyll shall be chased awaye from vs.—Fysher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 38.

Without earings of siluer or some other metal and her crosse about her necke, you shall see no Russe woman, be she wife, or maide.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 497.

——— But if
Thou knew'st my mistris breath'd on me, and that
I ear'd her language lik'd in her eye, O coz,
What passion would enclose thee
Beaum. & Fletch. The two noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 1.

Blush, Polly, blush. here's none that fears
The wagging of an asse's eares,
Although a wolvish case he weares.
Detraction is but basenesse varlet,
And apes are apes, though clothed in scarlet.
B. Jonson, v. 8.

And till she come, as truely as to heauen
I do confesse the vices of my blood,
So justly to your graue eares I le present,
How I did thriue in this fine Ladies loue,
And she in mine.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act I. sc. 3.

I shall pass by its (the ear's) convenient number of being double, which serves for the commodious hearing every way around us, as also is a wise provision for the utter less, or injury of one of the ears.
Derham. Physico Theology, b. iv. c. 3.

Parlez on high, stood unabash'd De Foe
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

I am clearly of Dr Willis's opinion, that the use of the ear-drum is chiefly for the proportionating sounds and that by its extension and retraction it corresponds to all sounds, loud or inaudible, as the pupil of the eye doth to several degrees of light.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3. Note.

If chance at length he find a greensward smooth,
And faithful to the foot, his spirits rise,
He chirrups brisk his ear erecting steed,
And winds his way with pleasure and with ease.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

EAR, v. EA'RABLE. EA'RING, n. EARTH, v. EARTH, n. EA'RTHEN. EA'RTHLY. EA'RTHLINESS. EA'RTHLINGS. EA'RTHY. EA'RTHINESS. } "A. S. Er-ian, ar-are, to plow, to till, to eare," (Somner.) Goth. Ar-tan; Ger. Er-en Sw. Arja; Fr. Arer; It. Arare; Sp. Arar; Lat. Arare; Gr. Αρ-οω. The Goth. is the root of all. A. S. Eard; Ger. and Dut. Erde. G. Douglas and other ancient authors write erd; English, Earth, "that which one ereth or eareth, i. e. plougheth; the third pers. of the indicative; erian, arare, to ere, eare or plough. Erd, i. e. ered, er'd, that which is ploughed; the past tense of the same verb," (Tooke, ii. 417, 8.)

To earth; to be or cause to be under, to fix in the earth; to hide or cover with, to bury in, the earth; to inter.

As opposed to heaven, the noun, earth (together with the adjective, earthly, and some compounds,) is applied degradingly and opprobriously.

Ear-able is now written arable. Mr. Nares has produced three examples of ear-able, (qv.)

Earth is much used in composition.

Heo howsede and bulde faste, and erede and sewe,
So that in lutel while gode cornes hem grew
R. Gloucester, p. 21.

Aftur ech of hem in the wike yclepud ys a day:
First os [of the] sonne, and so of othere and the sene the Saturday
And for weder, & other thing on erthe, aftur hem muche is.—Id. p. 113.

To Sergy the pope, that tho was, to Rome he bed hym wende,
And do ther ys penance, that God hym wolde sende,
And bylene al erthlych thogt.—R. Gloucester, p. 333.

Befor the messengers was the maiden brought,
Of body so gentille was non in erth wrought
R. Brunne, p. 30.

For erthly worschip that I nymme.—Id. p. 251.

Ich have an half acre to eren, by the heye weye,
Hadde ich ered that half acre and sowed it after
Ich wolde wende wit thow.—Piers Ploughman, p. 128.

The wormе that woneth under erthe.—Id. p. 275.

——— And shal come att laste,
And cuhe alle erthly creatures save conscience one
Id. p. 400.

Forsothe I sey to you till hevene and erthe passe, oon lettre, or title, schal not passe fro the lawe til alle thingis be don.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

For truely I say unto you, til heauen and earth perysshe, one iote or one tytle of the law shall not escape, tyll all be fulfylled.—Bible, 1551.

For which thing God enhaunsede him, and ghaf to him a name that is aboue al name, that in the name of Iesus ech knee be bowid of heuenli thingis, of erthen thingis, and of helle.—Wiclif. Philippens, c. 2.

Wherfore God hath exalted him & geuen him a name aboue all names, that in the name of Jesus should every knee bowe, both of thinges in heue, and thingis in earth, & thingis vnder the earth.—Bible, 1551.

And I saugh whanne he hadde opened the sixte seel, and lo a erthe-mouyng was maad.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 6.

And lo ther was maad a great erthe shakyng: for the aungel of the Lord came doun fro heuene and neighede and turnyde away the stoon and sat theron
Id. Matthew, c. 28.

It bihoueth an erthe-tilier to resseyue first of the fruytis.
Id. 2 Timothe, c. 2.

I have, God wot, a large feld to ere;
And weke ben the oxen in my plow.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 883.

Love is a greter lawe by my pan, [head]
Than may be yeven of any erthly man.—Id. Ib. v. 1168.

——— Thy men it delue and diche,
And eren it with strength of plough.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For he [Saturnus] fonde of his owne wit,
The fyrst crafte of plough tillynge,
Of earynge, and of corne sowynge. Id. Ib. b. v.

But he [Abraham] fonde out the right weie,
Howe onely men shulde obeie
The high God, whiche weldeth all,
And euer hath done, and euer shall,
In heuen, in erthe, and eke in helle,
There is no tonge his might maie telle. Id. Ib.

——— For otherwise
Ther mate none erthly kynge sufhise
Of hys kyngdome the folke to lede,
But he the kynge of heuen drede. Id. Ib. b. viii.

He [the steward] is further to see what demeanes of his lordes is most meete to be taken into his handes, so well for meddowe, pasture, as earable, &c.
Order of a Nobleman's House, Archæol. xiii. p. 315.

Adam against the commandement of God tasted but one apple, and anone he was caste out of the goodly gardeyne of Paradyse in to this earth full of breers and brambles.
Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 6.

And yet it is not requisite that the nature of mã should with like common effect worke, in eating & drinking that heauenly meate & drinke as it doth in earthly & material meates.
Bp. Gardner. On the Sacrament, p. 40.

——— Discharge, and let 'em go
To eare the land, that hath some hope to grow
For I haue none.—Shakespeare. Rich. II. A. v. sc. 2.

For this dale men that doo eare the ground there, doo oft plow vp bones of a large size, and great store of armour.
Harrison. Description of Britaine, b. i. c. 11.

In the beginning of the same king's daies a soldiour of Bullaine a man found as he eared, an arming girdle harnessed with pure gold and a great massie pomell with a crosse but for a sword of the same metall.—Id. England, b. ii. c. 24.

Ant. O then we bring forth weeds,
When our quicke winds lye still, and our ills told us
Is as our earing: fare thee well awhile.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 2.

Although this lord of weake remembrance—this
Who shall be of as little memory
When he is earth'd, hath here almost persuaded
The king his sonne's alive.—Id. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

My root is earth'd, and I, a desolate branch,
Left scatter'd in the highway of the world,
Trod under foot, that might have been a column
Manly supporting our demolish'd house.
Massinger. The False Dowry, Act ii. sc. 1.

To solemnize this day the glorious sunne
Stayes in his course, and plays the alchymist,
Turning with splendour of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold.
Shakespeare. King John, Act iii. sc. 1.

A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Greene earthen pots, bladders, and mustie seedes.
Id. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 1.

Nature gaz'd on with such a curious eye,
That curiosity oft her deem'd a Deity.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

Againe, what earthly spirit but will attempt
To taste the fruit of beauties golden tree,
When leaden sleep seales up the dragon's eyes?
B Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc 2.

——— Thence it is
They're not so easily turn'd by sympathie,
The aire there having lesse of earthinesse,
So that they move not with one spearnesse,
The earth and it
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 3. s. 55.

And surely if it be true that is reported of Anaxamander, the Milesian naturall philosopher, his prescience and foreknowledge of things was excellent and worthie of immortalitie: who, as they say, forewarned the Lacedæmonians to looke well into their citie and dwelling houses, for that there was an earthquake toward: which fell out accordingly.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 79.

It is said of Archimedes, that he would undertake to turn about the whole earth, if he could but have some place beside the earth to fix his feet upon.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

Some [eggs] may be hidden and cherished in dry places (not wanting any humor to feed them) as in scar-wood, yea, in earthen-vessels, and marbles themselves.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurst;
Of which our earthly dung-hill is the worst.
Dryden. Plutarch.

[He] freed rain-water, carefully collected, from its accidental, and as it were feculent earthiness, which it will deposite at the first slow distillation.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 103.

——— But tell us why this waste,
Why this ado in earthing up a carcase
That's fall'n into disgrace, and in the nostril
Smells horrible! Blair. The Grave.

He bow'd before the altar, and o'er cakes
Of barley, from two earthen vessels pour'd
Of honey and of milk a plenteous stream.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. iii.

So long as they have only light enough to hate light, they may, upon the first glimpse, retire into their earthiness, and push out their works as thick as mole-hills.
Byron. Enthusiasm. Introductory Letter.

Huntsmen tell us that a fox when escaped from the dogs, after a hard chase, always walks himself cool before he earths.—Bp. Horne. Essays and Thoughts.

EAR, v. } Goth. Ahs; A. S. Æhher, spica;
EAR, n. } Ger. Aher, Æhr. In Benson it is written Æchir; which Wachter thinks leads to Ecke, acies, cuspis, quia tota acuminata et mucronibus munita, prorsus ut Lat. Spica a spiculis.

To ear, to form, to put, throw or shoot forth ears or spikes.

The thridde time, the grene corn in somer sadle curne
To foule wormes muchedel the ers gonne turne.
R. Gloucester, p. 490.

And it was don eftsoons whanne the Lord walkide in the sabotis bi the cornes, and his disciplis bigunnen to passe forth and pluck eeris of the corn.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 2.

And it chaunced that he went thorowe the corne fieldes on the sabboothe day, his disciples as they went on their waye, began to plucke the eares of the corne.—Bible, 1551.

If standing corn be moisted with rain a little before harvest, it taketh much good against both southern winds, which will not suffer the corn to gather and knit in the ear, but cause it to be loose, that it cannot ear well by means of heat, were it not, by the drenching and watering of the ground, the moisture did cool and molify the earth.
Holland. Pliutarch, p. 825.

Likewise there are seene starres together with the sunne all day long, yea, and very often about the compasse of the sunne other flames, like unto garlands of corne eares.
Id. Plinie, b. ii. c. 28.

There is yet a third [act] required for the earing and hardning of the corn.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 530.

Then burs and brambles, an unbidden crew
Of graceless guests, the unhappy field subdue:
And oats unblest, and darnel domineers,
And shoots its head above the shining ears.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

EARL. } Spelman thinks Eorla is a Da-
EA'RLDOM. } nish word, and of the same signification as alderman; rightly, says Wachter, as to the sense, but not as to the origin; the word having been long used in England before the arrival of the Danes. He considers it to be a diminutive of A. S. Are; Ger. Er; Dut. Eer, (in English, Ere, whence early;) which appears to have meant priority, and thence seniority. See ALDERMAN; and for quotations from Hume, and Blackstone.

The kyng lette bryng ther after Hengist bifore hym sone,
And asked hat erles & barnes, wat were mest hym to done?
P. Gloucester, p. 141.

And locke when I am king, claime thou of me
The earldome of Hereford, and all the moueables
Whereof the king my brother was possest.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 1.

And being earl marshall, great upon that coast,
With bel's and bonfires welcomes her ashore.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars.

It appears from the ancient translations of the Saxon annals and laws, and from King Alfred's translation of Bede, as well as from all the ancient historians, that comes in Latin, aldermas in Saxon, and earl in Dano-Saxon, were quite synonimous.—Hume. Hist. of Eng. vol. i. Note (G.)

The dignity of an earl, like that of a baron, was anciently territorial and official: he exercised jurisdiction within his county: he levied the third of the fines to his own profit: he was at once a civil and a military governor: although his authority, from the time of the Norman conquest, was hereditary in England, the title was so much connected with the office, that where the king intended to create a new earl he had no other expedient than to erect a certain territory into a county or earldom, and to bestow it upon the person and his family.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. c. 13.

An earl is a title of nobility so antient, that its original cannot be clearly traced out. Thus much seems tolerably certain: that among the Saxons they are called aldermen, quasi elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 12.

EA'RLY, adj. }
EA'RLY, ad. }
EA'RLINESS. } Goth. Air; "A.S. Ær, prius, dudum, first, before," (Somner.) A.S. Ærlice, ærlice, and written Erlich, as in Gower and Piers Plouhman. Dut. Eer; Ger. Ehe, eher, er. Junius says er formerly was applied to the morning; that is, the beginning, the prior, or anterior part of the day, and was afterwards extended to any other precedent or antecedent time. See ERE, and EARL, ante; also ARE, and ER.

And arise erliche.—Piers Ploughman, p. 15.

But in o day of the woke ful eerli thei camen to the graue, and broughten swete smellynge spices, that they hadden arayed.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 24.

On the morow after the sabboth early in the morninge, they came vnto the toumbe and brought the odoures which they had prepared.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And Jhesus roos eerly the firste daye of the woke and apperide first to Marye Maudeleyn fro whom he hadde caste out sevene Develis.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 16.

But by the cause that they shulden rise
Early a-morwe for to seen the sight,
Unto hir reste wenten they at night.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2491.

The kyng bethought hym all that night,
And erely whan the dale was light,
He toke counceil of this matere.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

So that eroliche vpon a dale
He bad within there be laie,
There shoulde to fore his bedde
A bourde vp sette, and fayre spredde,
And then he let the cofres fette. Id. Ib.

Death taketh no order of yeres, but when the time is appointed, be it earely or late, daie or night, away we must.
Watson. Art of Rammyng, p. 83.

Samuel began his acquaintance with God early, and continued it long. He began it in his long coats, and continued to his gray hairs.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Meeting of Saul and Samuel.

But where vnbruised youth with vnstuft braine
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlinesse doth me assure,
Thou art vprous'd with some distemperature.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 3.

——— The scented dew
Betrays her early labyrinth; and deep,
In scatter'd sullen openings, far behind,
With every breeze she hears the coming storm.
Thomson. Autumn.

One who has early known the pomps of state,
(For things unknown 'tis ignorance to condemn)
And after having view'd the gaudy bait,
Can boldly say, the trifle I contemn.
Walsh. The Retirement.

From this succinct survey of discovery and navigation, which I have traced from the earliest dawn of historical knowledge, to the full establishment of the Roman dominion, the progress of both appears to have been wonderfully slow.
Robertson. History of America, b. i.

EARN, v. }
EA'RNING, n. } A.S. Earn-ian, ge-earnian, asequi, consequi,—

To run after, to pursue, to reach, or overtake; and thus mereri, to deserve, to merit, or be worthy of, as a reward for service. See EARNE.

For all those knights, the which by force or guile
She doth subdue, she foully doth intreat.
First, she doth them of warlike armes despoile,
And clothe in women's weeds—and then with threat
Doth them compell to worke, to earne their meat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

Who sees not, that our rewards are according to our works? not for them, as on merit (woe be to that soule which hath but what it earneth) but after them, as their rule of proportion: and these, how sensibly unequall?
Bp. Hall, Decad. 3. Epis. 6.

Shadwell's unfinish'd works do yet impart
Great proofs of nature's force, though none of art;
But Wycherley earns hard whate'er he gains,
He wants no judgment; and he spares no pains.
Lansdowne. Character of Wycherley.

You, then, who are initiated into the mysteries of the blindfold Goddess, inform me whether I have a right to eat the bread I have earned by the hazard of my life, or the sweat of my brow?—Burke. Vindication of Nat. Society.

As to the common people, their stock is in their persons and in their earnings.—Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

EARNE, v. }
EA'RNEST, n. }
EA'RNEST, adj. }
EA'RNESTLY. }
EA'RNESTNESS. }
EA'RNFULL. } A. S. Yrn-an, (to run.) Ge-yr-nan, ge-orn-ian, gi-ern-an, g-yrn-an, to run after, to pursue, to seek after; and thus,—

To long for, to desire or covet eagerly or anxiously; to be deeply anxious. See YEARNE.

Also as the Ger. Gerinn-en, coagulare, in se fluere, to run together, (to run as cheese doth, Ray,) to run into masses, to coagulate, to curdle.

Earnest,—Wachter derives from Gr. Αριστεια; but earnest and earnful, are (like one in full chase) eagerly, seriously, steadfastly pursuing, stretching, longing after, desiring to reach, obtain or acquire; anxious, zealous, full of anxiety or zeal: and thus, generally,—

To give or pay earnest seems to be merely to give or pay as a pledge or proof of being in earnest, of seriously intending to fulfil or perform, or enforce the fulfilment or performance of, the bargain or promise; to put down a gage or pledge, or payment beforehand.

Mr. Nares has produced an instance of the verb to earnest.

Corineus was tho somdel wroth, ys axe on hey drow,
And smot hym vpon the hed mid god ernest y now.
R. Gloucester, p. 17.

As the out in either syde to this batail drow
Heo come & metten baldeliche mid god ernest y now.
Id. p. 139.

But who is it that makith us into this same thing, God that gaf to us the eernes [pignus] of the spyrit.
Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 5.

He that hathe ordeyned vs for this thynge, is God; which verye same hathe geuen vnto vs the ernest of the spyrite.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For as muche as it is knowen thorow out al Europe, to the great comforte of al them that love the pure and true religion of Christe, that our most noble and Christian Kinge Edwarde entendeth ernestly to reforme religeon in al his Grace's dominions by the holy worde of God, &c.

New. Test. 1551. J. C. unto the Cristen Reader.

And thus she maketh Absolon hire ape,
And all his ernest tourneth to a jape

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3390.

O Bacchus, Bacchus, blessed be thy name;
That so canst turnen ernest into game;
Worship and thonke be to thy deitee.

Chaucer. The Monciples Prologue, v. 17,049.

I wol with lusty herte freshe and grene,
Say you a song to gladen you, I wene:
And let us stint of ernestful matere.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9061.

But afterwarde all thilk game
Was into wofull ernest tourned.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Cesar knew his brother Diuitiacus to beare earnest good wil to the people of Rome, and that he hartely loued hym, and that he was a man of syngular faithefulnesse, iustice, and modestie.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 15.

A rich merchãt hath pleasure in pleasant words and merrie conceites; but yet few will give money for them: and when it commeth to the merchandise in earnest, no man will beleeue suche wanton speache.

Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. ii. c 9.

And when the Gospel is preached vnto vs, we beleue the mercy of God, and in beleuyng we receaue the spirite of God, which is the earnest of eternal lyfe.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 70.

In accomplishinge whereof, hys souldiors wrought so earnestly, that with ye losse of twelue ships, the rest were so well mended that they might well be sayled in.

Golding. Cæsar, fol. 104.

But those elephants of Pompey being past all hope of escaping and going cleere away, after a most pittifull manner and rufull plight that cannot be expressed, seemed to make mone unto the multitude, craving mercie and pitie, with greevous plaints and lamentations, bewailing their hard state and wofull case; in such sort, that the people's hearts earned at this piteous sight.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 7.

Let's prove among ourselves our armes in jest,
That when we come to earnest them with men,
We may them better use.

Pastor Fido, 1602. E. 1.

Which steely brand, to make him dradded more,
She gaue vnto him, gotten by her slight
And earnest search, where it was kept in store
In Joue's eternall house

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

Dut Pleads he in earnest? looke vpon his face,
His eyes do drop no teares: his prayers are in iest:
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act v. sc. 3.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mou'd with remorse of these outragious broyls,
Haue earnestly implor'd a generall peace
Betwixt our nation, and the aspyring French.

Id. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 4.

And we may learn hence, that the greatest gift of prayer, and earnestness and frequency in it, is no good mark of godliness, except it be attended with sincere, constant, and vertuous endeavours.—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

Whatever charms might move a gentle heart
I oft have tried, and show'd the earnful smart
Which eats my breast: she laughs at all my pain:
Art prayers, vows, gifts, love, grief, she does disdain.

P. Fletcher, Ecl. 5.

I had not till then a notion of the earnings of heart which a man has when he sees his child do a laudable thing, or the sudden damp which seizes him, when he fears he will act something unworthy.—Spectator, No. 263.

The throng is in the midst: the common crew
Shut out, the hall admits the better few;
In knots they stand, or in a rank they walk,
Serious in aspect, earnest in their talk.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

They [afflictions] may be testimonies or earnests of God's favour, for whom he loves he rebukes and chastens, even as a father a son in whom he delighteth.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 17.

The king by his agents earnestly pressed them to grant him present supplies for the use of his army.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 7.

The lady soon after coming into the parlour, and seeing her monkey look upon a paper with great earnestness, took it up, and to this day is in some doubt, says Will, whether it was written by Jack, or the monkey.—Spectator, No. 343.

But she, poor she, began to doubt,
(Best knowing what she'd been about)
The marriage earnest-penny lay,
And burnt her pocket as we say.—Fenton. The Fair Nun.

And then he lifted up to heaven
An earnest asking eye:
My joy is full, my hour is come,
Lord, let thy servant die.

Logan, Hymn 8.

If any part of the price is paid down, if it be but a penny, or any portion of the goods delivered as earnest, (which the civil law calls arrha, and interprets to be emptionis venditionis contractæ argumentum) the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c 30.

The person that appeared here as counsel for the candidate, who so long and so earnestly solicited your votes, thinks proper to deny that a very great part of you have any votes to give.—Burke. On the Conclusion of the Poll.

EARTH. See EAR.

EASE, v.
EASE, n.
EA'SEFUL.
EA'SING, n.
EA'SELESS.
EA'SEMENT.
EA'SY.
EA'SILY.
EA'SINESS.

Goth. Azets; A.S. Eath. "Facilis, proclivis, comis, lenis;—easy, gentle, mild, meek, soft, ready. Chaucer, eth, eyth," (Somner.) See EATH. Fr. Aise; It. Agio, which latter Menage deduces from the Lat. Otium; thus, otium, ocium, ogium, ogeo, agio.

The noun ease, is opposed to—disquiet, disturbance, trouble, difficulty; and is equivalent to,—

Quiet, rest, peace, tranquillity, leisure, repose; liberty, freedom or deliverance from any painful feeling, mental or bodily.

To ease,—to free, relieve or deliver, from any disquiet, disturbance or trouble; any painful feeling or sensation, mental or bodily; generally, to free or deliver, to relieve, to alleviate, to comfort, to soothe, to assuage, to mitigate.

Whan the geandes were alle y slawe, that ther bi leuede no mo
Brut wende forth into Engoland, aspiede vp and doun
For to seche an ese place, to make an heued toun.

R. Gloucester, p. 23.

Pycars fonden ese ynow, and defaut none
To libbe in plente ynow, but of wymmen ona.—Id. p. 42.

For wrath first of Tancrede R. vp it reised,
If he had turned to nede, his folk forto haf esed.

R. Brunne, p. 157.

——— & said thorgh curteisie,
Harald haf now thin eyse, in all my seignorie.—Id. p. 68.

And alle manê men, that thow myght aspye
In mischief othr in mal ese, and thow nowe hem helpe
Loke by thy lyf, let hem nouht for fare.

Piers Ploughman, p. 140.

And his fame wente in to al Syria, and thei broughten to him alle that weren at mal ese.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 4.

Natheless to Tyre & Sydon it schal be esier in the doom than to you.—Id. Luke, c. 10.

Neuerthelesse it shal be easyer for Tyre and Sidõ at ye iudgemẽt, then for you.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And I seie these thingis to ghoure profyt, not that I caste to ghou a snare but to that that is onest and that ghyueth esynesse without letting to make preieris to the Lord.

Wiclif. 1 Corynthians, c. 7.

I say for me, it is a gret disese,
Whor as men have ben in gret welth and ese.

Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Prologue, v. 14,778.

The chambres and the stables weren wide,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.—Id. Prologue, v. 29.

And sin I shal have nan amendement
Again my losse, I wol have an esement.

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4184.

And Absolon knocketh all esily,
And said; Undo, Gerveis, and that anon.

Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3762.

This stede of bras, that esily and wel
Can in the space of a day natural,
(This is to sayn, in four and twenty houres)
Wher so you list in drought or elles shoures,
Beren your body into every place
To which your herte willeth for to pace.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,429.

He was an esy man to give penance.—Id. Prologue, v. 23.

So haue I sen full many one
That were of loue wele at ease,
Whiche after fell in great disease,
Through wast of loue.

Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

So that the kynges ben appeased,
And euery man's hert is esed:
All was foryete, and not recorded,
And thus thei ben togeder acorded.

Id. Ib. b. iii.

But and yf he saye vnto the: I wyll not go away from the, because he loueth the and thyne house, & is well at ease wt the: then take a maule, and nayle hys eare to the doore therwith.—Bible, 1551. Deuteronomium, c. 15.

The great royalty of sepulture did not ease the paine of the rich man spoken of in the Gospell.

Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. iii. c. 2.

But when God striketh the mightie with his strong hande, and displaceth those that were highly placed: what one man doeth once looke backe, for the better easement of his deare brother, and godly comforting his euen Christen, in the chiefe of all his sorowe.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 68.

And if there bee any manne sore afflicted amonge you, let hym not flee to the remedies of thys worlde, to rynges, to inchauntmentes, to baynes, and other easementes of sorowe, but let hym turne hym to prayer and lyfte vp hys mynde to God with most assured faithfull trust, and he shall finde present releasse of his mournyng

Epist. James, c 5.

And ayen behold with how fewe single pure and easye institucions Cryste orned and not onered his chirche.

Joye. The Expos. of Daniel, c. 8.

The large grene courtes where we were wont to have,
With eyes cast vp into the mayden tower,
And ease sighes, such as folk drawe in loue.

Surrey. Prisoner in Windsor

But as for me, albeit mi iudgement hath bene alwaye that the truth ought to be obeied, which doubtles doth come altogether of God: yet in the discussing and trial of the truth I did not so easely content myself.

Bp. Gardner. Of true Obedience, (by Wood,) p. 6.

— Whyche if you hadde doone in my booke, as I haue doone in theyrs, eyther wouldie not youre vnfaithfull dealyng haue bin so muche, or else must it sooner or easyier haue bin espied.—Whitgift, p. 180.

——— He is sure
To be eased of his office, though perhaps he bought it.

Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iii. sc 2.

For whatsoever ease we can have or fancy here, is shortly to be changed into sadness, or tediousness: it goes away too soon, like the periods of our life; or stays too long, like the sorrows of a sinner.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 1. s. 2.

But in the midst of this bright-shining day,
I spy a black suspicious threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sunne,
Ere he attaine his easefull westerne bed.

Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 3.

They [Roman indulgences] are intended for these two ends: 1. The easing of true penitents from the penalties laid on them by their confessors, after their absolution here in the church. 2. And the removing of more grievous punishments laied on them by God Almighty, yonder in purgatory.—Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 10.

Send me some tokens, that my hope may live,
Or that my easeless thoughts may sleep and rest;
Send me some honey, to make sweet my hive,
That in my passions I may hope the best.

Donne. Sonnet. The Token.

But when she had with such vnquiet fits
Her selfe there close afflicted long in vaine,
Yet found no easement in her troubled wits,
She vnto Talus forth return'd againe,
By change of place seeking to ease her paine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

Can you, when you have pusht out of your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, giuen your enemy your shield, think to front his reuenges with the easie groanes of old women, the virginall palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seeme to be.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 3.

The sweat of learned Jonson's brain,
And gentle Shakespear's easier strain,
A hackney coach conveys you to,
In spite of all that rain can do:
And for your eighteen pence you sit
The lord and judge of all fresh wit.

Suckling. To John Hales.

——— Refrain to night,
And that shall lend a kinde of easinesse
To the next abstinence.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares.—Milton. Comus, v. 156.

"Beneath his locks the king my husband wears
A goodly royal pair of ass's ears."
Now I have eas'd my bosom of the pain,
Till the next longing fit return again.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

6. A hopeful confidence in God for the removal or easement of our afflictions, and for his gracious aid to support them well.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

Your easier odes, which for delight were pen'd,
Yet our instruction make their second end.
We're both enrich'd and pleas'd, like them that woo
At once a beauty and a fortune too.—Dryden, Ep. 1.

But then, so infinitely kind a master we have, and so noble, so rational, so ingenuous a service he hath put upon us, that the very easiness of his terms will be one of the blackest aggravations of our baseness and inexcusable guilt, in refusing his salvation.—Sharp, vol. II. Ser. 5.

What joy within these sunless groves
Where lonely contemplation roves,
To rest in fearless cave.
Langhorne. Left with the Minister of Riponden.

In spite of outward blemishes she [Clive] shone
For humour fam'd, and humour all her own.
Easy, as if at home, the stage she trod,
Nor sought the critic's praise, nor fear'd his rod.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

It must be likewise shown, that these parts stand in such a relation to each other, that the comparison between them may be easily made, and that the affection of the mind may naturally result from it.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

EAST, n.
EAST, adj.
EA'STERLY.
EA'STERLING, n.
EA'STERN.
EA'STLAND.
EASTLA'NDISH.
EA'STSIDE.
EA'STWARD.

A. S. East; Dut. Oost; Ger. Ost; Sw. Oster; Fr. Oest. In A. S. Yst, is a storm, a tempest. Ystig, (yeasty) stormy, tempestuous. "The past part. of Yrsian, or Iersian, irasci, is yrsed, yrsd, yrst; dropping the r (which many cannot pronounce) it becomes yst, and so it is much used in the Anglo-Saxon. They who cannot pronounce r usually supply its place by a; hence, I suppose, East, which means angry, enraged." (Tooke, Diversions of Purley, ii. 398.)

Wachter thinks from Goth. Ust-an, surgere, because there the sun rises; with which Ihre is not satisfied.

Luke, xiii. 29. "And hig cumeth from east-dæl, and west-dæl, and north-dæl."—"And they shulen come fro the eest and west, and fro the north and south," (Wiclif.)

And alle that han welle ywrought wenden thei shulle Estwarde to hevene evere to abyde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 19.

Lo astronomyens camen fro the east to Jerusalem. And seiden, where is he that is borun kyng of Jewis? for we han seen his starre in the eest: and were comen for to worschipe him.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 2.

Beholde, there came wise men frō the east to Jerusalē, saying: where is he that is borne kyng of the Jewes? We have sene his starre in the east, and are come to worshyp him.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Now ringen trompes loud and clarioun,
Ther is no more to say, but est and west
In gon the speres sadly in the rest:
In goth the sharpe spere into the side.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2603.

And for to don his rite and sacrifice,
He estward hath upon the gate above,
In worship of Venus goddesse of love,
Don make an auter and an oratorie.—Id. Ib. v. 1905.

In whiche Lapland he [Arthur] placed the easterly bounds of his Brittish empire.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 2.

Two miles beyond the eastermost towne are blacke rocks, which blacke rocks continue to the vttermost cape of land, which is about a league off, and then the land runnes in east-northeast, and a sandy shore again.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 33.

And ye shal measure wtoute the citie, and make the vtmost border of ye east-syde two thousande cubytes.
Bible, 1551. Numeri, c. 35.

Who would have thought a king that cares to reign,
Enforc'd by love, so poet-like should feign?
To say that beauty, Time's sterne rage to shun,
In my cheeks [allies] hid her from the sun;
And when she meant to triumph in her May,
Made that her east, and here she broke her day.
Drayton. Mrs. Shore to Edw. IV.

And on the east-side of the garden place,
Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbes,
Cherubic watch. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The winter winds still easterly do keep,
And with keen frosts have chained up the deep.
Drayton. On his Lady not coming to London.

Certain merchants of Norwaie, Denmarke, and of others those parties, called Ostomanni, or (as in our vulgar language we tearme them) easterlings, because they lie east in respect of vs, &c.—Holinshed. Ireland, an. 130.

The easterne churches first did Christ embrace,
And drew their faith from fountaines that were pure,
What famous doctours, singular for grace,
Have clear'd those parts, though at this time obscure?
Stirling. Doomesday. The Ninth Houre.

I hold the east-landish, and Low Dutch, to draw more neerer the true original than the High Dutch.
Verstegan. Restit. of Decayed Intelligence, c. 7.

There is also a block-house, and a peere in the east side thereof, but the peere is sore choked with sand.
Holinshed. Desc. of Britaine. c. 10.

Haste hither, Eve, and with thy sight behold,
Eastward among those trees, what glorious shape
Comes this way moving; seems another morn
Ris'n on mid noon Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v

Our own eight East India ships, valued two hundred thousand pounds, and our eastland fleet, to the number of twenty, laden with substantial naval commodities, are all safe in our harbours.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 192.

Deep midnight now involves the livid skies,
When eastern breezes yet enervate rise:
The waning moon behind a wat'ry shroud
Pale glimmer'd o'er the long protracted cloud.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

Nearer and nearer now the danger grows,
And all their skill relentless fates oppose.
For while more eastward they direct the prow,
Enormous waves the quivering deck o'erflow.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

EA'STER. A. S. Eastre; Dut. Ooster; Ger. Ostern. "Eostur-monath, (says Bede,) which is now called the Paschal month, had its name from a goddess called Eostre, and to whom at that time they used to celebrate festivals." This Eostre, Skinner thinks, may be the Aurora of the Latins. Wachter thinks that the word may come from the Goth. Urrist; A. S. Arist, resurrectio, A. S. Arisan, risan; Ger. Reis-en, to rise. But it seems plain that the A. S. Eastre is immediately from East; Ger. Ostern, from ost; and Dut. Ooster, from oost; and that the word in each language is applied to the season of the year, which is proverbially angry, enraged, stormy, tempestuous. See EAST.

He sayde vnto his disciples ye know that after two days shall be easter, and the sonne of man shall be delyuered to be crucified.—Bible, 1551. Matthew, c. 26.

And his disciples wente forthe and came to the cyty, and found as he had sayd vnto thē, and made ready the easter lambe.—Id. Mark, c. 13.

God expects from men something more than ordinary at such times, and that it were much to be wished for the credit of their religion, as well as the satisfaction of their consciences, that their easter devotions would, in some measure, come up to their easter dress.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

EAT, v.
EA'TABLE, adj.
EA'TABLE, n.
EA'TER.
EA'TING, n.

Goth. It-an, et-an; A. S. Et-an; Dut. Eten; Ger. Essen; Sw. Äta; Gr. Ἐδ-ειν; Lat. Ed-ere.

To eat food, is to chew and swallow it; to consume, to devour it. Generally—

To consume, to devour, to corrode, to gnaw, to wear away.

Eaters, in B. Jonson, are servants so called, because more partial to eating than working.

He lay syke in ys bed vor doel and vor sore,
That he ne ete non mete thre dawes ther vore.
R. Gloucester, p. 243.

In S. Edward tyme the erle suld with him ete,
A seruitour ther was, that serued at the mete.
R. Brewne, p. 55.

& slouh bothe fader & soune, women lete thei gon,
Hors & houdes thei ete, vnnethis skaped non.—Id. p. 75.

Whan thei had alle eten, & watches mad alle preste,
To gete that thei had goten, R. gede to reste.—Id. p. 182.

For hli eleth mor flesh than flesh.—Piers Ploughman, p. 94.

Hunger eet al in haste, and asked after more.
Id. p. 144.

Reson ich sauh sotthlich, suwen alle bestes,
In etynge and drynkyng. Id. p. 223.

And the Farisees syghen, seiden to his disciplis, whi eith your maister with pupplicanes and synful men.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 9.

When the Pharises saw yt, they said to disciples: why eateth your master with publycans & synners.—Bib. 1551. Ib.

For the tyme that is passed is ynow to the wille of hethene men to be endid, whiche walkiden in leccheries and lustis, in mych drynking of wyn, in unmesurable etyngis, and unleeful worschiping of mawmetis.—Wiclif. 1 Pet. c. 4.

For it is sufficient for vs that we haue spent the tyme yt is past of the lyfe, after the will of the Gentyls, walkynge in wantonnes, lustes, dronckennes, in eatyng, drinckyng, and in abominable ydolatry.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Yvin, lemman, I have swiche love-longing,
That like a turtel trewe is my mourning.
I may not ete no more than a maid.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3707.

For to eat early or betimes, was in old time counted a reproach; and it is said, that this word ἀκρατισια, that is to say, a breakfast, was derived of ἀκρασια, that is to say, intemperance.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 635.

What fish can any shore or British sea-town show,
That's eatable to us, that it doth not bestow
Abundantly thereon. Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 27.

But I am a great eater of beefe, and I beleeue that does harme to my wit.—Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 3.

Mor. Barre my doores! barre my doores! where are all my eaters? my mouths now? bar up my doores, you varlets
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act iii. sc. 5.

The consequent of which words is plainly this, that there is no eating of Christ's flesh or drinking his blood, but by a moral instrument, faith and subordination to Christ; the sacramental external eating alone being no eating of Christ's flesh, but the symbols and sacrament of it.
Bp. Taylor. Of the real Presence, § 3.

Diogenes being asked at a feast, why he did not continue eating as the rest did, answered him that asked him with another question, pray why do you eat? Why, says he, for my pleasure; why so, says Diogenes, do I abstain for my pleasure.—South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Eatables we brought away, but the earthen vessels we had no occasion for, and therefore left them.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1685.

Upon the whole matter, the greedy getter is like the greedy eater; it is possible that by taking in too fast he may choke or surfeit, but he will hardly nourish and strengthen himself, or serve any of the noble purposes of nature, which rather intends the security of his health than the gratification of his appetite.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

All covenants were, in old times, solemnized and accompanied with festival eating and drinking; the persons newly confederate, always thereupon, feasting together in token of their full and perfect accord, both as to interest and affection.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 8.

In no part of England are eatables of any kind the object of taxation.—Burke. On a Late State of the Nation.

EATH. Easy, (qv.) Also written Eth, (qv.)

Nay, but sorrow, close shrowded in hart,
I knowe to keepe is a burdenous smart,
Each thing imparted is more eath to beare.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. September.

Said then the fox; who hath the world not tride;
From the right way full eath may wander wide.
Id. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

These are vain thoughts or melancholy shews
That wont to haunt and trace by cloister'd tombs;
Which eaths appear in sad and strange disguises
To pensive minds, deceived with their shadows.
Cornelia. O. Pl. ii. 262.

EAVES.
EAVES-DROP, v.
EAVES-DROPPER.

"A. S. Efese, margo, ora, the brim, brink, skirt or edge of any thing; it. The eaves of a house. Efesian, tondere, depilare, to powle, to round, to sheare," (Somner.)

The edge, brim or brink, (sc.) of the roof of a house.

Eaves-dropper; (vox sane elegantissima, says Skinner;) one who takes his station under the drippings or droppings of the eaves, (sc.) as a listener. See the quotation from Blackstone.

The author of Piers Plouhman's Creed uses the past part. eveseile—

"Orcheyarde and erberes eveseil wel clene."

In North,—"without doors, under the easing of the house:" perhaps contracted from eavesing. (Plut. p. 597.)

Thenne flammeth he as fuyr, on fader and on filius,
And melteth myghte into mercy, as wey may see a wynter
Isykles in evesynges, thorgh hete of the sonne
Melteth in a myntwhile, to myst and to water.
Piers Plouhman, p. 331.

——— But chiefly
Him that you term'd, sir, the good old Lord Gonzalo,
His teares runs downe his beard like winter's drops
From eaues of reeds.—Shakes. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

But truly I cannot blame the gentlewomen, you stood eves-dropping under their window, and would not come up.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act v. sc. 3.

"Was it such a dissolute speech, telling of some politicians who were wont to eaves-drop in disguises, to say they were often liable to a night-walking cudgeller, or the emptying of a urinal?—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

——— Come go with me,
Vnder our tents I'le play the eaues-dropper,
To heare if any meane to shrink from me.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act v. sc. 3.

EBB

No breeze the casement shook, or fann'd the leaves,
Nor drops of rain fell soft from on the eaves.
Hughes. The Morning Apparition.

And speaks, through holy crafty soul,
As through a trunk or whispering hole,
Such language as no mortal ear
But spiritual eaves-droppers can hear.—Hudibras, pt. I. c 1.

When Zephyr on each pregnant tree
Calls forth the tender leaves,
And her sad nest the swallow builds
Beneath the friendly eaves.—Best Triumphs of the Soul.

Eaves-droppers, or such as listen under walls or windows or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nuisance, and presentable at the court leet or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine, and finding sureties for their good behaviour.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv c. 13.

EBB, v.
EBB, n.
EBB, adj.
E'BBING, n. } A. S. Ebbian, ebbe; Dut. Eb, ebbe; Ger. Ebbe, Sw. Ebb; A. S. Ebb-an, recedere; Dut. Ebben, abire, refluere, remeare, decrescere,—

To go away, to recede, to retire; and thus, to decay, to decrease, to lower, to become low or shallow.

Ebb is used as an adjective by Holland, and applied to the growth of the roots of trees, as well as to water.

After an ebbe of the flode, euer likon thei found.
R. Brunne, p. 106.

As sore wondren som on cause of thonder,
On ebbe and floud, on gossomer and on mist,
And on all thing, til that the cause is wist.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,573.

The sea eke, with his sterne wawes
Ech day floweth new againe,
And by concours of his lawes
The ebbe floweth in certaine.
Id Bauide. Women, their Doublenesse

The sea ebbeth and withdraweth the grauell.
Id. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

The sea nowe ebbeth, and now it floweth
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

In this land are running ryuers, not violently and outragiously flowing to do any harm, but gently moisting the vineyards and cornefields, and where they ebbe and flow.
Goldyng Iustine, fol. 181

And yet for all this ebbing chance, remains
The spring that feeds that hope (which leaves men last)
Whom no affliction so entire restrains,
But that it may remount as in times past.
Daniel. Civil War, b. vii.

Losses at sea, and those, sir, great and many,
By storms and tempests, not domestical riots,
In soothing my wife's humour or mine own,
Have brought me to this low ebb
Massinger. The City Madam, Act I sc 2.

The roots of the apple-tree, olive, and cypresses, lie very ebbe, and creepe hard under the sourd of the ground.
Holland. Pinie, b. xvi c 31.

And verely the water there is otherwise verie low and ebb, and not above knee high.—Id Ib b xxxi c. 7

I will account no sinne little; since there is not the least but workes out the death of the soul. It is all one, whether I be drowned in the ebber shore or in the midst of the deepe sea.—Bp. Hall Meditations & Vows, Cent. 2.

——— Ebbing men, indeed,
(Most often) do so neere the bottom run
By their owne feare, or sloth.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

And ye, that on the sands with printlesse foote
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and doe flie him
When he comes back Id Ib Act v sc 1.

This, let me further add, that nature knows
No stedfast station, but or ebbs or flows
Ever in motion, she destroys her old,
And casts new figures in another mould
Denham. Ovid Met b xv.

But it was another sort of love that warmed the breast of our Saviour: he visits his kindred, nay, he makes them so in the lowest ebb of all their outward enjoyments.
South, vol. ii. Ser 8

But that which I did most admire, was to see the water keep ebbing for two days together, without any flood, till the creek, where we lived, was almost dry.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. iii.

As easily may they make the wind to blow always in one quarter, or keep the sea from its constant ebbings and flowings, as they can [illegible] to themselves the uncertain favour of great men, or the more uncertain breath of the people.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 9

EBU

Nor jealous fears, nor cold disdain,
Disturb their peace, nor break their chain:
But, when the hours of life ebb fast,
For each in sighs they breathe their last.
Blacklock. Horace Imitated.

Such, and often influenced by such causes, has commonly been the fate of monarchies of long duration. They have their ebbs and their flows. This has been eminently the fate of the monarchy of France.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. I.

EBON, n.
E'BON, adj.
E'BONY. } Gr. Εβενος; Lat. Ebenus; Fr. Ebène; It. and Sp. Ebano; Heb. Eben, which Martinius thinks is so called from its hardness. Holland writes it ebene.

Of all those trees that be appropriate to India, Virgil hath highly commended the ebene above the rest
Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 4.

Now lighter humour leave me, and be gone,
Your passion poor yields matter much too slight:
To write those plagues that then were coming on,
Doth ask a pen of ebon and the night.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. iv.

——— In an ebon chaire,
The soule's black homicide, meagre Despaire,
Had his abode.—Browne. Brittania's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

Stay thy cloudy ebon chair,
Wherein thou rid'st with Hecat, and befriend
Thy vow'd priests. Milton. Comus

King. By heauen, thy loue is black as ebonie.
Biron Is ebonie like her? O word diuine!
A wife of such wood were felicitie
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 3.

I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured inke which heere thou viewest.—Id. Ib. Act I. sc. 1.

——— With spacious arms thou dost embrace
Hot Meroe, fruitful to a sooty race,
And proud of ebon woods: yet no retreat
Their useless shades afford to shun th' excessive heat.
Hughes. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

He confirms, by new attestations, what he formerly wrote of the trees taken up in the moors near Bridgewater: of which many were found within a foot or two of the surface of the ground, no branches to be found, only the main bodies, and as black as ebony.—Boyle. Works, vol iv. p. 258

Amid whose howling aisles and halls,
Where no ray sunbeam paints the walls,
On ebon throne thou lov'st to shroud
Thy brows in many a murky cloud.—T. Warton, Ode II.

——— Affliction, hail!
Thou school of virtue! open wide thy gates,
Thy gates of ebony.—Thompson. Sickness, b. I.

EBRIETY.
EBRIO'SITY. } It. Ebrietà; Lat. Ebrius, qui multa haurit Bria, one who drinks many cups. Bria, a kind of cup, from the Gr. Βρυ-ειν, scatere, abundare, (Vossius.)
Drunkenness.

And surely that religion which excuseth the fact of Noah, in the aged surprizal of six hundred years, and unexpected temptation from the unknown effects of wine, will neither acquit obviously to [illegible] in their known and intended perversions. Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

It hath much deceived the hopes of good fellows, what is commonly expected of bitter almonds, and though in Plutarch confirmed from the practice of Claudius, his physitian, that ant dote against ebriety hath commonly failed.
Id Ib. b. ii. c. 6.

——— 'Tis quenchless thirst
Of ruinous ebriety, that prompts
His every action, and imbrutes the man.
Cowper. The Task, b. iv.

Although you have neither wife, nor child, nor parent, to lament your absence from home, or expect your return to it with terror; other families in which husbands and fathers have been invited to share in your ebriety, or encouraged to imitate it, may justly lay their misery or ruin at your door.
Paley. Philosophy, b. iv. c. 3.

EBU'LLIATE, v.
EBU'LLIENT.
EBU'LLIENCY.
EBULLITION. } Lat. Bulla, a bubble; which Vossius thinks may be from the Gr. Φλυ-ειν, fervere, bullire, to bubble up, to swell.

To rise or raise, boil or bubble up; to swell, to effervesce.

Whence this 29. play-oppugning argument will ebullate.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. I. Act vi. sc. 3.

My meaning is only this: to caution against that vulgar and [illegible] of [illegible] the natural and enthusiastick [illegible] and the ebulliency of their fancy.—Cudworth. Sermons, p. 93.

Gas

ECC

We cannot find it to hold neither in iron or copper, which is dissolved with less ebullition.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b iv. c 7.

But your lordship need not be afraid of being overwhelm'd with the ebullition of my thoughts, nor much trouble yourself to find a way to give check to it mere ebullition of thoughts never overwhelms or sinks any one but the author himself, but if it carries truth with it, that I confess has force, and it may be troublesome to those that stand in its way.—Locke. Second Reply to the Bp. of Worcester.

O how laborious is their gaiety!
They scarce can swallow their ebullient spleen.
Scarce muster patience to support the farce.
And pump sad laughter till the curtain falls.
Young. The Complaint, Night 8.

There are many young members in the house (such of late has been the rapid succession of publick men,) who never saw that prodigy, Charles Townshend; nor of course know what a ferment he was able to excite in every thing by the violent ebullition of his mixed virtues and failings.
Burke. On American Taxation.

ECCE'NTRICK, adj.
ECCE'NTRICK, n.
ECCENTRI'CITY.
ECCE'NTRICALLY. } Fr. Excentrique; It. Excentrico; Sp. Excentrico; Lat. Ex, and centrum; Gr. Κεντρον, a point, (sc.) in the middle of a sphere, globe or circle.

Out of the centre; moving out of, deviating or wandering from the centre; and thus, irregular, not conforming to, or guided by, rule; inconsistent with rule or order; affecting singularity; singular, odd.

The other cause of their sublimities is, for that in other signes they have the Absides elevated highest from the centre of their owne eccentric circles.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 16.

But so it is in the regions of stars, where a vast body of fire is so divided by excentric motions, that it looks as if nature had parted them into orbs and round shells of plain and purest materials, but where the cause is simple, and the matter without variety, the motions must be uniform; and in heaven we should either espy no motion, or no variety.—Bp. Taylor, pt. iv. ser. 6.

Aristotle made very odd schemes, not at all corresponding with the phenomena of the heavens, as appears from his hypothesis of the solid orbs, epicycles, excentricks, intelligences, and such other ill-contrived phancies.
Glanvill, Ess 3.

But indeed, upon mistaking the pole's altitude, and other errour in observation, Copernicus was deceived, and in this present age the sun's eccentricity (in Ptolemy, being the eccentric's semidiameter, divided into 60) hath been found between 27 and 28 P., which is far greater than that in Copernicus, erroneously making it but near 31
Selden. On Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

For some say the eccentricity of the sunne is come nearer to the earth than in Ptolemies time; the vertue therefore of all the vegetals is decayed, men grow less, &c.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 240.

In gayer hours, when high my fancy ran,
The Muse, exulting, thus her lay began:
"Blest be the Bastard's birth! through wondrous ways
He shines eccentrick, like a comet's blaze."
Savage. The Bastard.

For had I power, like that which bends the spheres
To music never heard by mortal ears,
Where in his system sits the central sun,
And drags reluctant planets into tune,
So would I bridle thy eccentrick soul,
In reason's sober orbit bid it roll.
Whitehead. On Churchill.

It was not enough to fix the law of the centripetal force, though by the wisest choice; for, even under that law, it was still competent to the planets to have moved in paths possessing so great a degree of eccentricity, as, in the course of every revolution, to be brought very near to the sun, and carried away to immense distances from him
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

Genius, a bustling lad of parts,
Who all things did by fits and starts,
Nothing above him or below him,
Who'd make a riot, or a poem,
From eccentricity of thought,
Not always do the thing he ought,
Lord Genius, Envy, and Time.

Swift, Rabelais, and that favourite child,
Who, less eccentrically wild,
Inverts the misanthropic plan,
And hating vices, hates not man.
Id. A Familiar Epistle.

ECCLE'SIAST.
ECCLESIA'STICK, adj.
ECCLESIA'STICK, n.
ECCLESIA'STICAL
ECCLESIA'STICALLY } Gr. Εκκλησιαστης, εκκλησια, coetus evocatus, from Εκ-καλεω, evocare. The Athenian Εκκλησια, were public assemblies of the people, called together, according to law, to consult about the affairs of the commonwealth. Applied to the christian church: Cœtus præconio Evangelii ad vitam eternam vocatus—

An assembly called or summoned by the proclamation of the gospel to eternal life, (Vossius.)

But trewely to tellen atte last,
He was in chirche a noble ecclesiast.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 1710.

Redeth ecclesiast of flaterie
Beth ware, ye lordes, of hire trechcrie.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,328.

Euen the myndes of the learned shal be changed, and all, both the seculare and ecclesiastik sorte shal be distracted from the trwthe vnto reuengynge one another with warre.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

What dothe he binde it to one day? No surely, but he commãdeth to vse continually this order of publike and ecclesiastical discipline vnto the laste ende of our lyfe, euen to the day of deathe, wherin beginneth our redemption.
Calvine. Foure Godly Sermons, Ser. 3.

But our historics, and with them the Latin ecclesiastic relation (in passages of her invention of the cross and such like,) allowed also by Cardinal Baronius, make her [Helen] thus a British woman.
Selden. On Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

For such is the reverence they bear to the church here, and so holy a conceit they have of all ecclesiastics, that the greatest Don in Spaine will tremble to offer the meanest of them any outrage or affront.—Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 20.

Many of the fathers and ecclesiastical historians, especially the Jewish rabbins, (taking their highest learning of Cabala but from antique and successive report,) have inserted upon tradition many relations current enough, where holy writ crosses them not.
Selden. On Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

If a son marries without his father's consent, the law saies it is void, but yet it is not so void, but that the father's approbation makes it valid without marrying again: which could not be, if it were naturally invalid; but therefore it is both naturally and ecclesiastically good.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

Thus then we see that our ecclesial and political choices may consent and sort as well together without any rupture in the state, as Christians and freeholders.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii

The clergy, being permitted and encouraged by the king to sit in convocation after the dissolution of the parliament, took upon them not only to frame canons and oaths, but also to impose four shillings in the pound upon ecclesiastical benefices throughout the kingdom.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 9.

Not any, whilst they heard him preach,
Did ever feel (his powers were such)
Ecclesiastic lethargy,
From soporific sanctity. Cooper. Ver-Vert, c. 2.

Boileau being struck with the absurd disputes of certain contending ecclesiastics, resolved to make them the subject of his ridicule; and afterwards pitched upon the imitation of the heroic as a vehicle for his satire.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, Pref.

A secret conflict between the civil and ecclesiastical jurisdictions embarrasses the operations of the Roman government; and a pious emperor was alarmed by the guilt and danger of touching with a profane hand the ark of the covenant.—Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 20.

E'CHO, n. E'CHO, v. E'CHOLESS. } Fr. Echo; It. Echo, eco; Sp. Eco; Lat. Echo; Gr. Ηχω, from Ηχ-ειν, sonare, resonare, to sound, to resound. See the quotation from Holland's Pliny.

Folweth ecco, that holdeth no silence,
But ever answereth at the countretaille.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9068.

In the same citie, neare unto the gate which is called Thracia, there stand seven turrets, which do multiplie a voice, and send back many againe for one: this miraculous rebounding of the voice, the Greekes have a prettie name for, and call it echo.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 15.

Eccho was then a body, not a voyce:
Yet then, as now, of words she wanted choyce;
But only could reiterate the close
Of every speech. This Juno did impose.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

Then gan triumphant trumpets sound on hie,
That sent to heauen the echoed report
Of their new ioy, and happy victory.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

This done, hee tooke the bride about the necke and kist her lips with such a clamorous smacke, that at the parting all the church did echo.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 2.

Echo was then a maid, of speech bereft,
Of wonted speech: for though her voice was left,
Juno a curse did on her tongue impose,
To sport with every sentence in the close.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

A dreadful howling echo'd round the place
The mountain Nymphs, thought I, my nuptials grace.
I thought so then, but now too late I know
The Furies yell'd my funerals from below.
Dryden. Ovid. Dido to Æneas.

——— "Evoe!" they mad'ning cry,
And shake their torches, "Evoe! Io!" rends
The air, and beats the echoing vault of heav'n
Thompson. Coresus & Callirhoe.

——— The agony ———
Which speaks but in its loneliness,
And then is jealous lest the sky
Should have a listener, nor will sigh
Until its voice is echoless.—Byron. Prometheus, s. 1.

ECLI'PSE, n. ECLI'PSE, v. ECLI'PSING, n. ECLI'PTICK. } Fr. and Sp. Eclipse; It. Eclissi; Gr. Εκλειψις, from Εκ-λειπ-ειν, deficere. See the quotations from Locke and Ferguson.

That is the cause of this eclipse, that over closeth now the sonne. Piers Ploukman, p. 346.

But sothly the latitudes of planets ben comunly yreckened fro the ecliptike, bycause that none of hem declineth but fewe degrees out fro the brede of the Zodiake.
Chaucer. The Astrolabe.

And that is whan they haue no longitude fro the ecliptike line. Id. Ib.

The sonne and moone eclypsen both,
And bene with man's sinne wroth.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But in ye first watche of ye night, the moone suff'red eclips, which losing her brightnes, afterwardes became as redd as bloud, and therewith waxed dimme and darke.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 78.

They vnderstandinge verie well the reuolutions of the time, and their appointed courses, knewe that the moone dyd euer eclipse, when that either she went vndernеathe the earth, or else when her light was blemished by opposition of the sunne, which reasoune concerned amonges themselues, they accustomed not to teache the people.—Id. Ib. fol. 79.

For he that hath each star in heaven fixed,
And gives the moon her hornes, and her eclipsing,
Alike hath made thee noble in his working.
Wyatt. Ode. He ruleth not, &c.

For Æmylius was not ignorant of the diversities of the eclipses, and he had heard say the cause is, by reason of the moon making her ordinary course about the world, (after certain revolutions of time,) doth come to enter into the round shadow of the earth, within the which she remaineth hidden, untill such time, as having passed the dark region of the shadow, she cometh afterwards to recover her light which she taketh of the sun.—North. Plutarch, p. 313.

Within these two hundred yeares found out it was, by the wittie calculation of Hipparchus, that the moone sometime was eclipsed twice in five moneths space, and the sunne likewise in seven.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 9.

For till I see them here, by doubtfull feare,
My joy of libertie is half eclips'd.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 6.

But then againe (for why should I shame to confesse it?) the world thrusts itselfe betwixt me and heaven; and, by his darke and indigested parts, eclipseth that light which shined to my soule.—Bp. Hall, Ep. 3. Dec. 2.

[Satan] Took leave, and toward the coast of earth beneath,
Down from the ecliptic sped with hop'd success,
Throws his steep flight in many an aerie wheele.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Pythagoras was the first that noted the obliquity of the ecliptick.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

Let other Muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd:
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 90.

And we can point each period of the time,
When they [errours] began, and who begot the crime;
Can calculate how long th' eclipse endur'd,
Who interpos'd, what digits were obscur'd.
Id. The Hind & Panther, pt. ii.

The vegetable world is also thine,
Parent of Seasons! who the pomp precede
That waits thy throne, as through thy vast domain,
Annual, along the bright ecliptic road,
In world-rejoicing state, it moves sublime.
Thomson. Summer.

The line, which the centre of the earth describes in its annual revolution about the sun, is called the ecliptick.
Locke. Elem. of Nat. Phil. c. 4.

When the sun's light is so intercepted by the moon, that to any place of the earth the sun appears partly or wholly covered, he is said to undergo an eclipse, though properly speaking it is only an eclipse of that part of the earth where the moon's shadow or penumbra falls.
Ferguson. Astronomy, § 313.

E'CLOGUE. Gr. Απο του εκλεγ-ειν, quia ex multis, quæ scripsisset, hanc sola elegerit, (Vossius.) Because from many things which he had written, he had elected or selected these alone.

See the quotation from the Guardian.

But old Geron, who had borne him a grudge, ever since in one of their eclogues he had taken him up over-bitterly took hold of this occasion to make his revenge.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

I must not, however, dissemble that these bold strokes appear chiefly in those eclogues of Virgil, which ought to be numbered amongst his pastorals, which are indeed generally the worst of the pastoral kind, but by the best judges are only called his second poems, as the word eclogue originally means.—Guardian, No. 28

This beautiful and luxuriant marriage pastoral of Solomon is the only perfect form of the oriental eclogue that has survived the ruins of time, a happiness for which it is probably more indebted to its sacred character than to its intrinsic merit
Collins. Oriental Eclogues. Observ. on, by Langhorne.

ECO'NOMY. ECO'NOMIZE, v. ECONO'MICK. ECONO'MICKS. ECO'NOMIST. } Fr. Œconomie, économie; It. Economia; Sp. Economia; Gr. Οικο-νεμ-ειν, to regulate or manage the house or household affairs; (οικος, a house, and νεμ-ειν, to rule.) Written œconomy by the older writers, and sometimes by modern. The verb is now in common use.

To regulate or manage household or domestic affairs; to manage or arrange, or dispose or conduct affairs (generally) &c. with prudence, parsimony, thriftiness, frugality.

Their œconomy was sincere, and proportionable to the dispositions and requisites of nature.
Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. Dis. 1.

A kind of laborious secretary
To a great man! (and likely to come on,)
Full of attendance! and of suche a stride
In business politique, or œconomick,
As, well, his lord may stoope t' advise with him.
B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act i. sc. 7.

And certain likewise, that the best authors have chosen rather to handle it [education] in their politicks than in their œconomicks.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 78.

Some are plainly œconomical, as that the seat be well watered, and well fewelled: that it be not of too steep and incommodious access, to the trouble both of friends and family; that it lie not too far from some navigable river or arme of the sea, for more ease of provision, and such other domestic notes.—Id. p. 7.

I know Mr. Penry to be a gentleman of a great deal of solid worth and integrity, and one that will prove a great husband, and a good œconomist.—Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 17.

But Manilius has too perfect a taste for the pleasure of doing good, ever to let it be out of his power: and for that reason he will have a just œconomy, and a splendid frugality at home, the fountain from whence those streams should flow which he disperses abroad.—Spectator, No. 407.

I would not confine occasional meditations to divinity itself, though that be a very comprehensive subject; but am ready to allow men's thoughts to expatiate much farther, and to make of the objects they contemplate not only a theological and a moral, but also a political, and œconomical, or even physical use.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 342.

The king's household—at the remotest avenues to which all reformation has been hitherto stopped, that household, which has been the stronghold of prodigality, the virgin fortress which was never before attacked, has been not only not defended, but it has, even in the forms, been surrendered by the king to the œconomy of his minister.
Burke. On Œconomical Reform.

The charitable few are chiefly they
Whom Fortune places in the middle way;
Just rich enough, with economic care,
To save a pittance, and a pittance spare:
Just poor enough to feel the poor man's moan,
Or share those suff'rings which may prove their own.
Harte. Eulogius.

Too economical in taste,
Their sorrow or their joy to waste:
Mix both together, sweet and sour,
And bind the thorn up with the flow'r.—Lloyd. The Poet.

Perturbed spirits rest, nor thus appear
To waste your councils in a spendthrift's ear.
On your grave lessons I cannot subsist,
Nor e'en in verse become economist.
Churchill. The Journey.

If ever we ought to be economists even to parsimony, it is in the voluntary production of evil. Every revolution contains in it something of evil.

Burke. Appeal from the Old to the New Whigs.

Not only in science, but in politicks and economics, in the less splendid arts which administer to convenience and enjoyment, much information may be derived, by careful search, from times which have been in general neglected, as affording nothing to repay the labour of attention

Knox. Essays, No. 73.

E'CSTASY, n. / E'CSTASY, v. / ECSTA'TICK. } Fr. Extase; It. Estasi; Sp. Extasi; Gr. Εκστασις, from Εξιστασθαι, to remove from its place; Εξ, from, and Ἱστασθαι, to place. Also, and more commonly, written Extasy, (qv.)

And therefore in this ecstatick fit of love and jealousy in the beginning of ch. ii. you may see him [St. Paul] resolve to do that, that was most contrary to his disposition, boast and vaunt, and play the fool.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p 541.

He that, with the late fryar in France, pretends to ecstatical revelations, with the enthusiasts of the last age, and phanaticks now with us, to ecstatical motions; that with Mahomet pretends a dialogue with God, when he is in an epileptic fit, sets off the most ghastly diseases, I shall add, most horrid sins.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 589.

Cral. What! are you dreaming, son! with eyes cast upwards
Like a mad prophet in an ecstasie.

Dryden. Cleomenes, Act iv.

These are the haunts of meditation, these
The scenes where ancient bards th' inspiring breath,
Ecstatic, felt, and from this world retir'd,
Convers'd with angels and immortal forms,
On gracious errands bent. Thomson. Summer.

I say, such prayers, as they proceed from a purer sense of his duty, so, without doubt, they will be more effectual with God, for the obtaining what he really stands in need of, then if they were accompanied even with ecstatical transports of feryour and joy.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire:
Hands that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
Or wak'd to ecstacy the living lyre.

Gray. Elegy in a Country Churchyard.

Some, manner'd verse delights; while some can raise
To fairy fiction their ecstatic gaze,
Admire pure poetry, and revel there,
On sightless forms, and pictures of the air.

Whitehead. A Charge to the Poets.

E'CTYPE. / E'CTYPAL. } Lat. Ectypum; Gr. Εκτυπος; Εκ, and τυπος, nota τω τυπτειν facta; i. e.—

A mark or impression made by striking or beating. (Martinius.)

First, simple ideas, which are ectypa, or copies; but yet certainly adequate.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 31.

Secondly, the complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies too, but not perfect ones, not adequate.—Id. Ib

Exemplars of all the ectypal copies.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 417.

ECUME'NICAL. See Œcumenical.

EDA'CITY. Lat. Edacitas, from Ed-ere, to eat.

Voraciousness, gluttony.

It is true that the wolf is a beast of great edacitie and digestion.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 972.

E'DDER. Now written Adder, (qv.)

Ye eddris and eddris briddris, hou schulen ye fle fro the doom of helle?—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 23.

Therfore he seyde to the puple which wenten out to be baptised of him, Kindelyngis of eddris, who schewide to you to fle fro the wrathe to comynge?—Id. Luk. c. 3.

E'DDY, v. / E'DDY, n. / E'DDY, adj. } Skinner thinks from A. S. Ed, iterum, retro; and Ea, aqua, (q.d.) the alternate flux and reflux of the sea.

Suche as in this case escaped theire enemies, were eyther drowned wyth violence of the water, or the eddies (vorticibus) of the streame.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 245.

For from the Cape to Virginia all along the shore are none but eddie currents, setting to the south and south-west.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 291.

Mark how yon eddy steals away
From the rude stream into the bay;
Then lock'd up safe, she doth divorce
Her waters from the channel's course,
And scorns the torrent that did bring
Her headlong from her native spring.

Carew. To my Mistress, absenting by a Recreation.

Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves;
High-beat, the circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm,
And send it in a torrent down the vale.

Thomson. Autumn.

Bear wide thy course, nor plough those angry waves
Where rolls yon smoke, yon tumbling ocean raves;
Steer by the higher rock; lest whirl'd around
We sink, beneath the circling eddy drown'd.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

The one has only an eddy wind, which seems to be the effect of two contrary winds.—Dampier. Voy. vol. ii. pt. iii.

Forth from those nitrous caverns issuing rise
Pure liquid fountains of tempestuous fire,
And veil in ruddy mists the noon-day skies,
While wrapt in smoke the eddying flames aspire.

West. First Pythian Ode.

E'DENIZED. Admitted into Eden, or to a state of paradisiacal happiness.

For pure saints edenis'd unfit.

Davies. Wits Pilgrimage, sig. N 4.

EDGE, v. / EDGE, n. / E'DGING, n. / E'DGELESS. } A. S. Egg-ian, incitare, acuere, to make keen or sharp. Whence Ger. Eck; Dut. Egge; Sw. Egg; the sharpened (sc.) extremity; and then applied, generally, to the extremity, rim, or border.

To sharpen, to give sharpness, keenness or acuteness; to give an edge or border; to advance towards, move upon the edge, extremity, or border. Also (met.)

To incite or urge on, to stimulate. See To Egg.

In the kyng tresorye that suerd y wust ye,
As ver noble relyke, gut to thys daye ywys.
I egged yt ye in on alf, and in the other nogt.

R. Gloucester, p. 274.

Batailles shulle never eft be, ne man bere eg tool
And yf eny man smythen hit, be smyte thi wt to dethe.

Piers Ploukman, p. 62.

Thei dryueden awei the egge of sword.

Wiclif. Hebrewis, c. 11.

[Which] escaped the edge of the sweardo.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For in like manner as if ye break of the edge of a wepon, the rest of it is able to no great harme: euen so this duke [Epaminondas] being dead, who was as it were the edge of the commonwealth of Thebes, the strengthe therof was appalled, and in a manner dulled, in so much that they semed not so much to haue lost him, as altogether to haue died with him.—Golagny Justine, fol. 37.

Those weapons that they haue, are onely bowes made of witch hazel, and arrowes of reedes, flat edged truncheons also of wood, about a yard long

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol iii p. 276.

We found no kind of edge-tool, saving that there were certaine sharp stones, which we found vpon certaine rockes that were very keene, wherewith we supposed that they did cut and flea those beasts.—Id. Ib vol. iii. p. 418.

But his impiety is a potent charm
To edge my sword, and add strength to my arm.

Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act I. sc. 1.

Cassius, finding Brutus's ambition stirred up the more by these seditious bills, did prick him forward, and edge him on the more, for a private quarrell he had conceived against Cæsar: the circumstance whereof we have set down at large in Brutus's life.—North. Plutarch, p. 813.

This done, he made shift, partly, as it is said, on horseback, and partly on foot, to get to Portsmouth, for he was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 232.

Which [Pescotter] mounting out of the ground in the edge of Cardigonshire, runneth along as a limet and march vnto the same, till it ioine with the Tothée.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 14.

Vp princes, and with spirit of honor edged,
More sharper then your swords, hie to the field.

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 5.

To morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, dispaire and dye.

Id. Rich. III. Act v. sc. 3.

This distinguishes it from what they call the profile, signified by the edging streaks, by some called outlines, and contours only, without any of this solid finishing.

Evelyn. On Architecture.

The mistress drives my counsels to the leeward;
Now I must edge upon a point of wind;
And make slow way, recovering more and more,
Till I can bring my vessell safe ashore!

Dryden. Plays, Act iii. sc. 1.

Thou teachest Persius to inform our isle
In smoother numbers, and a clearer style.
And Juvenal, instructed in thy page,
Edges his satire, and improves his rage.

Addison. To Mr. Dryden.

For as a sword hath both a glittering radiance and brightness to strike and terrify the eye, and also an edge to pierce the flesh; so the word, being drawn forth and brandished by a skilful hand, darts a convincing light into the understanding, and with an irresistible edge enters the heart and the affections.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 6.

This is evident from those black circular lines we see on boxes, dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, which are the effects of ignition, caused by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Till clogg'd with blood, his sword obeys but ill
The dictates of its vengeful master's will;
Edgeless it falls, and though it pierce no more,
Still breaks the batter'd bones, and bruises sore.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b vi.

He hangs his mantle loose, and sets to show
The golden edging on the seam below

Addison. Ovid. Metam b ii.

The edges of them [plants in the sea] do in that posture with most ease cut the water flowing to and fro, and should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would soon be turned edge wise by the force of it, because in that site it doth least resist the motion of the water.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

We sounded, and found 20 fathoms and a bottom of sand; but, on edging off from the shore, we soon got out of sounding.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

The veriest gluttons do not always cram;
Some intervals of abstinence are sought
To edge the appetite: thou seekest none.—Blair. Grave.

—— O! deemest thou indeed
No pleasing influence here by nature given
To mutual terrour and compassion's tears?
No tender charm mysterious, which attracts
O'er all that edge of pain the social powers
To this their proper action and their end.

Akenside. Pleasures of the Imagination, b. ii.

E'DIBLE. Lat. Ed-ere, to eat. See Edacity. That may be eaten.

Some stomacks will digest the hardest meates, and turn over substances not in their nature edible, while others surfet of the lightest food, and complaine even of dainties

Bp. Hall. Cont. Saul in David's Cave.

Of fishes some are edible; some, except it be in famine, not. For those that are not edible, the cause is, for that they have (commonly) too much bitterness of taste, and therfore those creatures, which are fierce and cholerick, are not edible; as lions, wolves, squirrels, dogs, foxes, horses, &c.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 859.

E'DICT. Fr. Edit; It. Editto; Sp. Edito, edicto; Lat. Edictum, from Edicere, (e, and dicere,) to tell forth, to proclaim.

A publication or proclamation, (sc.) of any thing ordered; any thing declared to be law.

Which was encountered by the queen's edict,
By publishing the justness of her cause,
That she proceeded in a course so strict,
T' uphold their ancient liberties and laws.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b iv.

Yet more there be who doubt his ways not just,
As to his own edicts, found contradicting,
Then give the reins to wand'ring thought,
Regardless of his glories' diminution.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

The discontented now are onely they,
Whose crimes before did your just cause betray:
Of those your edicts some reclaim from sin,
But most your life and blest example win.

Dryden. Astræa Redux.

The silence or ambiguity of the laws was supplied by the occasional edicts of those magistrates who were invested with the honours of the state.—Gibbon. Rom. Emp. c. 44.

E'DIFY. / E'DIFYING, n. / EDIFICA'TION. / EDI'FICATORY. / E'DIFIER. / E'DIFICE. / EDI'FICANT. / EDIFF'CIAL. / E'DIFYINGLY. } Fr. Edifier; It. Edificare; Sp. Edificar; Lat. Ædificare, (q.d.) ædes facere, to make a house, to construct a house.

To rear or raise a building, to build, to strengthen, to establish, to fortify; and (met.) to fortify or establish, to confirm, (sc.) in knowledge, wisdom, virtue, religion, in the faith; and thus, to instruct, to teach, to improve, to enlighten.

The metaphor was adopted by the Latin translators of the New Testament from the Gr. v. Οικοδομ-ειν, ædificare, and n. Οικε-δομη, from Οικος, a house, and δομ-ειν, to build; and from the Latin Version it was introduced into English by Piers Plouhman and Wiclif. It was also introduced by the respective translators into French, Italian, and Spanish, from the same source.

Ourike, as sayd is, edified this building,
Which carved was with carnets wond'rous to see.
R. Gloucester, Appendix, p. 578.

And whenne that my wil is, ich wolde hit overthrowe
And or thre dayes after edefye hit newe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 313.

—— And seyde
Thys J. H. C. of our Juwen temple japede and despisede
To for don hit on a day, and in thre dayes after Edefien hit efte newe. Id. p. 341.

As these enmytes that edefyen, thus by the hye weyes
Wylen were workmen.—Id. p. 75.

For he that profecieth spekith to men to edification and monestyng and comfortyng; he that spekith in tunge edifieth himself, but he that profecieth edifieth the chirche of God, and I wole, that alle ghe speken in tungis, but more that ghe profecie.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 14.

But he that prophecieth, speaketh vnto men, to edifyngne, to exhortacion, and to comforte. He that speaketh with tongues, profiteth hymselfe: He that prophesieth, edifieth the congregation. I would that ye all spake wyth tongues; but rather that ye prophesyed.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore sue we the thingis that been of pees, and keep we togidre the thingis that ben of edification.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 14.

Let us folowe those thinges whyche make for peace, and thynges wherwith one maye edifie another.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Wherefore in youth I rede you edifie
The house of vertue in such a maniere,
That in your age may you kepe and gie
Fro the tempest of worldes wawes here.
Chaucer. To the Lords and Gentilmen.

Warnestoring (quod she) of heighe toures and grete edifices, is with grete costnges and with grete travaille; and whan that thei ben accompliced, yet ben they not worth a stre, but if they ben defended by trewe frendes, that ben olde and wise.—Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

God sent them hir Aungel Cryste to helpe them whylis thei were content the Jewes to edifye their temple.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

He neithere wisheth nor desyreth any thinge more earnestly, then to be in that company and assembly of the people of God, wherein he may declare his faithe, and may conforme and edefye himselfe, by the holy sacraments and the holsome doctryne there preached.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

So your maiestie more graciously hath by your most godly injunctions willed to bee read, used and studied by euery curate and priest, to the undoubted edifying as wel of them as of all other that with a desire to know God shall eyther reade or heare the same.
Udal. Preface unto the King's Maiestie.

The 18 [November, 1553] by meanes of a friend we were licenced to enter the castle or fortresse of Corfu, which is not onely of situation the strongest I haue seene, but also of edification.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii.

Separate the stones, and the wall openeth, and lest the ciment faile, and the edifice falleth.—Golden Boke c. 17.

At last, as nigh out of the wood she came,
A stately castle far away she spyde,
To which her steps directly she did frame,
That castle was most goodly edified,
And plac't for pleasure nigh that forest side.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii c. 1.

A heape of earth he boorded vp on hie,
Enclosing it with banks on euerie side,
And thereupon did raise full busily
A little mount, of greene turfs edifide.—Id. Virgil's Gnat.

Now men are edified, when eyther their understanding is taught somewhat whereof in such actions it behoueth all men to consider; or when their hearts are moued with any affliction suteable thereunto, when their minds are in any sort stirred vp vnto that reuerence, deuotion, attention, and due regard which in those cases seemeth requisite.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v.

That unblemisht reputation here, when it is to be had, is a pretious blessing, very instrumental to the edifying of others, and is a kind of coronet here in this life, preparatory to that crown hereafter.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 547.

What hither hath been spoke upon the law of God, touching matrimony or divorce, he who will deny to have been agru'd [argu'd] according to reason and all equity of Scripture, I cannot edify how, or by what rule of proportion, that man's virtue calculates, what his elements are, nor what his analytics.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

By his blessed influences guide and governe this sacred meeting, and happily direct all our councels and endeavours to the glory of his owne great name, the salvation of our soules, and the assured edification of his church, through Jesus Christ.—Bp. Hall. Noah's Dove.

Where these gifts of interpretation, and eminent endowments of learning are found, there can be no reason of restraining them from an exercise so beneficially edificatory to the church of God: without which the truth of Christian religion had wanted much both of her vigour and lustre in all generations.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Case 10.

—— Should I goe to church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side
Would scatter all her spices on the streame,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 1.

—— Many an heyre
Of these faire edifices fore my warres
Haue I heard groane, and drop.
Id. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 4.

And as his pen was often militant
Nor less triumphant; so edificant
It also was, like those blessed builders, who Stood on their guard, and stoutly builded too.
Dugard. Verses on Gataker, (1655,) p. 75.

He will discourse unto us edifyingly, and feelingly, of the substantial and comfortable doctrines of religion.
Asiingbeck. Sermons, p. 324.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always listening to himself appears.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

Devout people may fancy what they please about all our speeches tending to edification; but in truth it is all speculation.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 13.

They scorn their edifiers to own,
Who taught them all their sprinkling lessons,
Their tones and sanctify'd expressions.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

If a country gentleman appear a little curious in observing the edifices, signs, clocks, coaches and dials, it is not to be imagined how the polite rabble of this town, who are acquainted with these objects, ridicule his rusticity.
Spectator, No. 354.

There are mansions, which, without any striking edificial attraction, have a certain air of appropriate hospitality and provincial dignity.
History of the Rivers of Great Britain, b. i. p. 232.

No doubt 'tis edifying stuff,
(For gentle ears are cannon-proof,)
And wise the doctrines which you teach.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

But the minister of the Gospel does not go in quest of such occasions: (in which he may exert his abilities:) he only adapts himself to them, when they come in his way; and then pursues them no farther than the end he has in view, the edification of others, not his own credit, demands from him.—Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

Behold (says he) [Rufinus] in the night, the last preceding the day for laying the foundation, a prodigious earthquake arises, by which, not only the stones of the foundations are cast abroad and dispersed, but almost all the edifices that were about the place are thrown down and levelled.
Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild, &c. b. ii. c. 3.

E'DIT, v. } Fr. Edition; It. Editione; Sp. Edicion; Lat. Editio, from Edere, (e, and dare,) to give out, to publish.
EDI'TION.
EDI'TIONER.
E'DITOR.
EDITO'RIAL.
E'DITORSHIP.
Edit, Editorial and Editorship are common words in speech, and periodical books of criticism.

And therefore I thought it conuenient to gather these notes together out of suche learned and godly writers as haue had experience of them, the which I also haue more at large set oute in the seconde edition of my booke.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 49.

As put case some well-minded printer (as one of the Stephens,) is willing to be at an excessive charge in the fair publication of a learned and useful work, for the benefit of the present and following ages; it is most just that he should from the hands of princes or states receive a privilege for the sole impression; that he may recover with advantage the deep expence he hath been at; otherwise some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate, and undo the first editor; whose industry, care and cost shall be thus recompenced with the ruine of himself and his posterity.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 1. Case 8.

As to the larger additions and alterations, I have obliged him, and he has promised me to print them by themselves, so that the former edition may not be wholly lost to those who have it, but by the inserting in their proper places the passages that will be reprinted alone, to that purpose, the former book may be made as little defective as possible.
Locke. Hum. Underst. To the Reader.

Mr. Norden maketh his complaint in that necessary Guide, added to a little but not much augmented, by the late Editioner.—Gregory. Posthuma, p. 321.

I must confess, I was much surprised to see a great body of editors, criticks, commentators and grammarians meet with so very ill a reception.—Tatler, No. 100.

Still, all editions verbally contain
The simple necessary truths and plain
Of Gospel doctrine; and the Spirit's aid,
Which is the chief, is not at all decay'd.
Byrom. On the Disposition of Mind, &c.

After you shall have repeatedly read, marking the pauses, examining the rhythmus, and pronouncing aloud, at least a hundred times over, the few orations of Demosthenes, which Monteney has edited; I would put into your hand, as a convenient book, the edition of Lucchesini, published in London by Allen.—Knox. Letters to a Young Nobleman.

Though his [Fanshawe's] Lusiad, by the dedication of it to William, Earl of Stratford, dated May, 1655, seems as published by himself, we are told by the editor of his letters, that, "during the unsettled time of our anarchy, some of his MSS. falling by misfortune into unskilful hands, were printed and published without his consent or knowledge, and before he could give them his last finishing strokes."
Mickle. Dissertation on the Lusiad, &c. Note.

EDI'TUATE. Low Lat. Ædituus, cui ædis sacræ custodia incumbit. Ædituare, ædituum agere, (Du Cange.)
To guard, or have the guard or custody of the house, (ædes.)

The devotion whereof could not but move the city to edituate such a piece of divine office, where so many Gods were present by their proxies; where not only the sports themselves, but all the company, were reputed holy for that time, and some accounted so ever after.
Gregory. Notes on Scripture, (Acts, xix. 35.) p. 49.

EDU'CE, v. } Lat. E-duc-are, and Educ-ere, (e, and duc-ere,) to lead. Of uncertain origin.
EDU'CTION.
EDU'CTIVE.
E'DUCATE.
EDUCA'TION.
E'DUCATOR.
To educe,—to lead or draw forth. To educate, (met.)—To lead or draw forth, to train and exercise (sc.) the powers of the mind, the passions, affections, dispositions, habits, manners.

Whiche story cõteineth first a clere example of the diuine prouidence, and then an example of the holy and liberall educacion of yonge men.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 1.

But if there withal some good order were taken for education of youth, and setting loyterers on worke, (as, thanks be to God, the cittie is most godly bent that way,) all would sone be well, without all doubt.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 28.

They know, no doubt, that first matter is neither Quid, nor Quale, nor Quantum; and that wonderful premium materiæ, out of which forms were educ'd, that were never there.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

But by educing, the affirmers only mean a producing in it, with a subjective dependance on its recipient, a very fine signification of eduction; which answers not the question whence 'tis derived, but into what it is received.
Id. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

I will not resist, therefore, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me; but will forthwith set down in writing, as you request me, that voluntary idea, which hath long in silence presented itself to me, of a better education, in extent and comprehension far more large, and yet of time far shorter, and of attainment far more certain, than hath been yet in practice.
Milton. Of Education.

And it is plain that the human body hath a receptive power in reference to the human soul, which yet themselves confesse both to be a substantial form, and not to be educed out of the power of matter.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 39.

I need not tell you, that among the Peripateticks, the disputes are many and intricate about matter, privation, substantial forms, and their eduction, &c.
Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 69.

Indeed, if they would admit the form of a natural body to be but a more fine and subtile part of the matter, as spirit of wine is of wine, which upon its recess remains no longer wine, but phlegm or vinegar, then the educive power of matter might signify something.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 39.

With glewy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin-combs, which from the roofs are hung:
Some arm'd within-doors, upon duty stay,
Or tend the sick, or educate the young.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 145.

If what I have said in the beginning of this discourse be true, as I do not doubt but it is, viz. That the difference to be found in the manners and abilities of men, is owing more to their education than to any thing else; we have reason to conclude, that great care is to be had of the forming children's minds, and giving them that seasoning early, which shall influence their minds always after.
Locke. On Education.

Give me leave, for once, to step out of my profession so far (though still keeping strictly within my subject,) as to lay before the educators of youth these few following considerations; for I shall not, in modesty, call them instructions.

South, vol v. Ser. 1.

Go, hymn the Fount of Mercy, who, from ill
Educing good, makes e'en a death like his,
A life surcharg'd with tender woes like thine,
The road to joys eternal.—Mason. English Garden, b. iv.

It looks so like that good old grove
Where Adam once to Eve made love,
That any soul alive would swear
Your trees were educated there.

Whitehead. Answer to the Epistle, &c.

As Puffendorf very well observes, it is not easy to imagine or allow, that a parent has conferred any considerable benefit upon his child by bringing him into the world, if he afterwards entirely neglects his culture and education, and suffers him to grow up like a mere beast, to lead a life useless to others, and shameful to himself.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 16.

EDU'LCORATE, v. From Lat. Dulcis, sweet. To sweeten, to purify.

Succory, a little edulcorated with sugar and vinegar, is by some eaten in the summer, and more grateful to the stomach than the palate.—Evelyn. Acetaria.

And I would the rather have experiments tried again in other places with colcothar, not calcined to the utmost, nor yet so exquisitely edulcorated, but that some saline particles should be left in it for future encrease.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 99.

The copious powder, that results from their union, is, by that union of volatile parts, so far fixed, that, after they have edulcorated it with water, they prescribe the calcining of it in a crucible for five or six hours.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 311.

EDU'LE. } Lat. Edulium. Any thing eaten;
EDU'LIOUS. } from Ed-ere, to eat. See EDIBLE.
Eatable, edible, esculent.

There's need of all the senses to determine analogically concerning the vertues and properties even of the leaves alone of many edule plants.—Evelyn. Acetaria.

The husks of pease, beans, or such edulious pulses.

Sir T. Brown. Miscellany, p. 13.

EEK. See EKE.

EEL. A.S. Œl; Ger. Aal; Dut. Œel; Sw. Ål. Ihre and Serenius think from Sw. Hal; Ger. Hæl; lubricus, so called from its slipperiness. In A.S. Œl is also oil, and Œl-an, to oil.

It is agreed, by most men, that the eel is a most dainty fish: the Romans have esteemed her the Helena of their feasts; and some, the queene of palate-pleasure.

Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 23.

Among reptiles that have a strange faculty to shift for food, &c., may be reckoned eels, which, although belonging to the waters, can creep on the land from pond to pond, &c.

Derham. Physico-Theology, Note.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly:
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.

Dorset. To Mr. E. Howard.

EFFABLE. Lat. Effabilis, from Effari, to speak out, to utter.
That may be spoken or uttered; utterable.

He did, upon his suggestion, accommodate thereunto his universal language, to make his character effable.

Wallis. Defence of the Royal Society, (1678.) p. 16.

EFFA'CE, v. Pristinam faciem auferre. Fr. Effacer, to efface, deface, raze, blot, rub out, wipe away; to abolish, (Cotgrave.) See to DEFACE.

Thus the ideas, as well as children, of our youth often die before us; and our minds represent to us those tombs, to which we are approaching; where tho' brass and marble remain, yet the inscriptions are effaced by time, and the imagery moulders away.—Locke. Hum. Und. b. ii. c. 10.

——— Away; my Muse
Though yet the prospect pleases, ever new
In vast variety, and yet delight
The many-figur'd sculptures of the path,
Half beauteous, half effaced.—Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

EFFASCINA'TION. Lat. Effascinari, to bewitch. See to FASCINATE.

St. Paul sets down the just judgment of God against the receivers of Anti-christ, which is effascination, or strong delusion.—Shelford. Learned Disc. (Camb. 1635.) p. 317.

EFFE'CT, v. Fr. Effectuer; Sp. Efectuar; It. Effettuare; Lat. Efficere, effectum; e, and facere, to do or make.
EFFE'CT, n.
EFFE'CTIBLE.
EFFE'CTION.
EFFE'CTIVE.
EFFE'CTIVELY.
EFFE'CTLESS.
EFFE'CTOR.
EFFE'CTUAL.
EFFE'CTUALLY.
EFFE'CTUALNESS.
EFFE'CTUATE.
EFFE'CTUOUS.
EFFE'CTUOUSLY.
To do or make, (emphatically, and thus,) to bring to pass, to bring to an end, to attain, to perform, to accomplish, to complete, to achieve, to consummate.

Effects, in the plural,—things attained, acquired, possessed.

Efficacious,—able to effect; able or having power to bring to pass, &c.

Efficient, — bringing to pass; bringing to an end, &c.

Effectuous, (sometimes written affectuous,) and effectuously, were used by our old writers, as equivalent to effectual, and effectually. See AFFECT.

See the quotation from Locke. And see CAUSE.

Gret was the strif, and long betwix hem twey,
If that I hadde leiser for to sey:
But to th' effect. It happed on a day,
(To tell it you as shortly as I may)

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1191.

The firste mover of the cause above,
Whan he firste made the fayre chaine of love,
Gret was th' effect, and high was his entent;
Wel wist he why, and what therof he ment.

Id. Ib. v. 2991.

My pourchas is th' effect of all my rente.

Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7033.

For sire and dame trusteth me right wel,
Our orisons ben more effectual,
And more we seen of Christes secree thinges,
Than lorel folk, although that they be kinges

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7452.

From the natural working cause, the effect must needes follow, as thus. If the sunne shine, the day must needes be, which is the effect or workmanship of the sunne.

Wilson. The Arte of Logicke, fol. 42.

Thou sonne of man, what maner of by worde is that, whiche ye vse in the lande of Israell, sayinge, Tushe, seynge that the dayes are so slacke in commynge, all the visions are of none effecte.—Bible, 1551. Ezek. c. 12.

And in the mistery of this supper, was written, made, and sealed a moste perfyte testimonie, for an effectuall memorye of Christes offeryng of himselfe to his father, and of his death and passion with the fruite therof.

Bp. Gardiner. On the Presence in the Sacrament, p. 31.

Forasmuche as this saying of our Saiiour Christ, Oportet semper orare, A man must always pray, written in the Gospell of Saint Luke, appertaineth generally vnto all Christian men: who seeth not howe profitable and necessary it is for euery man, diligently and effectually to apply himselfe to prayer.—Fisher. On Prayer, c. 1.

For the contempt of the Gospell, shall the wrath of God suffer the Turke and the Pope with strong delusions and effectuous errors to destroye many soulis and bodys, but it shall dare no longer then that his wrath consumed, shall cease, and their wykednes be ripe.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

Which thinge, though it be partely done by the prechynge Godes wordes and frutefull exhortacyons, yet doth that vysible token and sacramente (yf a man vnderstand what is ment therby,) more effectuously worke in them both fayth and thankesgeuinge, then doth the bare worde.

A Boke made by John Fryth, p. 11.

Therfore we knowyng the vertue and efficacy of these holy psalmes, let vs vse them in our like besines, and doubt not to haue forgyuenes, yf we do it so louingly as he did in this time.—Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, Ps. 38.

Honey, as welle in meate as in drynke, is of incomparable efficacy, for it not onely cleanseth, altereth, and nourisheth, but also it long time preserueth that vncorrupted which is put into it.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 22

The power of whiche sacramentes is of suche efficacite, that cannot be expressed.—A Boke made by J. Fryth, p. 10.

The efficient cause is the working cause, by whose meanes thinges are brought to passe.—Wilson. Arte of Logicke, fol. 43.

And that thyng which maketh a man loue the law of God, doth make a man righteous, and iustifieth him effectiuely and actually, and maketh hym alyue as a woorkeman and cause efficient.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 335.

Those long unorder'd troops so marshalled,
Under such formal discipline to stand,
That e'en his soul seem'd only to direct
So great a body such exploits t' effect

Daniel. Of Civil War, b. v.

We know many things may be done by the mathematicks, and mechanick artifice, which common heads think impossible to be effected by the honest ways of art and nature

Glanvill, Ess. 6

Tib. Dangers, that we see
To threaten ruin, are with ease prevented;
But those strike deadly that come unexpected:
The lightning is far off, yet soon as seen,
We may behold the terrible effects
That it produceth.—Massinger. Duke of Milan, Act i. sc 1.

It is very true, that the angelick natures have a very great knowledge of natural efficacies and virtues, and a great power of transporting, uniting, and applying actives to passives; whatsoever, therefore, is effectible by the most congruous and efficacious application of actives to passives, is effectible by them.—Hale. Origination of Mankind, p. 308.

But going further into particulars, [Plato] falls into conjectures, attributing the effection of the soul unto the Great God, but the fabrication of the body to the Dii ex Deo, or Angels, it seems according to the tradition of the Egyptians.—Id. Ib. p. 290.

That the world had an inception, and had an inception from God, is a truth that, by the diligent improvement of natural light and reason, is attainable; but the manner and order of this effection is, as before is said, discoverable only by divine revelation.—Id. Ib. p. 291.

The use of these rules is not at all effective upon erring consciences, while the error remains, for the advices supposing the error are not applicable to them who will not suppose themselves in error.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2.

As the first [Mark, ix. 40] enjoyns us to the labour of love, and an active will, and an effective zeal, and a religion productive of permanent effects; so the latter [Luke, ix. 50] seems to be content with negative measures, to approve of an indifferent will, to allow a neutrality, and that not only many single actions, but that a whole state of life may have negative indifference and indetermination.

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

In bootelesse prayer haue they bene held vp,
And they haue seru'd me to effectlesse vse.

Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iii. sc. 1.

Hel. Sure, all's effectless, yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name.—Id. Pericles, Act v. sc. 1

That yet effectless, this enchanting witch,
Bred banish'd jealousie against my lady,
My most immaculate lady, which seiz'd on her
Almost to death.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act iv. sc. 1.

I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamuth in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectuall,
Than hath been taught by any of my trade.

Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 1.

And if he stand in hostage for his safety,
Bid him demaund what pledge will please him best.
Emili. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

Id. Titus Andronicus, Act iv. sc. 4.

For which [his intercession] he being his natural son, so neerly allyed to him, would transcendantly fit him, and give such an omnipotent prevalencie and effectualnesse to his requests, that he would be the most absolute perfect priest for ever, (in this respect,) that could be.

Goodwin. Triumph of Faith, s. 5.

Where such an unexpected face appears
Of an amazed court, that gazing sat
With a dumb silence, (seeming that it feare
The thing it went about t' effectuate,)
As if the place, the cause, the conscience gave Bare to the words their forced course should have.

Daniel. Civil War, b. viii.

O Saviour, I do rather more adore thee, on the Calvary of thy passion, than on the Tabor of thy transfiguration, or the Olivet of thine ascension; and cannot so effectuously blesse thee for, Pater clarifica, Father glorifie me, as for, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me.

Bp. Hall. Sermon preached to his Majesty, March 30.

——— To the blanc moone
Her office they prescribd, to th' other five
Thir planetarie motions and aspects
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacie.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

[Those hands] were cloven and rent upon the crosse, till the wounds became (after the resurrection) so many transparencies and glorious instruments of solemn, spirituall, and efficacious benedictions.

Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 3.

In a glass of water the ethereal substance, which he supposes to run through all bodies, is more effectuously moved than in air.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 13.

For it is a true sentence, that of nothing cometh nothing, which none of the Ancients denied, though they held not that principle of the efficient cause, but of the material subject that is of the nature of all formes.

Boetius, translated by J. P, 1600. p. 121.

So then, since there's so much dissimilitude between cause and effect in the more palpable phænomena, we can expect no less between them, and their invisible efficients.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 21.

Religion has descended to the securing of these [earthly blessings and temporal rewards,] and that not only by moral designation, but a proper and natural efficiency, so that we cannot better prosecute our present interest, than by the methods of religion.

Pleydell. Sermon at the Funeral of Mr. Jos. Glanvill.

He [God] did it, after our forefathers were reduced to extremities, and had tired themselves by various attempts to bring this great end about, and had been baffled in all of them, and sat down at last in despair of effecting it.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Power being the source from whence all action proceeds, the substances wherein these powers are, when they exert this power into act, are called causes; and the substances, which thereupon are produced, or the simple ideas which are introduced into any subject by the exerting of that power, are called effects.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 22.

Indeed he that would effectually persuade the undertaking of any enterprise, must either suppose it, or prove it effectible.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

The King of France having drawn together 120,000 effective men, divided them into three bodies.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p 198.

This sanctification, and blessing the seventh day, was setting it apart from the rest of the week-days, and appropriating it to holy uses, and purposes, namely, the commemoration of that great work of the creation, and paying homage and worship to that infinite being, who was the effector of it.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. xi. c. 6.

God hath so contrived things, that if I do but love myself heartily, and out of that self-love do endeavour all the ways I can to promote my own future happiness; this very self-love, and this endeavour to do myself good, shall be the most effectual way, nay the only way to promote and advance his glory.—Sharp, vol. iii. ser. 12.

2. From the effectualness of it in order to that end, it is the power of God to salvation.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 4.

For the effectuating this gratious intent, suppose that he should appoint and commissionate messengers, impowering and charging them to divulge the purport of this act of grace to all the people of that kingdom.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 41.

The efficacy whereby the new substance or idea is produc'd, is call'd, in the subject exerting that power, action; but in the subject wherein any simple idea is chang'd or produc'd, it is called passion. which efficacy, however various, and the effects almost infinite, yet we can, I think, conceive it in intellectual agents, to be nothing else but modes of thinking and willing; in corporeal agents, nothing else but modifications of motion.

Locke. Hum. Understanding, b. ii. c. 22.

But you will ask then, upon what account is it, that prayer becomes prevalent and efficacious with God, so as to procure us the good things we pray for? I answer upon this; That it is the fulfilling of that condition, upon which God has freely promised to convey his blessings to man.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

The same judgments that in the hand of God are sovereign means to polish and improve a well-disposed mind, are as efficaciously used by him to inflame the accounts of the wicked and the obdurate; who take occasion from thence to make themselves ten times more the sons of reprobation than they were before.—Id. vol. ix. Ser. 2.

If a man has not within himself a principle of self motion, or a power of beginning motion; then, being no agent at all, (notwithstanding his perception or intelligence,) any more than a clock or a watch, his motions must all be owing to the efficient impulse of some extrinsick cause, and the motions of that to the efficiency of some other cause; and so on.—Clarke. Remarks on a Philosophical Enquiry.

Among men, a son does not, properly speaking, derive his being from his father: Father, in this sense, signifies merely an instrumental, not an efficient cause: but God, when He is stiled Father, must always be understood to be [αιτια] a true and proper cause, really and efficiently giving life.

Id. On the Trinity, pt. ii. a. 13. Note.

A subject or utensil of so various and inexplicable use, who could have invented and formed, but an infinitely wise and powerful efficient?—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

You see, then, that, to argue upon Gospel principles, (and the fair enquirer can argue upon no other,) the Christian dispensation was necessary to fulfil the purposes of God to man, and to effect that which the divine counsels had decreed in relation to him.—Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

Happy the man who sees a God employ'd
In all the good and ill that checker life!
Resolving all events, with their effects
And manifold results, into the will
And arbitration wise of the Supreme.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

The House of Commons will lose that independent character which, inseparably connecting the honour and reputation with the acts of this house, enables us to afford a real, effective, and substantial support to his government.

Burke. A Representation to his Majesty.

The extreme dishonour and even peril of this situation roused her old age, at length, to the resolution of taking some effectual measures.—Hurd. Works, vol. iii. Dial. 4.

Cicero had imbibed a strong relish for the frank and libertine wit of the old comedy, as best suited to the genius of popular eloquence; which, though it demands to be temper'd with some urbanity, yet never attains its end so effectually as when let down and accommodated, in some certain degree, to the general taste and manners of the people.

Id. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

The same intention is mechanically effectuated; but by a mechanism of a different kind.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

Rules themselves are, indeed, nothing else but an appeal to experience; conclusions drawn from wide and general observation of the aptness and efficacy of certain means to produce those impressions.

Hurd. Notes on Horace's Epistle to Augustus.

All this is in the hand of Providence: yet now, even now, I should confide in the prevailing virtue, and efficacious operation of lenity, though working in darkness, and in chaos, in the midst of all this unnatural and turbid combination.—Burke. On American Taxation.

So that when I speak of cause, and efficient cause, I only mean certain affections of the mind, that cause certain changes in the body; or certain powers and properties in bodies.—Id. On the Sublime & Beautiful

The church was not impaired. Her estates, her majesty, her splendour, her orders and gradations continued the same. She was preserved in her full efficiency, and cleared only of a certain intolerance, which was her weakness and disgrace.—Id. Substance of Speech on Army Estimates

EFFE/MINATE, v.
EFFE/MINATE, adj.
EFFE/MINATE, s.
EFFE/MINATELY.
EFFE/MINATENESS.
EFFEMINA/TION.
EFFE/MINACY.

Fr. Efféminer; Sp. Efeminar; Lat. Effœminare; from ex, and femina; e masculo fœminam facere.

To be or cause to be feminine, womanish; to pursue or indulge in feminine or womanish habits, amusements, occupations; to be or cause to be weak, tender, cowardly.

He was girte effeminately with a gyrdle of golde, and the swoorde yt hong therevpon had the seabard made of a pearl.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 24.

Is not that white rochette that the byshops and chanons weare so like a nunne, and so effeminatly, a false sign?

Tyndall. Workes, p. 143.

How many brave hopes have we known dashed with youthly excesse! how many high and gallant spirits effeminated! Hannibal could complain that he brought men into Campania, but carried women out again.

Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. i. s. 10.

And thou dost nourish him a lock of hair behind like a girle, effeminating thy son even from the very cradle.

Evelyn. Golden Book of Chrysostome.

And must we leave him here, whom here were fit
We should retain, the pillar of our state?
Whose virtues well deserve to govern it,
And not this wanton young effeminate. (R. 2.)

Daniel. Civil War, b. i.

[The Angles] did now learn from the stranger Saxone an uncivil kind of fierceness, of the Flemings effeminacy, of the Danes drunkenness, and such other.

Selden. On Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

Dal. The king is angry.
Craw. And the passionate duke,
Effeminately dolent.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc. 4.

And what vices therein [in the law] it [the hare] figured, that is, not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, generation or usury from its fecundity and superfetation; but from this mixture of sexes, unnatural venery and degenerous effemination.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b. viii. c. 17.

But would the young effeminate gallant, that never knew what it was to want his will, that every day clothes himself with the riches, and swims in the delights of the world; would he, I say, choose to rise out of his soft bed at midnight, to begin a hard and a long march, to engage in a crabbed study, or to follow some tedious, perplexed business?

South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

I find the name of a minister of state, in one part of their history, who was fined for appearing too frequently in clean linen; and of a certain great general, that was turned out of his post for effeminacy, it having been proved upon him, by several credible witnesses, that he washed his face every morning.—Spectator, No. 433.

But now, conspicuous from afar,
He rides triumphant in his car;
With golden pendants in his ears,
Aloft the silken reins he bears,
Proud, and effeminately gay.

Fawkes. Of Anacreon, Ode 69.

For pride, envy, covetousness, gluttony, intemperance, effeminateness, oaths, idleness, and I know not how many other sins, contrary to the laws of nature, and of Christ, are so little provided against by human sanctions, that one may be a bad Christian, and a bad man, without being a bad citizen.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 459.

Fair, female minstrels charm the sight and ear:
Effeminating measures on their lutes
Dissolve the soul in languor, which admits
No thought but love.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. xxi.

Even in the instance your lordship puts, a young man may be polished indeed out of his rusticity; yet if he have no better rule to go by, than the fashion of the place where he lives, he may easily wear himself into the contrary defect, an effeminate and unmanly foppery.

Hurd. Works, vol. iv. Dial. 8.

Where will those, who inveigh against the education of our universities, recommend a more improving one? The indulgent softness of the parent's family is apt, at best, to give young persons a most unhappy effeminateness.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 1.

A mediocrity of virtues and of talents is the lot of the great majority of mankind: and even this mediocrity, if cultivated by a liberal education, will infallibly secure its possessor against those excesses of effeminacy which are really culpable.—Mickle. Introduction to the Lusiad.

EFFERVE/SCE, v.
EFFERVE/SCENT.
EFFERVE/SCENCE.

Lat. Effervescere, (e, and fervescere, to become hot;) from fervere, to be hot, to heat; which Vossius thinks is from the Gr. Βραζ-ειν, fervere, tollere.

To grow or become hot; to be agitated; to hiss or bubble, (sc.) as if by the action of heat.

Effervescent is now in common use.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce, even to a flame.—Mead On Poisons.

I am not sure, but there may be effervescences, (and perhaps periodical ones,) in the blood and other juices of the body without fermentation properly so called.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 63.

The wild gas, the fixed air, is plainly broke loose: but we ought to suspend our judgment until the first effervescence is a little subsided, till the liquor is cleared, and until we see something deeper than the agitation of a troubled and frothy surface.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

EFFE/TE. Lat. Effetus, (e, and fetus;) which Scaliger thinks is from the Gr. Φοιτ-αω, coire; Vossius from the ancient Lat. Feo, fetum.

Unproductive, barren; without power to generate or produce.

Nature is not effete, as he saith, or so lavish, to bestow all her gifts upon an age, but hath reserved some for posterity, to shew her power, that she is the same, and not old or consumed.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 370.

It is to me highly probable, that the females, as well of beasts as birds, have in them from their first formation the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which when they are all spent and exhausted by what means soever, the animal becomes barren and effete.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

It seems to me made appear, that the atmosphere which we breathe is a mixture of two kinds of air; one pure and vital, the other, for the purposes of life, effete, foul, and noxious.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

EFFICACY. EFFICIENT, &c., see EFFECT.

EFFIE/RCE, v.
EFFEROUS.

Fr. Fier; It. Fiero; Sp. Feroz; Lat. Ferus; qui ferinum animum habet; one who has the disposition of a wild beast. See FIERCE.

That with fell woodnesse he efferced was,
And wilfully him throwing on the grass,
Did beat and bounce his head and breast full sore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

From the teeth of that efferous beast, from the tusk of the wild boar, O thou, that art the root and generation of David, preserve our root and all his generation.

Bp. King. Vine Palatine, (1614.) p. 34.

EFFIGY.
EFFIGIATE, v.

Fr. It. & Sp. Effigie; Lat. Effingere, e, and fing-ere, i. e. exprimere imitatione veram rem; to express, delineate or describe a reality by imitation. Fr. Effigier,—

To figure, draw, picture, portray, counterfeit, express the form; represent the shape; make a true resemblance of, (by painting, carving, or otherwise,) Cotgrave.

Duke Sen. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,
As you haue whisper'd faithfully you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witnesse
Most truly limn'd, and liuing in your face,
Be truly welcome hither.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

In which art that famous Pyrgoteles did so excell, as made Alexander the Great ordain that none should presume to carve his effigies save him only.
Evelyn. Sculptura, b. i. c. 3.

But this I mean, that he who means to win souls, and prevail to his brother's institution, must, as Saint Paul did, effigiate and conform himself to those circumstances of living and discourse, by which he may prevail upon the perswasions, by complying with the affections and usages of men.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 25.

No longer shall dramatics be confin'd
To draw true images of all mankind;
To punish in effigie criminals,
Reprieve the innocent, and hang the false.
Butler. Upon Critics.

And thus the man [Francisco de Gama] who despised the wreath with which Camoens crowned his grandfather, brought that grandfather's effigies to the deepest insult that can be offered to the memory of the deceased.
Mickle. Life of Camoens.

He [Thomas à Kempis] lived chiefly in the monastery of Mount St. Agnes; where his effigy, together with a prospect of the monastery, was engraven on a plate of copper, that lies over his body.—Harte. Thomas à Kempis, Note.

EFFLA'TE, v. } Lat. Efflare, atum, to breathe
EFFLA'TION. } out, (e, and flare, to breathe.)
To breathe out, to blow out; (met.) to puff out.

Yet notwithstanding all these things, his greatness and learning, he was so far from being effiated with pride, that he [Reynold Pole] retired to his old habitation at Suene.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Our common spirits, effiated by every vulgar breath upon every act, deify themselves; and conceit all great additions of honour below their merits.
Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 179.

Where, at the rosy spring of cheerful light,
(If pious fame record tradition right,)
A soft effation of celestial fire
Came, like a rushing breeze, and shook the lyre.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

EFFLORE'SCENT. } Lat. Efflorescentia,
EFFLORE'SCENCE. } neuter pl. of Efflores-
EFFLORE'SCENCY. } cens, the pres. part. of Efflorescere, to spring or bud forth.
Fr. Efflorescence is applied to,—"the outward face or superficies, the utmost rind, pilling or skin of any thing," (Cotgrave.) In English it is also applied to—
The springing, budding, shooting or breaking forth, (sc.) of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone.
Woodward. On Fossils.

In this renewed youth, of the so lately calcined and purified earth, there may be some pure efflorescences of balmy matter, not to be found now in its exhausted and decrepit age, that may be proper vehicles of life, into which souls may descend without further preparation.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

So men and other animals receive different tinctures from constitutional and complexional efflorescences.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

He observed, that when the moist and blackish mould had been beaten upon by the sun, that here and there the superficial parts would be as it were besprinkled with a somewhat whitish saline efflorescence.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 628.

Two white, sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water.
Woodward. On Fossils.

E'FFLUENT. } Lat. Effluere, effluens, ef-
E'FFLUENCE. } fluxus, (e, and flu-ere, to flow;)
EFFLU'VIUM. } which Vossius considers to EFFLU'VIATE, v. } have the same origin with plu-
EFFLU'VIABLE. } ere, that is the Gr. Βλυ-ειν,
E'FFLUX, v. } manare, scaturire. Tooke
E'FFLUX, s. } thinks the A. S. Fleow-an, to EFFLU'XION. } be the primitive.
Flowing or issuing forth; springing or arising from; emanating.

And as they both hold and affirm, Nilus to be the effluence of Osiris, even so they are of opinion, that the body of Isis is the earth or land of Egypt; and yet not all of it, but so much as Nilus overfloweth, and by commixtion maketh fertile and fruitfull.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1059.

For these scintillations are not the accension of the ayr, upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflamable effluencies discharged from the bodies collided.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

This assertion, that Aristotle deliver'd the Dighæan doctrine of atomical effluvia, will alter the whole hypothesis; and then there will be little or nothing of Aristotle in his schools.—Glanvill, Ess. 2.

For besides its electrick attraction, which is made by a sulphureous effluvium, it will strike fire upon percussion like many other stones.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Which appears in the natural production of insects out of the finest parts and effluxes of most vegetable natures.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, s. 4. c. 3.

It is a grace, which by virtue of the covenant consigned in baptism does, like a centre, transmit effluxes to all the periods and portions of our life.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 9.

And truly the doctrine of effluxions, their penetrating natures, their invisible paths and insuspected effects, are very considerable.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

Dazzling the brightness; not the sun so bright,
'Twas here the pure substantial fount of light;
Shot from his hand and side in golden streams,
Came forward effluent horny-pointed beams.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

Yet we are able only to survey
Dawning of beams, and promises of day.
Heaven's fuller effluence mocks our dazzled sight;
Too great its swiftness, and too strong its light.
Prior. Charity.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat;
And why return to seek their central seat?
Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

The great rapidness, with which the wheels, that serve to cut and polish diamonds, must be moved, does excite a great degree of heat (which the senses may easily discover) in the stone, and by that and the strong concussion it makes of its parts, may force it to spend its effluviable matter, if I may so call it.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 354.

And this brings into my mind what an eminent physician, who was skilled in perfumes, affirmed to me about the durableness of an effluviating power, that was not natural to a metal, but adventitious, and introduced by art.
Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 47.

By the erecting the barometer, and warily unstopping the orifice of the lower leg, as much mercury as will of itself flow out is effluxed.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 222.

Five years being effluxed, he took out the tree, and weighed it.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 496.

Therefore it is no wonder, if God can torment, where we see no tormenter, and comfort, where we behold no comforter; he can do it by immediate emanations from himself, by continual effluxes of those powers and virtues, which he was pleased to implant in a weaker and fainter measure in created agents.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 14.

And yet these so incomparably little magnetical effluxions proceeding from vigorous loadstones will be able to take up considerable quantities of so ponderous a body as iron.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 685.

The Gods declare that thy illustrious head
Such effluent glory shall around thee shed,
As, wide dispensing its eternal rays,
Shall fill the enlightened nations with amaze.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. i.

——— The poet's mind,
(Effluence essential of heat and light!)
Not mounts a loftier wing, when fancy leads
The glitt'ring track, and points him to the skies,
Excursive. Thompson. Sickness, b. iv.

EFFO'RCE, v. } Fr. Efforcer; Low. Lat.
E'FFORT. } Effortiare; Fr. Forcer; It. Forzare, (q. d.) fortia, fortiare, from fortis, (Skinner,) strong, mighty. An effort,—
Fr. Effort, (q. d.) exfortia, i. e. exertio totius roboris, (Skinner.) An exertion of the whole strength or power. To efforce,—
To labour, to strive, to exert, to strain; to do or commit force or violence to; to violate.

The Palmer lent his eare vnto the noyse,
To weet who called so importunely:
Againe, he heard a more efforced voice,
That bade him come in haste.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Nay, let vs first, said Satyrane, intreat
The man by gentle meanes, to let us in
And afterwards affray with cruel threat,
Ere that, we to efforce it doe begin:
Then, if all faile, we will by force it win.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

Making efforts with all my puissance.
Denham. A Dialogue.

From whence it seems probable to me, that the simple ideas we receive from sensation and reflection, are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance one jot: nor can it make any discoveries, when it would pry into the nature and hidden causes of those ideas.
Locke. Hum. Understanding, b. ii. c. 23.

Yet liberty, thus slighted and betray'd,
One last effort with indignation made;
One man she chose to try th' unequal fight,
And prove the power of justice against might.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iii.

Whether it be, that such knowledge is unattainable by our faculties, or that it was seen to be improper for our situation: to say the least, all the efforts of the ablest men to explain the peculiar fundamental doctrines of our religion, on the principles of our philosophy, have not hitherto been so successful, as to make it certain that these doctrines are indeed cognisable by human reason.
Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 13.

EFFORM, v. } Low Lat. Efformare, (e, and EFFORMA'TION. } forma,) from the A. S. Freman, facere, to frame, by a common transposition of the letter r. See To DEFORM.
To frame, make or fashion.

The lawyers and physicians distinguish the time of the abortion. If the child was efformed into a humane shape, it is capital by the laws; but not if it was informe and unshapen.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

He that will reprove wisely, must efform himself into all images of things which innocently and wisely he can put on.
Id. vol. i. Ser. 25.

So that, to the knowledge of the poorest simple, we must first know its efficient, the manner, and method of its efformation, and the nature of the plastick.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

They endeavour to evacuate and disannul our great argument, by pretending to solve all the phænomena of nature, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe, and all the corporeal beings therein, both celestial and terrestrial, as well animate as inanimate, not excluding animals themselves, by a slight hypothesis of matter so and so divided and mov'd.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

It is strange to me, they should pretend, that nature, which they make a kind of semi-deity, should not be able to mould and fashion so small, and soft, and tractable, a portion of matter, as that, wherein the first model and efformation of the embryo is made.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 201.

EFFO'SSION. A word coined for the occasion, from Lat. Effodere, to dig out.

He [Mar. Scriblerus] had already determined to set apart several annual sums for the recovery of MSS. the effossion of coins, &c.—Mem. of Mar. Scriblerus, b. i. c. 1.

EFFRA'Y, i.e. to affray, (qv.) Fr. "Effrayer,—to fray, skare, fear, affright," (Cotgrave.) In Spenser,—
To run in disorder, confusion, or affright.
Harvey uses effraiable as equivalent to frightful.

Their dam vpstart, out of her den effraid,
And rushed forth, hurling her hideous taile
About her cursed head.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

EFFRO'NTED. } A word which Skinner had
EFFRO'NTERY. } seen only in an old English dictionary. Fr. Effronterie; Lat. Effrons; which, Skinner adds, even in the purer ages of the Latin language, signified impudent. (Ex, and frons, the face or countenance.) Applied to—
Hardiness of front; "impudency, unshamefacedness, shamelessness," (Cotgrave.)

Th' effronted whore prophetically showne
By holy John in his mysterious scroule.
Stirling. Doomesday. The Second Houre.

Must not one think he [Mr. Edwards] is mightily beholden to the excellency and readiness of his own nature, who is no sooner engag'd in controversy, but he finds out in his adversaries these arts of equivocation, lying and effrontery in managing of it!
Locke. Sec. Vind. of the Reasonableness of Christianity.

Vice is never so shameless as when it pretends to public spirit. Yet this effrontery is so common, that it scandalizes nobody.—Hurd. Serm. on the Gen. Fast Day in 1776.

EFFU'LGE, v. } From Lat. E, and fulg-
EFFU'LGENT. } ere; Gr. Φλεγ-ειν, to burn or EFFU'LGENCE. } blaze.
To blaze forth, to shine forth; to emit or send forth brightness, brilliancy or splendor.

—— On thee
Impreat the effulgence of his glorie abides,
Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Bright at his call, thy age of men effulg'd,
Of men on whom late time a kindling eye
Shall turn, and tyrants tremble while they read.
Thomson. Summer.

—— Firm as his cause
His bolder heart; in awful justice clad;
His eyes effulging a peculiar fire. Id. Britannia.

—— With purest ray
Sweet Venus shines, and from her genial rise,
When day light sickens till it springs afresh,
Unrival'd reigns the fairest lamp of night.
And thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
With cherish'd gaze, the lambent lightnings shoot
Across the sky. Id. Summer.

His uncorrupted heart; his honour clear
As summer suns, effulging forth his soul
In every word and look.—Thompson. Sickness, b. ii.

—— Yon radiant throne
Presents great Cyrus, as the Magi feign'd
The snowy-vested Mithres, from the east
Descending in effulgent rays of light,
To guide the virtuous to th' ethereal plains,
Where joy for ever dwells.
Cooper. Power of Harmony, b. i.

Thee, Father! first, omnipotent, they sung!
Thee, Son, coequal! from the Father sprung!
Thee, Spirit! in whose influence both combine!
Thee, Virgin-mother of the man divine!
And you, ye leaders! who in heaven above,
Th' effulgent bands in triple circles move.
Hoole. Tasso. Jerusalem Delivered, b. ii.

And darkness and doubt are now flying away,
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn.
So breaks on the traveller faint and astray,
The bright and the balmy effulgence of morn.
Beattie. The Hermit.

EFFU'ME, v. } Lat. E, and fumus, smoke
EFFUMABI'LITY. } or vapour.

To throw forth steam or vapour, to evaporate, to reek.

Shef. I can make this dogge take as many whiffes as I list, and he shall retaine, or effume them at my pleasure.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iii. sc. 6

Paracelsus himself, and therefore, as you will easily believe, many of his followers, does somewhere call that mercury, which ascends upon the burning of wood, as the Peripatetics are wont to take the same smoke for air; and so seems to define mercury by volatility, or (if I may coin such a word) effumability.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 539.

Some of them ascribe to Mercury, colours; as all of them do effumability, as they speak.—Id. Ib. p. 552.

EFFU'ND, v. } Lat. Effundere, effusum, to EFFU'SE, v. } pour forth, (e, and fundere, to EFFU'SE, n. } pour;) Fr. and Sp. Effusion;
EFFU'SE, adj. } It. Effusione.
EFFU'SION. } To pour forth; to shed or
EFFU'SIVE. } spill; to pour out, (sc.) lavishly, wastefully.

Suspires which I effund in scilence.
Chaucer. The Cuckow and the Nightingale.

Thou precious gem of martire Margarite,
That of thy blood dredest none effusion.
Chaucer. The Letter of Cupide.

No man may doubte of this, that by the aspersion of blude of beastes before the incarnation was signifyed and represented the effusyon of the blude of Christe for oure redemption.—Fisher. On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 51.

After thys went forth the seconde aungel of the seconde scale openynge, effundenge his vyall vpon the sea.
Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Much sweat they spent in furious fight,
Much blood they did effund.
St. George for England. Percy, vol. iii.

—— If he his life effund
To utmost death, the high God hath design'd
That we both live. He in my heart shall find
A seat for his transfused soul to dwell.
More. On the Soul, pt. i. b. ii. s. 77.

—— Jone of Alre hath beene
A virgin from her tender infancie,
Chaste, and immaculate in very thought,
Whose maiden blood thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heauen.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 4.

—— He fell, and deadly pale
Groan'd out his soul with gushing bloud effus'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The ayre hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 6.

Which [knife] the duke himself pulling out, on a sudden effusion of spirits, he sank down under the table in the next room, and immediately expired.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 233.

Oft in this season too the horse, provok'd,
While his big sinews full of spirits swell,
Trembling with vigour, in the heat of blood,
Springs the high fence; and, o'er the field effus'd,
Darts on the gloomy flood, with stedfast eye,
And heart estrang'd to fear. Thomson. Summer.

As the goods thence accruing to us are in multitude innumerable, in quality inestimable, in duration immense; so in some correspondence should our joy be very intense, very effuse, very stable.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

—— Th' effusive south
Warms the wide air, and o'er the void of heaven
Breathes the big clouds with vernal showers distent.
Thomson. Spring.

With thirsty sponge they rub the tables o'er,
(The swains unite the toil,) the walls, the floor,
Wash'd with th' effusive wave, are purg'd of gore.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

Should tempting Novelty thy cell refrain,
And Sloth effuse her opiate fumes in vain,
Yet hope not life from grief or danger free,
Nor think the doom of man revers'd for thee.
Johnson. Vanity of Human Wishes.

'Twas here, in many an early strain
Dryden first try'd his classic vein,
Spurr'd his strong genius to the distant goal,
In wild effusions of his manly soul.
Lloyd. Ode Spoken at Westminster.

—— Of degree
The least and lowliest, in the effusive warmth
Of colours mingling with a random blaze,
Doth beauty dwell.—Akenside. Pleas. of Imagination, b. i.

EFT, or } An eft or evet. "A. S. Efete, an eft, EVT. } a newt, a lizard," (Somner.) "I know not," says Skinner, "whether from A. S. Ef-an, equalis, from the evenness or smoothness of the skin."

We included in a receiver, whose globular part was about the bigness of an orange, one of that sort of animals that they vulgarly call efts.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 365.

Around the tomb, in mystic lore,
Were forms of various mien,
And efts, and foul-wing'd serpents, bore
The altar's base obscene.—Mickle. Wolfwold & Ulla.

EFT. } "A. S. Eft, postea, porro, iterum,
EFTSOON. } afterwards, furthermore, again. Eft-soon, denuo, iterum, rursus, identidem, de integro. Eft-soones, forthwith or again," (Somner.) Skinner remarks that eft (or aft) signifies post, and also (parum detlexo sensu) statim. Eft-soones, is soon aft, or after, (cito post,) instantly, immediately, after; and eft, alone, is used in the same manner. Eftest, soonest, quickest.

Of efters, in Rom. of the Rose, Skinner says, perhaps from the A. S. Efter, post, (q.d.) posticum medium.

And suor he wolde rather dye than euer eft to flie.
R. Gloucester, p. 222.

Vor myd seypes and gret poer as prest efsone hii come.
Id. p. 260.

And eft aryued on this lond with fulle grete nauie.
R. Brunne, p. 24.

Henry chaced his sonne thorgh force fro toun to toun,
The kyng of France eftsoone left tent and pauilloun.
Id. p. 133.

And gif hym eft and eft, evere at hus neede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 250.

And eft Jhesus bigan to teche at the see and myche puple was gaderid to him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 4.

Jhesus dide efte this secounde tokene, whanne he cam fro Judee into Galilee.—Id. Jon. c. 4.

Eftsoone Jhesus seide to hem, it is written thou schalt not tempt thi Lord God. Eftsoone the feend tok him into a ful high hil and schewide to him alle the rewmes of the world and the joie of hem.—Id. Matthew, c. 4.

Eftsoone I seye to you that if twene of you consente on the erthe, of every thing whatever thei axen, it schal be don to hem of my fadir that is in hevens.—Id. Ib. c. 18.

Where I unbounden, all so mote I the,
I wolde never eft comen in the snare.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Prologue, v. 9103.

I went on right honde and on lefte
About the place, it was not lefte
Till I had all the garden bene
In the efters that men might seen.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Almighty God, that saved all mankind,
Have on Custance and on hire child som mind,
That fallen is in hethen hond eftsone,
In point to spill, as I shal tell you sone.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5329.

What! quod my lord, ther n'is no more to don,
Of thise perils I wool beware eftsone.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,101.

With that she swouneth nowe and eft.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

He himself also holding vp his hands to heauen, bewailed eft his own misfortune, and eft the misfortune of his countrye.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 92.

Moyses eftsones resorting to Damasco the natyue country of his ancestors, went vp into the mountain Synai.
Id. Ib. fol. 125

Though at midnight he would barke and ball,
(For he had eft learned a curres call,)
As if a wolfe were among the sheepe.
Spenser. Shepheards Calendar. September.

You must call forth the watch that are their accusers.
Aemp. Yes, marry, that's the eftest way; let the watch come forth.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc. 2.

—— Eftsoone there stepped forth
A goodly lady, clad in hunter's weed,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And, by her stately portance, born of heauenly birth.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Whereupon the tribune chafed, and set into an heat, sendeth an officer to the consull: the consull likewise, a lictor to the tribune, crying eftsoones alowd, that he was but a privat person without command, without magistracie.
Holland. Livius, p 83.

And eft his lathy falchion brandish'd,
As if he meant fierce battle to darrain,
And like a wanton ape eft skipp'd he on the plain.
West. On the Abuse of Travelling.

Eftsoons the father of the silver flood,
The noble Thames, his azure head uprais'd,
And shook his dewy locks, worthy a God!
Thompson. Epithalamium on the Royal Nuptials.

E'GAL, and } i. e. equal, and equality, (qv.)
EGA'LITY. }

EGE'ST, v. } Lat. Egerere, egestum; (e, and EGE'STION. } gerere, manum administrare, q.d. to handle, formed from χερ-or genitive of χειρ, the hand.)

To bear or carry out; to throw out, emit or eject.

There be divers creatures that sleep all winter, as the bear, the hedgehog, the bat, the bee, &c. these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 890.

It is confounded with the intestinal excretions and egestions of the belly.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 13.

For he that does not love to sing, ovia Pieridum peragro loca nullius ante trita solo, but permits his memory to be so stiff, as to give us the same (though from the best inspired writers) rather than the result from his own alembic, his stomach is bad, and his egestions nauseous.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p 333.

EGG. A. S. Œg; Ger. Ey; Dut. Ei, eyé; Sw. Ägg; Fr. Œuf; It. Ovo, uovo; Sp. Huevo; Lat. Ovum. Written ay by Robert of Brunne; ey by Chaucer, and eie by Gower.

An ay bi it selue for fiue schillynges was bouht,
A pere for penyes tuelue, or thei had it nouht.
R. Brunne, p. 175.

—— Menye of the bryddes
Hudden and beleden, durneliche here eggen
For no foul sholde hem fynde.—Piers Ploughman, p. 223.

Or if he axe an ey: whether he schal areche him a scorpioun?—Wiclif. Luk, c. 11.

Or yf he aske an egge: wyll he offer him a scorpion?
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Hire hord was served most with white and black,
Milk and broun bred, in which she fond no lack,
Seinde bacon, and sometime an ey or twey.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,851.

And polished was eke so clene,
That no signe of the sculle was sene,
But as it were a gripe eie. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Cob. Nay, soft and faire, I have eggs on the spit; I cannot goe yet, sir.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. 6.

So rides he mounted on the market-day,
Upon a straw-stufft pannell all the way,
With a maund charg'd with houshold merchandise,
With eggs, or white meate, from both dayries.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 2.

To helpe it he call'd for a puritan poncht,
That used to turne up the eggs of his eyes.
B. Jonson, v. 29.

Meanwhile the tepid caves, and fens, and shoares
Their brood as numerous hatch, from the egg that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

That flying creatures of the greater sort, that is birds, should all lay eggs, and none bring forth live young, is a manifest argument of divine Providence, designing thereby their preservation and security, that there might be the more plenty of them; and that neither the birds of prey, the serpent, nor the fowler should straiten their generations too much.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Concerning the Soland goose in Scotland, he [Father Kircher] argues thus, that the Dutchmen, that went to Nova Zembla, saw on the ice near the North Pole such quantity of eggs, that were sufficient to feed all Europe, now the ice coming to melt, and these eggs to drop into the sea, they there lie at the mercy of the waves, they turn the sea into such a caudle, that those islands that are most near, as in particular Scotland, come to receive some of these eggs-fied waves dashing against them.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 299.

From plants we may proceed to oviparous animals; from seeds to eggs. Now I say, that the bird has the same concern in the formation of the egg which she lays, as the plant has in that of the seed which it drops; and no other, nor greater.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 4.

EGG, v. } A. S. Egg-ian, incitare, acuere,
EGGING, n. } to incite, to sharpen. See To EGGM'NT. } EDGE.

To incite or urge on, to stimulate, to encourage, to instigate, to provoke.

And Thebald, of Plesence egged to that tirpelle,
Ageyn his fader to rise, ther he had no right
R. Brunne, p. 133.

That while thei were werand in Gascoyn euer ilkon,
The clergi of Scotland egged ther Kyng Jon.—Id. p. 278.

Adam and Eve, he egede to don ill.—Piers Ploughman, p. 16.

And next was painted Couetise
That eggeth folke in many a gise,
Go take and yeue right nought againe,
And great tresours vp to laine.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

——— January hath caught so gret a will,
Thurgh egging of his wif, him for to play
In his gardin. Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 1009.

Mother, quod she, and mayden bright Marie,
Soth is, that thurgh womannes eggement
Mankind was lorne, and damned ay to die.
For which thy child was on a crois yrent.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5262.

The desyer of spolle egged foorth many a great way from the campe.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 167.

The nestresse, longing for the rest,
Did egge him on to tell
How faire she was, and who she was,
"She bore," quoth he, "the bell
For beautie."—Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

But the common people being very glad to see him shame and despight the scenic, and measuring always the greatness of his courage with his haughty fierce words, they egged him forward still not to spare the nobility.
North. Plutarch, p. 852.

Tell me, how curst an egging, with a sting
Of lust, do these unwily dances bring.
Cleaveland. Poems, p. 105.

E'GLANTINE. Written by Chaucer eglatere, and eglantere. Skinner and Junius both say, rosa sylvestris. And see the quotation from Holland. Warton asserts the eglantine and sweet-briar to be the same plant; and that by twisted eglantine, Milton, therefore, meant the honey-suckle.

Fr. Eglantier; Dut. Eghelentier; (q. d.) arbor echinorum; because its branches are stiff, and with prickles and thorns like a hedge-hog; i. e. in Dut. Eg-hel; A. S. Igil, (Junius and Skinner.)

The hegge also that yede in compas
And closed in all the green herbere
With sicamour was set and eglatere.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

Where she sat in a fresh greene laurey tree
On that further side euen right by me,
That gaue so passing a delicious smell
According to the eglentere full well. Id. Ib

Sweet is the rose, but grows vpon a brere;
Sweet is the eglantine, but pricketh nere.
Spenser, Son. 26.

I know a banke where the wilde time blowes,
Where oxlips and the nodding violet growes,
Quite ouer-cannoped with luxurious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act ii. sc. 2.

And yet the flower of them both, the male as well as the female, doth resemble that of the wild rose or eglantine, save that it hath no smell at all.
Holland. Pliny, b. xvi. c. 34.

Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good morrow,
Through the sweet briar, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine. Milton. L'Allegro.

I look'd and look'd, and still with new delight;
Such joy my soul, such pleasures fill'd my sight.
And the fresh eglantine exhal'd a breath,
Whose odours were of power to raise from death.
Dryden. The Flower and Leaf.

How well he knew to turn from flattery's shrine,
To drop the sweeping pall of sceptr'd pride,
Led by calm thought to paths of eglantine,
And rural walks of Isis' tufted side.
Warton. On the Death of Frederick Prince of Wales.

E'GOISM. } Lat. Ego, Gr. Εγω; Goth. Ig.
E'GOIST. } See I.
E'GOTISM. } Fr. Egoïser, egoïsme, egoïste.
E'GOTIST. } It is also written in Fr. Egoïsme.

The example from Reid explains the application of the two first words, and that from the Spectator, of the two last.

That kind of scepticism called egoism.
Baxter. On the Soul, (1737) ii. 21.

The gentlemen of Port Royal, who were more eminent for their learning and their humility than any other in France, banished the way of speaking in the first person out of all their works, as rising from vain glory and self-conceit. To show their particular aversion to it, they branded this form of writing with the name of an egotism; a figure not to be found among the ancient rhetoricians.—Spectator, No. 562.

There is one kind of egotists which is very common in the world, though I do not remember that any writer has taken notice of them. I mean those empty, conceited fellows, who repeat, as sayings of their own, or some of their particular friends, several jests which were made before they were born, and which every one who has conversed in the world has heard an hundred times over.—Id. Ib.

You see, dear Dan, how long I have been talking about myself; but attribute my vanity to my affection: as every man is fond of himself, and I consider you as a second self, I imagine you will consequently be pleased with these instances of egotism.—Goldsmith. Letter to Dan. Hodson, Esq.

Hitherto he [Descartes] was uncertain of every thing but of his own existence, and the existence of the operations and ideas of his own mind. Some of his disciples, it is said, remained at this stage of his system, and got the name of egoists.—Reid. Powers of the Human Mind, Es. 2. c. 8.

EGRE'GIOUS. } Fr. Egrege; Sp. and It.
EGRE'GIOUSLY. } Egregio; Lat. Egregius, from e, and grege, out of the flock, (q.d.) e grege selectus, chosen or picked out of the flock, (sc.) for good or bad qualities; and thus—

Remarkable, distinguished, for peculiar qualities; extraordinarily or eminently good or bad; singular, extraordinary, eminent.

Then let us at these mimic antics jest,
Whose deepest projects and egregious guests
Are but dull morals at a game at chess.
Downe. To Sir Henry Wotton.

——— Aye me, most credulous foole,
Egregious murtherer, theefe, any thing
That's due to all the villainies past, in being,
To come. Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. s. 5.

Gluttons and raueners, droonkards, and egregious deuourers of victuals were punished also by death, first being permitted to deuoure so much as they listed, and then drowned in one fresh riuer or other.
Holinshed. Scotland, c. 13.

Make the Moore thanke me, loue me, and reward me
For making him egregiously an asse,
And practising vpon his peace, and quiet,
Euen to madnesse.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— One, to empire born,
Egregious prince, whose manly childhood show'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy
Unspeakable. J. Philips. Blenheim.

What can be more egregiously absurd, than to dissent in our opinion, and discord in our choice, from infinite wisdom; to provoke by our actions sovereign justice, and immutable severity; to oppose almighty power, and offend immense goodness; to render ourselves unlike, and contrary in our doings, our disposition, our state, to absolute perfection and felicity?—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 18.

Thus have I here adventured to expose the egregious folly, and to unmask the extreme corruption of heart, which can assume the buffoon or the philosopher indifferently, to laugh at misery and death, and make a mockery both of law and religion.—Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 22.

On the other hand, it would be unjust to say, that speculations on the nature and end of government are, therefore, useless or even hurtful, because we see them, in the present instance, so egregiously misapplied.
Hurd. Sermon on the General Fast Day in 1776.

E'GRESS. } Lat. Egredi, egressus; (e, and EGRE'SSION. } gradi, to step,) to step or go out. Going forth, passage out, departure.

Host. My hand, (bully:) thou shalt have egresse and regresse, (said I well?)
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. sc. 1.

Vpon this round answere the ordinances were planted on the north side of the castell, which made no great batterie for the space of a fortnight: yet the castell so warlike on ech side inuironed, as the rebelles were imbard from all egresse and regresse.—Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1534.

Thus if Mævius shoot an arrow to kill Paternus, and, in the instant of its egression, nollet factum, repents of the intended evil, that mischief which is then done shall not be imputed to him.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

The stopping of the first egressions of anger is a certain artifice of the spirit of God to prevent unmercifulness, which turns not only our desires into vanity, but our prayers into sin.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 5.

'Tis not shreds of Latin or Greek, nor a Deus dixit, and a Deus benedixit, nor those little quirks, or divisions into the ὅτι, the διότι, and the καθότι, or the egress, regress, and progress, and other such stuff (much like the style of a lease) that can properly be called wit.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

For this is not an affection that depends upon the freedom of man's will, but it streams from him by a necessary egress of nature; it is as unconquerable as antipathy.
Id. Ib. vol. viii. Ser 12.

On the whole, what stronger evidence can any one require of a rich and powerful monarchy, than what hath been here given? Scripture describes Egypt under that condition, in the times of the patriarchs, and the egression of their posterity.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 3.

E'GRET. Fr. Aigrette, which Cotgrave calls, a fowl very much like a heron: and Skinner suggests it may be from eager; because it is eager (vehemens) in pursuit of prey.

And of the same worke were their bases, their head tyres of flowers, mix'd with silver, and gold, with some sprigs of egrets among, and from the top of their dressing, a thin vayle hanging downe.—B. Jonson. Masques. Chloridia.

That it was formerly very frequent here, appears by some of the old bills of fare: in the famous feast of Archbishop Nevill, we find no less than a thousand asterides, egrets or egrittes, as it is differently spelt.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Egret.

The scapulars and the crest were formerly much esteemed as ornaments for caps, and head-pieces; so that aigrette and egret came to signify any ornament to a cap, though originally the word was derived from aigre, a cause de l'aigreur de sa voix.—Id. Ib.

E'GRITUDE. Lat. Ægritudo, passion, grief, sorrow of the minde; and, sometimes, sickness of the body, (Minshew.)

I do not intende to write to the cure of egritudes or sycknesses confyrmed.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iv.

EJA'CULATE, v. } Lat. Ejaculare, to dart
EJACULA'TION. } forth; (e, and jaculare,)
EJA'CULATORY. } from jac-ere, to cast or throw.

To cast or throw, to shoot or dart forth; and, (met.) to utter; generally applied, to the utterance or expression of short, sudden, and occasional sentences. See the quotation from South.

All occasions therefore must be taken of sending forth pious and heavenly ejaculations to God; the devout soul may doe this more than an hundred times a day, without any hindrance to his speciall vocations: the huswife at her wheel, the weaver at his loom, the husbandman at his plough, the artificer in his shop, the traveller in his way, the merchant in his warehouse, may thus enjoy God in his busiest employment.—Bp. Hall. The Devout Soul, s. 7.

There is hereto no derivation of the seminal parts, nor any passage from hence, unto the vessels of ejaculation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

We see likewise, the Scripture calleth envy, an evil eye: and the astrologers call the evill influences of the starres, evil aspects; so that there still seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation, or irradiation of the eye.
Bacon. Ess. On Envy.

Giving notice by a small bell, so as in 120 half minutes, or periods of the bullet's falling on the ejaculatorie spring, the clock part struck.—Evelyn. Mem. Feb. 24, 1655.

The church hath at all times used prayers of all variety, long and short, ejaculatory, determined, and solemn. And the Church of England understood it in its variety, calling the short, ejaculatory prayers and responsories by the names of litanies or suffrages.
Bp. Taylor. Polemical Discourses, Pref.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts
This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts;
Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference.
Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

All which prayers of our Saviour, and others of like brevity, are properly such, as we call, ejaculations: an elegant similitude from a dart or arrow, shot or thrown out; and such an one (we know) of a yard long, will fly farther, and strike deeper, than one of twenty.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Behind the curtain lurks the fountain head,
That pours his politics through pipes of lead,
Which far and near ejaculate, and spout
O'er tea and coffee, poison to the rout.
Young. Epistle to Mr. Pope.

3 The same patriarch [Jacob] in his last benediction of his sons, breaks in upon the prophetic blessings with this pious ejaculation, "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord," which is supposed to respect the salvation of mankind by Jesus Christ.—Warburton. Divine Legation, &c. b. v. s. 3.

EJE'CT, v. } Lat. Ejicere, ejectum, to cast
EJE'CTION. } or throw out; (e, and jacere, to EJE'CTMENT. } cast or throw.)

To cast or throw out, to dart or shoot forth, to drive out, to expel, to dispossess.

——— The Carbuncle,—
Which from it such a flaming light
And radiancy ejecteth,
That in the very darkest night
The eye to it directeth.—Drayton. Muse's Elys. Nym. 9.

For at the oracle he had,
His wife a sonne should beare,
That should eject him from his realme.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 2.

Sic. Speake breefely then,
For we are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor to eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere
Our certaine death, therefore it is decreed,
He dyes to night.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

That is, to reduce the indigestible substance into such a form as may not be ejected by siege, but enter the cavities, and less accessible parts of the body without corrosion.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 22.

Where now are the maisters of the synagogue, that had enacted the ejection of whosoever should confess Jesus to be the Christ?
Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ's Procession to the Temple.

As, if the gout should seize the head,
Doctors pronounce the patient dead;
But if they can, by all their arts,
Eject it to th' extremest parts,
They give the sick man joy, and praise
The gout, that will prolong his days.
Swift. Bee's Birthday.

That [conscience] shall tell him, whether he had rather be plundered, or perjured. And whether the guilt of rebellion and sacrilege does not strike a greater horror into him, than all the miseries of an ejectment or sequestration.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

When, lo! impetuous as loos'd whirlwinds rise,
Or the red bolt that shoots athwart the skies,
His arms and eager eyes ejecting flame,
Far wing'd before his squadron Tancred came.
Brooke. Jerusalem Delivered, b. iii.

Some of these alterations are only the ejection of a word for one that appeared to him more elegant or more intelligible.—Johnson. Preface to Shakspeare.

The throes and convulsions of the mountain [Vesuvius] in that first tremendous explosion may have totally shattered its parts, while the vast ejection of ashes, cinders, ignited stones, and melted minerals, must have left a large void in its centre.—Eustace. Tour through Italy, c. 1.

And now comes on the shining part of our apostle's [Mr. Wesley's] exploits, the driving him [the Devil] out, in the face of the whole congregation, by exorcisms and spiritual ejectments.—Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 4.

EIGHT. } Goth. Ahta; A. S. Eahta, eht; Dut. and Ger. Acht; Sw.
EIGHTH. } Ætta; Fr. Huict; It. Otto;
EI'GHTEEN. } Sp. Ocho; Lat. Octo; Gr.
EI'GHTEENTH. } Ὀκτω, "etymon, si quod est,
EI'GHTY. } adhuc valde obscurum est,"
EI'GHTIETH. } (Wachter.)

Eighteen, i. e. eight and ten; eighty, eight tens.

A piece of eight, in the passage below from Massinger, is a Rial of eight or Piastre, originally a Spanish silver coin, very generally current, and worth eight silver rials, about four and sixpence English.

Whiche weren sumtyme unbileueful whenne thei abiden the pacience of God in the daies of Noe, whanne the schip was maad in which a fewe, that is to seie eighte soulis weren maad saaf bi water.—Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 3.

And [God] sparide not the first world, but kepte Noe the eighte man the bi-foregoer of rightwisnesse and brougte yn the greet flood to the world of unfeithful men.
Id. 2 Peter, c. 2.

And as the eightene on which the tour in Siloa fel doun and slough hem, gessen ye for thei weren dettours more than alle men that dwellen in Jerusalem?—Id. Luke, c. 13.

——— It is but eight years since,
This Percie was the man, nearest my soule,
Who like a brother toyl'd in my affaires,
And layd his loue and life vnder my foot:
Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard
Gaue him defiance.—Shakes. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

Yet, for the advancement of a noble action,
Repine to part with a poor piece of eight:
War a plagues upon them!
Massinger. The Duke of Milan, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— Thence full of anguish driv'n
The space of seven continued nights he rode
With darkness, thrice the equinoctial line
He circled, four times crossed the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure;
On the eighth return'd, and on the coast averse
From entrance or cherubic watch, by stealth
Found unsuspected way.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Besides, I say, and will in battaile prove,
Or heare, or elsewhere to the furthest verge
That euer was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons for these eighteene yeeres
Complotted, and contrived in this land,
Fetch'd from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Shakespeare. Life & Death of Rich. II. Act i. sc. 1.

The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth yeer of Zedekiah, king of Juda, which was the eighteenth yeer of Nebuchadnezzar.—Bible. Jeremiah, xxxii. 1.

Eightie odde yeres of sorrow haue I seene,
And each howres ioy wrakt with a weeke of teene.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 1.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eight score eight hours! And lovers' absent hours
More tedious than the dial, eight-score times.
Id. Othello, Act iii. sc. 4.

In the midle hereof was the temple raised of eight square forme, crusted within and without with marble and mosaike worke, having a spherical roofe, artificially covered with lead.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ii. c. 22.

EIGNE. Fr. Aisne, pour aint-ne, ante natus; first-born. See Menage.

Used by Bacon, as equivalent to unalienable. Still used among our law terms. See BASTARD.

Many assurances do also pass to Godly and charitable uses alone; and it happeneth not seldom, that to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon uncompelled before the time.
Bacon. The Office of Compositions for Alienations.

EILE, i. e. Ail, (qv.)

The Person him answer'd, Benedicite!
What eileth the man, so sinfully to swere?
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Prologue, v. 12,911.

And eke thei bringen in pouerte
Of wordes good, it is merueile,
Amonge the men that it mate eyle,
That thei a pees ne connen set.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

EIRE. Justice in eire, signifies judex itinerans, (says Skinner,) contracted from the Lat. Iter, or, as Cowell guesses, from the old Fr. Erre, via. See the quotation from Blackstone.

The eire of justize wende aboute in the londe.
R. Gloucester, p. 517.

Forasmuch as the common fine and amerciament of the whole countie in eire of the justicers, for false iudgements, or for other trespasses, is vniustly assessed by shirifes and extorcioners in the shires, &c.—Rastal. Statutes, fol. 245.

These judges of assise came into use in the room of the antient justices in eyre, justiciarii in itinere, who were regularly established, if not first appointed, by the Parliament of Northampton, A. D. 1176, 22 Henry II.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 4.

EI'SEL. A. S. Eisile, vinegar; Ger. Essig, a word, says Wachter, common to many tongues. Gr. Ὀξος; Lat. Acetum; Goth. Akeit; A. S. Eced; Dut. Edick, eek. He refers to Ger. Ecke, acies, in A. S. Ecge, the edge, from eggian, to sharpen.

She was like thing for hunger deed,
That lad her life onely by breed
Kneden with esel strong and agre,
And therto she was lean and megre.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Then these wretches fed of al frowardnesse
Gaue him to drink esel temp'red with gall.
Id. Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

Pity me, then, and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eysell, 'gainst my strong infection.
Shakespeare, Son. 111.

EI'THER, pr. } A. S. Æg-hwather, egther,
EI'THER, ad. } uterque, both, each, both the one and the other, (Somner.)

And alowe vaste in eyther half, that rewthe yt was ynow.
R. Gloucester, p. 191.

And he seith to hem, is it leffel to do wel in the sabotis either yvele? to make a soul saaf either to lese? and thei weren stille.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 1.

And he that is at mischief, shall be take,
And not slaine, but be brought unto the stake
That shal ben ordeined on either side,
Thider he shal by force, and ther abide.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2557.

And though that I no wepon have in this place,
But out of prison am astart by grace,
I drede nought, that eyther thou shalt die,
Or thou ne shalt nat loven Emelie.—Id. Ib. v. 15,095.

Afterward as victory inclined to either part, it belonged eft to the Lacedemonians, and eft to the Atheniens.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 45.

Therfore Tucidides sayde, she was the best woman, of whome was leaste talke, either vnto her prayse, or dispraise.
Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, sig. I. 4.

Vp by day breake, and both our labours keepe
Vp, til slow darknes cast the labouring light,
Fasting all day, and not a crum til night;
We then should prove our either workmanship.
Chapman. Homer. Odysses, b. xviii.

With that, they gan shiuering speares to shake,
And deadly points at either's breast to bend,
Forgetful each to haue been euer other's friend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Hence, too, that she might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear
And, loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarums which they beat.—Butler. Hudib. c. 1.

The mind in that case has not a power to forbear willing: it cannot avoid some determination concerning them, let the consideration be as short, the thought as quick as it will: it either leaves the man in the state he was before thinking, or changes it; continues the action, or puts an end to it.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

EJULATION. Lat. Ejulatio, from Ejulare; which Vossius thinks is a sono factum.

Wailing aloud, lamentation.

They [the audible signs of brutes] are short and sudden, somewhat like sighs or ejulations in man.
Hale. Orig. of Man, p. 66.

At length the final hour
Releas'd the longing soul; no ejulation
Tolled her knell; no dying agony
Frown'd in her death.—Beaumont. Psyche, c. 18. § 53.

What forms of ejulation and lamentation were enough for thee, Alas, my brother! ah, Lord! or ah, his glory! what mourning and wailing were thy portion?
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 628.

——— Boeotia's hills
And caves with ejulation from the camp
Rebellow'd round.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. xxiii.

EKE, v. } The conjunction eke is the im-
EKE, n. } perative of the verb eacan, to add,
EKE, conj. } to eke, variously written eke, eche,
E'KING, n. } eech, &c. In Dan. the verb is oger; the conjunction og. In Sw. Oka, ock; Dut. Oecken, ook; Ger. Auchen, auch; Goth. Auc-an, auc. (See Tooke.) See ACHE, and AGE.

A. S. Eacan, augere, augmentare, adjicere, to increase, to augment, to add unto, to eke, to eke out, (Somner,) and thus—

To lengthen, to prolong, to protract.

Wateres he hath eke gode ynow.—R. Gloucester, p. 2.

What thing hath thilke praise eched or encreased to the cõecience of wise folke, that measuren her good, nat by the rumour of the people, but by the sothfastnesse of a conscience.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Good child (qd she) what eketh such renoume to the conscience of a wise man, that loketh and measureth his goodnes, not by sleuelesse words of the people, but by soothfastnesse of conscience: by God nothing.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

I bare him on hond he had enchanted me
(My dame taught me subtiltee)
And eke I sayd, I mette of him all night.
Id. Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6159.

And thus dispute in loue's lore,
But helpe ne finde I nought the more,
But stumble vpon myn owne treine,
And make an ekynge of my peine.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Prixus the first was of tho,
A knave childe, right faire withal
A doughter eke, the whiche men call
Helle, he had by his wife. Id. Ib. b. v.

And for the knights were faint he quickly sent
To Penitence, whom Phœbus taught his art,
Which she had eak'd with long experiment.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

I dempt there much to haue eched my store,
But such eching hath made my heart sore.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. September.

——— Be attent,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly eche;
What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iii. sc. 1.

Hel. And euer shall
With true obseruance seeke to eke out that
Wherein toward me my homely starres haue fail'd
To equal my great fortune.
Id. All's Well that End's Well, Act ii. sc. 5.

I speake too long, but 'tis to peize the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length
To stay you from election.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 2.

What [he] falls short of there's others can eech out.
Beaum. & Fletch. Cupid's Revenge, Act ii.

A thousand sithes I curse that carefull houre,
Wherein I long'd the neighbour town to see:
And eke ten thousand sithes I bless the stoure
Wherein I saw so faire a sight as shee.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. January.

Within an hour, and eke a half,
I preach'd three congregations deaf.
Swift. On a Curate's Complaint of Hard Duty.

You hold the pleasure to consist
In the pursuit; this must exist
For ever, you have eke maintain'd,
Asserting knowledge can't be gain'd;
By this you fairly overthrow
Your first position.—Cambridge. Learning. A Dialogue.

Either the words in Italicks are virtually implied in the Hebrew, or they are not In the former case, they are a real part of the text, and should be printed in the same character: in the latter, they are generally ill-assorted and clumsy ekes, that may well be spared, and which often disfigure the narration under pretence of correcting it.
Geddes. Prosp. of a New Trans. of the Holy Bible, p. 95.

ELA'BORATE, v. ELA'BORATE, adj. ELA'BORATELY. ELA'BORATENESS. ELABORA'TION. ELA'BORATORY. } Fr. Elabourer; Sp. Elaborar; It. Elaborare; Lat. Elaborare, to work out, (e, and laborare, of uncertain origin.)

"Fr. Elabourer, — to elaborate; labour painfully, travel throughly; to work exactly, do a thing fully and finely," (Cotgrave.)

One elaborated pen
Compendiously doth floe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. xii. c. 71.

'Tis not enough, the elaborate Muse affords
Her poems beautie, but a sweet delight
To work the hearers' minds, still to their plight.
Jonson. Horace. Arte of Poetrie.

If we preach plainly, to some it will savour of a carelesse slubbering, to others of a mortified sincerity: elaborately, some will tax our affectation, others will applaud our diligence in dressing the delicate viands of God.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Dumbe Divill Ejected.

Subtile threads of silkworms serve principally to cloath others, whereas the honey, that is elaborated by the bee, does not only supply others with a healing and cleansing medicine in some distempers, but affords a great deal of pleasure to the bee herself.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 365.

The great success which this opera met with, produced some attempts of forming pieces upon Italian plans, that should give a more natural and reasonable entertainment than can be met with in the elaborate trifles of that nation.
Spectator, No. 18.

But I cannot think or persuade myself, that God gave us eyes only that we may pluck them out, and brought us into the world with reason, that being born men, we might afterwards grow up and improve into brutes and become elaborately irrational.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

It is not my design in these papers, to treat of my subject, as it may be considered (to borrow a school phrase) in fieri, which would have obliged me to trace the progress from the reception of aliments at the mouth, to the full elaboration, which were to write the history of sanguification as well as blood; but to treat of this liquor, as it is compleately elaborated, and that too, not as it is formed in the vessels of a living body, but as it is extravasated, and let out by the lancet.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 596.

There should be likewise an elaboratory, with a repository for rarities and things of that nature.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 289.

After he [Boyle] had left Oxon for London, he setled in the house of his sister Katherine Lady Ranelaugh, where he erected an elaboratory, kept men at work, and carried on chymistry to the last.—Wood. Fasti, vol. ii.

Attend, and you discern it (ambition) in the fair
Conduct a finger, or reclaim a hair;
Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye;
Or, in full joy, elaborate a sigh.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 5.

In the last [editions,] by the opportunity which some elaborate attempts of his adversaries to overturn it had afforded him, he exerted his whole strength upon it, and has left it in a condition to brave the utmost efforts of future criticism.
Hurd. Life of Warburton.

Sister of Peace and Indolence,
Bring, Muse, bring numbers soft and slow,
Elaborately void of sense,
And sweetly thoughtless let them flow.
Smart, Ode 1. Idleness.

Yet it [the Old Bachelor] is apparently composed with great elaborateness of dialogue, and incessant ambition of wit.—Johnson. Life of Congreve.

ELA'MPING. Enlightening like a lamp, (qv.) Lamping is used by Spenser, (First Sonnet, and Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3. s. 1.)

As when the cheerful sun, elamping wide,
Glads all the world with his uprising ray,
And woos the widow'd earth afresh to pride,
And paints her bosome with the flow'ry May.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory and Triumph.

ELA'NCE. Fr. Elancer,—
"To hurl, throw, fling, dart, shoot out, or from," (Cotgrave.) See LANCE.

Add yet unnumber'd ills, that lie unseen
In the pernicious draught; the word obscene,
Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable; the too prompt reply
Seed of severe distrust, and fierce debate.
Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

O'er altars thus, impainted, we behold
Half-circling glories shoot in rays of gold.
'Cross ether swift elance, the vivid fires!
And swift again each pointed flame retires.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 3.

Elance thy thought, and think of more than man.
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

ELA'PSE. A very common word, but of modern introduction. Lat. Elabor, elapsus; e, and labi, to fall, to glide away.

To glide by, or away; to slip or slide away; and generally, to pass by, or away.

In these romantic wars, by which the power of the Mohammedans was checked, several centuries elapsed, when Alonzo, King of Castile, apprehensive that the whole force of the Mohammedans of Spain and Morocco was ready to fall upon him, prudently imitated the conduct of Charlemagne.
Mickle. History of the Discovery of India.

Eight days elaps'd: at length a pilgrim came
With mournful tidings to the princely dame,
That Ariodantes in the sea was lost.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. v.

——— Meanwhile ev'ry sun
Which now (a year elaps'd) diurnal rose
Beheld her still more pensive; inward pangs,
From grief's concealment, hourly seem'd to force
Health from her cheek, and quiet from her soul.
Mason. The English Garden, b. iv.

ELA'STIC. ELA'STICAL. ELASTI'CITY. } Fr. Elastique; It. Elastica. From the Gr. Ελαστης, formed from the verb Ελαυνειν; which signifies Pousser, agiter; to push or thrust, to shake.

Springing back, when stretched or pressed. See the quotation from Ray.

But the ribs, which are not to bear any great weight, or to be strongly exercised, but only to fence the beast, have no cavity in them, and towards the fore part or breast are broad and thin, that so they might bend and give way without danger of fracture; when bent returning by their elastick property to their figure again.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

It might be sufficient to reply, that the bodies do neither of them return with their own force, but each of them loses its own force, and each returns with a new force impressed by the other's elasticity; for if they are not elastical they return not at all.—Clarke & Leibnitz's Papers. Fifth Reply.

Yet some there are, even of elastic parts,
Whom strong and obstinate ambition leads
Thro' all the rugged roads of barren lore,
And gives to relish what their generous taste
Would else refuse.
Armstrong. Art of Preserving Health, b. iv

But when he afterwards began to account for it [the property of attraction] by a subtle elastic æther, this great man [Newton] (if in so great a man it be not impious to discover any thing like a blemish) seemed to have quitted his usual cautious manner of philosophising.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. s. 1.

The membrane (the nictitating membrane) itself is an elastic substance capable of being drawn out by force like a piece of elastic gum, and by its own elasticity returning, when the force is removed, to its former position.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

ELA'TE, v. ELA'TE, adj. ELA'TEDLY. ELA'TION. ELA'TER. } Lat. Efferre, elatum, to bear, or carry out.

To bear, bring or carry out; to carry away; and thus, to carry up, to bear or carry aloft, to elevate, to make or cause to be lofty, haughty, proud. See the second quotation from Chaucer.

This king of kinges proud was and elat;
He wend that God, that sit in majestee,
Ne might him nat bereve of his estat.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,175.

Elation, is whan he ne may neither suffre to have maister ne felawe.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Which deed in wonder slightly he rejects,
His forward spirit insatiately elate,
Which after caus'd those violent effects
That sate on Egypt with the power of fate.
Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles

Nero, we find, defiled most in the foulest mires of luxury, and where do we find any so elatedly proud, or so unjustly rapacious as he.—Feltham. On St Luke, xiv. 20.

Turn we a moment Fancy's rapid flight
To vigorous soils, and climes of far extent;
Where, by the potent sun elated high,
The vineyard swells refulgent on the day.
Thomson. Autumn.

But as a whelp starts up with fear,
When a bee's humming at his ear;
With upper lip elate, he grins,
Whilst round the little teazer spins.
Fenton. Letter to the Knight of the Sable Shield

"Again, I [Gregory the Great] confidently say, that whoever doth call himself universal bishop, or desireth to be so called, doth in his elation forerun antichrist, because he proudly doth set himself before all others."
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

The swelling of the compressed waters in the pewter vessel lately mentioned, and the springing up of the water at the hole made by the needle, were not the effects of any internal elater of the water, but of the spring of the many little particles of air dispersed through that water, and acting upon it in their sudden recovering themselves to a greater extent, than that to which a violent compression had reduced them.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 49.

——— The Supreme accounts
Well of the faithful shepherd, rank'd alike
With king and priest: they also shepherds are;
For so th' All seeing stiles them, to remind
Elated man, forgetful of his charge.—Dyer. Fleece, b. i.

The church of Corinth was foolishly elated by spiritual pride; which St. Paul endeavoured to mortify and humble.
Warburton. Doctrine of Grace, b. i. c. 4.

For, not content with this bare assertion of his claims, he grows so elate, as to wonder this important theme should be reserved for him, and that no sagacity of former times had been blessed in the discovery.
Hurd. Remarks on Mr. Weston's Enquiry

E'LBOW, v. E'LBOW, n. } A. S. Elboga; Dut. Elleboghe; Ger. Ellen-bogen, (says Skinner,) compounded of Ell, and bow, (q. d.) flexura ulnæ.

The flexure or bending of the arm. See ELL.

In chairs—rails or bars for the elbows to rest upon.

Hor armes to the elbowe naked.—R. Gloucester, p. 526.

Adoune full softly I gan to sinke
And leaning on my elbowe and my side.
Chaucer. Legend of Good Women. Prol.

Whan the king [Alexander] saw him, he raysed vp him selfe vpon his elbowe, and taking the letter, in his lefte hande, with the other hand tooke the cuppe and streyght supped it up.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 29.

They haue wings of the colour of veluet, and bowe them as a man boweth his elbowe.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 100.

——— And [Lear] by no meane
Will yield to see his daughter.
Gent. Why, good sir?
Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 3.

At length, I might perceiue him reare
His body on his elbowe end:
Earthly and pale with gastly cheare,
Vpon his knees he vpward tend.
Spenser. Elegie on Sir Philip Sydney.

No sooner is he disappointed of that harbour, then God provides cities of Hebron: Saul shal die to give him elbow-room.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Abner and Joab.

Sir Roger planting himself at our historian's elbow, was very attentive to every thing he said, particularly to the account he gave us of the lord, who had cut off the king of Morocco's head.—Spectator, No. 329.

Purse proud, elbowing Insolence,
Bloated Empire, puff'd Pretence.
Grainger. Ode on Solitude.

But elbows still were wanting; these, some say,
An alderman of Cripplegate contriv'd;
And some ascribe th' invention to a priest,
Burly, and big, and studious of his ease.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

Thus first Necessity invented stools,
Convenience next suggested elbow-chairs
And Luxury th' accomplish'd sofa last.—Id. Ib.

ELD, v.
ELD, n.
E'LDER, adj.
E'LDER, n.
E'LDERLY.
E'LDERSHIP.

"Eld and old, by the change of the characteristic i or y, is the past tense, and past part. of the A. S. verb, Yldan, or Ildan, to remain, to stay, to continue, to last, to endure, to delay, to defer, morari, cunctari, tardare, differre. And this verb (though now lost to the language) was commonly used in the A. S. with that meaning, without any denotation of long antiquity. As we now say,—A week old, two days old, but a minute old," (Tooke, ii. 199.) See OLD, and AGE.

Old, or eld, is applied emphatically;—remained, staid, continued, lasted, endured; (sc.) long, a long time, to great age.

Chaucer has the verb, to eld.

Tho the kyng [Lear] to elde com, alle thre he brogte
Hys dogtren to fore hym, to wyte of here thougte.
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

Tho this Kyng Leir eldore was, heo bigan to lothe,
For he so longe liuede, hys leue dogtren bothe.—Id. p. 32.

Vor July Cesar yt nom vorst myd strengthe & myd outrage,
Thoru discord & contek, that by tuene vr elderne vas tho.
Id. p. 190.

Albanak bi gonde Homber: ac Locryn hadde best,
Al out that lond bi twene hem, fro the est to the west.
For that he was eldeste, me lokede hym best by rigt.
Id. p. 23.

He was of grete elde, & myght not trauaile.
R. Brunne, p. 3.

Large er tho londes that his eldres wonnen,
The dedes of ther hondes thorgh reames er ronnen.
Id. p. 144.

Edmunde Ireneside was eldest of tho ther.—Id. p. 40.

Carnis concupiscentia, me calde the eldere mayde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 192.

——— Beth suche callyd lolleres
As by English of oure eldres. Id. p. 158.

To schewe where the lord is preied to the feeste the wyn of the weddyngis owith to faile, that whanne alle elde thingis ben chaungid alle newe thingis that ben ordeyned of Crist appere.—Wiclif. Prologue to Jon.

Thanne the Scribis and the Pariseos camen to hem fro Jerusalem, and seiden, Whi breken thi disciplis the tradicioune of eldre men? for thei weischen not her hondis whanne thei eten breed.—Id. Matthew, c. 20.

Then came to Jesus Scribes and Pharises from Jerusalē, sayinge: Why do thy disciples transgresse the tradicions of the elders? for they washe not theyr handes when they eate breade.—Bible, 1551. Ib

And I profitide in the Iewerie aboue manye of myne euene eldere in my kynrede, and was more aboundantli a folowere of my fadris tradicions.—Wiclif. Galathies, c. 1.

And preuayled in the Jewes waye, aboue many of my companyons, which were of myne oune nacion, and was a much more feruent mayntener of the tradicions of the elders.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

The time eke that chaungeth all
And all doeth waxe, and fostred be
And all thing destroyeth he.
The time that eldeth our auncestours
And eldeth kings and emperours.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

The time that hath all in welde
To elden folke had made her elde
So inly, that, to my weting,
She might helpe her selfe nothing. Id. Ib.

And when that she [Zenobia] was elder, she wold kille
Leons, lepards, and beres al to-rent,
And in hir armes weld hem at hire wille.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,266.

For he was boren of a gentil hous,
And had his eldere noble and vertuous.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6736.

And as touching thy frendes, thou shalt consider which of hem ben most faithful and most wise, and eldest and most approved in conseilling: and of hem shall thou axe thy conseil, as the cas requireth.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

And for Thetis his moder sake,
He put hir into compame
To dwell with Deidamie,
His owne doughter the eldest,
The fairest, and the comliest.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Go forth cherefullye, haue you good hope, and see that you restore to your posteritie the glorye you receiued of your elderes.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 94.

A young man, an elderly man, an olde man, to preache earlie and late, 1 Timoth. iiii. Let no man contemne thy youth.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 58.

Esau, being compelled with hounger, sold the title and interest of his birthright that he should have had by reason of eldership, he sold it for a messe of pottage.
Udal. Luke, c. 4.

Of the whyche Artobazanes the eldest claimed the crowne by prerogatiue of hys age, alledginge that by order of lawe, by order of birthe, by order of nature, and by custome of all countreys, he ought to have it.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 15.

This man of infinite remembrance was,
And things foregone through many ages held,
Which he recorded still as they did pass,
Ne suffered them to perish through long eld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii.

You haue heard of such a spirit, and well you know
The superstitious idle-headed eld
Receiv'd and did deliuer to our age,
This tale of Herne the hunter, for a truth.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 4.

Hereof it came, that the word [elder] was always used both for the magistrate, and for those of age and gravity; the same bearing one signification almost in all languages.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 9. s. 1.

This happy elder, first of the first seven,
(While't hem'd about by a tumultuous band)
Did looke aloft to the inviting heaven,
And saw the sonne of man at God's right hand.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Ninth Hour.

And at that time (I not giving any occasion thereto) a squire of the house fell in love with me, somewhat an elderly man, big-bearded and personable.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 7.

It followeth now to intreat how the world began to receive rule and government, which (while it had scarcity of people) underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 9. s. 1.

Though Truth and Falsehood are as twins ally'd,
There's eldership on Truth's delightful side.
Parnell. Donne. Third Satire versified.

A scene might tempt some peaceful sage
To rear him a lone hermitage;
Fit place his pensive eld might chuse
On virtue's holy lore to muse.
Warton. Ode on the approach of Summer.

There is, if I be not much mistaken, one circumstance in the situation of Egypt, which seems to assert its claim to a priority among the civilized nations; and consequently to its eldership in arts and arms.
Warburton. Divine Legation, &c. b. iv. s. 3.

E'LDER. A.S. Ellum; Ger. Hol-under, holder, which Wachter derives from Ger. Hol, hollow, and der, a tree; arbor cava, ob copiam medullæ; Skinner, from Ger. Hell, lucidus, from the bright colour of its leaves and flowers. In Sw. Hyll; and this, Ihre thinks, is from Lat. Ebulus.

That's a perillous shot out of an elder-gunne, that a poore and priuate displeasure can doe against a monarch.
Shakespeare. Hen V. Act iv. sc. 1.

If he giue not back his crown again, upon the report of an elder-gun, I have no augury.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i. sc. 1.

Car. O, it's an old stale enterlude device: no. I'll give your names myselfe, look you, he shall be your Judas, and you shall be his elder-tree, to hang on.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 5.

Then seek the bank where flowering elders crowd,
Where scatter'd wide the lily of the vale
Its balmy essence breathes.—Thomson. Spring.

With purple fruit when elder-branches bend,
And their bright hues the hips and cornels blend,
Ere yet chill hoar-frost comes, or sleety rain,
Sow with choice wheat the neatly furrow'd plain.
Scott. Amœbæan Eclogues, Ecl. 2.

ELE'CT, v.
ELE'CT, adj.
ELE'CTANT.
ELE'CTION.
ELECTIONEE'RING, n.
ELE'CTIVE.
ELE'CTIVELY.
ELE'CTOR.
ELE'CTORAL.
ELECTORA'LITY.
ELE'CTORIAL.
ELE'CTORATE.
ELE'CTORSHIP.
E'LIGIBLE.
ELIGIBI'LITY.

Fr. Eslire; It. Eleggere; Sp. Eleger; Lat. Eligere, elect-um; (e, and leg-ere, Gr. Λεγ-ειν, to gather, to choose.)

To choose or pick out; take out; (sc.) in preference, to prefer. See TO LOVE.

Electioneering is applied, to the choosing or electing of persons to public offices; or, perhaps, rather to the means or arts practised on those occasions.

Eligible,—that may or should be chosen, or picked out; that may or should be taken in preference, preferable; worthy or fit to be chosen or picked out, desirable.

Now Hubert is dede our sire, & to God is gon,
The prioure of Canterbire sendes to Kyng Jon
Biouht him of leue, to mak eleccion.—R. Brunne, p 208.

For in loue & in letture. leth the grete election.
Piers Ploughman, p. 7.

After the Gospel thei ben enemyes for ghou, but thei ben moost dere worthe bi the electiouns for the fadris.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 11.

As concernyng the Gospell they are enemyes for your sakes: but as touchyng ye election they are loued for the father's sake.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But finally, this is my conclusion
That she herselfe shal haue her election,
Chaucer. The Assemblie of Foules

Three men vpon election
Of age, and of complexcion
Liche to hym selfe by all wale
He toke towardes hym to place.—Gower. Con. A. b vi.

Hee was also elected generall capitaine of the kinges armye prepared to passe into Asia, as one that was both valyant of his person, and no lesse politike in the feates of war.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 9.

Now therefore as elect of God, holye and beloued, put on tender mercy, kindnes, humblenes of mindes, mekenes, longe sufferynge, forbearing one another; and forgeuynge one another, if any mā haue a quarrel to another: euē as Christe forgaue you, euen so do ye.
Bible, 1551. Colossians, c. 3.

I haue in my handes and vnder my poure the keyes both of helle & death, that neyther helle nor synne, death nor the deuyll, shall be from henceforth able to preuayle against my elect.—Bale. Image, sig. C 8.

The thyng most perillous among all perile is to make eleccion. Ye constraine me to chose, and mine vnderstandyng cannot attain thereto: and the Goddes do not showe me, what I haue to chose.—Golden Boke, c. 7.

And whyle he was lyueng he dyde so moche, what for golde and syluer and great alyances that he hadde, the electours of the emperour sware and sealed to hym, that after his discease to make his sonne emperour.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 355.

That you two champions shall elect,
And we will also send
Two ladies, that for victorie
Shall with your knights contend.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 7.

Hearken, and help ye holy doves,
The high-born brood of day, you bright
Candidates of bussful light,
The heirs elect of love.
Crashaw. To the Name above every Name.

Nor headlong carry'd with the stream of will,
Nor by his own election led to ill.—Daniel. Civil War, b. iii

He likewise writeth, that the emperour hath restrained the liberty of religion in all his hereditary dominions, whereupon his natural subjects being (as he saith) in worse condition than his electors, refuse to contribute to his wars.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 713.

We have comprehended within the treaty, only the electorals, and countries belonging to electors, princes, and states, confederates of either party, under which also is contained the electoral Palatinate, with all inheritances thereunto belonging, situate within the empire.—Id. p. 554.

Understanding as well this declaration to be for the electoralities, principalities, and estates, situate and being within the empire.—Id. Ib.

The duke of Bavaria had practised the electorate of Rhine before the true elector was called to the crown of Bohemia.
Id. p. 568.

And if the Bavarian hath male-issue of this young lady, the son is to succeed him in the electorate, which may conduce much to strengthen the continuance of the empire in the Austrian family.—Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 23.

And what greater contrariety can there be, as touching things eligible or refusable, than to say that for them who are happy in the highest degree, it is fit and beseeming to forego and forsake the good things that be present, for want of some one thing that is indifferent?
Holland. Plutarch, p. 873.

So do all that are thus mortified, they place misfortunes and sadnesses amongst things eligible, and set them before the eyes of their desire, although the flesh, and the desires of sense are factious and bend against such sufferings.
Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 8.

That is, he [God] hath set before us eligibilities in order to several ends which must either be wholly to no purpose, or an art of vexation and instrument of torment to evil purpose, or else the means of a reward, and the way of felicity by the advantage of a free and a wise choice, and this is to very good purpose.
Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. s. 1.

——— O ye gods! might I
Elect my fate, my happiest choice should be
A fair and modest virgin, that invites
With aspect chaste, forbidding loose desire,
Tenderly stealing; in whose heavenly eye
Sits purest love enthron'd. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

He hath likewise given every one of us power and ability sufficient to chuse that life, and make good those terms and conditions: and whatever man or woman among us does do that, that person is certainly elected; and whoever doth otherwise, is certainly, by the decrees of God, a reprobate; that is to say, he having rejected God's grace, God will reject him at the last day.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

Some of the house of lords having procured themselves to be chosen by the people, sat in parliament at the foot of the election.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 233

For his conscience could not but whisper to the arbitrary monarch, that the kings of Rome were at first elective, and governed not without a senate, that Romulus was no hereditary prince, and though, after his death, he received divine honours, yet he was but a God of their own making: that the last Tarquin was expelled justly for overt acts of tyranny, and male-administration, for such are the conditions of an elective kingdom.—Dryden. Ded. to Virgil's Æneis.

It being perpetual in all [tribes of insects,] if not hinder'd or imprison'd, electively to lay their eggs, where they are seldom lost or miscarry, and where they have a supply of nourishment for their young, so soon as they are hatch'd, and need it.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Resolved, that the house would, upon every Wednesday, turn themselves into a general committee, to debate concerning the manner of assembling, and power of future successive parliaments: the number of persons appointed to serve for each county, that the nation might be more equally represented than had hitherto been practised, and touching the qualifications of the electors, as well as those to be elected.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 271.

The electoral college hath written to the king of Sweden, promising not to proceed to the imperial election, till the Austrians and Poland have first made their peace with him.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 107.

Soon after this, the house of Brunswick returned the visit the king had made them last year, and the eyes of all the protestants in the nation turned towards the electoress of Brunswick; who was daughter to the queen of Bohemia, and was the next protestant heir, all papists being excluded from the succession.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1700.

Yet, I say, admitting all this, a life of virtue and religion will, notwithstanding, to a considering man, be far more easy and far more eligible, than the contrary way of living, though it have never so many secular advantages to recommend it.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

Now, as all the declared purposes of this separation shew, that God acted with the Israelites, as moral agents, we must needs conclude, notwithstanding the peculiar favour by which they were elected, and the extraordinary providence by which they were conducted, that yet, amidst all this display and blaze of almighty power, the will ever remained free and uncontrolled.—Warburton. Divine Leg. b. iv. s. 6.

While others, (they, for instance, of your sect,)
Are merry as vessels, precious and elect;
Who thank, God help them! to secure their bliss
By such a partial, fond conceit as this.
Byrom. On Predestination, &c.

Upon this supposition man is a free agent, and a free volent, for free agency is the dependence of his actions upon volition, and free volency the dependence of volition upon his choice; but you cannot go on further to entitle him a free electant too.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

Experience overturns these airy fabrics, and teaches us, that in a large society, the election of a monarch can never devolve to the wisest, or to the most numerous part of the people.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 7.

But if my quiet must dependent be
On the vain breath of popularity,
A wind each hour to different quarters veering,
Adieu, say I, to all elective meaning.
Jenyns. Horace. Epistle 1. Imitated, b. ii.

All regal governments must be either hereditary or elective: and, as I believe there is no instance wherein the crown of England has ever been asserted to be elective, except by the regicides at the infamous and unparalleled trial of Charles I., it must of consequence be hereditary.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 3.

The butterfly cannot taste the cabbage. Cabbage is no food for her: yet in the cabbage, not by chance, but studiously and electively, she lays her eggs.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

Whatever rights the king enjoys as elector, have been always parentally exercised, and the calumnies of these scandalous societies have not been authorised by a single complaint of oppression.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

For the two former of these ends, such are the subdivisions in favour of the electoral and other princes in the empire; for the latter of these purposes are the jurisdiction of the imperial cities and the Hanse towns.
Id. On the Economical Reform.

And, having stroked his double chin,
(That chin, whose credit to maintain
Against the scoffs of the profane,
Had cost him more than ever state
Paid for a poor electorate,) &c.—Churchill. Ghost, b. iii.

To act therefore consistently with themselves, and at the same time pay as much regard to the old hereditary line as their former resolutions would admit, they turned their eyes on the Princess Sophia, electress and duchess dowager of Hanover, the most accomplished princess of her age.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 3.

Whilst the legal conditions of the compact of sovereignty are performed by him (as they are performed) he holds his crown in contempt of the choice of the revolution society, who have not a single vote for a king amongst them, either individually or collectively, but I make no doubt they would soon erect themselves into an electoral college, if things were ripe to give effect to their claim.
Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

When they have not had strength enough to support themselves they have thrown themselves into the arms of despotism, as the more eligible of the two evils, [despotism and aristocracy.]—Id. Vindication of Natural Society.

If there be no certain invariable rule of eligibility, it were better to get simplicity, if certainty is not to be had; and to resolve all the franchises of the subject into this one short proposition, the will and pleasure of the House of Commons.
Id. On the Motion on the Middlesex Election.

ELE'CTRE.
ELE'CTRICK.
ELE'CTRICAL.
ELECTRI'CIAN.
ELECTRI'CITY.
ELE'CTRIFY.
ELE'CTRISE.

Fr. Electre; It. Elettro; Sp. Electro, elatro, Lat. Electrum; Gr. Ηλεκτρον, quod referat splendorem solis qui Græcè, ηλεκτωρ. (Vossius.)

The quotations from Brown and Boyle will show how very limited the early applications of these words were, viz. to attractive bodies.

To electrify, is, met. to shock, to shake, to startle.

For if the leaves thereof or dryed stalks be stripped into small straws they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no otherwise than those of wheat and rye.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

Not by electrick bodies, do I conceive such only as take up shavings, straws, and light bodies, in which number the ancients onely placed jet and amber; but such as conveniently placed unto their objects attract all bodies palpable whatsoever.—Id. Ib.

Now by electrical bodies, I understand not such as are metallical, mentioned by Pliny, and the ancients, for their electrum was a mixture made of gold, with the addition of a fifth part of silver; a substance now unknown.—Id. Ib.

But crystal will clarifie unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws or light bodies, and convert the needle freely placed. Which is a declarement of very different parts; wherein we shall not enlarge.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Whether from such experiments one may argue, that it is but, as it were, by accident, that amber attracts another body, and not this the amber: and whether these ought to make us question, if electricks may, with so much propriety, as has been generally supposed, be said to attract, are doubts, that my design does not here oblige me to examine.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 330.

I cannot enter into this particular subject without first setting a dispute amongst electricians.
Wilson. Experim. Phil. Trans. (1759) vol. l. p. 300.

The explosion of a cannon in St. James's park is observed to electrify the glass of the windows of the Treasury.
Dr. Stephen Hales. On Earthquakes, (1750) p. 22.

I will not now meddle with the several opinions about the cause and manner of electrical attraction.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 279.

He [Dr. Lister, in 1685] did not doubt that several things would electrise.—History of the Royal Society, vol. iv. p. 395.

For Genius, piercing as the electric flame,
When wak'd in one, in others wakes the same.
Scott. Essay on Painting.

These cats, it seems, would not give out their electrical light without having their backs well rubbed.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

They [ambassadors] will become true conductors of contagion to every country, which has had the misfortune to send them to the source of that electricity.
Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

The first [the soldier] discerns treason in every danger; the second [the general] always placed between the necessity of conquest, and the image of the scaffold, dares not raise himself to bold conception, and those heights of courage which electrify an army and ensure victory.
Id. M. Brissot, to his Constituents.

ELE'CTUARY. Fr. Electuaire; It. Elettuario; Sp. Letuario; Lat. Electuarium; Gr. Εκλεκτηριον, from εκλεγ-ειν, eligere, to choose or pick out; so called, because composed ex pharmacis electis, (Minshew.)

Holland translates eligmata, electuaries; Gr. Εκλειγμα, from εκλειχειν, to lick; and this, Gesner seems to prefer as the etymology, quod lambendo sumitur, et in linguâ dissolvitur.

Dounewarde at the mouth by potions, electuaries, or pylles.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iii.

This seed [linseed] is passing good for lohockes or electuaries to be made thereof, in the cure of phthisicke and consumption of the lungs.—Holland. Pliny, b. xx. c. 22.

She speaks well too! I'll have a fling at her:
She is no fit electuary for a doctor:
A coarser julap may well cool his worship.
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act III. sc. 1.

To which I shall now add, that I know a doctor of physick that is usually purged by the odours or exhalations of a certain electuary, whose cathartick operation, when it is taken in substance, is wont to be but languid.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 703.

ELEEMO'SYNARY, adj.
ELEEMO'SYNARY, n.
Gr. Ελεημοσυνη, from ελεος, mercy.

See ALMS. See the example from Blackstone.

Charitable; given in charity; done or performed without reward.

Which yet, me thinks, is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effect, and a nature posterior to, and dependent on itself.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

He had done many several eleemosynary cures amongst them (for they are generally very poor.)
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 704.

The eleemosynary sort [of corporations] are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to such persons as he has directed.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 18.

E'LEGANT.
E'LEGANCE.
E'LEGANCY.
E'LEGANTLY.

Fr. Élégant; It. and Sp. Elegante; Lat. Elegans, from eligere, to choose or pick out. See ELECT.

Choosing, picking or taking out, culling; (sc.) with care, with judgment, with taste; and thus—

Discerning, critical. Also used as equivalent to—

Chosen; (sc.) with care, judgment, taste; and thus,—

Excellent; highly wrought, highly polished; opposed to careless, slovenly, coarse, gross.

And as for the oration itself, which as it is most learned, so it is most elegaunt, to what purpose should I make any wordes of it, seeing it prauseth itselfe inough, and sence good wine nedeth no tauerne bushe to vtter it.
Gardner. Of True Obedience. Preface of D. Bonar.

Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste,
And elegant, of sapience no small part,
Since to each meaning sauour we apply,
And palate call judicious.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

'Mighty," said he, "though my plain homely words
Have not that grace that eloquence affords;
Truth of itself is of sufficient worth,
Nor needs it gloss of art to set it forth."—Drayton. Owl.

Tell me no more of legs and feet,
Where grace and elegancy meet,
But leave your lying, and come here to see it.
Cotton. On Mrs. Anne King

Sir Henry Wotton was received by the state of Venice with much honour and gladness, both for that he delivered his ambassage most elegantly in the Italian language, and came also in such a juncture of time, as his master's friendship seem'd useful for that republick.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ. Life, by Walton.

St. Paul here useth a gradation in his speech, begins with the lowest and most general expressions of charity, and so goes on to higher degrees of it, in each following phrase intending to say something more great or particular than what he had said in the former, which is a most usual and elegant scheme of rhetorick.—Sharp. Works, vol. i. ser. 4.

The latter [King Augustus] has made such preparation for the reception of the other, that it is said, his Danish Majesty will be entertained in Saxony with much more elegance than he met with in Italy itself.—Tatler, No. 14.

Nay, persons of quality of the softer sex, and such of them as have spent their time in well bred company, shew us, that this plain, natural way, without any study or knowledge of grammar, can carry them to a great degree of elegance and politeness in the language.—Locke. On Education.

To suppose such kind of inspired knowledge of strange tongues as includes all the native peculiarities, which, if you will, you may call their elegancies, (for the more a language is coloured by the character and manners of the native users, the more elegant it is esteemed,) to suppose this, is, as I have said, an ignorant fancy, and repugnant to reason and experience.—Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. i. c. 8.

Hafiz Rhamet, one of the most eminent of their chiefs, [was] one of the bravest men of his time, and as famous throughout the East for the elegance of his literature, and the spirit of his poetical compositions (by which he supported the name of Hafiz) as for his courage.
Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill

These choicely cull'd, and elegantly rang'd,
Shall form a garland for Narcissa's tomb:
And, peradventure, of no fading flowers.
Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

E'LEGY. E'LEGIAC. ELEGI'AST. E'LEGIST. } Fr. Elegie; It. and Sp. Elegia; Lat. Elegia, and elegus, carmen flebile; Vossius prefers that etymology which supposes elegy to be so called from Gr. Ἐ ἐ λεγειν, quæ flentium vox apud Aristophanem.
See the second quotation from Hurd.

Now change your praises into pittious cries,
And eulogies turne into elegies.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

After your dire-lamenting elegies,
Visit by night your lady's chamber-window
With some sweet consort.
Shakespeare. Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 2.

Next comes the elegiac, being the fourth kind, and that likewise is no other than our accustomed measure of five feet: if there be any difference, it must be made in the reading, and therein we must stand bound to stay, where often we would not, and sometimes either break the accent, or the due course of the word.—Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

And at Salamis, they permitted them to inter and bury their dead neer to the city side, as who were brave warriors, and had born themselves most valiantly in that service, with an inscription in elegick verses to this effect.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1013.

—— The virgin in her bloom
Cut off, the joyous youth, and darling child,
These are the tombs that claim the tender tear,
And elegiac song.
Thomson. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

A clear, sparkling fancy, softened with a shade of melancholy, made him, perhaps, of all our poets the most capable of excelling in the elegiack way, or of touching us in any way where a vein of easy language and moral sentiment is required.—Hurd. On the Marks of Imitation.

For this apparently sprung up from what is properly called the elegy; a poem of very antient Greek extraction naturally arising from the plaintive, querulous humour of mankind, which, under the pressure of any grief, is impatient to break forth into wailings and tender expostulations, and finds a kind of relief in indulging and giving a loose to that flow of sorrow, which it hath not strength or resolution wholly to restrain.—Id. On Epistolary Writing.

The great fault of these elegists is, that they are in despair for griefs that give the sensible part of mankind very little pain.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 17.

Our elegist, and the chroniclers, impute the crime of withholding so puny a legacy to the advice of the king of France, whose daughter Isabel was married to the succeeding king.—Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i. p. 198.

E'LEMENT, n. E'LEMENT, v. ELEME'NTAL. ELEMENTA'LITY. ELEME'NTARY. ELEMENTA'RITY. ELEME'NTISH. } Fr. Elément; It. and Sp. Elemento; Lat. Elementum. Vossius conjectures from the ancient elo for alo, (cresco,) eletum, elementum, because from thence all things grow, (crescunt,) or have their birth. See the quotation from Sir T. Elyot.

"Fr. Element, an element; as water, earth, fire, or air; also, a rudiment, or first principle of art; the ground, foundation, or beginning of any thing," (Cotgrave.)

The noun is applied by our old writers, (emphatically,) to the air, the sky; to any constituent or component part or quality, (lit. and met.) to the constituent or component parts or qualities of human nature; to that peculiar state or condition, which suits or agrees with the nature or qualities.

Wherfore he bet the elemens, to helpe gow alle tymes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 13.

Per if ghe ben dede with Christ fro the elementes of this world, what gilt as men lyuynge to the world demen ghe?
Wiclif. Colocenes, c. ii.

This course of nature of these bodys chaunging stinten at a certain tearm, limitted by their first kind, and of hem all gouernments in this elemented world proceeden.
Chaucer. Testament of Love, b. ii.

Yet tell me, quod this Sompnour, faithfully,
Make ye yow newe bodies thus alway
Of elements? The fend answered, nay
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7088.

This Aristotle in other thinge
Unto this worthy yonge kyng
The kynde of every element,
Whiche stant under the firmament,
Howe it is made, and in what wise
Fro point to point he gan devise.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The elementes be those originall thinges vnmyxt and vncompounde of whose temperance and myxture all other thynges, hauynge corporall substaunce, be compacte of them be foure, that is to saye, earthe, water, ayre, and fyre.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. i.

What thyng occasioned the shewres of rayne
Of fyre elementar in his supreme spere
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell

As if the elementish and ethereal parts should in their town house set down the bounds of each one's office.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Love's not so pure an abstract as they use
To say, which have no mistress but their Muse,
But, as all else being elemented too,
Love sometimes would contemplate, sometimes do
Donne. Love's Growth.

Dull, sublunary lovers' love
(Whose soul is sense) cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemental it.
Id. A Valediction Forbidding Mourning

He [Mortimer] was a man (then boldly dare to say)
In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit,
In whom so mix'd the elements all lay,
That none to one could sov'reignty impute,
As all did govern, yet all did obey.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. iii.

All staggering and lazy lour the skies,
The earth and elemental stagns quake
The long-since dead from bursted graves arise
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

For though Moses have left no mention of minerals, nor made any other description than suites unto the apparent and visible creation, yet is there unquestionably, a very large classis of creatures in the earth far above the condition of elementarity.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Cast we our eyes rather down to the lower orbs of elementary mixture: here is nothing to be seen but in a perpetuall gyre of mutation; the elements that are partners in quality interchange with each other in substance, and mixed bodies can no more stand still than the heaven whereby they are governed.—Bp. Hall. Sermon Preached at Court.

The elements were at perfect union and agreement in his [Adam's] body; and their contrary qualities served not for the dissolution of the compound, but the variety of the composure.—South, vol. i. Ser. ii.

But all subsists by elemental strife,
And passions are the elements of life.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. i.

Moreover, all rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, which by standing it precipitates, and is not a simple elementary water.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Thus Epictetus, a thorough Stoic, if ever there was any, speaking of death, says, "But whither do you go? no where to your hurt: you return from whence you came: to a friendly consociation with your kindred elements."
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

But wanting all that fine discerning
Which marks the character of learning,
And all the elemental rules
Of erudition, and the schools,
The gay professor oft mistook
Alike his question and his book.
Cawthorn. Wit and Learning.

They made and recorded a sort of institute and digest of anarchy, called the rights of man, in such a pedantick abuse of elementary principles as would have disgraced boys at school.—Burke. On the Army Estimates.

ELE'NCH. ELE'NCHUS. ELE'NCHICAL. } Lat. Elenchus; Gr. Ελεγχος, from ελεγχειν, demonstrare, arguere, redarguere, to demonstrate or prove, to argue, to refute. Ελεγχος δε συλλογισμος μετ' αντιφρασεως του συμπερασματος. Syllogismus cum contradictione conclusionis. See the quotation from Wilkins.

Notwithstanding it is the safest way to set downe elenches as monitors, whereby fallacies which otherwise might insnare the judgment, may be more easily detected.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. v. c. 4.

—— She will have her elenchs
To cut off any fallacy I can hope
To put upon her.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act ii. sc. 1.

But of these sophisms and elenchs of merchandize I skill not.—Milton. Areopagitica.

Tip. Hear him problematize.
Pru. Bless us, what's that!
Tip. Or syllogize, elenchize.—B. Jonson. The New Inn.

And this [doctrinal application] is of two kinds; didactical, elenchical. Elenchical, ητοι ελεγχον, in some controverted point, which is usually called an use of confutation, for the refuting of such erroneous positions as do subvert the truth.
Wilkins. Ecclesiastes, or the Gift of Preaching, p. 30.

E'LEPHANT. ELETHA'NTINE. } Fr. Elephante; It. and Sp. Elefante; Lat. Elephas; Gr. Ελεφας, a word which Vossius thinks the Greeks received from the Tyrians or Arabians.

As concerning the elephants, we haue had experience of the of late, how much more rigorously they rage against theire owne partie, than againste vs, what should we esteme that, but onely abate the greatnes of their bodies, wt such weapos as we haue prepared for y^e purpose.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 258.

Passe wee now to treat of other living creatures and first of land beasts; among which the elephant is the greatest, and commeth neerest in wit and capacitie to men.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 1.

Had the poor Indian philosopher (who imagin'd that the earth also wanted something to bear it up) but thought of this word substance, he needed not to have been at the trouble to find an elephant to support it, and a tortoise to support his elephant, the word substance would have done it effectually.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 13. s. 19.

Nor ceas'd till the grey dawn with orient dew
Impearl'd his large mustachoes, deep ensconc'd
Beneath his overshadowing orb of hat,
And ample fence of elephantine nose.—J. Philips. Cerealia.

In Siam, where these animals are the most numerous, and the most esteemed, eighteen elephants are allowed as a sufficient proportion for each of the nine brigades into which a just army is divided.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 8. Note.

—— With turcoises divinely blue
(Though doubts arise where first they grew
Whether chaste elephantine bone
By min'rals ting'd, or native stone.)
Jones. The Enchanted Fruit.

E'LEVATE, v. E'LEVATE, adj. ELEVA'TION. } Fr. Eslever; Sp. Levantar; It. Elevare; Lat. Elevare, to raise or lift up; (A. S. Hlifian) lift up; from levis, light, which Vossius thinks is from the Gr. Λευις, cortex, qui levissimus

"Fr. Estever,—to elevate, raise, lift, heave up, advance on high, extol, promote; also, to heap, lay, pile or put one thing upon another; also to rear," &c. (Cotgrave.) Also (as in Taylor)—

To lighten, to lessen the weight; and thus, to lessen or diminish the value.

Also custome from chyldhode doth elevate the power of meates and drynkes in their disposition.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

For it is not the voyce (sayth Chrisostome) whiche is alwayes required, but the elevation of the hart and contemplation of the mynde, neyther is the extention of the handes so much to be desired as the intention of the mynde.
Bp. Fisher. On Prayer.

Shee had one eye declin'd for the losse of her husband, another elevated, that the oracle was fulfill'd.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 2.

Nor. Or art thou mad?
Clarin. A little elevated
With the assurance of my future fortune:
Why do you stare and grin?
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act ii. sc. 1.

It was a matter so famous, that the Arabian physicians, who can affirm no such things of their Mahomet, and yet not being able to deny it to be true of the Holy Jesus, endeavour to elevate and lessen the thing, by saying, it is not wholly beyond the force of nature, that a virgin should conceive.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

And in a region elevate and high,
And by the form wherein it [a comet] did appear,
As the most skilful seriously divine,
Foreshow'd a kingdom shortly to decline.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

Being received with acclamations, and treated at the expence of the city [London,] he [the king] became elevated to that degree, that, in his first speech to the commons, he sharply reproved them; for that, instead of thanking him for what he had done, they continued to multiply their demands and dissatisfactions.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 15.

They scornfully contemned all but their darling selves under the notion of the formal, and moral, and the wicked: and proudly pitied the poor and carnal world, that is, all that were not of their conceited pitch and elevation.
Glanvill, Ser. 3.

If a pagan had been present at one of the Christian assemblies, and at the elevation of the Host had seen them all fall down, and worship, would not he think that he had every jot as great reason to reproach them for adoring a piece of bread, as they had to reproach him for adoring the sun, or moon, or this, or the other image?—Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 14.

And so [he, Sir Wm. D'Avenant] hath adopted, in his draught of characters, that elevation of sentiment which a change of manners could not but dispose the reader to regard as fantastic in the Gothic romance, at the same time that he rejected what had the truest grace in the ancient epic, a sober intermixture of religion.
Hurd. On Poetical Imitation.

ELE'VEN. } ELE'VENTH. } A. S. Endleof, endlyfa; Dut. Elf; Ger. Elf, eulf; Sw. Ellofwa, undecim; A. S. Endlefi, endlefta; Dut. Elfte; Ger. Eylfte, undecimus. The A. S. Endlyfa, says Skinner, I almost venture to derive from A. S. Ene, one, and lyf-an, to leave; one left after the numeration of ten; i. e. of the number of the fingers, by which it is probable all numeration was originally performed. See TEN, and TWELVE.

Twelve, in Goth. Twa-lib, or twa-lift, i. e. two left. Junius is of the same opinion as Skinner. Wachter, with acknowledgments to Junius, Ger. Eylf, ein, unum, et laib, residuum. Sw. Ellofwa, i. e. says Ihre, en, unus, and lefva, relinquere.

In the thousend ger of grace, and endleuene thereto,
Thys folc com to Canterbury, robberye to do.
R. Gloucester, p. 289.

Suththe, in the endlefte ger of the kyngis kynedom,
The Denys come and robbede North Walys vaste.
Id. p. 270.

Ac God sende an other cas, vor, in the next ser anon,
In endleue hondred ser of grace and vifti and on,
Deide Geffre Plantaginet. Id. p. 465.

In his elleuent gere com folk that misleued,
Aryued on Brittrik, & sore thei him greued.
R. Brunne, p. 10.

And wt. helde hym half a gere, and elleve dayes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 36.

That Joseph was justice. Egypte to save
Hus eleuene brotheres, hym for nede souhte.
And hus fader Jacob. Id. p. 163.

And thei ghauen lottis to hem, and the lott felde on Mathi, and he was noumbrid with enleuene apostlis.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 1.

And they gaue forthe theyr lottes, and the lot felle on Mathias, and he was counted with the eleuen apostles.
Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 1.

But aboute the elleventhe hour he wente out and founde other stondynge, and he seide to hem, what stonden ye idel heere al dai?—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 20.

And he went oute aboute the eleuenth houre and found other standynge ydell, and sayde vnto them: why stande ye here all the daye ydell.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Foure of the clok it was tho, as I gesse,
For enleven foot, a litel more or lesse,
My shadow was at thilke time.
Chaucer. The Persones Prologue, v. 17,317.

Of the that sitten vpon the heuen
Of signes in the nombre eleuen,
Aquarius hath take his place.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

'Tis but an houre ago, since it was nine,
And after one houre more, 'twill be eleuen,
And so from houre to houre, we ripe and ripe,
As then from houre to houre, we rot and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

My lord, I'le tell you, that selfe bill if vrg'd,
Which in th' eleuth yere of ye last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against vs past,
But that the scrambling and vnquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.—Id. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 1.

ELEU'THERIAN. Gr. Ελευθερος, from ελευθερος, free. Cockeram has this word, and interprets it, The deliverer.

——— Neptune o'er his main
With Pallas, pow'r of wisdom, at their helms
Will soon transport them to a happier clime,
Safe from insulting foes, from false allies,
And eleutherian Jove will bless their flight.
Glover. Leonidas, b. i.

ELF, v. } ELF, n. } ELFIN, n. } ELFIN, adj. } ELFISH. } ELVISH. } A. S. Ælfe, an elfe, elbe or fairie, (Somner.) The A. S. had their Dun-ælfenne, fairies of the mountains; wudd-ælfenne, fairies of the woods; wæter-ælfenne, fairies of the fountains. Dut. Alf; Ger. Alp. Of unknown origin. See ALPH. Skinner suggests the A. S. Ahleop-an, hleopan, to leap; because the superstitious vulgar, when seized with some diseases, imagine that a demon leaps, and lies upon them.

Elfish or elvish,—resembling elves; having qualities or dispositions like those ascribed to elves.

Fantastic, capricious; mischievous; also, strange, shy, reserved, sullen.

And ofte in monne's fourme wymmen heo cometh to,
And ofte in wymmen forme thei cometh to men al so,
That men cleputh elucne, and perautre in this manor
On of hem in this wommon bi get this child her.
R. Gloucester, p. 130.

This was the old opinion as I rede;
I speke of many hundred yeres ago;
But now can no man see non elves mo.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6455.

In olde days of the King Artour,
Of which that Bretons speken gret honour,
All was this lond fulfill'd of faerie;
The elf-quene with hire joly compagnie. Id. Ib.

Whan we be ther as we shulu exercise
Our elvish craft, we semen wonder wise,
Our termes ben so clergial and queinte.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,219.

He semeth elvish by his contenance,
For unto no wight doth he daliance.
Id. Prol. to Sir Thopas, v. 13,633.

Here besyde an elfish knyhte,
Has taken my lorde in fyghte,
And hath him ledde with him away.
Sir Guy, in Warton, vol. i. s. 3.

That man so made, he [Prometheus] called elfe, to weet,
Quick, the first author of all elfin kind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Euerie elfe and fairie spright,
Hop as light as bird from brier,
And this ditty after me, sing and dance it trippinglie.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act v. sc. 2.

——— My face I'le grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elfe all my haires in knots,
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds, and persecutions of the skie.
Id. King Lear, Act ii. sc. 3.

But if you light on the wrong end, you will pull all into a knot, or elfe-lock, which nothing but the sheers or candle will undoe or separate.
B. Jonson. Chorus to the Magnetick Lady.

Pro. Ye elues of hils, brooks, stãding lakes and groues,
And ye that on the sands with printless foote
Doe chace the ebbing Neptune, and doe flie him
When he comes backe. Id. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

——— Is this your guise
To have both your eares, and eyes
Seal'd so fast: as these mine elves
Might have stolne you, from yourselves?
B. Jonson. Oberon, the Fairy Prince.

Thou art too elvish, faith thou art
Too elvish, and too coy:
Am I (I pray thee) beggerly,
That such a flocke enjoy?
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

——— O, spite of spites!
We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish sprites;
If we obey them not, this will ensue,
They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iii. sc. 1.

From the like might proceed the feare of poling elve-locks or complicated hairs of the head, and also of locks longer than the other hair.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

For what do lovers when they're fast
In one another's arms embrac't,
But strive to plunder and convey
Each other, like a prize, away?
To change the property of selves,
As sucking children are by elves?—Hudibras, p. iii. c. 1.

About this spring (if ancient fame say true,)
The dapper elves their moonlight sports pursue;
Their pigmy king, and little fairy queen,
In circling dances gambol'd on the green,
While tuneful sprites a merry concert made,
And airy music warbled through the shade.
Pope. January and May.

For she was just, and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous deed;
And in those elfins' ears would oft deplore
The times, when truth by Popish rage did bleed.
Shenstone. The Schoolmistress.

Around their chief the elfin host appear'd,
Each little helmet sparkling like a star,
And their sharp spears a pierceless phalanx rear'd,
A grove of thistles, glittering in the air.
Cooper. The Tomb of Shakespeare.

In Chaucer's Tale of the Chanon Yeman, chemistry is called an elfish art, that is taught or conducted by spirits.
Warton. English Poetry, vol. i. s. 3. N.

ELI'CIT, v. } ELI'CIT, adj. } ELI'CIATE, v. } ELI'CITATE, v. } ELICITA'TION. } Lat. Elicere, elicitum, to draw out; (e, and lucere, to draw.) To draw out, to bear or bring out, or forth; to educe or deduce.

Which seminal principle is a mixture of the divers particles of matter and spirits, derived and elicited from the plant or animal.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 76.

Matters simply of fact, not objected immediately to our sense, have another kind of certainty, though not altogether equal to the former, nor simply infallible, yet so highly credible that may justly elicit the assent of reasonable men.
Id. Ib. p. 129.

Thus to give alms is a proper and elicite act of charity; to condemn the criminal is a proper act of justice, to speak well of all men behind their backs, so far as we can with truth, is an elicite act of equity.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Who went clad in woman's apparell, the better to elliciate, countenance, act, and colour their unnaturall execrable uncleannesse, which I abhor to think off.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v. s. 6.

And make it streme with light from forme innate,
Thus may a skilful man hid truth elicitate.
More. On the Soul, pt. iii. c. 2. s. 41.

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object.
Bp. Bramhall.

The schools dispute whether in morals the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will: but certainly the enmity of our judgments is wrought up to an high pitch, before it rages in an open denial.—South, vol. i. Ser. 3.

By bringing reason to bear upon observation, (the acutest reasoning upon the exactest observation,) the astronomer has been able, out of "the mystic dance," and the confusion (for such it is) under which the motions of the heavenly bodies present themselves to the eye of a mere gazer upon the skies, to elicit their order and their real paths.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

And why would he elicite sense from these Gentiles, when, upon their conversion, they were finally to be deprived of it, in ecstacies and new births.
Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 12.

ELI'DE, v. } ELI'SION. } Fr. Elider; Lat. Elidere, elisum; (e, and laed-ere,) to dash or strike off or from.

To strike off, to break off, to sever or cut off.

Before wee answere vnto these things, wee are to cut off that, whereunto they from whom these obiections proceed, doe oftentimes flye for defence and succour, when the force and strength of their arguments is eluded.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, b. iv. s. 4.

The cause given of sound, that it should be an elision of the air, (whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air,) is but a terme of ignorance.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 124.

Nor praise I less that circumcision
By modern poets call'd elision,
With which, in proper station plac'd,
Thy polish'd lines are firmly brac'd.

Swift. The Dean's Answer to Sheridan.

If you object that sep'rate r
Makes in one word an odd division,
Horace, I answer to that plea,
Has more than once the like elision.

Byrom. Critical Remarks on Horace.

ELI'MINATE, v. Fr. Eliminer; Lat. Eliminare, eliminatum, to put beyond the threshold; e, and limen, the threshold or transverse beam, the lintel; which Festus and Vossius derive from limus, i. e. transversus, obliquus.

To put beyond the threshold, out of doors; to put out, set free from, pass out of confinement; to be or set at large.

Now hast thou chang'd thee, saint, and made
Thyself a fane that's cupola'd,
And in thy wreathed cloister thou
Walkest thine own gray friar too;
Strict, and lock'd up, thou'rt hood all o'er,
And ne'er eleminat'st thy door.

Lovelace. Posthumous Poems. The Snail.

——— Assist my daring song,
Loose me from earth's enclosure, from the sun's
Contracted circle set my heart at large;
Eliminate my spirit, give it range
Through provinces of thought yet unexplored.

Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

We can hardly expect much more—than to be able to discharge and eliminate the errors that have been gathering and accumulating for about a thousand years past.

Lowth. Isaiah, Prelim. Diss.

ELI'XATE. } Lat. Elixare, to boil; which
ELIXA'TION. } Varro thinks is formed a liquore aquæ.

To boil or seethe. See the quotation from Burton.

Elixation is the seething of meat in the stomach, by the said naturall heat, as meat is boiled in a pot; to which corruption or putrefaction is opposite.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 20.

Though slight distinction be made between boil'd and roasted eggs, yet is there no slender difference, for the one is much drier than the other: the egg expiring less in the elixation or boiling.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 28.

From these experiments made about elixation and distillation in vacuo, the corollary seems to be, that such vessels may be very useful for the distilling and boiling of such bodies, which do contain thin and very volatile spirits; for all things will be preserved by their help, and nothing will avolate or fly away.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 591.

ELI'XIR. Supposed to have been introduced into the European languages from the Arabic. The etymology is uncertain. "Elixir,—quintessence; or the Philosopher's stone, or one of the names thereof; some take it for the chymical powder of production; (the word originally signifies force or strength.)" Cotgrave, and Minshew. It is applied (as Cotgrave says) to—

The quintessence, the purest, most inspiriting essence.

Lovelace uses it as a verb.

A, nay, let be, the philosopher's ston,
Elixir cleped, we soken fast eche on,
For had we him, than were we siker ynow.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,331.

Defies his foe with a fell spit,
To wade through death to meet with it;
Then in his self the limbeck turns,
And his elixir'd poison urns.

Lovelace. The Toad and Spider. A Duel.

Sacred Hierocles! whose heav'nly thought,
First acted o'er this comment ere it wrought;
Thou hast so spirited, elixir'd, we
Conceive there is a noble alchymy,
That's turning of this gold, to something more
Precious than gold we never knew before.

Id. To the Genius of Mr. John Hall.

Yourself you have a good physician shown,
To his much grieved friends, and to your own,
In giving this elixir'd medicine,
For greatest grief a sovereign anodyne.

Lovelace. To Captain Dudley Lovelace.

Raise the black spright that burns not with the fire:
And bring quintessence of elixir pale,
Out of sublimed spirits minerall.—Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 4.

So in the soul, when the supreme faculties of the will and understanding move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, here arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights.—South, vol. i. Ser. 2.

What enables me to perform this great work, is the use of my Obsequium Catholicum, or the grand elixer, to support the spirits of human nature.—Guardian, No. 11.

ELI'XIVIATE. } Lat. Lixivium, from lix.
ELIXIVIA'TION. } (See LIXIVIATE; and Vossius, in V. Elixum.) Statuo, says Vossius, voce lix, aquam vocari, indeque cinerem dici lixivium, qui aquâ est percolatus.

These ashes, being carefully elixiviated, afforded five scruples of white fixed salt, besides a little, &c.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 716.

And by examining these substances by fit and proper ways, as also the cap. mort. by calcination, elixiviation, and (if it will bear such a fire) vitrification.—Id. vol. iv. p. 800.

ELK. Fr. Elend; It. and Sp. Alce; Sw. Elg; Dut. Ellend; Ger. Elk, elend; A. S. Elch. In Gr. Αλκη: and so called, because it is a strong animal, from Αλκη, strength; and with this etymology Wachter professes to be the better pleased, because elend also signifies strength. Skinner conceives that as this animal abounds principally in the northern regions, it must have derived its name thence. Kilian, Wachter, and others have different conjectures. The A. S. Ic-an, may be added to them?

Th' unwieldy elk, whose skin is of much proof,
Throngs with the rest t'attain this wooden roof.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

Of the legs of the elk, the French Academists say, "Although some authors report that there are elks in Moscovia, whose legs are jointless; there is great probability, that this opinion [that the leys of some animals are rigid, &c.] is founded on what is reported of those elks of Moscovia, as well as of Cæsar's Alces, and Pliny's Mactilis."

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vi. c. 1. s. 1.

ELL. Written by R. Gloucester and R. Brunne, Elne. A. S. Eln; Goth. Alleina; Dut. Elne; Ger. Ellen; Fr. Aulne; Sp. Alna. All from the Lat. Ulna, and this from the Gr. Ωλενη: which, Vossius says, is properly spoken of the arm, and thence, as also the word cubit, transferred to measure. See ELBOW.

False elnes & mesures he brogte al clene adoun.

R. Gloucester, p. 429.

Athelstan in Scotland a selcouth ded he one,
He smote depe at Dunbarre, an elne in the stone.

R. Brunne, p. 29.

Mer. Oh her's a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 4.

Thus spake a true idol's priest that knew no ell whereby to measure religion, but profit: no proof of a just cause, but successe; no conviction of injustice, but miscarriage.

Bp. Hall. Soliloquies, Sol. 78.

As long visaged as she may then be thought, upon their wedding-day, Mr. Spectator and she had but half an ell of face between them.—Spectator, No. 52.

ELLES. See ELSE.

ELLI'PSIS. } Fr. Ellipse; It. Elissi; Sp.
ELLI'PTICK. } Elipse; Gr. Ελλειψις, from ELLI'PTICAL. } Εκ-λειπ-ειν, to leave out, (ek, ELLI'PTICALLY. } and λειπ-ειν, to leave.)

Applied to a figure in speech, whereby one or more words in a sentence are omitted; and also to a figure in conic sections, commonly known as an oval. See the quotations from Boyle.

Shortly after Galilæo, appears Christopherus Scheiner, who by greater telescopes viewed the sun with a curled and unequal superficies, and in or near the horizon of an elliptical figure.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

Whispering places are framed by elliptical arches laid sidewise; where the voice being delivered at the focus of one extremity, observing an equality unto the angle of incidence, it will reflect into the focus of the other end, and so escape the ears of the standers in the middle.

Brown. Cyrus Garden, c. 4.

But the elliptic orb of Saturn will be found to be more just, if you suppose its focus not to be in the centre of the sun, but in the centre of gravity of the sun and Jupiter, or rather in the centre of gravity of the sun and of all the planets below Saturn.

Maclaurin. Newton's Phil. Disc. b. iv. c. 2.

Such wary geometricians as the learned Dr. Wallis will tell him, that the vulgar notions of conic sections are not adequate to the figures producible by them; for when a right cone is cut quite through by an inclining plane, the figure produced by the section agrees well with the received notion of an ellipsis, in which the diameters are of an unequal length, yet if the plane cut the cone parallel to the basis, that conic section will be a true circle, having all its diameters equal.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 464.

Elliptical, almost like an egg.—Id. vol. iii. p. 299.

One, and only one, velocity, united with one, and only one direction, will produce a perfect circle. And the velocity must be near to this velocity, and the direction also near to this direction, to procure orbits, such as the planetary orbits are, nearly circular; that is, ellipses with small eccentricities.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

Yet these th' inanimate volution keep,
And roll elliptic through the boundless deep.

Brook. Constantia.

In horses, oxen, goats, sheep, the pupil of the eye is elliptical; the transverse axis being horizontal.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

"Looked upon as dull" [a] elliptically expressed to avoid the repetition of as.—Hurd. On Addison.

ELM. } A. S. Elm; Dut. Olm; Ger. Ulmen;
ELMY. } Fr. Ulme, Orme; It. and Sp. Olmo; Lat Ulmus.

There were elmes great and strong.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

The elm delights in a sound, sweet and fertile land, something more inclin'd to moisture, and where good pasture is produced.—Evelyn. The Forest Trees, c. iv. s. 6.

Should I my steps turn to the rural seat,
Whose lofty elms, and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws amusive.

Thomson. Spring.

How often have I led the sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, beside the murm'ring Loire,
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave the Zephyr flew.

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

——— If thy farm extends
Near Cotswold downs, or the delicious groves
Of Symmonds, honour'd through the sandy soil
Of elmy Ross, or Devon's myrtle vales,
That drink clear rivers near the glassy sea;
Regard this sort.

Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

ELOCA'TION. Lat. Elocare, elocatum, to place out: e, and locare, to place; locus, Vossius thinks, is from Λεγ-ειν, cubare, jacere. See COLOCATE.

A placing out, or away; removal from home.

There may be some particular cases incident, wherein perhaps this [consent in marriage] may without sin or blame be forborne; as when the child either by general permission, or former elocation shall be out of the parents' disposing.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 1.

ELOCU'TION. } Fr. Elocution; It. Elocu-
ELO'CUTIVE. } zione; Sp. Elocucion; Lat.
ELO'QUENT. } Elocutio, from Eloqui, to ELO'QUENCE. } speak out, (e, and loq-ui, to ELO'QUENTLY. } speak, which Vossius and Scaliger think from Λογ-ος, itself from Λεγ-ειν.)

Fr. Eloquence; Sp. Eloquencia; It. Eloquenza; Lat. Eloquentia; (q.d.) vis Eloquendi, the force of speaking. See quotations from Hume, and Blair.

Corynthis ben of aeaye and thei in lyk maner herden of the postle the word of treuthe, and weren peruertid in many maneris of false apostlis; summe weren peruertid of eloquence of filosofie ful of wordis.—Wiclif. Prol. to Corynth.

——— Ther is non that is here,
Of eloquence that shal be thy pere.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Prologue, v. 10,990.

And thilke time at Rome also
Was Tullius Cicero,
That writeth vpon Rhetorike,
How that men shuld her wordes pike
After the forme of eloquence.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And for to loken ouermore,
Next of science the seconde
Is Rhetoric, whose faconde
Aboue all other is eloquent.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Therefore, this point must needes followe to beautifie the cause, the which being called elocution, is applying of apt wordes and sentences to the matter, found out to confirme the cause.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 6.

Many men know the art very well and be in all points throughly grounded and acquainted with the precepts, & yet it is not their hap to prove eloquent. And the reason is that eloquence itselfe, came not vp first by the art, but the arte rather was gathered vpon eloquence.—Id. Ib. p. 5.

Thabridgement of whose woorkes, gathered oute by Justine, (who partely by his owne industrie, but more by the decay and losse of his auethor Trogus, obteined the name of a famous historiographer) I haue translated out of the Latin into English, thoughe not so eloquently as a noble could haue done, yet (I trust) accordyng to the true sense and meanyuge of thauethor.—Goldyng. Justine. To the Reader.

To mark the excellent seas'ning of your style!
And manly elocution, not one where
With horror rough, then noting with wit,
But to the subject still the coloure fit.
B. Jonson. Epistle to Mr. John Selden.

Preaching in its elocutive part is but the conception of man, and differs as the gifts and abilities of men give it lustre or depression.—Feltham, pt. ii., Resolve 48.

Lucullus was very eloquent, well spoken, and excellently well learned in the Greek and Latin tongues. Insomuch as Sylla dedicated unto him the commentaries of all his doings which he himself had collected, as to one that could better frame a whole history thereof, and couch it more eloquently together in writing.—North. Plutarch, p. 421.

True eloquence I find to be none, but the serious and hearty love of truth; and that whose mind soever is fully possest with a fervent desire to know good things, and with the dearest charity to infuse the knowledge of them into others, when such a man would speak, his words (by what I can express) like so many nimble and airy servitors trip about him at command, and in well ordered files, as he would wish, fall aptly into their places.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

She to her sire made humble reuerence,
And bowed lowe, that her right well became:
And added grace vnto her excellence:
Who with great wisdome, and graue eloquence,
Thus gan to say.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Some who (their hearers swaying where they would!)
Could force affections, comfort and deject,
With learned lectures eloquently told.
Sterling. Doomes-day. The tenth Houre.

Now Fitch alarms the lords; he hears for certain
This dangerous priest is got behind the curtain.
Fitch, famed for tedious elocution, proves
That Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves.
Swift. Upon Himself.

But, fourthly, if what has been said be not true; if the faculty of praying eloquently and devoutly on a sudden, be not a natural gift or acquired art, but the immediate inspiration of the Spirit, as some of us have thought, it will be a hard matter to rid ourselves of several consequences, which we should be loth to own.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

In order to be a truly eloquent or persuasive speaker, nothing is more necessary than to be a virtuous man. This was a favourite position among the ancient rhetoricians.
Blair. Lect. 34.

If I mistake not, our modern eloquence is of the same style or species with that which ancient critics denominated Attic eloquence, that is, calm, elegant, and subtle, which instructed the reason more than affected the passions, and never raised its tone above argument or common discourse.
Hume. Ess. On Eloquence.

All awful, to consult the peers repair;
Save Boemond, each majestic fills the chair.
When graceful to the senate Godfrey rose,
And deep the stream of elocution flows.
Brooke. Tasso. Jerusalem Delivered, b. i.

E'LOGY. } Fr. Eloge; It. and Sp. Elogio;
E'LOGIST. } Lat. Elogium, from the Gr. Λογ-os.
E'LOGIUM. } (See ante ELOCUTION.) Quævis brevis rei expositio, qualis in titulis, et similibus esse solet, (Vossius.) And see the quotation from Stillingfleet. More general in its application than Eulogium, Ευ-λογ-ια, quod dicitur in alicujus laudem, (from Ευ, well, and Λεγ-ειν, to speak,) though used as equivalent to it by English writers. See EULOGIUM.

That which is said or spoken (sc. well, or in praise of any one.)

I referre such scoffers to the elogie Alcibiades gave of his master Socrates, whom he compared to the gallipots of apothecaries, which on the outside were drawn with apes, owls, and antiques, but contained within precious liquors and soveraigne confections.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. i. c. 3.

Among these most pious cares I cannot omit one peculiar elogy, proper to your [King Charles] own providence, whereof I must repeat the original a little higher.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 147.

—— made the funeral sermon, who had been one of her professed suitors: and so she did not want a passionate elogist, as well as an excellent preacher.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 360.

I return you, sir, the two elogies, which I have perused with pleasure. I borrow that word from your language, because we have none in our own that exactly expresses it.
Atterbury. To Mons. Thriot, Ep. Corr. vol i. p. 179.

If Jesus of Nazareth had raised an army in defence of their liberty, and had destroyed the Romans, they would never have enquired farther concerning prophecies or miracles; this had been instead of all others to them, and they would willingly have given him that title, which was set up only in derision as the elogium of his cross, Jesus of Nazareth King of the Jews.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Every one that measures his actions by any elogium given him by the flatterer, sets his reputation upon stilts, which is not the surest way of standing.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 9.

I made a visit to the governor of the town, whose name was Mutekka, his manners were very pleasing, and he showed me some letters from the officers of the Brilliant, which appeared to flow warm from the heart, and contained the strongest elogy of his courtesy and liberality.
Sir W. Jones. Rem. on the Island of Hinzuan or Johanna.

Yet sometimes the pathetic may receive
The utmost force that eloquence can give;
As sometimes, in elogiums, 'tis the art,
With plain simplicity to win the heart.
Dodsley. Art of Preaching.

The whole elogy is worth perusing, as it affords a striking proof of the uniform genius of flattery, which, alike under all circumstances, and indifferent to all characters, can hold the same language of the weakest, as the ablest of princes, of Louis le Juste, and Cæsar Octavianus Augustus.
Hurd. Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

ELO'IGNE, v. } "Eloined or separated far
ELO'IGNMENT. } from. Fr. Eslonge; Sp.
ELO'IGNATE. } Elongado, It. Elongato; Lat. Elongatus," (Minshew.) And Skinner, Esloigner, (q.d.) Exlongare, procul habere; to have or hold afar or at a long distance. See ELONG.

"Fr. Esloigne, — removed, sent, set, put, banished or driven far away," (Cotgrave.)

It is used as a law term. See the quotations below from Blackstone.

For that, that by that meane they shulde eloygne or absent themselfe fro their domesticall affayres and shulde lose thair exercise and maner of lyvinge.—Acetts. Thucidides, fol. 45.

I'll tell thee now (dear love) what thou shalt do,
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay, though she eloigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too.
Donne. Valediction to his Book.

Nor is some vulgar Greek so far adulterated, and eloignated from the true Greek, as Italian is from the Latin.
Howell. Instruction for Travellers, p. 149.

If the person be conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction, the sheriff may return that he is eloigned, elongatus; upon which a process issues (called a capias in withernam) to imprison the defendant himself, without bail or mainprize, till he produces the party.—Blackstone. Com. b. iii. c. 8.

But if the distress be carried out of the county, or concealed, then the sheriff may return that the goods, or beasts, are eloigned, elongata, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown.—Id. Ib. c. 9.

He discovers an eloignment from vulgar phrases much becoming a person of quality.—Shenstone.

ELONG, v. } A. S. Leng-ian, prolongare,
ELO'NGATE. } differre, to prolong, to protract,
ELONGA'TION. } to differ. See LONG.

To protract; to draw to greater length, or distance; to draw, withdraw or remove to greater distance; to put or place farther off.

By seas, and hills elonged from thy sight,
Thy wonted grace reducing to my mind,
Instead of sleep thus I occupy the night.
Wyatt. The Lover prayeth Venus.

Upon the roof the bird of sorrow sat,
Elonging joyful day with her sad note,
And through the shady air the fluttering bat
Did wave her leather sails, and blindly float.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian was placed in the intersection, which is now elongated and removed eastward twenty-eight degrees.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from one another, as bears no proportion to what is real.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 9.

Frequent and thick, o'er all her limbs were seen
Th' elongated papillæ of the skin.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iii.

His skin (excepting only his face and the palms of his hands) was entirely grown over with an horny excrescence, called by the naturalists the elongation of the papillæ.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, Note.

ELOPE, v. } Dut. Loop-en; Ger. Lauff-en,
ELO'PEMENT. } currere, to run; A. S. Hlaup-an; Goth Hlaup-an, saltare, (to leap,) cum saltu currere. Equivalent to this is the vulgar expression, To hop off. Skinner says, elopement, when the wife forsakes her husband, and lives with the adulterer. And see the quotation from Blackstone.

To run off or away from, commonly applied, when man or wife run away with a paramour.

But now when Phaëtra saw my lands decay,
And former lucked fate, she left me quight,
And to my brother did elope straight way:
Who taking her from me, his owne loue left astray
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

And though I'm now in durance fast,
By our own party basely cast;
Ransome, exchange, parole, refus'd,
And worse than by th' enemy us'd:
In close cataste shut, past hope
Of wit or valour to elope. Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

Or, more politely to their vows untrue,
Love, and elope, as modern ladies do.—Cawthorn. Nobility.

Yet now by the statute West. 2. if a woman voluntarily leaves (which the law calls eloping from) her husband, and lives with an adulterer, she shall lose her dower, unless her husband be voluntarily reconciled to her.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 8.

But in case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony.—Id. Ib. c. 15.

ELOQUENCE. See ELOCUTION.

ELSE. } A. S. Elles, alias, alioquin.
ELSE-WHERE. } Else, other-wise; elles-hwær,
ELSE-WISE. } else-where; elles-hwider, else-wither, (Somner.)

"This word else, formerly written alles, alens, alyse, elles, ellus, ellis, ells, els, and now else, is no other than ales or alys, the imperative of ales-an or alys-an, dimittere, to dismiss," (Tooke, i. 181.) At p. 248, et seq. Tooke resolves some passages to explain and establish his etymology. The instances he chooses are those which his adversary thought would not bear his interpretation: (sc.) nothing else, how else, what else, where else.

You shall have a fool's cap for your pains; and nothing else, i. e. dismiss the fool's cap, nothing.

If a nation's liberties cannot be secured by a fair representation of the people; how else, i. e. dismiss it, (i.e. a fair representation of the people) can they be secured?

You have shown impotence and malice enough; what else, i. e. dismiss them (impotence and malice) have you shown?

Honour should reside in the breast of a king; although it might not be found elsewhere, (or anywhere else,) i. e. dismiss (i. e. leave out, take away, &c.) the breast of a king, it might not be found any where.

The others were assoiled, elles it were won,
& come azen to Engeloud, with joye & blisse inou.
R. Gloucester, p. 563.

Constantyn lette also in Jerusalem chirches rere
And wyde aboute elles wer, Christendom to lere, [i. e. learn.]
Id. p. 67.

To Yrlond heo flowe ageyn, & elles wyder heo mygte.
Id. p. 103.

Long dured he nouht, sithen he comen was,
But that God wille haf wrouht els his dede, alias!
R. Brunne, p. 227.

—— Lord it me forbede
Bote ich be holiche at thyn heste, let honge me elles.
Piers Ploughman, p. 45.

Ergo he ys nat alway at hom among gow ffreres
He is som while elles wher.
Id. Ib.

Takith heed that ye do not youre rigtwisnesse bifore men, to be seyn of hem; ellis ye schul have no meede at youre fadir that is in hevens.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 6.

Take hede to youre almes. That ye gene it not in ye sight of men, to the intent that ye wolde be seen of them. Or els ye get no reward of youre father whiche is in heauen.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For he is wont for timbre for to go,
And dwellen at the Grange a day or two:
Or elles he is at his hous certain.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3009.

For which as sone as it was dayes light,
With face pale of drede and besy thought,
She hath at scole & elleswher hem sought.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,520.

But soroweth sore, of that she fonde
No christendome in thilke londe:
But els she hath all his will
And thus with them she dwelleth still.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Whan we be deade and elswhere.—Id. Ib. Prol.

The full atteining of any thing by long time, is two wayes considered: for either it is of the body, or els of the minde.
Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol. 10.

And so is this matter, which would elswise haue caused much spyte and hatred, opened in our names, that ye maye quietly perceyue, howe vnconuely certayne of you triumphe and braggue vpon the names of false apostles, and despise euery man in comparison of themselfe.—Udal. 1 Cor. c. 3.

Yet all those sights, and all that els I saw,
Might not my steps withhold, but that forth right
Vnto that purpos'd place I did me draw,
Whereas my loue was lodged day and night.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

She saw, on crosses and else-what
By Stafford so set out,
That to haue seene her very knight
Made Eleanor no doubt.
Warner. Albion's England, b. xii. c. 70.

—— Who know'st not,
But that the charity I afford this stranger
My only son else-where may stand in need of!
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act ii. sc. 1.

—— I bring you witnesses
Twice fifteene thousand hearts of England's breed.
Bast. Bastards and else.
Shakespeare. King John, Act ii. sc. 1.

I was willing to quit the same, if we might have liberty to march to the next garrison belonging to the parliament, with our arms, and what else we had in the castle.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. I. p. 81.

The former [that an accommodation with the king was unsafe,] besides that it was obvious to all men, the king himself had proved, by the duplicity of his dealing with the parliament; which manifestly appeared in his own papers taken at Naseby, and elsewhere.—Ll. Ib. p. 231.

But if it were possible, that the desires of our constituents, desires which at once are so natural, and so very much tempered and subdued, should have no weight with a house of commons, which has its eye elsewhere; I would turn my eyes to the very quarter to which theirs are directed.
Burke. On the Economical Reform.

ELU'CIDATE, v. } Lat. E, and lucidus;
ELUCIDA'TION. } from lucere, to shine; of unknown etymology. See DILUCID.

"Fr. Elucider,—to clear, manifest, make bright or perspicuous; to expound, or express," (Cotgrave.)

I might refer the reader to see it highly verified in David Blondel's familiar elucidations of the eucharistical controversie.—Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 12.

Many a man, who was pretty well satisfyd of the meaning of a text of Scripture, or clause in the code at first reading, has by consulting commentators quite lost the sense of it, and by these elucidations given rise or increase to his doubts, and drawn obscurity upon the place.
Locke. Hum. Understanding, b. iii. c. 9. s. 9.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators.
Abbot.

Now in this view, which is that Christianity exhibits of its own purpose, the scheme of the Gospel is not only of the most transcendant use, as it confirms, elucidates, and enforces the moral law, but of the most absolute necessity.
Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

As they refer to the Nabob's minister in Great Britain for proof and further elucidation of the matters complained of, common decency, and common policy, demanded an enquiry into their truth or falsehood.
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts, App. No. 10.

ELUCTA'TION. Lat. Eluctari, to struggle out; (e, and luctari.)
A struggling forth; and thus, an escape.

Ye do in common sue to God for us, as your poor fellow-members, for our happy eluctation out of those miseries and tentations, wherewith we are continually conflicted here below, and for our society with you in your blessedness.
Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, b. ii. s. 7.

When I see his happy eluctation out of these pangs, and hear him chearfully rendering his spirit into the hands of his father; I am elevated with joy.—Id. Select Thoughts, § 37.

ELUCUBRA'TION. A Latinism of Evelyn's coinage. See LUCUBRATION.

I remember that Mons. Huygens: who used to prescribe to me the benefit of his little wax taper for night elucubrations preferable to all other candle or lamp light whatsoever.
Evelyn. Memoirs. To Dr. Beale, Aug. 1668.

ELU'DE, v. } Lat. Elud-ere; (e, and lud-ere, to play or sport.) See ELU'DIBLE. } DELUDE.
ELU'SION. }
ELU'SIVE. } To evade, to escape, to de-
ELU'SORY. } lude or beguile.

When the philosopher asked a penny of Antigonus, he told him it was too little for a king to give, when he asked a talent, he told him it was too much for a philosopher to receive: for he did purpose to cozen his own charity, and elude the other's necessity, upon pretence of a double inequality.—Bp Taylor, vol I Ser. 5.

This place of our Apostle stands for us unshaken, by any impotent blasts of his frivolous elusions, and shall warrant us against earth and hell, that a bishop may be the husband of one wife.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 10.

This is an excellent summ of religion, and the best interpreter of the spiritual sense of Moses's law, next to the sermons of the gospel: but without this the work of God had perished, and religion itself had been elusory.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b iii. c. 6. s. 1.

The stroke of humane law may also (even where it taketh cognizance, where it maketh provision to secure right, or repair wrong) often be evaded by power or eluded by slight, by gift, by favour But as the divine law doth extend universally to the prohibition of all iniquity whatever, (small as well as great, secret no less than visible,) so the divine judgment inevitably will reach to all.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 33.

There is not any common-place more frequently insisted on by those who treat of our constitution, than the great happiness and excellency of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible at pleasure by the force of power, frowns, and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast of our advantage in this particular over other states or kingdoms in Europe.—Swift. Drapier's Letters, Let. 7.

That such contracts, &c. were colourably and fraudulently contrived and made, by the direction of the said Lord Somers, contrary to his said oath, in deceit of his Majesty and elusion of the said acts of Parliament.
Parliamentary History, an. 1701.

With powers united, obstinately bold
Invade him, couch'd amid the scaly fold
Instant he wears, elusive of the rape,
The mimic force of every savage shape.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b iv.

By these mysterious ties the busy power
Of memory her ideal train preserves
Entire: or when they would elude her watch,
Reclaims her fleeting footsteps from the waste
Of dark oblivion.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b iii.

When now a breaking surge, with forceful sway,
Two, next Arion, furious tears away;
Hurl'd on the crags, behold they gasp, they bleed!
And groaning, cling upon th' elusive weed.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 3.

ELU'TED. Washed away. See DILUTE.

The more oily any spirit is the more pernicious, because it is harder to be eluted by the blood.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 5.

ELU'TRIATE, v. } Lat. Elutriare, to pour
ELUTRIA'TION. } from one vessel into another. Perhaps from Elutum, past part. of Eluere, to wash out.

The alteration of one tenth of its [the air] force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs.—Arbuthnot. On Air.

After all its transmutations, elutriations, and filtrations in the body.—Account of Origin. Phenix, (1707,) i. 44.

ELY'SIAN. The Elysian fields; Fr. Les champs Elisiens; It. Gli campi Elysii; Sp. Los campos Elysios; Lat. Campi Elysii, Elysium; Gr. Ηλυσιον πεδιον. Eustathius and Hesychius derive from α, and λυσις, (dissolutio) quod ibi animæ habeant statum indissolubilem et immortalem, (Martinius.)

—— The power I serve,
Laughs at your happy Araby, or the
Elysian shades: for he hath made his bowers
Better indeed, than you can fancy yours.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act iv. sc. 3.

But (continues she) when we speak of heaven among ourselves, give me leave to tell you, that I think we should look upon it under a very differing notion: and make a wide disparity betwixt the Christian's paradise and the poet's elysium.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 302.

Yes, for his sake I'll go a willing shade,
And wait his coming in th' Elysian fields,
And there enquire of each descending ghost
Of my lov'd hero's welfare, life and honour.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act iii.

O who of man the story will unfold,
Ere victory and empire wrought annoy,
In that Elysian age (misnamed of gold)
The age of love, and innocence and joy,
When all were great and free!—Beattie. Minstrel, b ii.

EM, i. e. En, or in, augmentative. Many words now written more usually with en prefixed were occasionally or indifferently written with im, (qv.) And see EN.

EMA'CIATE, v. } "Fr. Emacie,—made or EMA'CIATE, adj. } grown lean," (Cotgrave.) It. and Lat. Emaciare, to make lean; from Macie, to be long; from Gr. Μακρος, long; because things which are emaciated, seem or become long, (Vossius.)

To be or become, or cause to be, lean, meagre; to pine, waste or wear away; to lose or deprive of flesh, of muscular strength.

He [Aristotle] emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of its [the Euripus] reciprocations.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

* For the cold, lean and emaciated, such herby ingredients should be made choice of as warm and cherish the natural heat, depure the blood, breed a laudable juice, and revive the spirits.—Evelyn. Acetaria.

It is the miser; he dreams that the pale spectre of haggard poverty is pursuing hard after him; a cold sweat bedews his emaciated cheeks, and his teeth shake.
Knox. On Christian Philosophy, s. 56.

Or groom invade me with defying front
And stern demeanour, whose emaciate steeds
(Whenever or Phœbus shone with kindlier beams,
Or luckier chance the borrow'd books supply'd)
Had panted oft beneath my goring steel.
T. Warton. Panegyric on Oxford Ale.

EMA'CULATE. Lat. Emaculare, atum, to take out a spot or stain; e, and macula, a spot or stain.
To take out, clear off a spot, stain, or blemish; to purify.

Lipsius, Savile, Pichena, and others have taken great paine with him [Tacitus] in emaculating the text, setting the reading, &c.—Hales. Remains, p. 373.

EMA'NCIPATE, v. } Lat. Emancipare;
EMA'NCIPATE, adj. } mittere e manu seu
EMANCIPA'TION. } potestate, to dismiss
EMA'NCIPATER. } or deliver out of the hand or power: (e, and mancipare, from manus capere, to take by the hand.)

To deliver out of the hand or power; to free from the power or authority, to set at liberty, to give or bestow freedom.

But as the father, when, according to the ceremony of the Roman law, he freed his son from paternal authority, delivered him out of his own hand into the hand of another, (the purchaser.) Emancipare, to emancipate, is used as equivalent to—

To deliver unto servitude or subjection, to enslave. See the quotation from Smart.

The whole epistle [Senec. Ep. 186] deserves the reading for the excellent advice he gives on this and other subjects; and how from many troublesome and slavish impertinences, grown into habit and custom (old as he was) he had emancipated and freed himself.—Evelyn. Acetaria.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 23.

—— He [Vortigern] with love
Emasculate, and wine, the toils of war
Neglected, and to dalliance vile and sloth
Emancipated, saw th' incroaching Saxons
With unaffected eyes. Smart. The Hop Garden.

We have no slaves at home. Then why abroad?
And they themselves, once ferried o'er the wave
That parts us, are emancipate and loos'd.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

The opposition always connects the emancipation of the catholicks with these schemes of reformation: indeed it makes the former only a member of the latter project.
Burke. On the Affairs of Ireland.

And the husband and the emancipater nearly connected.
Sir W. Jones. Concerning the Rules of Inheritance.

E'MANE, v. } Fr. Emaner, from Lat. Ema-
E'MANATE. } nare, to flow or spring from;
EMANA'TION. } (e, and manare, to flow,) from
E'MANATIVE. } the Gr. Μαν-ος, rarus. Festus,
E'MANATORY. } (see Vossius, and Martinius,)—
E'MANANT. } "Manare, dicitur, cum humor ex integro, sed non solido nimis per minimas suas partes erumpit, quod ex Græco trahitur, quia illi non satis solidum, μανον dicunt." Martinius thinks it may be from meare, to flow.

"Fr. Emaner,—to proceed, issue, flow or come out from," (Cotgrave.)

In all bodily emanations, whose powers are but finite, it must needs follow, that the more is sent forth, the lesse is reserved.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The bloody Issue healed.

Though there were no such contradictious contrivance in the framing these species, yet they could not serve any purpose as to the memory, since 'tis against the nature of emanative effects, such as these are, to subsist but by the continual influence of their causes.—Glanvil, Ess. 1.

It is quite against their nature to subsist, but in the presence and under the actual influence of their cause: as being produced by an emanative casuality, the effects whereof dye in the removal of their origine.

Id. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 4.

The most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminated in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the works of creation and providence.

Hale. Origination of Mankind, p. 35.

Aristotle doth not deny God to be the efficient cause of the world; but only asserts, that he created it from eternity, making him a necessary cause thereof, it proceeding from him by way of emanation, as light from the sun.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. I.

Nor is there any incongruity, that one substance should cause something else which we may in some sense call substance, though but secondary or emanatory.

H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 6.

The actions, which naturally flow from such a well-formed mind, please us also, as the genuine marks of it; and being as it were natural emanations from the spirit and disposition within, cannot but be easie and unconstrained.

Locke. Of Education, s. 66.

Evidence brings a property emanent, (emanant) from the essence and being of knowledge; it follows, that that which includes the nature of knowledge in an infinite manner must be also attended by a most infinitely clear evidence.

South, vol. ix. Ser. 11.

We may seem even to hear the supreme intelligence and eternal soul of all nature, give this commission to the spirits, which emaned from him.

Sir W. Jones. Mystical Poetry of the Persians & Hindus.

Both these descriptions of law are of the same force, and are derived from an equal authority, emanating from the common agreement and original compact of the state, communi sponsione reipublicæ, and as such are equally binding on king and people too, as long as the terms are observed, and they continue the same body politick.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

The head majestic and the beaming eye,
That lifted speaks its commerce with the sky,
Heaven's golden emanation, gleaming mild
O'er the mean cradle of the Virgin's child.

Warton. On Sir J. Reynolds's Painted Window at Oxford.

EMA'SCULATE, v. } From Lat. E, and EMA'SCULATE, adj. } Masculus, a male. Mas,
EMASCULA'TION. } according to some from Mars, with the omission of the letter r. Scaliger, from Mamers, Osca dictio, signifying fortis, strong. See MAN.

To deprive of the peculiar properties of a male, or of manhood; to deprive of strength or vigour, of fortitude or resolution; to effeminate, to weaken, to debilitate.

For hereof, beside Empedocles or Tiresias, there are not a few examples: and though very few, or rather none which have emasculated or turned women, yet very many who from an esteem or reality of being women have infallibly proved men.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

Thus these verbosities do emasculate the understanding, and render it slight and frivolous, as its objects.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

Thus the harrast, degenerous, emasculate slave is offended with a jubilee, a manumission; servitude is his sensuality, he will not go out free, brings his ear to his master, and desires to be bored thorow it, that he may be a slave for ever.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 515.

Some could not refrain from tears; some little women at court, I suppose; or if there be any more effeminate than they, of whose number Salmasius himself being one, is by a new metamorphosis become a fountain near akin to his name, [Salmacis,] and which counterfeit flood of tears prepared over night endeavours to emasculate generous minds.

Milton. A Defence of the People of England.

Luxury had not emasculated their minds; and they threw off, with native elasticity, the burden of unjust dominion.

Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 7.

—— He [Vortigern] with love
Emosculate, and wine, the tolls of war
Neglected. Smart. The Hop Garden.

EM-BALE, v. } Fr. Emballer, to pack up, to EMBA'LL. } make up in packs, bales or balls; Ger. Emballen, merces compingere, (Wachter.) See BALE.

To pack or wrap up, to involve, to enclose, to surround.

O praise him sunne, the sea of light;
O praise him moone, the light of sea;
You prettie starrs in robe of night,
As spangles twinkling, do as they.
Thou spheare within whose bosom play,
The rest that earth emball.
You waters, banck'd with starry bay,
O praise, O praise him all.—Sir P. Sidney. Psalm 148.

And her straight legs most bravely were embayl'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwayne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Old. L. In faith, for little England,
You'ld venture an embalting: I myselfe
Would for Carnaruanshire, although there long'd
No more to the crowne than that.

Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act ii. sc. 3.

EM-BALM, v. } Fr. Embaulmer; It. Im-
EMBA'LMER. } balsamare; Sp. Embalsamar;
EMBA'LMING, n. } from the Lat. Balsamum, be-
EMBA'LMENT. } cause the juice or sap of the balm was the principal ingredient used in embalming.

Fr. Embaulmer,—to dress, anoint, or preserve with balm, (Cotgrave,) and other fragrant ointments.

See the quotation from Beloe's Herodotus.

With wyn and with oile, hus wondes he can lithe
Embaumede hym and bond hus hevede.

Piers Ploukman, p. 234.

The sauour of the roses swote
Me smote right to the heart rote
As I had all embaumed me.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And Joseph commaunded hys seruauntes that were phiefcions, to embawme hys father, and the physicions embawmed Israell xl. dayes longe, for so lõge doth the embawming laste, and the Egypcyans bewepte hym lxx. dayes.

Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. l.

Whiche was the cause also why it was lawful for them to vse more cost in the embawlming of the dead.

Whitgift. Defence, p. 727.

—— Strew me ouer
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife, to my graue: embalme me,
Then lay me forth.—Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 2.

But how weak anatomists they were, which were so good embalmers, we have already shew'd.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 4.

By this it seemeth, that the Romans in Numa's time were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians were.

Bacon. Naturall History, § 171.

We see how flies and spiders, and the like, get a sepulcher in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of the body of any king.—Id. Ib. §. 100.

The Ægyptians were afraid of fire, not as a Deity but a devouring element, mercilesly consuming their bodies, and leaving too little of them; and therefore by precious embalments, depositure in dry earths, or handsome inclosure in glasses, contrived the notabiest waye of integrall conservation.—Brown. Urne Burial, c. 1.

Though constant summer clothes the Indian soil,
Though Java's spicy fields embalm the gale,
Though Ganges sees unbidden harvests smile
And, all these sweets without Thee nought avail.

Mickle. Liberty.

The embalmers thus proceed: In the most perfect specimens of their art, they draw the brain through the nostrils, partly with a piece of crooked iron, and partly by the infusion of drugs; they then with an Ethiopian stone make an incision in the side, through which they extract the intestines; these they cleanse thoroughly, washing them with palm wine, and afterwards covering them with pounded aromatics: they then fill the body with powder of pure myrrh, cassia, and other perfumes, except frankincense. Having sown up the body it is covered with nitre for the space of seventy days, which time they may not exceed; at the end of this period it is washed, closely wrapt in bandages of cotton, dipped in a gum, which the Egyptians use as glue: it is then returned to the relations, who enclose the body in a case of wood, made to resemble an human figure, and place it against the wall in the repository of their dead. The above is the most costly mode of embalming.

Beloe. Herodotus. Euterpe, c. 86.

Lord Jefferies ordered the bearesman to carry the corpse to Russell's, an undertaker in Cheapside, and leave it there, till he sent orders for the embalment, which he added should be after the royal manner.

Malone. Life of Dryden. "Account of the Funeral."

EM-BANK, v. } To embank, is a common
EMBA'NKMENT. } word in speech.

To throw up a bank, to protect or secure, or confine with banks

To him the famous city of Babylon owed whatever it possessed of strength, of beauty, or of convenience,—its solid walls with their hundred gates, immense in circuit, height, and thickness,—its stately temple and its proud palace, with the hanging gardens—its regular streets and spacious squares—the embankments, which confined the river—the canals, which carried off the floods—and the vast reservoir, which in seasons of drought (for to the vicissitudes of immoderate rains and drought the climate was liable) supplied the city and adjacent country with water.

Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 29.

EM-BAR, v. (Also Im.) To bar in, to secure, to guard; and also, to guard against, to prevent, to prohibit.

Themselues, for feare into his lawes to fall,
Hee forc't to castle strong to take their flighte,
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall
He has them now foure yeers besieg'd to make thē thrall.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

If this commerce 'twixt heaven and earth were not
Embarr'd, and all this traffique quite forgot,
She, for whose losse we have lamented thus,
Would worke more fully, and pow'rfully on us.

Donne. An Anatomy of the World.

[The king] translating the mart (which commonly followed the English cloth) vnto Calice, and embarred also all further trade for the future.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 130.

EM-BARGE, or } Imbargo (says Skinner)
EMBA'RGO, v. } a word (jam etiam) well
EMBA'RGO, n. } known to the common people. Sp. Embargo, navium detentio, from the verb embargar, to detain, to retain, (q.d.) to detain by the opposition of a bar. Hackluyt and others write Embarge;

To embar,—to bar in, to stop or obstruct; and thus, to stay, to detain.

The first, to know if there were any warres betweene Spaine and England. The second, why our merchants with their goods were embarged or arrested

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 555.

Howsoever in respect of the king's departure, (at which time they use here to embarge all the mules, and means of carriage in this town,) I believe his lordship will not begin his journey so soon as he intended.

Cabbala. Sir Wm. Alston to Secretary Conway.

My Lord Digby went to court, and gave a round satisfaction in this point, for it was no voluntary, but a constrained act in the English, who being in the Persian's port, were suddenly embargo'd for the service.

Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 11.

Embargoes on merchandize was another engine of royal power, by which the English princes were able to extort money from the people.

Hume. History of England, vol. v. App. 3.

Thus the established law is, that the king may prohibit any of his subjects from leaving the realm, a proclamation therefore forbidding this in general for three weeks, by laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war, will be equally binding as an act of parliament, because founded upon a prior law.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

EM-BARK, v. } (Also Im.) Also written
EMBARKA'TION. } embarge; opposed to de, or dis-em-bark, (qv.) Fr. Embarquer; It. Imbarcare.

To go into a bark, or barge; to go, or cause to go, to put, on ship-board; and, consequentially, to go upon any risk, venture, or enterprise; to engage in.

Then when he had gotten his men of war together, he fraighted his ships and embarked his host.

Goldyng. Justine, fol. 32.

But the Corinthians, who bifore had their people embarqued & the succours of thair allyes all ready, wolde not so at yee.

Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 20.

The swineheard having followed them to the water side (for by that time were the thieves embarged with them) cried aloud unto the swine, as his manner was: whereupon they knowing his voice, leaned all to one side of the vessell, turned it over, and sunk it, tooke to the water, and so swam again to the land unto their keeper.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

Embarquements all of fury, shall lift vp
Their rotten priuiledge and custom 'gainst
My hate to Martius.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 10.

I was just embarking myself for England, about Christmas 1679, when one Mr. Holy invited me to go first a short trading voyage to the country of the Moskitos.

Dampier. Voyages, Introd.

He wandering here through many a scene renown'd,
In Alexandria's port the vessel found,
Where, anxious to review his native shore,
He on the roaring wave embark'd once more.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 1.

Meantime the royal progeny is brought
To Artemisia; urgent time requires,
Their father's fears the embarkation press
For Ephesus that night. Glover. Athenaid, b. ix.

EMBA'RRASS, v. EMBA'RRASS, n. EMBA'RRASSMENT. } Fr. Embarrasser; It. Imbarrazzare; Sp. Embaraçar; to hinder, to perplex: I believe (says Skinner) from the prep. in, and bar, (q.d.) obicem seu repagulum objicere, to oppose a bar or obstacle.

To oppose or throw in the way, a bar or obstacle; to debar, obstruct, to hinder, to perplex, to render intricate, to confound or confuse.

Unless we take care to clear the first principles of knowledge, from the embarras and delusion of words, we may make infinite reasonings upon them to no purpose.
Berkley. Principles of Knowledge, Introd. § 25.

Let us admire, then, the art and dexterity of the poet, who has extricated himself from the embarrassments he lay under, by this polite and ingenious device.
Lewis. The Thebaid of Statius, b. i.

Awkward, embarrass'd, stiff, without the skill
Of moving gracefully, or standing still,
One leg, as if suspicious of his brother,
Desirous seems to run away from t'other.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

From whence arose the embarras of David and Jeremiah (not to speak of the disputants in the book of Job) to account for the prosperity of some wicked individuals, in the present life?—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 5.

The three friends contend that the good man can never be unhappy, because such a situation would reflect dishonour on God's attributes. Now the doctrine of a resurrection supposed to be here urged by Job, cleared up all his embarras.—Id. Ib. b. vi. s. 2.

You will have the goodness to excuse me, if my real, unaffected embarrassment prevents me from expressing my gratitude to you as I ought.—Burke. Sp. to Elect. of Bristol.

EM-BA'RREN, v. (Also Im.) To cause to be barren, i. e. barred, stopt up; and thus—
To make or render unproductive, unfruitful.

Like the ashes from the mount Vesuvius, though singly small and nothing; yet in conjoyned quantities they embarren all the fields about it.—Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 9.

EM-BASE, v. EMBA'SEMENT. EMBA'SING, n. } (Also Im.) To put, place, or bring low; to lower, to depress, to degrade. See To DEBASE; now the more usual word.

And either vow'd with all their powre and wit,
To let not other's honour be defac't
Of friend or foe, who euer it embast,
Ne arme to beare against the other's side.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

Which he could wisely vse, and well apply,
To please the best, and th' euill to embase.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

Yea, shall I say more? we should, if we were wise, take from them their tribuneship; which most manifestly is the embasing of the consulship, and the cause of the division of the city.—North. Plutarch, p. 191.

All vain, luxuriant allegories, rhyming cadencies of similary words, are such pitiful embellishments of speech, as serve for nothing but to embase divinity; and the use of them, but like the plaistering of marble, or the painting of gold, the glory of which is to be seen, and to shine by no other lustre but their own.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

If the very condition of the creature, gives it such a shortness and hollowness, and disproportion, to the desires of a rational soul even in the most innocent and allowed pleasures; what shall we think of the pleasures of sin, which receive a further embasement and diminution, from the super-addition of a curse!—Id. vol. viii. Ser. 4.

EM-BA'SSADE. EMBA'SSADOR. EMBA'SSADRESS. EMBA'SSADRY. E'MBASSAGE. E'MBASSY. EMBA'SSIATE. } See AMBASSADOR. The usage seems now to be, to write *Am*bassador, and *Em*bassy. Low Lat. Ambasciator, Wachter says, is—
Any messenger of king, monastery, or state;—it is more generally—
Any messenger; or person sent or entrusted with a message or errand.

Sendeth som other wise embassadours,
For by my trouthe, me were lever die,
Than I you shuld to hasardours allie.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,548.

But as soone as the hete of thy charytye descended vpon the in the similitude of fyre, they were then made so constaunt & sure in theyr myndes, that from that tyme forwarde by no drede, threatning, nor persecucion, they feared to shew thine embassade & commaundement.
Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

And in that point Christ would haue those that his be, to excel and be ring leaders euen aboue emperours: as those, vnto whom, beinge his embassadours, he gaue the keies of the kingdõe of heauẽ.
Bp. Gardner. Of true Obedience, p. 41.

Enclyne thyne eare Lord and consydre, open thine eyes, O Lord, and se, and pondre all the wordes of Sennacherib, whiche hathe sente hys embassage to blaspheme the liuing God.—Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 37.

But when the erle of Warwik vnderstode of this mariage, he tooke it highly that his embassate was deluded.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 60.

Warw. I, but the case is alter'd.
When you disgrac'd me in my embassade
Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you duke of Yorke.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 3.

So that the dueness of respect to the ministers of religion, seems to be the common acknowledgement of mankind, grounded upon the relation they have to God, as his embassadours, and stewards of his mysteries.—Glanvil, Ser. 5.

Abbon Bere coming from his embassadry out of Italy, made a chappel of our Lady of Loretto, joyning to the north side of the body of the Church (of Glastenbury.)
Leland. Itinerary, vol. iii. p. 86.

Which more perplex'd him, and in nearer sort,
Than what France might by his embassage guess,
Or England deem. Daniel. Civil War, b. vii.

Whiles Anniball on this side the river, staied in giving audience to the embassages of the Gaules, he conducted over the regiments of footmen more heavily armed.
Holland. Livie, p. 420.

And instantly an embassy is sent
To Charles of France, to will him to restore
Those territories, of whose large extent
The English kings were owners of before.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Fabius thinking his embassie had been ended, and being somewhat hot and rash in defence of the Clusinians, gave defiance to the valiantest Gaule there, to fight with him man to man.—North. Plutarch, p. 57.

It is evident therefore that Herod received them not as kings, no nor with that respect that is due to the embassadors of kings.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

With fear the modest matron [Hersilia] lifts her eyes
And to the bright ambassadress [Iris] replies.
Garth. Ovid. Met. b. xiv.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frieze jerkin, and tattered cloths, certainly he would have but small audience, his embassy would speed rather according to the weakness of him that brought it, than the majesty of him that sent him.—South, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Then like heav'n's mild embassador of love
To man repentant bade the tumult cease,
Smooth'd the blue bosom of the realms above,
And hush'd the rebel elements to peace.
Cooper. The Tomb of Shakespeare.

Here, Persian, tell thy embassy. Repeat,
That to obtain my friendship Asia's prince
To me hath proffer'd sov'reignty o'er Greece.
Glover. Leonidas, b. x.

EM-BATHE, v. (Also Im.) To wet, to wash, to soak in water or other liquid; to cover, steep, immerse or overwhelm; as in a bath.

Coole violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balme, and cheerfull galingale,
Fresh costmarie, and breathfull camomill.
Spenser. Mviopotmos.

And she suppos'd she saw in Neptune's skies
How her star wander'd, wash'd in smarting brine
For her love's sake, that with immortal wine
Should be embath'd, and swim in more heart's-ease
Than there was water in the Sestian seas.
Hero & Leander, by Marlow & Chapman.

EM-BA'TTAIL, or EMBA'TTLE, v. } (Also Im.) Fr. Bataille; It. Battaglia; Sp. Batalla. A. S. Beat-an, to beat, to strike, to fight.

To fight, or engage in fight; also to arm or prepare for fight, to put in a state of defence; to fortify.

And whan I had a while igone,
I saw a garden right anone
Full long and brode, and eueridele
Enclosed was, and walled wele
With hie walls embataild.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

His combe was redder than the fin corall,
Embattelled as it were a castel wall.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,806.

High was his comb and coral-red withal
In dents embattled like a castel wall.
Dryden. The Cock & Fox

And whan that he was enbataild,
He goth, and hath the felde assailed,
And slough, and toke all that he fonde.'
Gower. Con. A b ii.

Into a felde she brought me wyde and large
Enwalled about with stony flynt,
Strongly embatel'd, muche costious of charge,
To walke on this wal, she bed I should nat stint.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

A second French transpierc'd him with a pike;
That from the height of th' embattled tow'rs,
Their mixed blood ran down the walls in showers.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

—— The night
Is shiny, and they say, we shall embattaile
By th' second hour i' th' morne.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 9.

Which when the consull perceived, he paid them againe with the like measure of feare, as they before had from them received, and with his armie readie embattailed, biddeth them battaile: who being privie to themselues what forces were wanting, forbare to fight.—Holland. Livie, p. 129.

Embattled Princes wait the chief,
Whose voice should rule, whose arm should lead;
And, in kind murmurs, chide that grief,
Which hinders Europe being freed.
Prior. Ode to the King, (1695)

—— O ye who roam
In exile; ye who through the embattled field
Seek bright renown; or who for nobler palms
Contend, the leaders of a public cause;
Approach: behold this marble.—Akenside. Inscriptions, 4.

EM-BAY, v. (Also Im.) To enclose or surround with a bay; a bowing, or bending, or curving of the shore; and, generally, to surround.

Upon Tuesday the 11th of June, we forsooke the coast of England. So againe Tuesday the 30th of July (seuen weekes after) we got sight of land, being immediately embayed in the grand bay, or some other great bay: the certainty whereof we could not iudge.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 149.

Upon another small land here was also found a great dead fish, whiche as it should seeme had bene embayed with yce, and was in proportion round like to a porpose.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 65.

Though there the Current be the pilot made,
Yet ere thou be where thou shouldst be embay'd,
Thou shalt upon another forest set,
Where many shipwrack and no further get.
Donne, Elegy 18.

Mes. If that the Turkish fleete
Be not enshelter'd, and embay'd, they are drown'd,
It is impossible to bear it out.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc 1.

Where opposite Eubœa Aulis lies,
And where the Locrian cities lofty rise,
Till Pagasa her friendly port display'd,
Where rode triumphant Argo safe embay'd.
Fawkes. Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, b. iv.

EM-BAY, v. To embathe; and (met.) to soothe, to lull, to delight.

The verdant grasse my couch did goodly dight,
And pillow was my helmet faire displaid,
Whiles euery sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And slumbering soft my hart did steal away.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c 9.

At that wide orifice, her trembling hart
Was drawne forth, and in siluer basin layd,
Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart,
And in her bloud yet steaming fresh embay'd.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c 12.

Their strength was gone, their cunning was away,
And furie in their stead maintain'd the fight,
Their swords both points and edges sharp embay,
In purple bloud, where so they hit or light.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xii. s. 62.

And all about embayed in soft sleep
A herd of charmed beasts around were spread,
Which the fair witch in golden chains did keep,
And them in willing bondage fettered.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

EM-BED, v. To place or set, plunge or sink; (sc.) as in a bed of mortar; in mortar—spread.

Reflect upon the number of muscles, not fewer than four hundred and forty-six in the human body, known and named, how contiguous they lie to each other, in layers, as it were, over one another, crossing one another, sometimes embedded in one another, sometimes perforating one another.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

EM-BE'LLISH, v. } (Also Im.) Fr. Embellir; It. Imbellire, ornare, decorare, from the prep. en, and Fr. Bel, and this from Lat. Bellus, (Skinner.)
EMBE'LLISHER.
EMBE'LLISHMENT.

"Fr. Embellir,—to *im*bellish, beautifie, garnish, adorn, be-deck, trimme up, set out unto the eye," (Cotgrave.)

But mekely she let her eien fall
And thilke semblant sate her wel withall
And eke her teares full of heaunesse
Embelissed her wifely chastnesse
Chaucer. Legend of Lucrece.

With this faire flowre your goodly girlounds dight,
Of chastitie and vertue virginal,
That shall embellish more your beauty bright,
And crowne your heads with heauenly coronall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

If women annoint their faces with a liniment made of it overnight, it dooth embellish their skin at one instant and with one dressing yea, it taketh away the pimples and spots that disfigure the face, in manner of lentils
Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 21.

How will sweet Ovid's ghost be pleas'd to hear
His fame augmented by an English peer;
How he embellishes his Helen's loves,
Outdoes his softness, and his sense improves!
Dryden. Ep. To the Earl of Roscommon.

These therefore have only certain heads, which they are as eloquent upon as they can and may be called embellishers
Spectator, No. 121.

Milton, though he fetched this beautiful circumstance from the Iliad and Æneid, does not only insert it as a poetical embellishment, like the authors above mentioned, but makes an artful use of it for the proper carrying on of his fable, and for the breaking off the combat between the two warriors, who were upon the point of engaging.
Id. No. 321.

Indeed the critic deserves our pity, who cannot see that the formal circumstance of sitting silent seven days, was a dramatic embellishment in the Eastern manner.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. vi. Notes.

EMBERS. A.S. Æmyrian; Dut. Amer. (See AMBER.) Junius observes, that the Dut. Ameringhen signifies scintillarum structura, and thus might be the same word as hameringen, i. e. to hammer or strike out, (sc.) sparks from hot iron. Skinner derives from old Goth. Eld, fire, and ber-an, parere, to bring forth, (q.d.) partus ignis, fire brought forth or produced. Wachter considers the Dut. Amer, amber, to be aliquid ustum, any thing burnt, from the verb amberen, anbernen or anbrennen, incendere, to burn. Junius explains the word,—

"Ashes in appearance extinct, but betraying hidden fire, by the faint and decaying light of sparks glittering among them." Used met. for—decaying heat, remaining warmth. And see AMBER.

Than as the coles can not be in the embres without sparkes, nor corrupcion of the carion without stenche, no more can he that hath a hole and clere hearte be, without enforcyng him to vtter louynge woordes.—Golden Boke, c. 15.

Fool, to believe the fire quite out, alas!
Which only laid asleep in embers was Sherburne. Nove Inamoramento.

Yet not in thoughtless slumber were they past:
For oft the heavenly fire, that lay conceal'd
Beneath the sleeping embers, mounted fast,
And all its native light anew reveal'd.
Thomson. The Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

Destruction withers up the ground,
Like parchment into embers cast.
Hart. Contentment, &c., under the Divine Will.

E'MBER-EVES. } Skinner thinks from ember, cineres, ashes; because the ancients used to fast with ashes cast upon their heads, or sitting among the ashes. See also Minshew.
E'MBER-WEEK.

In A.S. Ymb-ren, ymb-ryne, is "a circle, a rundle, a circuit, circumference, or that which in a circular course ends where it began: a revolution. Gearlica ymbryne, the revolution of the year; Ymbren fæsten, Ymbren wucan, Ymbren dagas (i. e. Ember feast, Ember week, Ember days.) As for the etymology of the word (Ember,) it cometh not (Somner adds) as is commonly received from embers, or ashes, which were used onely on (what tooke name from thence) Ash-Wednesday: but is compounded of ymb, or emb, circum, about, and rene, or rune, cursus, a course or running; and is applied to these Fasts, because constantly observed at certain set seasons in the course or circuit of the yeare." See also Marshal. Observationes in Versionem Anglo. Sax. p. 528.

It hath been sung at festivals,
On Ember-eves, and holy ales.—Shakes. Pericles, Act i. sc. 1.

Gnoth 'Twas well spoke of a cook. And are all fallen into fasting-days and Ember-weeks, that cooks are out of use?—Massinger The Old Law, Act iii. sc. 1.

EM-BE'TTER, v. To make, or cause to be, better, (qv.)

For cruelty doth not embetter men,
But them more wary makes than they have been
Daniel Chorusses in Philotas.

EM-BE'ZZLE, v. } (Also Im.) Chaucer writes embesile; "Fr. Embler,—to steal, filch, lurch, pilfer, nim, purloin, imbezel, convey away," (Cotgrave.)
EMBE'ZZLEMENT.

In the quotations from Dryden and Sharp, the applications seem to be equivalent to—bezzle, (qv.) sc.—

To waste or squander.

These wicked wretches these hounds of hel
As I have told here in this sentence
Were not content my deere love thus to quel
But yet they must embesile his presence.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Mary Magdaleine.

As God takes pleasure in doing wonders for men, he so loves to be acknowledged in the great works that he doeth He hath no reason to part with his owne glory, that is too precious for him to lose, or for his creature to embezell.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Five Loaves and Two Fishes

They proceeded to charge him by presumptions and suspicions, rather than by direct evidences and proofes, for embezzeling and averting to his proper use certaine treasure gotten from king Antiochus.—Holland Livie, p. 1016.

What when thou hast embezel'd all thy store?
Where's all thy father left? 'Tis true, I grant,
Some I have mortgag'd, to supply my want
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 6.

The attendance it [Religion] requires on our business, will not allow us to embezzle our money in drinking or gaming.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 1.

To remove doubts which had existed respecting embezzlements by merchants' and bankers' clerks, it was enacted, by the 39 George III. ch. 85, that if any servant or clerk should by virtue of his employment receive any money, bills, or any valuable security, goods or effects, in the name or on the account of his master or employer, and should afterwards embezzle any part of the same, he shall be deemed to have feloniously stolen the same, and should be subject to transportation for any term not exceeding fourteen years.
Blackstone Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17. Note 3.

EM-BE'LLOW, v. To swell or heave; applied to the waves of the sea.

And then embellowed high doth in his pride disdaine
With fome and roaring din all hugeness of the maine.
Lisle. Du Bartas. The First Booke of Noe.

EM-BITTER, v. To cause to be biting, piercing, penetrating; and thus, painful, hurtful, inflicting pain or distress of mind.

Which would soon embitter and debase al worldly pleasures, which are but ciphers in respect to these.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. sc. 2.

Thirdly, let it be further considered, that godliness is a most effectual antidote against all those inquietudes, and evil accidents, that do either wholly destroy or very much embitter, the pleasures of life.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 2.

It is our fond conceits, our froward humours, our perverse behaviours, which do create the trouble, which seemeth adherent to any condition, and embittereth every state; which from any slight occasion doth create vexation, and turneth every event into disaster.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

EM-BLAZE, v. } A. S. Blæsan, to blow; Ger. Blasen; Dut. Blaesen. To rush, issue, send forth or emit, (sc.) like a blast; i. e. suddenly, widely, rapidly. And thus also,— EMBLA'ZON.
EMBLA'ZONER.
EMBLA'ZONRY.

To spread or disperse, to divulge, to publish, to proclaim; also, to display or set forth, conspicuously, ostentatiously.

For sweet Variety herself did throw
To every bank, here all the grounds she dide
In lily white, there pinks eblazed white,
And damask all the earth.
G. Fletcher. Christ Triumph on Earth

Ne're shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt weare it as a herald's coate,
To emblaze the honor that thy master got.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 10.

On which when Cupid with his killing bowe
And cruell shafts emblazoned she beheld,
At sight thereof she was with terror queld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

Th' engladden'd spring, forgetful now to weep,
Began t' emblazon from her leavy bed.
G. Fletcher. Christ Triumph after Death.

But I step again to this emblazoner of his title-page (whether it be the same man or no, I leave it in the midst) and here I find him pronouncing, without reprieve, those animadversions to be a slanderous and scurrilous libel
Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus

From low and abject themes the groveling Muse
Now mounts aerial, to sing of arms
Triumphant, and emblaze the martial acts
Of Britain's hero. J. Philips. Blenheim.

Ere heaven's emblazon'd by the rosy dawn,
Domestic cares awake him. Id. Cider, b. ii.

Nor long inswath'd the sacred infant lay:
(Celestial forms full soon their prime attain:)
Her eyes oft darted o'er the liquid way,
With golden light emblaz'd the darkling main.
Sir W. Jones. A Hymn to Lacshmi.

Apollo here enthroned in light appears
The eye of heaven, emblazer of the spheres.
Mickle. Lusiad, b. 10.

Destin'd, alas! in foreign climes to leave
Her pale remains unhonour'd, while the herse
Of wealthy guilt emblazoned boasts the pride
Of painted heraldry. Blacklock. A Soliloquy.

E'MBLEM, v. } Fr. Emblem; It. and Sp. Emblema; Lat. Emblema; Gr. Εμβλημα, παρα το εμβαλλειν, to throw or cast in, to insert, to inlay. Est enim εμβλημα, says Vossius, sigillum quod operi alteri inseritur atque illigatur. And Pliny, Ulysses et Diomedes erant in phialæ emblemate, Palladium surripientes; which Holland thus paraphrastically and explanatorily renders, "A broad goblet or standing piece there was, with a device appendant to it, for to be set on and taken off with a vice, and the same resembled Ulixes and Diomedes stealing the Palladium out of the Temple of Minerva, in Troy," (Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 12.)
E'MBLEMIST.
EMBLEMA'TICAL.
EMBLEMA'TICK.
EMBLEMA'TICALLY.
EMBLEMA'TICISE, v.
EMBLE'MATIZE.

"Fr. Emblem,—an emblem, a picture, and short posie, expressing some particular conceit," (Cotgrave.)

And our now overshadow'd souls (to whose beauties stars were foils) may be exactly emblem'd, by those crusted globes, whose influential emissions are intercepted, by the interposal of the benighting element, while the purer essence is imprison'd within the narrow compasse of a centre.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 1.

Why may he not be emblem'd by the cozening fig-tree that our Saviour curs'd.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 80.

About the border, in a curious fret,
Emblems, impressas, hieroglyphics set.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Or is 't because such painted ware
Resembles something that you are,
Soe py de, soe seeming, soe unsound
In manners, and in doctrine, found,
That, out of emblematick wit,
You spare yourselves in sparing it?
Corbet. Upon Fairford Windows.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically: and so did the Ægyptians, unto whom the phœnix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 12.

Thus began the descriptions of griphins, basilisks phœnix, and many more: which emblematists and heralds have entertained with significations answering their institutions
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 20.

By Alciate, the great emblematist, he [the beaver] is turned to another purpose, to teach men rather to part with their purses than their lives, and by their wealth to redeem themselves out of danger.—Fuller. Worthies. Cardiganshire.

The word emblema having got into one, [public instrument,] it was thrust out by an express edict of the senate
Howell, b. iv. Let. 19.

He will have the twelve stones in the breast plate to signify the twelve signes in the zodiack, and their being ranged into four ternaries, to denote the four seasons of the yeare; his blew robe to emblematize the air, the flower-work at the hemme thereof the earth.
More. Defence of Philosophical Cabbala, App.

Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine or of hawthorn held,
Or branches for their mystic emblems took,
Of palm, of laurel, or of cerrial oak.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

O Pope! Since envy is decreed by fate,
Since she pursues alone the wise and great;
In one small, emblematic landscape see,
How vast a distance 'twixt thy foe and thee
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 1.

There ought to be useful morals and reflections couched under it, [an allegory,] which still receive a greater value from their being new and uncommon: as also from their appearing difficult to have been thrown into emblematical types and shadows.—Guardian, No. 152.

The sacramental feeding on the body and blood of Christ is the reception of spiritual nourishment, emblematically represented by those material elements, which contribute most to animal nutrition and refreshment; bread and wine.
Knox. On the Lord's Supper, s. 9.

He [Giacomo Amiconi] drew the queen and the three eldest princesses, and prints were taken from his pictures, which he generally endeavoured to emblematicise by genii and Cupids.—Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. iv. c. 3.

The image is apparently antique, and easily explained by those who know that anciently the sun was commonly emblematized by a starry or radiate figure.
Hurd. On the Marks of Imitation.

E'MBLEMENTS. Low Lat. Embladare, seminare, from the Fr. Emblaver, (Spelman.) En, and blavier,—of or belonging to corn or corn land.

"Emblaver,—to sow the ground with corn," (Cotgrave.)

If a tenant for his own life sows the lands, and dies before harvest, his executors shall have the emblements, or profits of the crop.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 8.

EM-BLO'SSOM, v. To cover with bloom or blossom, (qv.)

Sweet, O sweet, the warbling throng,
On the white emblossom'd spray!
Nature's universal song
Echoes to the rising day.
Cunningham. Day. A Pastoral.

EM-BO'DY, v. (Also Im.) To invest or clothe with body, to put into bodily, corporeal, material, or substantial shape; to incorporate; and (met.) to draw together into one united company or mass, as a body of soldiers; to embody the militia.

For so must all things excellent begin,
And eke enrooted deepe must be the tree,
Whose big embodied branches shall not lin,
Till they to heauen's light forth stretched bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you, must marrie me,
Either both or none.—Shakespeare. All's Well, Act v. sc. 3.

At this turn, sir, you may perceive that I have again made use of the Platonick hypothesis, that Spirits are embodied.
Glanvill. Witchcraft, s. 11.

The soul, while it is embodied, can no more be divided from sin, than the body itself can be considered without flesh.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 1.

From thee we came, from thee our being drew;
Whatever lives and moves, great sire! is thine,
Embodied portions of the soul divine.
West. Hymn to Cleanthes.

It is not, therefore, to rail at Lord Bute, but firmly to embody against this court party and its practices, which can afford us any prospect of relief in our present condition.
Burke. On the Present Discontents.

EM-BOIL, v. To throw, to throw forth, (sc.) from the surface.

(Met.) to be or cause to be warm, heated; to agitate.

Faint, weary, sore, emboyled, grieued, brent
With heate, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire,
Death better were.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

With whose reproche and odious menace
The knight emboyling in his haughty hart,
Knit all his forces, and gan sore to vibrace
His grasping hold.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1

EMBO'ISSEMENT. See EMBOSS.

EM-BOLD, v. } To bold or embold, bolden or
EMBO'LDEN. } embolden, is to confirm the courage, strengthen the resolution, to give additional courage, to encourage.

And for shee was so goodly (as me thought) mine harte began somedeale to be embolden, and wext a little hardy to speak, but yet with quaking voice.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. i.

But now we dare not shew our selfe in place,
Ne vs embold to dwel in company
There as our hert would loue right faithfully.
Id. The Court of Love.

This vulgare and cõmon dronkennes emboldeth man to set nought, yea by his owne life.
Udal. Actes of the Apostles, c. 2.

Upon whose approach their fellowes being more emboldened, did offer to board the galliasse.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 601.

For soone as he was vanisht out of sight,
His coward courage gan emboldned bee,
And cast t'auenge him of that foule despight,
Which he had borne of his bold enemie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

I must let you understand, I thinke myselfe in better plight for a lender then you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this vnseason'd intrusion: for they say, if money goe before, all wayes doe lye open.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. sc. 2.

'Tis necessary he should dye:
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.
Id. Timon of Athens, Act iii. sc. 5.

Till gentle heat, and soft repeated rains,
Make the green blood to dance within their veins;
Then, at their call emboldn'd, out they come,
And swell the germs, and burst the narrow room.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Free, as at Mansfield, he at court appears,
Still uncorrupted by mean hopes and fears.
Plainly his mind does to his Prince impart,
Alone emboldn'd by an honest heart.
Dodsley. Prologue to Sir John Cockle at Court.

E'MBOLIFE. Embelfe circle. Speight (as Skinner observes) explains—the oblique circle; but he himself rather thinks it is from the Gr. Εμβολιμος, intercalaris, i. e. the intercalary circle, when a day is intercalated each fourth year.

Speight, however, had Chaucer's own authority for his explanation.

The excellence of the sphere solide amongs other noble conclusions, sheweth manifest the diuers assensions of signes in diuers places, as well in right cercles as in embolife cercle.
Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie.

To know the assensions of the signs in the embolife circle in euery region, I meane in circulo obliquo.—Id. Ib.

These same signes from the heade of Capricorne vnto the ende of Geminy, beene called tortuous signes or crooked signes, for they risen emboligfe in our orizonte, and these croked signs ben obedient to ye signs that ben of the right ascencion.—Id. Ib.

EM-BO'SOM, v. To receive within the bosom, within the heart, within the feelings or passions, the desires or affections of the heart; to store or treasure up, (sc.) as in the bosom; to fix or seat deeply; to shelter.

Kind Lord, where is the kindnesse once thou swarest,
Swarest in truth thy David's stock should finde?
Show, Lord, yet show thou for thy servant carest,
Holding those shames in unforgetting mind,
Which we embosom'd beare of many a kind.
Sidney. The Psalms of David, Ps. 89.

This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady deare,
Who, glad t' embosome his affection vile,
Did all she might, more pleasing to appear.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

1. The deathless heir of all thy father's day;
2. Decently born,
Embosom'd in a much more rosy morn,
The blushes of thy all-unblemished mother.
Crashaw. In the glorious Epiphany.

His house, embosom'd in the grove,
Sacred to social life and social love,
Shall glitter o'er the pendant green,
Where Thames reflects the visionary scene.
Pope. Horace, b. iv. Ode 1.

That tranquil sea, where sorrows are no more,
No storm vext billows lash the peaceful shore:
There in heav'n's bliss embosom'd may you prove
The height of endless happiness and love.
Fawkes. An Epithalamic Ode.

EM-BOSS, v. "Fr. Embouster,—
To imbox, enclose, insert, fasten, put or shut up, as within a box," (Cotgrave.)

And there all night himselfe in anguish tost;
Vowing, that neuer he in bed againe
His limbs would rest, ne lig in ease embost,
Till that his ladies sight he mote attaine,
Or vnderstand, that she in safety did remain.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

Hee so disseized of his gryping grosse.
The knight his thrillant speare againe assaid
In his brass-plated body to emboose,
And three men's strength vnto the stroke he laid,
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 11.

EM-BOSS, v. Fr. Embosquer; It. Imboscare; to em*bush*, to plant or set wood, to enclose or surround with bushes, with wood; with a thicket of bushes or wood. Skinner says, as vox venatica, it is either spoken of the huntsman, and then signifies to drive the deer into the wood; or of the deer, and then signifies to hide in the wood. And Mr. Tyrwhitt, "Sheltered in a wood."

To go or cause to go, to drive, to take shelter in the bushes, in a wood; to enclose, surround, or encircle in a wood. See the next EMBOSS: the two first quotations from Spenser, placed there, seem to be, at least, equivocal.

And all men spake of hunting,
How they wold slee the hart with strength,
And how the hart had upon length
So much embosed, I not now what.—Chaucer. The Dreame.

Like that self-begotten bird,
In the Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows, nor third.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

EM-BOSS, v. } (Also Im: and see BOSS.)
EMBO'SSMENT. } Fr. Embosser, bosse, tuber;
EMBO'SSING, n. } an architectonick word, says Skinner. It is spoken of sculpture slightly projecting, which, by the Italians, is called basso and mezzo relievo; and thus boss may be corrupted from basso, which is applied to any thing relieved or raised but slightly, lowly; en bosse, distinguished from en relief; and thus applied generally, to any thing rising, projecting, or swelling forth. And see BOSSE.

To rise, or cause to rise, to raise, to project, to swell forth; to cover with bosses, projections, swellings, or protuberances, (in basso, in bosse.)

According to the old writers on hunting, a deer is said to be embossed, when it throws forth bosses, or round masses of foam from its mouth; or when it swells at the knees with hard hunting; and thus, to emboss is (consequentially) to hunt hard, to hunt down, to overpower with fatigue or weariness, and (as in Spenser, "Embossed with bale") to overwhelm.

There is not in Homer any word to correspond with embost in Chapman.

See EMBOSS, ante.

Upon a thicke palfray, paper white,
With sadell redde, enbrouded with delite
Of gold the barres vp enbossed high,
Sate Dido. Chaucer. Legend of Dido.

Of birral enbosed were the pyllers round.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

In her right hand a fire-brand she did tosse
About her head, still roming here and there;
As a dismayed deere in chace embost,
Frightfull of his safety, hath his right way lost.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Like dastard curree, that hauing at a bay
The salvage beast embost in weary chase,
Dare not aduenture on the stubborne pray,
Ne byte before. Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

In walls likewise did they insert many noble and most exquisite sculptures, and historical fables, half wrought up, embossed, and swelling, and sometimes more than half, which eminencies they now call in Italy by the name of basse and mezzo relievo.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

Which, when he knew, and felt our feeble harts,
Embost with bale, and bitter byting griefe,
Which Loue had launced with his deadly darts,
With wounding words and tearms of foule repriefe,
He pluckt from vs all hope of due relief.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 9.

But by ensample of the last daye's losse,
None of them rashly durst to her approche,
Ne in so glorious spoyle themselves emboose.
Id. Ib. b. III. c. 1.

Which drawing softly forth out of the darke,
He open shew'd, that all men it mote marke,
A gorgeous girdle, curiously embost
With pearle and precious stone, worth many a marke
Id. Ib. b. IV. c. 4.

Why are ye thus discomfited like hinds that have no hearts!
Who, wearied with a long-run field, are instantly embost,
Stand still, and in their beastly breasts is all their courage lost.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. IV.

His hellish arms were all with fiends embost,
Who damned souls with endless torments roast,
And thousand ways devise to vex the tortur'd ghost.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

For so letters, if they be so farre off as they cannot be discerned, shew but as a duskish paper: and all engravings, and embossings, (afar off) appear plain
Bacon. Naturall History, § 878.

The most accurate engravings, or embossments, seem [through a microscope] such rude, lungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a mattock, or a trowel.
Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. I. c. 6.

Box was the yoke, embos'd with costly paine,
And hung with ringlets to receive the reins.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b XXIV.

At eve, within yon studious nook,
I ope my brass embossed book,
Pourtray'd with many a holy deed
Of martyrs, crown'd with heavenly meed.
Warton. Inscription in an Hermitage.

EM-BO'TTLE, v. "Fr. Embotteler,—to make up in bundles or bottles," (Cotgrave.)

——— Stirom, firmest fruit,
Embottled (long as Priameian Troy
Withstood the Greeks) endures, ere justly mild.
J. Philips. Cider, b. II.

EM-BOUND, v. To bind up, to inwrap, to infold.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sinne of thought,
Be guiltie of the stealing that sweete breath
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
Let Hell want paines enough to torture me.
I left him well.—Shakespeare. King John, Act IV. sc. 3.

EM-BOW, v. } (Also Im.) To bow, to bend,
EMBO'WMENT. } to curve, to arch.

In summer's day, when Phœbus fairly shone
I saw a bull as white as driuen snowe,
With gilden hornes embowed like the moone
In a fresh flowring meadow lying low.
Spenser. Visions of the World's Vanitie.

At his own proper charge, great cost he hath bestowed,
In decking up our temples here with gilded roofs embowed
For honour of the Gods.—North. Plutarch, p. 411.

Two rowes of pillars, after the manner of isles of churches, also standing: the roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 349.

EM-BO'WEL, v. See DISEMBOWEL; to which embowel is used as equivalent.

To place, or plunge, or sink, within the bowels; to plunge or sink. Also,

To draw out, deprive of, the bowels, the entrails; to eviscerate.

His dreadfull hand he heaued vp aloft;
And with his dredfull instrument of ire,
Thought sure haue pownded him to powder soft,
Or deepe embowel'd in the earth entire:
But fortune did not with his will conspire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b VI. c. 8.

There let him hang embowelled in blood,
Where never any gentle shepherd feed
His blessed flocks.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

The wretched, bloody, and vsurping boare,
(That spoyl'd your summer fields, and fruitful vines,)
Swilles your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embowel'd bosomes.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act V. sc. 2.

This punishment for treason, Sir Edward Coke tells us, is warranted by divers examples in Scripture: for Joab was drawn, Bithan was hanged, Judas was embowelled, and so of the rest.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. IV. c. 6.

Their dead they bury not, nor burn with fires,
No graves they dig, erect no fun'ral pyres;
But washing first th' embowel'd body clean,
Gums, spice and melted pitch they pour within.
Jenyns. On the Immortality of the Soul, b. I.

EM-BO'WER, v. (Also Im.) To dwell within a bower; to enclose, (&c.) as within a bower; to surround, to invelope or envolve.

Ah Destinies, and you whom skies embow'r,
To his fair spoils his spright again yet give,
And, like another Phœnix, make him live.
Drummond. On the Death of Sir Wm. Alexander.

Where on the mingling boughs they sit embower'd
All the hot noon, till cooler hours arise.
Thomson. Summer.

Reliev'd from yon rude scene of party din,
Where open baseness vies with secret sin,
And, safe embower'd in Woburn's airy groves,
Let us recall the times our taste approves.
Mallet. Prologue to the Siege of Damascus.

EM-BOWL, v. To form into a bowl, or ball, or globe.

Thou our refuge, thou our dwelling,
O Lord, hast byn from time to time:
Long ere mountaines proudly swelling
Above the lowly dales did clime:
Long ere the earth embowl'd by thee
Beare the forme it now doth beare:
Yea, thou art God for ever, free
From all touch of age and yeare.
Sir Philip Sidney. Psalm 90.

EM-BRACE, v. } (Also Im.) Fr. Embracer; It. Abbracciare;
EMBRA'CE, s. } Sp. Abracar; from Lat.
EMBRA'CEMENT. } Brach-ium, the arm; the EMBRA'CER. } limb, which breaks out from EMBRA'CERY. } the trunk or body, (A. S.
EMBRA'CING, s. } Bræc-an, Tooke.)
EMBRA'SURE. }

To take within, to hold within, the arms; to comprise or comprehend, to enfold, to encircle, to surround; to hold, or take, or seize, hold of, (&c.) as with the arms; to hold fast, to constrain, to grasp; and more generally, to seize, take or accept.

Of the legal application of the word Embracery, Skinner says, qui alienam causam amplectitur, tutatur, et in se recipit.

Embrasure, in Fortification, adopted from the French, is an opening in a parapet (&c.) to receive or hold—any thing inserted or introduced; a porthole.

This frere ariseth up ful curtisly,
And hire embraceth in his armes narwe,
And kisseth hire swete, and chirketh as a sparwe
With his lippes.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 70,384.

[She was] so benigne, and so digne of reverence,
And coude so the peples herte embrace,
That eche hire loveth that loketh on hire face.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8288.

The second maner of chastitee is for to be a clene widew, and eschue the embracing of a man, and desire the embracing of Jesu Christ.—Id. The Persones Tale.

And with this worde where as he laie
Hire loue in armes she embraseth.—Gower. Con. A. b. III.

Make much of her and she shall promote thee: yea, if y^e embrace her, she shal bring the vnto honoure.
Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 3.

Nor requireth he so much to be honoured with ceremonies, as to be embraced with a pure hearte and mynde.
Udal. Romaines, c. 12.

And because that affinitie is an embracer of amitie, there was concluded a marriage betweene the Duke of Bedford, and the Lady Anne, sister to the Duke of Burgoyne.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 2.

But they say, he sore amended whan he was once consecrated archbishop of Canterbury, and least well his accustomed embracinges after the rules of loue, and became in life religious, that afore in loue was lecherous.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. II.

So fashioned a porch with rare deuise,
Archt ouer head with an embracing vine,
Whose branches hanging downe seem'd to entice
All passers by, to taste their lushious wine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II. c. 12.

You'l see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before you'l speake with Coriolanus.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act V. sc. 2.

What know I, but your grace made a trial of me;
Durst I presume to embrace, where but to touch
With an unmanner'd hand was death!
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act I. sc. 1.

'Bout the husband oke the vine
Thus wreathes to kisse his leavy face:
Their streames thus rivers joyne,
And lose themselves in the embrace.
Habington. To Castara, vpon an Embrace.

Forgive me countrey, and sweet countreymen,
And lords accept this heartie kind embrace.
My forces and my power of men are yours.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act III. sc. 3.

No word they speake, nor earthly thing they felt,
But like two senseless stocks in long embracements dwelt.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. III. c. 12.

I was then present, saw them salute on horseback,
Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act I. sc. 1.

Ant. Thus, by great favour of propitious stars,
From fearful storms, shipwreck and raging billows,
Merciless jaws of death, am I return'd
To th' safe and quiet bosom of my country,
And wish'd embracements of my friends and kindred.
Tomkis. Albumazar, Act IV. sc. 1.

The Neapolitan is accounted the best courter of ladies, and the greatest embracer of pleasure of any other people.
Howell, b. I. Let. 39.

Injurie of chance, forcibly prevents our lockt embraasures.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act IV. sc. 4.

Thy word is truth. Now since the understanding is that faculty whose proper office it is to close in with truth as such; the receiving or embracing the means of grace, which are called truth, is most properly set forth by the acts of the understanding.—South, vol. II. Ser. 10.

The queen in white array, before her band,
Saluting, took her rival by the hand,
So did the knights and dames, with courtly grace
And with behaviour sweet, their foes embrace.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Such a benefactour is Almighty God, and such a tribute he requires of us; a ready embracement of, and a joyful complacency in his kindness.—Barrow. Works, vol I. Ser. 8.

It was, according to their predictions, designed that Christ should establish a new covenant, upon better promises, of another eternal most happy life, assuring to the embracers thereof an entire reconciliation and acceptance with God.
Id. Ib. vol. II. Ser. 30.

We may add, that even those fearfull judgments were tempered with mixtures of favourable design, not onely to the community of mankind, but even toward the people whom it served to convince of their errours and crimes; to induce them to repentance, to provoke them unto the acknowledgment and embracing of God's truth, so palpably vindicated by him.—Id. Ib. vol. III. Ser. 37.

Embracery is an attempt to influence a jury corruptly to one side by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. The punishment for the person embracing [the embracer] is by fine and imprisonment; and for the juror so embraced, if it be by taking money, the punishment is (by divers statutes of the reign of Edward III.) perpetual infamy, imprisonment for a year, and forfeiture of the tenfold value.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. IV. c. 10.

Bashful at first, she smiles at length on her embracer, and expresses her joy with inarticulate murmurs.
Sir W. Jones. The Songs of Jayadeva.

Full ninety brazen guns her port holes fill,
Ready with nitrous magazines to kill,
From dread embrazures formidably peep
And seem to threaten ruin to the deep.
Falconer. Description of a ninety-gun Ship.

[We saw] on the side of the Hill an old ruined parapet with four or five embrasures.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. VI. c. 5.

EM-BRAID, v. (Also Im.) Used as equivalent to upbraid, (qv.) See also BRAID.

For the sunne, the fountayne of lyght, shal waxe darke, therby as it were embraydyng the vngodly with theyr blyndnes, because they would not se the euerlastyng sunne and lanterne of the worlde.—Udal. Marke, c. 13.

But the pourpose that he wente aboute was, by makyng a countenaunce of marueyllyng, to commend vnto the Jewes the centurion's affiaunce and assured trust in God: and also to embraide them with their vnbelief, by this exaumple of a man being bothe a heathen, and a souldier.—Id. Luke, c. 7

Unto whom Plutarche, without any change of countenance, answered in this fourme, thou embraydest me causles with wrath and impacience, I pray the, what perceiuest thou in me, that I am angry or oute of pacience.

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 20.

EM-BRAUD. } See Embroider.
Embro'ud. }

EM-BRA'NGLE, v. (Or Im.) See To Brangle.

Whenever I attempt to frame a simple idea of time, abstracted from the succession of ideas in my mind, which flows uniformly, and is participated by all beings, I am lost and embrangled in inextricable difficulties.

Berkley. Of Humane Knowledge, pt. i. § 98.

EM-BRAVE, v. In the quotation from Beaumont's Psyche, it is—

To inspire bravery or courage; to encourage. In the other examples—

To set off bravely, to deck, to dress out, to adorn.

All that which Egypt whilome did deuise,
All that which Greece their temples to embraue,
After the Ionick, Attick, Dorick guise

Spenser. The Ruins of Rome.

Like as a ship in which no balance lies,
Without a pilot on the sleeping waves,
Fairly along with wind and water flies,
And painted masts with silken sails embraues.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Green brakes and primrose sweet his seemly hearse embraue.—P. Fletcher. To Sir Anthony Irby.

Psyche, embrav'd by Charis's generous flame,
Strives in devotion's furnace to refine
Her pious self.—Beaumont. Psyche, (1651) xvii. Arg.

Full royally along the lawn they tread,
And each with circling gold embraued had his head.

Thompson. The Nativity.

EM-BREW. See Embrue.

EM-BRIGHT, v. To brighten, to be luminous, shining, splendid.

Mercy, co-partner of great George's throne,
Through the embrighted air ascendant flies,
Duteous, the peace-bestowing maid is flown
To smooth his halcyon progress to the skies.

Cunningham. On the Death of his late Majesty.

E'MBROCATE, v. } Gr. Εμβρεχ-ειν, εν, and Embroca'tion. } βρεχ-ειν, to moisten. See the quotation from Holland's Plutarch.

"Fr. Embrocation,—an embrochation; a fomenting, a besprinkling or gentle bathing of the head, or other part, with a liquor falling from aloft upon it in the manner of rain," (Cotgrave.)

Embrochation, a devise that physitions have to foment the head or any other part, with some liquor falling from aloft upon it, in manner of rain, whence it took its name.

Holland. Plutarch. Explanation of Obscure Words.

To scoure away the foule dandruffe, an embrochation of it (wild mint) and vinegre upon the head in the sun is counted singular.—Id. Plinie, b. xx. c. 14.

I embrocated the tumour with ol. litior. and cham.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 9.

EM-BROIDER, v. } (Or Im.) See Border,
Embro'iderer. } and Broid.
Embro'idery. }

To Braid, breid or broid; A.S. Breyd-an; Dut. Breyd-en; and the comp. em- or en-, braud, or broud, appear to have been confounded with broider and embroider; Fr. Border or broder; Sp. Bordar; Dut. Boorduren. To braid or embraud, is—

To knit, to plait or plight, to wreath, to interweave. To broider or embroider, is—

To surround with an edge or border, (sc.) of figured-work, of needle-work; generally, to adorn with needle-work; (met.) to decorate with artificial ornaments, with delusive graces.

This wofull lady ylearned had in youth
So that she worken and embrauden couth.

Chaucer. Legend of Philomene.

Embrouded was he, as it were a mede
Alle ful of freshe floures, white and rede.

Id. The Prologue, v. 89.

As to the firste sinne in superfluitie of clothing, which that maketh it so dere, to the harme of the peple, not only the coste of the embroudery, the disguising, &c.

Id. The Persones Tale.

And whan she taketh her worke on honde
Of wevyng, or of embroudrie,
Than can I not but muse and prie
Upon hir fingers longe and smale.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

This wight vpon a speare tho
A penaell, whiche was wel begone
Embroudred.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Then came a company that the Persians call immortall, the ryches of whose apparell exceeded farre the rest; they had all chains of golde coates embrodered with golde, and sleues sett with pearle.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 24.

A persone vicare or parishe preste, by usynge their veluet cappes embrowdred with laces, do make some men thynke that they be ashamyd of theyr crounes that reuerend token of the order of preesthode.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv.

No conning artificer, caruer, painter, nor gylder, embroderer, goldesmythe, nor sylke worker, with such other lyke of what occupacion soeuer thei be or haue bene to thy comodite shall neuermore be found so againe.

Bale. Image, pt. iii.

His garment was disguised very vaine,
And his embrodered bonnet set awry.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

The long robes embrodered before, called Prætextæ, were devised by the Tuscanes. The Trabeæ were roiall robes, and I find that kings and princes only ware them. In Homer's time also, they used garments embrodered [pictas] with imagerie and floure worke, and from thence came the triumphant robes. As for embrouderie [acus facere] itselfe and needle-worke, it was the Phrygians' invention: and hereupon embroiderers in Latine bee called Phrygiones.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 48.

I am ashamed thus to employ my pen in correcting this embroiderer, who has stuffed his writings with so many lies, that those who bear him the least ill will, are forced to blush at his fopperies and toyes, wherewith he endeavours to feed the eyes of his readers.—North. The Life of Gyonismbec.

Like saphire pearle, and rich embroiderie,
Buckled below faire knighthood's bending knee.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

Here ruddy brass and gold refulgent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

All this is done when first the western breeze
Becalms the year and smooths the troubled seas;
Before the chattering swallow builds her nest,
Or fields in Spring's embroidery are drest.

Addison. Virgil, Geor. 4.

When, hanging 'midst the costly panoply,
A scarf embroider'd met the hero's eye,
Which fair Cassandra's skilful hands had wrought,
A present for her lord.—Wilkie. Epigoniad, b. vi.

EM-BROIL, v. } Fr. Embrouiller; It. Im-
Embro'ilment. } brogliare, confundere, perturbare, intricare; to render confused, disturbed, or intricate. "Fr. Embrouiller; to pester, intangle, incumber, intricate, confound," (Cotgrave.) See Broil.

To confound, to mingle, to disturb, to trouble, to disorder.

But this so wretched state are kingdoms in,
Where one man's course shall all the rest embroil.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Which now [his Muse] (but little past half her long way)
Stands stumbling at the horrours that succeed;
Weary with these embroilments, fain would stay
Her further course, unwilling to proceed.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

Auspicious Queen! since in thy realms secure
Of peace thou reign'st, and Victory attends
Thy distant ensigns, with compassion view
Europe embroil'd.—J. Philips. Blenheim.

He [Prince of Orange] was not apprehensive of a new embroilment, but rather wished it.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1678.

And better would it suit thy rev'rend age,
Thy station, quality, and kindred blood,
To hush ill-judging clamour, and cement
Divided factions to my throne again,
Than thus embroil the state.

Smollet. The Regicide, Act iii. sc. 8.

EM-BRONZE, v. Æneus ut stes; that you may stand in brass or bronze.

Will you in largesses exhaust your store
That you may proudly stalk the Circus o'er;
Or in the Capitol embronz'd may stand
Spoil'd of your fortune and paternal land.

Francis. Horace, Sat. b. ii.

EM-BROWN, v. (Also Im.) To render brown; to give a brown hue or colour to; that colour which things have that have been burn-ed.

Whence the gay spring exults in flowery pride,
And autumn with the bleeding grape is dy'd,
Whence summer suns embrown the labouring swains,
And shivering winter pines in icy chains.

Fenton. Epistle to Mr Southern.

When Eve embrowns the verdant grove
And Philomel laments her love,
Each sigh I breathe, my love reveals,
And tells the pang my bosom feels.

Lloyd, Air 5. In the Capricious Lover.

EMBRU'E, or } Also written Imbrue; which
Embre'w, v. } Junius thinks may, by transposition of the letter r, be from the Lat. Imbuere. Skinner also, that such may be the case; otherwise from the Fr. Abbreuver, or our in, and breu, (qv.) The Fr. Embreuver is,—"to moisten, bedew, soak in, soften with liquor; also, to dye, indue, imbue," (Cotgrave.) Breuvage, Menage says, is by transposition beurrage, and beuvrage, formed from the Lat. Bib-ere, to drink. See Beverage, and Imbrue.

To moisten, to soak, or steep.

The blinde did not foorthwith receiue his sight, but as soon as he was enoincted with claye, he is commaunded to go to the poole Siloe, and there to washe awaie the claye wherwith his eyes were embreewed.—Udal. John, c. 9.

For, findinge you armed with swearde, and fiere, and embrewed with our bloude, wee might wel haue spared you some other name, [aduersaries.]

Jewell. An Answer to M. Hardinge, Preface.

Liue thou, and to thy mother dear attest,
That cleare she dide from blemish criminall;
Thy little hands embrew'd in bleeding breast,
Loe, I for pledges leaue. So giue me leaue to rest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here
All on a heape, like to the slaughtered lambe.

Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act ii. sc. 4.

Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
With passing through the brakes and prickly thorns;
Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embru'd.

Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

Every consideration which heightens his matchless virtues, and endears his memory to us, serves also to enhance the wickedness of those sons of Belial, who were the instruments of his ruin, and embrued their hands in his blood.

Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

I mark'd his desultory pace,
His gestures strange and varying face,
With many a mutter'd sound:
And ah! too late aghast I view'd
The reeking blade, the hand embru'd;
He fell, and groaning grasp'd in agony the ground.

Warton. The Suicide.

EM-BRUTE, v. To reduce to the state or condition of a brute; to brutify.

From ev'ry tie, from ev'ry duty freed,
Without a balance, and without a creed,
Dead ev'ry sense, each particle divine,
And all the man embruted in the swine.

Cawthorne. The Regulation of the Passions.

E'MBRYO, n. } Fr. Embryon; It. Embrione;
E'mbryon. } Sp. Embrion; Lat. Embryo
E'mbryous. } and embryon; Gr. Εμβρυον,
Embry'onate. } παρα το εντος της μητρος βρυειν, quod intus in utero pullulat.

Any thing budding or germinating, sprouting or shooting forth; any thing in the first stages of germination or generation in the animal or vegetable kingdom. Applied (met.) to any thing in an early, unformed, rude, unfinished state.

All was compos'd within this goodly room,
A perfect shape this embryo was become.

Drayton. The Owl.

Hon. I am full of thoughts,
And something there is here I must give form to,
Though yet an embryon.

Massinger. The Picture, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— These fifteen weeks
(So long as since the plot was but an embrion)
Have I, with burning lights, mixt vigilant thoughts,
In expectation of this hated play.

B. Jonson. Poetaster, Introd.

Did we learn such an alphabet in our embryo state?

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 4.

Contemplation generates; action propagates. Without the first the latter is defective; without the last, the first is but abortive and embryous.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 14.

So are the wicked designs of gain often disappointed in the embryo, and the contrivers of them, instead of approving themselves to be more wise and subtle men than others, do appear at last to be fools.

Bp. Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 4.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation should the nourishment be carried to the embryon in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way?

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

But neither by these words, the body that shall be, can St. Paul be suppos'd to denote this insensible little embryonated plant, for that is already in being, contained in the seed that is sown, and therefore could not be spoke of under the name of the body that shall be.

Locke. Second Reply to the Bp. of Worcester.

To make this probable, we took not iron ore, or embryonated mars, but pure steel itself, the same as needles were made of.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 798.

An embryo breed! of such a doubtful frame,
You scarce could know the sex but by the name.

P. Whitehead. Honour, a Satire, (1747.)

Many of these trees produce the embryos of the leaves and flowers in one year, and bring them to perfection the following. These tender embryos are wrapped up with a compactness which no art can imitate: in which state they compose what we call the bud.—Paley. Nat. Theol. c. 20.

EM-BUSH, v. } To ambush, (qv.) to go into,
EMBU'SHMENT. } take shelter in, hide or conceal in a bush or wood, (sc.) for the purpose of surprising an enemy.

Then shuln ye evermo countrewaite emboyssements, and alle espiale.—Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

For it betid vpon a daie
In to the pass whan he was fall,
The embuschementes to breaken all,
And hym beclipte on euery side,
That flee ne might he not aside.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

That thing troubled greatly Parmenio, doubting that his enemies had laide some embushment for him, and therefore durst not goe an unknowen waye without a guyde.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 46.

And they fledde for the nones towarde their bushmēt, and whan they of the bushment sawe the Frechmen chase their company, they issued out of their embushment, but it was a lytell to sone.—Berners. Froiss. Chron. vol. i. c. 362.

He without saying a word departed from us, embushing himself presently among the bushes and brambles, leaving us wholly disabled to follow him in those rough and unhaunted places.—Shelton. Don Quixote, b. iii. c. 9.

EM-BU'SY, v. To occupy or employ, to engage, fully, wholly, actively.

But truely the free liberalitie of good people shal neuer faill that man, whiche with a sincere mynde dooeth altogether embusie and occupie himself in preaching the gospel.

Udal. Luke, c. 8.

But, good madame, the accustome and vsage
Of auncient poetes ye wote full well hath bene,
Themselfs to embusy with all their whole corage
So that theyr workes myght famously be sene.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

In medyll warke rayseyng byrdes in bowres,
With vertue enbosed all tymes and howres. Id. Ib.

EME'ND, v. }
EMENDA'TION. } Fr. Emender; It. and Lat. Emendare; (e, and menda, a deficiency.) See AMEND.
EME'NDATORY. }
To free from deficiency, fault, blemish; to repair, correct, improve, reform.

The prynters herof were very desirous to have the Bible come forth as faultlesse and emendatly as the shortnes of tyme for the recognysing of the same wold require.

Taverner. Dedication to the King, (Bible, 1539.)

A strong earthquake would shake them to a chaos, from which the successive force of the sun, rather than creation, hath a little emended them.—Feltham. Low Countries, pt. ii.

Certain it is, that God removed the candlestick from the Levantine Churches, because he had a quarrel unto them; for that punishment is never sent upon pure designes of emendation, or for direct and immediate purposes of the divine glory, but ever makes reflexion upon the past sinne.

Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, p. 3. Disc. 18.

That useful part of learning which consists in emendations, knowledge of different readings, and the like, is what in all ages persons extremely wise and learned have had in great veneration.—Spectator, No. 328.

And I may say, with truth, that having become from this circumstance as impartial, if not as fastidious, to my own work, as any other critic could possibly have been, I hardly left a single line in it without giving it what I thought an emendation.—Mason. Preface to Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

He was charmed with the elegance of this writer; and the high credit in which emendatory criticism of which Paterculus stood much in need, was held in the beginning of this century, occasioned by the dazzling reputation of such men as Bentley and Hare, very naturally seduced a young enterprizing scholar into an attempt of this nature.

Hurd. Life of Warburton.

He had, what is the first requisite to emendatory criticism, that intuition by which the Poet's intention is immediately discovered, and that dexterity of intellect which dispatches his work by the easiest means.—Johnson. Pref. to Shakes.

E'MERALD, n. Anciently Emeraud; Fr. Esmeraude; Sp. Esmeralda; It. Smeraldo; Dut. and Ger. Schmaragd; Lat. Smaragdus; Gr. Σμαραγδος, and μαραγδος, Gr. Σμαρασσ-ειν, and μαρασσ-ειν, lucere, splendere, to shine, to be bright.

See the quotation from Holland's Plinie.

——— The semes echon
As it were a maner garnishing
Was set with emerauds one and one.

Chaucer. The Floure & the Leafe.

True it is, that we take great delight to behold greene hearbes and leaves of trees, but this is nothing to the pleasure wee have in looking upon the emerand, for compare it with other things, be they never so greene, it surpasseth them all in pleasant verdure.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 5.

Meand'ring rivers smoothly smiling passe
And whilst they (lover-like) kisse courted lands,
Would emulate the emerauld like grasse,
All pav'd with pearle, empal'd with golden sands.

Stirling. Doomes-Day. Twelfth Houre.

As when an emerald green, enchas'd
In flaming gold, from the bright mass acquires
A nobler hue, more delicate to sight.—J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

EME'RGE, v. }
EME'RGENT. }
EME'RGENTLY. } Lat. Emergere; e, and mergere, which Vossius and Julius Scaliger think is a mari, from the sea.
EME'RGENCY. }
EME'RSION. } To rise above the surface; and, generally, to rise, to issue, to come forth, or out of.

Emergent, (met.)—rising, rushing, or starting forth; and thus, arising, occurring, happening, suddenly, critically.

Turning his head aside, beholding her by reflection in Pallas's mirror, and so directing his blow, cut off her head: from whose bloud gushing out, instantly emerged Pegasus the flying horse.—Bacon. Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 13.

The Septuagint was much depraved, not only from the errors of Scribes, and the emergent corruptions of time, but malicious contrivance of the Jews.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 1.

Of that which was necessary Christ left in his ministers a power of government: and in that which was not primely necessary, but emergently and contingently came to be useful and fit, he only left in his ministers a power to perswade.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency; and have been the works of time, and chance, rather then of philosophy.—Glanvill. Van. of Dogmatizing, c. 19.

For though perhaps they contain the seminals of spiders, and scorpions, and such as in other earths by suscitation of the sun may arise into animation; yet lying under command of their antidote, without hope of emergency, they are poysoned in their matrix by powers easily hindering the advance of their originals, whose confirmed forms they are able to destroy.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

As Geminus affirmeth, and Petavius his learned commentator proveth, they began their account from its heliacal emersion, and not its cosmical ascent.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 13.

So when the sun rolls down th' ethereal plain,
Extinct his splendours in the whelming main,
A transient night earth, air, and heaven invades,
Eclips'd in horrours of surrounding shades;
But soon, emerging with a fresher ray,
He starts exultant, and renews the day.

Brome. A Poem on Death.

But that good angel, whose surmounting power
Waited great Charles in each emergent hour.

Otway. Windsor Castle.

The Muses, by their king's permission,
Though foes to Love, attend the session,
And on the right hand took their places
In order; on the left, the Graces:
To whom she might her doubts propose
On all emergencies that rose.—Swift. Cadenus & Vanessa.

The mersion also in water and the emersion thence, doth figure our death to the former, and receiving to a new life.

Barrow. The Doctrine of the Sacraments.

At the very moment when some of them seemed plunged in unfathomable abysses of disgrace and disaster they have suddenly emerged.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

People little consider the utter impossibility of getting those who having emerged from very low, some from the lowest, classes of society, having exercised a power so high, and with such unrelenting and bloody a rage, quietly to fall back into their old ranks, and become humble, peaceable, laborious, and useful members of society.

Burke. Remarks on the Policy of the Allies.

Or Ararat, on whose emergent top
First moor'd that precious bark, whose chosen crew
Again o'erspread earth's universal orb.

Jago. Edge-Hill, b. i.

Or rather thou, whom ancient prophet styles
Venus Urania! born the babe of smiles,
When from the deep thy bright emergence sprung,
And nature on thy form divinely hung.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. i.

Of all the publick services, that of the navy is the one in which tampering may be of the greatest danger, which can worst be supplied upon an emergency, and of which any failure draws after it the longest and heaviest train of consequences.—Burke. Observ. on a late State of the Nation.

EME'RIT. } Lat. Emerere; e, and merere,
EME'RITED. } meritus; Gr. Μερ-ειν, to divide; whence μερ-os, a part or share; and hence merere, quia meritum, says Vossius, fere partum est, sive labor, sive pretium spectetur.

Having done his share of labour; deserved, earned by service.

——— She gently thus did pull mine ear,
"The emerit ancient warbling priests, and you
Nothing beyond collect, or ballad do,
Dare you salute a star without tri'd fire?"

Cartwright. On the Birth of the Princess Elizabeth.

I had the honour to lay one of the first foundation stones of that royal structure, erected for the reception and encouragement of emerited and well-deserving seamen. (30 June, 1696.)—Evelyn, iii. vii. s. 13.

Jan. 27. 1682. Sir Ste. Fox acquainted me again with his Master's resolution of proceeding in the erection of a Royal Hospital for emerited Souldiers.—Id. Memoirs.

E'MERLIN. Ermine, (qv.)

Her shoulders be like to white doves
Pearching within square royal roves,
Which leaded are with silver skin,
Passing the hate-spot emerlin.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

E'MERODS, i.e. hemorrhoids. Αιμορροος, from αιμα, blood, and ρεειν, to flow.

It was not much unlike which God did to the princes and diviners among the Philistines, who sent the ark back with five golden emerods and five golden mice; an act proportionable to the custom and sense of their nation and religion.

Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 4.

EME'TICK, adj. }
EME'TICK, n. } Gr. Εμετικος, from εμ-ειν, vomere, evomere, to EME'TICALLY. } vomit, heave or throw forth.

We daily see, that the violent emetick and cathartick properties of antimony, may singly, by calcination with saltpetre be destroyed.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 123.

We have not observed a well-prepared medicine of duly refined silver to work emetically, even in women and girls.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 330.

While the domestic animal, that guards
At midnight hours his threshold, if oppress'd
By sudden sickness, at his master's feet
Begs not that aid his services might claim,
But in his own physician, knows the case,
And from th' emetic herbage works his cure.

Smart. On the Omniscience of the Supreme Being.

EM-FORTH. Skinner says, secundum, according to; from em, which in composition signifies æquum, seu par, (A. S. Emn-ian, æquare, to even,) and forth; and Mr. Tyrwhit,—corruption of even-forth, (qv.)

Beatus, seith Seynt Bernard. qui scripturas legit
Et v-ba vertit in opera. enforth is power.

Piers Ploughman, p. 275.

As wisly as I shall for euermore,
Emforth my might, thy trewe servant be.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2237.

For parde God wot, I haue euer yet
Been redy thee to serue, and this night
Haue I not fained, but emforth my wit
Doen all thy lust.—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

E'MICANT. } Lat. Emicans, pres. part. of EMICA'TION. } emicare, (e, and micare, to sparkle.)

Sparkling; throwing forth sparks.

Thus iron in aqua fortis will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication, as also a crass and fumid exhalation, which are caused from this combat of the sulphur of iron, with the acide of nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

Here thou almighty vigour didst exert.'
Which emicant did this and that way dart,
Through the black bosom of the empty space.
Blackmore. Creation, b. vii.

E'-MIGRATE, v. E'MIGRATE, adj. EMIGRA'TION. E'MIGRANT, n. E'MIGRANT, adj. } Lat. Emigrare, (e, and migrare, atum,) Fr. Migrer. To depart from, leave, quit, or remove from.

Emigrant is a modern word both in French and English. The noun emigration appears to have come into use much earlier than the verb. Such also was the case with the uncompounded migrate, migration.

Emigrate is used by Gayton.

But let our souls emigrate, meet,
And in abstract embraces greet.
Gayton. On Don Quixote, p. 228.

Did we doubt lest we should wander to unknown places where we cannot be certain of the entertainment; or did we fear a scorching trail (upon the emigration) in flames little inferiour (for the time) to those of hell, there were some cause for us to tremble at the approach of death.
Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead

We never knew wars to grow merely upon the account of the fulness of any country: indeed that plethory hath many times occasioned emigrations, and transplantations, and navigation, and increase of trade or manufactures, and other industrious employments; but wars have always grown upon other occasions.—Hale. Origin. of Man. p. 240.

For however Jesus had some extraordinary transvolations and acts of emigration beyond the times of his even and ordinary conversation, yet it was but seldom
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar. An Exhortation, § 12.

England, sir, is a nation which still I hope respects, and formerly adored, her freedom. The colonists emigrated from you, when this part of your character was most predominant; and they took this bias and direction the moment they parted from your hands.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

I hear that there are considerable emigrations from France; and that many quitting that voluptuous climate, and that seductive Grecian liberty, have taken refuge in the frozen regions, and under the British despotism of Canada.
Id. On the French Revolution.

Whenever the mother-country cannot afford this supply, every emigrant may be considered as a citizen lost to the community, and strangers must reap all the benefit of answering his demands.—Robertson. History of America, b. viii.

Whosoever succeeds in a civil war will be cruel. But here the emigrants flying to revenge in the cars of military victory, will almost insatiably call for their victims and their booty, and a body of emigrant traitors were attending the King of Prussia, and the Duke of Brunswick, to suggest the most sanguinary counsels.
Burke. On the Policy of the Allies. (Anonymous.)

E'MINENT. E'MINENTLY. E'MINENCE. E'MINENCY. } Fr. Eminent; It. Eminente; Sp. Eminente; Lat. Eminere, eminens, plainly, says Vossius, from mun-ere, and that from Gr. Μενειν, to stay or stand, (sc.) without motion. And Perottus, Emineo, quasi extra alios, hoc est præ aliis maneo: for he is said to be eminent (eminere) who is higher than others. And see Martinius.

Standing forth from or above others; rising up or above; and thus, high, exalted, conspicuous, distinguished.

Then with a grace austere and eminent,
Doth his abuse effectually declare,
Winning each sad eye to a reverend fear,
To due attention drawing every ear.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. v.

——— Who were below him,
He va'd as creatures of another place,
And bow'd his eminent top to their low rankes,
Making them proud of his humilitie.
Shakespeare. All's Well that End's Well, Act i. sc. 2.

Now, sir, this granted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforced position,) who stands so eminently in the degree of this fortune as Cassio does?—Id. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

Devotion (mother of Obedience)
Bears such a hand on their credulity,
That it abates the spirit of eminence,
And busies them with humble piety.
Daniel. Civil War, b. vi.

Luke. What will you say, or what thanks shall I look for,
If I now raise you to such eminence, as
The wife and daughters of a citizen
Never arrived at?—Massinger. City Madam, Act v. sc. 1.

And thus much also observe, that those names of Brennus and Belinus, [were] of great note, both in signification and personal eminency.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3.

Christ as God is everywhere, but in respect of his body he is determined to a particular residence in heaven, viz. at the right hand of God, that is, in the best seat, and in the greatest eminency.—Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence

While others fondly feed ambition's fire,
And to the top of human state aspire,
That from their airy eminence they may
With pride and scorn th' inferior world survey,
Here we should dwell obscure, yet happier far than they.
Hughes. Letter to a Friend.

For it is a true observation, that mountains do especially abound with different species of vegetables, because of the great diversity of soils that are found there, every vertex, or eminency, almost affording new kinds.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

And this he suggesteth for the right doctrine, that subjection is not due to bad princes, perverting the apostle's words to that purpose, be subject to the king as excelling, that is, saith he, in vertues, not in vices, whereas the apostle meaneth eminency in power
Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy

The eyes are sunk in a convenient valley, latent ulcister, and are encompassed round with eminent parts, as with a rampart, et excelsis undique partibus septuntur, Cic. so are defended from the strokes of any flat bodies.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

If Common sense, that corner-stone,
Is wanting, let the rest alone
Better be fools without pretence,
Than coxcombs even of eminence.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

What now has the reader learned from this varied criticism, but that his eminence [Cardinal Perron] was indeed very fond of his poet.—Hurd. Notes on Epis. to Augustus.

Our sense of imitation is that to which the comic poet addresses himself, but such pictures of eminent worth or villainy seize upon the moral sense; and by raising the strong correspondent passions of admiration and abhorrence, turn us aside from contemplating the imitation itself
Id. On the Provinces of the Drama, Disc. 2.

E-MIT, v. EMI'TTENT. EMI'SSION. EMI'SSITIOUS. E'MISSARY. EMI'SSIVE. } Lat. Emittere, (e, and mittere, to send.) See DEMIT. To send, throw, or cast forth, to eject, to dart forth, to issue forth or out; to give vent to.

And our now overshadowed souls (to whose beauty stars were foils) may be exactly emblem'd, by these crusted globes, whose influential emissions are intercepted by the interposal of the benighting element, while the purer essence is imprisoned within the narrow compasse of a centre.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 1.

Malicious masse-priest, cast back those emissitious eyes to your owne infamous chair of Rome; and if even in that thou canst discerne no spectacles of abominable uncleanesse, spend thy spightfull censures upō ours.
Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. ii. § 8.

You shall neither eat nor sleepe;
No, nor forth your window peepe
With your emissarie eye.—B. Jonson. Lyrick Pieces, No. 8.

They did it [bleeding one animal into another] yesterday before the society, very successfully also, upon a bull-mastiff and a spaniel, the former being the emittent, the other the recipient.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 237.

The wish'd occasion of the plot he takes;
Some circumstances finds, but more he makes.
By buzzing emissaries fills the ears
Of listening crowds with jealousies and fears.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Because Philosophers may disagree
If sight emission or reception be,
Shall it be thence infer'd, I do not see?
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

And while yon sun emits his rays divine,
And while the stars in midnight azure shine,
Where'er my sails are stretch'd the world around,
Thy praise shall brighten, and thy name resound.
Mickle. Lusiad, b. ii.

But as pain is stronger in its operation than pleasure, so death is in general a much more affecting idea than pain; because there are very few pains, however exquisite, which are not preferred to death: nay, what generally makes pain itself, if I may say so, more painful, is that it is considered as an emissary to this king of terrours.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, Pan 8.

The mediate glands, with unctuous juice replete,
Their stores of lubricating guile secrete;
Still opportune, with prompt emission flow,
And slipping frustrate the deluded foe.
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. v.

But soon a beam, emissive from above,
Shed mental day, and touch'd the heart with love,
Gave jealous rage to know divine control,
And rul'd the tempest rising in the soul.
Id. Jerusalem Delivered, b. i.

EM-MANTEL, v. "Fr. Emmanteler,—to cover with, wrap in, a cloak or mantle; to cloak, mantle, bemantle," (Cotgrave.)

To cover or protect.

The world, and this, which by another name men have thought good to call heaven (under the comprise and bending cope whereof all things are emmantelled and covered) beleeve wee ought in all reason to be a God, eternall, unmeasurable, without beginning and likewise endlesse.
Holland. Pliny, b. i. c. 1.

Besides the walls that he caused to be built and emmantelled about other townes.—Id. Ib. b. xxix. c. 1.

EM-MARBLE, v. (In some editions En.) To bestow, or invest with the qualities of marble, (e. g.) its coldness.

And otherwhyles their dying to delay,
Thou dost enmarble the proud heart of her,
Whose love before their life they do prefer.
Spenser. Hymn to Love.

EMMET. "A. S. Æmet, emet, an emmet, ant, or pismire," (Somner.) Dut. Emte. The Ger. Ameise, Wachter says, is so called, a fugâ otii, because it is never idle; from Meise, idleness, and a prefixed "otium negat." In A. S. Amet, is instructus, furnished, provided, (Somner.) And as to provide for the future is the characteristic of this insect; hence, perhaps, the name. See the quotation from Milton. Ant, is emet, and, ant. See ANT.

At length this lover doth devise,
A bracelet made of emmets eyes,
A thing he thought that she would prize.
Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

Our villages are like mole hills, and men as so many emets, busie, busie still, going to and fro, in and out, crossing one another's projects, as the lines of severall sea cards cut each other in a globe or map.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 1. s.

——— First crept
The parsimonious emmet, provident
Of future, in small room large heart enclosed,
Pattern of just equalitie perhaps
Hereafter, join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalitie.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

But sage experience taught me how to prise
Myself; and how this world she bade me rise
To nobler flights, regardless of a race
Of factious emmets.
Somervile. Address to his Elbow Chair.

Since then (as emmets their small world o'erthrown)
We sure amaz'd from our earth's ruins crawl
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

EM-MEW, v. Fr. Mue, from Muer; Lat. Mutare, to change.

A mew is a coop or pen, in which birds are confined, while they change their feathers, (Doct. Th. II.—in Skinner.)

To enmew is, consequently, to coop, to confine.

——— This outward sainted deputie,
Whose settled visage, and deliberate word
Nips youth i' th' head and follies doth enmew,
As falcon doth the fowle, is yet a divel.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act iii. sc. 1.

E-MOLLIENT, adj. EMO'LLIENT, n. EMOLLI'TION. EMO'LLITIVE, adj & n. } Lat. Emolliens, emollire; Fr. Emollir; to soften, mollify, make gentle or quiet.

An emollient,—that which softens or soothes, makes gentle or tranquil, pliant or supple.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water. The cause is, for that all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts,—and bathing, and anointing, give a relaxation or emollition.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 730.

They enter likewise into those emollitive or lenitive plastres which are devised for the sores of the head.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxxvi. c. 21.

The misseto is a great emollitive: for it softeneth, discusseth, and resolveth, also hard tumors.
Id. Ib. b. xxiv. c. 4.

The fifth means is to further the very act of assimilation and nourishment; which is done by some outward emollients, that make the parts more apt to assimilate.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 59.

There is also in the joints, and that common to them all, another exquisite provision, manifestly adapted to their use, and concerning which there can, I think, be no dispute, namely, the regular supply of a mucilage, more emollient and slippery than oil itself, which is constantly softening and lubricating the parts that rub upon each other, and thereby diminishing the effect of attrition in the highest possible degree.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

Sometimes I was covered with emollients, by which it was expected that all the scars would be filled, and my cheeks plumped up to their former smoothness; and sometimes I was punished with artificial excoriations in hopes of gaining new graces with a new skin.—Rambler, No. 133.

Wealth, power, wisdom, and the attachment of those connected in interest or friendship with us, may remove or alleviate the other calamities; but sickness remains deaf and inexorable to all these powerful emollients.

Warburton, vol. I. Ser. 30.

EMO'LUMENT. } From the Lat. Emol-ere;
EMOLUME'NTAL. } to grind.

"Fr. Emolument,—profit, commodity, benefit, gain," (Cotgrave.)

The grist of the mill; the charge, gain, or profit, for grinding. And then generally as the French.

His prædia in like manner were tributes, tolles, portage, bankage, stockage, coinage, profits by salt pits, mulles, watercourses (and whatsoeuer emoluments grew by them) and such like.—Holinshed. Desc. of England, c. 5.

But whiles I affirm it of the past, it justifies and does honour to the present industry of our age, and of which there cannot be a greater and more emulous instance, then the passion of his majesty to encourage his subjects in all that is laudable and truly emolumental of this nature.

Evelyn. A Discourse of Forest Trees. To the Reader.

In the several capacities I bear, of astrologer, civilian, and physician, I have with great application studied the publick emolument.—Tatler, No. 47.

It is, therefore, not at all wonderful, that the people should be so desirous of adding themselves to that body, in which they may possess and reconcile satisfactions the most alluring, and seemingly the most contradictory, enjoying at once all the spirited pleasure of independence, and all the gross lucre and fat emoluments of servitude.

Burke. On the Present Discontents.

EMO'NGST, i. e. Amongst, (qv.)

Pardie pitie and mercie in euery Margarite is closed by kynde, emongst many other vertues, by qualities of comfort.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

The countrey towards the sea is plaine and full of ryuers, emonges the whiche twoo bee notable, Pyramus and Cydnus.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 26.

Your Anabaptistes, and Zuenkfeldians wee knowe not. They finde harbour emongste you in Austria, Slesia, Moraula, and in sutche other countries, and cities, where the gospel of Christ is suppressed.—Jewell. Defence, p. 30.

E-MOVE, v. } Lat. E-movere, to move.
EMO'TION, n. } To move, to stir up, to excite,
EMO'TION, v. } to rouse; to excite feeling or
EMO'TIVE. } passion; to affect.

Who seeing this sad plight, her tender hart
With dear compassion deeply d,d emmoue,
That she gan moue his vndeserued smart
And with her dolefull accent, bare with him a part.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

—— But when as Enias
Beheld two such, of two such villaines thrall,
His manly mind was much emmoued there withall.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 8.

Nay, if it be but in the consideration of his being thirsty, if it be but by a natural pity and tenderness, by the emotions of humanity, by the meltings of a worthy disposition and of tender bowels.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

I resolved not to exasperate him by passion, hard words or damning sentences, but calmly and without seeming emotion, discoursed the business with him.

Glanvill. On Witchcraft, p. 178.

While with kind nature, here amid the grove,
We pass'd the harmless sabbath of our time,
What to disturb it could, fell men, emove
Your barbarous hearts.—Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

I think nothing need to be said to encourage it [bathing in cold water] provided this one caution be used, that he never go into the water, when exercise has at all warm'd him or left any emotion in his blood or pulse.

Locke. Of Education, s. 8.

As the young chief th' affecting scene surveys,
How all his form th' emotion'd soul betrays.

Scott. Essay on Painting.

Emotions therefore, according to the genuine signification of the word, are principally and primitively applicable to the sensible and visible effects, which particular passions produce upon the frame, in consequence of this reaction, or particular agitation of mind.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. I. c. 1.

To him display the wonders of their frame,
His own contexture, where eternal art,
Emotive, pants within the alternate heart.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. iv.

EM-PAIR. (Now Im.) "Fr. Empirer,—to impair, imbase, or make worse; also, to waste, wear, decay in goodness, grow worse and worse, or worse for the wearing," (Cotgrave.)

Thā is the mede of people soch, that no day ne shal empayren it.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

For loue is in yong folke but rage
And in old folke a great dotage,
Who most it vseth most shall empaire.

Id. The Cuckow and the Nightingale.

May a man thinkest hide and safe lay
Fire in his bosome, without empairement
And brenning of his clothes.—Id. The Remedie of Loue.

For thei be not of one assent
He worcheth great empeirement.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Finally as we be taught by fayth, all these to be true: so when wanton reaso, (layth beyng asleepe) goth about by curiositie to empayre any one of these truthes, the chayne is broken, the lynkes sparkle abroade, and all is brought into daungier to be scattered and scambled at.

Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, p. 32.

For why, he said, they all unequal were,
And had encroached vpon others share;
Like as the sea (which plaine he shewed there)
Had worn the earth: so did the fire the ayre;
So all the rest did other's parts empaire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

EM-PALE, v. (Also Im.) Fr. Empaler,—to spit on a stake, (Cotgrave,) or pale, (qv.)

To pierce with, to affix to, a pale, to surround or secure with pales; and generally to enclose, to surround, to secure, to fortify.

In stead of trenches, theyr hadde empaled themselues with theyre cariages crosse the streyghtes, purposing there to withstand him.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 12.

But emonges all the rest, the kynges apparayle shewed marueylous sumptouse whych was of purple empaled whyte, wt a border embrodered of guld, Paueōs fighting togethers.

Id. Ib. fol. 24.

And round about her work she did empale
With a faire border wrought of sundry flowres,
Enwouen with an iuie-winding trayle:
A goodly worke, full fit for kingly bowres.

Spenser. Mvlopotmos.

Her rugged front empal'd (on every part) with rocks
Though indigent of wood, yet fraught with woolly flocks.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

With solemn pace and firm in awful state
Before thee stalks inexorable Fate,
And grasps empaling nails, and wedges dread,
The hook tormentous, and the melted lead.

Francis. Horace, Ode 35.

Among other smaller vestiges of forgery, which cannot be so easily described and explained here, at the bottom are added in with two coats of arms, containing empalements of Cannynge and of his friends or relations, with family names, apparently by the same pen which wrote the verses.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 154.

EM-PA'NNEL, v. (Or Im.) Fr. Panne; a skin, felt, or hide.

Pannel,—the skin or parchment, (sc.) upon which the names of the jurors are written. To empannel,—

To inscribe or write the names of the jury upon the pannel; to call upon or summon them to serve.

The squealing lapwing, the ridiculous rook,
The witless woodcock, and his neighbour snite,
That will be hir'd to pase on every right,
With all the rest empannelled to wait.—Drayton. The Owl.

And in one word, empanelling juries (to go upon all causes and matters in law) of those whom they knew to be gracious and popular, and fitter to winne and procure the favour and affection of the common sort.—Holland. Livie, p. 475.

When the jury was empanneled no peremptory challenges were allowed; reasons were to be offered with every challenge, and if the court admitted them, they were to be proved immediately.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1709.

Be it enacted, &c. That jurors duly empannelled and sworn to try the issue between the king and the defendant upon any endictment or information for a seditious libel, or a libel under any other denomination or description, shall be held and reputed competent to all intents and purposes, in law and in right, to try every part of the matter laid or charged in said endictment or information.

Burke. Libel Bill.

EM-PA'RADISE, v. (Or Im.) It. Imparadisare.

To be happy as in Paradise; to enjoy the bliss of Paradise.

Then as all my soule be
Emparadis'd in you (in whom alone
I understand, and grow and see.) &c.

Donne. A Vindication of my Name in the Window.

EM-PARLE, v. } (Now Im.) To confer, to EMPA'RLANCE. } discourse.

The captaine of the Volscians, seeing himselfe intrenched, and of a suddain to be destitute of all things, called the consaull forth to emparle [ad colloquium,] saying, that if the Romans coming was to raise the siege he would remove and dislodge them from thence.—Holland. Livius, p. 146.

Then Talus, forth issewing from the tent,
Vnto the wall his way did fearelesse take,
To weeten what that trumpets sounding ment:
Where that same damsell loudly him bespake,
And shew'd, that with his lord shee would emparlance make.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

EM-PART, v. (Now Im.) To divide, share, part, or give part among others; to communicate.

And wiping out remembrance of all ill,
Graunt him your grace; but so that he fulfill
The penaunce, which ye shall to him empart:
For, louer's heaven must passe by sorrowes hell.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c 6.

EM-PA'SSION, v. } (Also Im.) To fill, to EMPA'SSIONATE. } move, to rouse, to warm with passion or feeling; to animate, to affect deeply, strongly, keenly.

And now it is empassioned so deepe,
For fairest Vna's sake, of whom I sing,
That my fraile eyes these lines with teares doe steep.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5

The damzell was full deepe empassioned,
Both for his griefe, and for her people's sake,
Whose future woes so plaine he fashioned.

Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

With the neere touch whereof in tender hart
The Briton prince was sore empassionate,
And woxe inclined much vnto her part,
Through the sad terror of so dreadfull fate,
And wretched ruine of so high estate.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 10.

Hence his warm lay with softest sweetness flows!
Melting it flows, pure, murmuring strong and clear,
And fills th' empassion'd heart, and wins th' harmonious ear!

Collins. On the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands.

Were he compelled to be influenced by the abstract idea of his own personal dues, as some are bold to maintain, he would too nearly resemble empassioned man, who so frequently sacrifices the choicest enjoyments of benevolence, to the more turbid gratifications of resentment.

Cogan. A Theological Disquisition, pt. iii.

EM-PEACH, v. } (Now Im.) To hinder,
EMPE'ACH, n. } to withstand, to oppose or
EMPE'ACHMENT. } resist; and thus, consequentially, to put upon trial, to arraign, to accuse.

All should I therethrough empeach mine owne feare, if he were gilty, and to do misdede assentant.

Chaucer. Test. of Loue, b. i

Also they were somewhat empeached by certayne warres, that they had amongst themself.

Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 38.

And some pointes finally there bee that maie be vnknowen without anie perill of saluation, and without any grieuous empeachmente or hynderaunce of a Christien mannes perfection.—Udal. Luke, Prol.

Wherin the Lacedemonnyens, although they perceyued it well ynough, gave them no great empeachement, but lyued the more parte of the time in peace and rest.

Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 38.

Pure wine being of an astringent nature, soaketh and pierceth to the very root, where shutting up and enclosing the pores, it empeacheth the entrance of that sap (by virtue whereof, the vine is wont to bud, burgen, and flourish) that it cannot run to the stock.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 830.

But would they think, with how small allowance
Vntroubled nature doth herselfe suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise,
Which with sad cares empeach our native ioyes.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c 7.

In her left hand a cup of gold she held,
And with hir right the riper fruit did reach,
Whose sappy liquor that with fullnesse swel'd,
Into her cup she scrus'd, with dainty breach
Of her fine fingers, without foule empeach,
That so faire wine presse made the wine more sweet.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 12.

They passed over without trouble or molestation into the peaceable coasts of their allies and friends, without empeachment of any person, notwithstanding some ships arrived in one place and some in another.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 965.

EM-PEARL, v. (Or Im.) To cover with pearls; with any thing resembling pearls.

Or like the teares the morne doth shedd,
Which ly on ground
Empearled round
On Sion or on Hermon's head.
Sidney. The Psalmes of David, Ps. 133.

EM-PEIR. See EMPAIR.

EM-PE/OPLE, v. (Or Im.) To people, or fill with people, or a multitude or assembly of inhabitants; to collect into a body of people or inhabitants.

Wherat he wondred much, and gan enquere,
What stately building durst so high extend
Her lofty towres vnto the starry sphere,
And what vnknowen nation there empeopled were.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 10.

EM-PE/RIL, v. (Or Im.) Consequentially,—to risk, to hazard, to endanger.

But Braggadocchio said, he never thought
For such an hog, that seemed worse than naught,
His person to emperill so in fight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. IV. c. 4.

EM-PE/RISH, v. See IMPERISHABLE. To waste or die away; to decay, to decease.

That his sad mother seeing his sore plight,
Was greatly woe-begonne, and gan to feare
Least his fraile senses were emperisht quight,
And love to frenzy turned, sith loue is franticke hight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

I deeme thy braine emperished bee,
Through rustie eld, that hath rotted thee.
Id. Shepheard's Calendar. February.

EMPHASIS. EMPHA'TICK. EMPHA'TICAL. EMPHA'TICALLY. } Fr. Emphase; It. Enfasi; Sp. Emphasis; Lat. Emphasis; Gr. Εμφασις, from εν, and φασις; from φα-ειν, dicere, to speak. Est (says Minshew) cum altior subest intellectus, ac major efficacia et energia, quam verba prima fronte præ se ferunt.

"Fr. Emphase,—a strong and vigorous pronunciation of a word, (syllable or letter,) an express or earnest signification of an act, a significant force in either," (Cotgrave.)

Ham. What is he, whose griefes
Beare such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wand'ring starres, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers?
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

One thing only remains to be duely considered of us; and that is, that all the ministeries, gifts, operations, doe flow from one and the same Spirit, Lord and God; this Trinity from an Unity; wherein yee easily discover the emphasis to lie, not so much in the author as in the identity.
Bp. Hall. Noah's Dove.

Aristotle was wont to say that Homer was the only poet who made and devised words that had motion, so emphaticall they were and lively expressed.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 970.

Theodorat and P. Galasius spake more emphatically, even to the nature of things, and the very philosophy of this question.—Bp. Taylor. A Discuasive from Popery, pt. i. s. 5.

We are sinners, and so afflictions are our wages, our due; and there is no reasonable man that will repine at just and equal dealing: there is a special emphasis to this purpose in the very phrase of that text forecited: A man for the punishment of his sins, implying, that if he be but a man, if he have but rational principles, he must needs acknowledge the equity of being punished for sin.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. I. c. 17.

Some understood the reduplication of those words, yea, yea, nay, nay, after a more emphatical manner; viz. that our words must not only agree with the truth of the thing, but with the conception and sense of our minds; and so the greatest candour and sincerity is commanded by them.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

By what words now could God more emphatically signify to his people, that it was his pleasure, that all sorts of men among them, unlearned as well as learned, should acquaint themselves with the word of God, than he hath done by those expressions? (in Deut. vi.)—Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

The voice all modes of passion can express.
That marks the proper word with proper stress.
But none emphatic can that actor call,
Who lays an equal emphasis on all.—Lloyd. The Actor.

Templum tenebit. The expression is emphatical: as intimating to us and prefiguring the secret purpose of the Æneis, which was, in the person of Æneas, to shadow forth and consecrate the character of Augustus.
Hurd. Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

It is hoped the reader will pardon the verb saccharize, as no other so emphatically expressed the author's meaning; for some chymists define sugar to be a native salt, others a soap.—Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. i. Note.

Those burthens which must be inevitably borne in a long war. I speak it emphatically, and with a desire that it should be marked, in a long war; because, without such a war, no experience has yet told us, that a dangerous power has ever been reduced to measure or to reason.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

EM-PHRE/NSY, v. To affect with phrensy or madness; to madden.

Is it a ravenous beast, a covetous oppressour? his tooth like a mad dog's envenomes and emphrenzies!
Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

EM-PIERCE, v. (Also Im.) Menage—to beat through; Skinner—to strike through; and Minshew—to bore through, to penetrate.

The God himselfe did pensive seem and sad,
And hong adowne his head as he did dreame:
For, privy loue his breast empearced had;
Ne ought, but deare Bisaltis, ay could make him glad.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. III. c. 9.

The thought whereof empearc't his heart so deep,
That of no worldly thing he toke delight.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 12.

Much was the knight empassion'd at the scene,
But more his blooming son, whose tender breast
Empierced deep with sympathizing teen,
On his pale cheek the signs of dread imprest,
And fill'd his eyes with tears.—West. On Education.

EM-PIGHT, v. To fix.

For sothly he was one of matchlesse might,
Of horrible aspect, and dreadfull mood,
And had three bodies in one waste empight,
And th' armes and legs of three, to succour him in fight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

A dragon's tail, whose sting without redresse
Full deadly wounds, where so it is empight.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 11.

Through kind infusion of celestial pow'r,
The dullard earth May quick'neth with delight:
Full suddenly the seeds of joy recure
Elastic spring, and force within empight.
Thompson. An Hymn to May.

EMPIRE, n. EMPERY. EMPE'RIAL. EMPE'ROR, OR EMPEROUR. EMPRESS. } We formerly had Impery, and now write imperial, imperious, &c. Fr. Empire; It. and Sp. Imperio; Lat. Imperium, from Imperare, (in, and parare, to make ready.) Imperare properly signifies, to command another, ut paret, to get ready, (Vossius.)

"Fr. Empire,—an empire or empiry; also, empire; imperial dominion, seignory, sovereignty, prehemminence; jurisdiction, rule, government; the highest dignity, the greatest sway, the most supreme power; most absolute authority," (Cotgrave.)

July the emperour of Rome by his day com,
And moche del of the world bi Eat to hys power nom.
R. Gloucester, p. 44.

He louede hyt, vor heo was eyr and hey empresse.
He brogte hyre tho to Engelond about Mychmasse.
Id. p. 440.

Of the kynde blod of emperie ther nys bi leued non,
Ne that by kynde were emperour, non bute thou on.
Id. p. 85.

Sythen with grete nobley, and with mykelle honoure,
Henry toke his way toward the emperoure,
To the emperour of Almayn his douhter to gyue.
R. Brunne, p. 105.

And Malde the emperice is heyre of Henry right.
Id. p. 106.

To God aloone oure savyour bi Ihesu Crist oure Lord be glorie and magnyfiying, empire and power bifore alle worldis, and now and into alle worldis of worldis, amen.
Wiclif. Judas, c. 2.

And Jhesus seide unto hem, whos is this ymage, and the writing above? They seiden to him the emperouris, thanne he seiden to hem therfore yielde ye to the emperour, the thingis that ben emperouris; and to God, the thingis that ben of God.—Id. Matthew, c. 22.

O queues living in prosperitee,
Duchesses, and ye ladies everich on
Haveth som routhe on hire adversitee;
An emperoures douhter stant alone;
She hath no wight to whom to make hire mone.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5074.

And but I be to-morwe as faire to seen,
As any lady, emperice, or quene,
That is betwixt the est and eke the west,
Doth with my lif and deth right as you list.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6828.

For of this arte I finde so,
That hath be do for loue's sake,
Wherof thou might ensample take
A great cronicke emperial. Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

God hath bereft him in his ire
His life, and eke his large empire.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

This fame goth about Rome
So ferforth, that the wordes come
To the emperour Justinian,
And he let sende for the man,
And asked hym howe that it was. Id. Ib. b. v.

For where thei comen in presence,
Men deden him reuerence,
As though thei had ben Goddesses
Of all the worlde, or empresses. Id. Ib. b. viii.

The Lord styrred vp the spirite of Cyrus Kinge of Persia, that he caused it to be proclamed thorow out al his empyre, yea and by wrytinge also, sayinge: Thus sayeth Cyrus the King of Persia.—Bible, 1551. I Esdras, c. 1.

The cõquered grete Alexander the Medis, & begane y^e third monarchie, called the empire of the Greekis, which stode 200 yeres.—Joye. Ages and Yeris of the Worlde

At this emperial & almightiful voice of Jesus commaũding him to depart, the vnclene spirite whan he had throwen down the man vpon the yearth and vexed him, he departed from him.—Udal. Luke, c 4.

The land, which warlike Britons now possesse,
And therein haue their mighty empire rays'd,
In antique times was salvage wildernesse,
Vnpeopled, unmanur'd, vnprov'd, vnprays'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II. c. 10.

——— When I am scorch'd
With fire, can flames in any other quench me?
What is her love to me, greatness, or empire,
That am slave to another, who alone
Can give me ease or freedom!
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act I. sc. 1.

As though she meant her emperey to have,
Where e'en but lately she beheld her grave.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. I.

Maximian, as emperiall and
As valerous as any,
With Brittish armour did subdue
Both kinges and kingdomes many.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix.

That soueraigne queene, that mighty empresse,
Whose glory is to ayde all suppliants pore,
And of weake princes to be patronesse.
Chose Arthegall to right her to restore;
For that to her he seem'd best skil'd in righteous lore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

——— Look on England,
The empress of the European isles,
And unto whom alone ours yields precedence:
When did she flourish so, as when she was
The mistress of the ocean, her navies
Putting a girdle round about the world
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act I. sc. 1.

If vice had once an ill name in the world, was once generally stigmatized with reproach and ignominy, it would quickly lose its empire, and thousands that are now slaves of it, would become proselytes to virtue.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

The ancient Christians, as Tertullian doth assure us, did always pray for all the emperours, that God would grant them a long life; a secure reign, a safe family, valient armies, a faithful senate, a loyal people, a quiet world, and whatever they as men, or as emperours, could wish.
Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 10.

Ten thousand glorious deeds to crown,
She caus'd dire war to cease:
A greater empress ne'er was known;
She fix'd the world in peace. Prior. The Viceroy.

But I who move supreme in heaven's abodes,
Jove's sister-wife and empress of the Gods,
With this one nation must a war maintain
For years on years. Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. I.

It is the design of this, and of the two succeeding chapters, to describe the prosperous condition of their empire; [Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines;] and afterwards, from the death of Marcus Antoninus to deduce the most important circumstances of its decline and fall, a revolution which will ever be remembered, and is still felt by the nations of the earth.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 1.

The powers conferred on Augustus as emperor were, to levy armies, to raise money, to undertake wars, to make peace, to command all the forces of the republic, to have the power of life and death within, as well as without, the city; and to do every thing else which the consuls and others invested with supreme command had a right to do. Dio. lili. 17.—Adam. Roman Antiquities, p. 158.

EMPI'RICK, n. } Fr. Empirique; It. and EMPI'RICK, adj. } Sp. Empirico; Lat. Empi-
EMPI'RICAL. } ricus; Gr. Εμπειρικος, from EMPI'RICALLY. } Εμπειρια, compounded of εν,
EMPI'RICISM. } and πειρα, a trial, (tentamen, quo in rem aliquem, penetrare nitimur,—the trial by which we endeavour to penetrate any thing, from πειρειν, to pierce, to penetrate, —Scheidius.) And thus empirick is—

One who can or may try, (sc.) to pierce or penetrate; who can or may try or make trial or experiment. Applied to those—

Who followed or relied upon experience; (see the quotation from Holland's Pliny;) and then, subsequently, to those—

Who made experiments; followed their own experiments or trials. See the quotation from Holland's Plutarch.

But in processe of time, one Acro, a cittizen of Agrigentum in Sicilie, much commended by the authoritie of Empedocles the famous naturall philosopher, began in that island to institute another faction and sect of physicians, who grounding altogether their worke and operation upon experience called themselves Empiriques.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 1.

Emperick physicians;—who without regard either of the cause in the disease, or the constitution and nature of the patient, go boldly to work with those means and medicines whereof they had experience in others, fall it out as it will.

Id. Plutarch. Explanation of Obscure Words.

——— But come forth,
And taste the aire of palaces; eat, drink
The toyles of emp'ricks, and their boasted practice;
Tincture of pearle, of corrall, gold, and amber.

B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act iv. sc. 10.

And it seems, no popular empirical means so probable for the ἱνα πνευμα σωθη, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 484.

We shall empirically and sensiblie discourse hereof; deducing the causes of blacknesse from such originals in nature, as we do generally observe things are denigrated by art.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 11.

Here men are forc'd at a venture, to be of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do empirick's pills, without knowing what they are made of, or how they will work, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

To diet a man into weakness and languor, afterwards to give him the greater strength, has more of the empirick than the rational physician.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

The progress of empirical fame and success is easily traced, though not easily retarded.—Knox, Ess. 38.

He [Radcliffe] knew, it is true, that experience, the safest guide after the mind is prepared for her instructions by previous institution, is apt, without such preparation, to degenerate to a vulgar and presumptuous empiricism.

Id. Ib.

EM-PLA'STER, v. } Fr. Emplastre; It.
EMPLA'STER, n. } Empiastro; Sp. Emplas-
EMPLASTRA'TION. } tro; Lat. Emplastrare;
Gr. Εμ-πλασστρον, from Εμπλασσ-ειν, adformare; εν, and πλασσ-ειν, fingere, formare;

To form or mould, to fashion, fit or adapt, (sc. a prepared substance;) to spread over or cover with such substance.

Parde as faire as ye his name emplastre,
He [Solomon] was a lechour, and an idolastre,
And in his eide he veray God forsoke.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,171.

Being emplaistered with brimstone and rosin, upon fistulaes or such hollow and blind ulcers, it draweth out the filth and corruption that lieth rankling and festering within.

Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 6.

After the same sort, if it be spread and emplaistered, it allayeth the swelling.—Id. Ib. b. xx. c. 14.

Of emplastration or grafting with the scutcheon.—The manner of grafting by way of emplastre or scutcheon, may seeme also to have come from inoculation: and this devise agreeth best with those trees that have thicke barkes, as namely fig-trees.—Id. Ib. b. xvii. c. 16.

The spirits are sodainly moved both from vapours and passions, which work strangely upon them: and the parts by bathes, unguents, or emplasters, which in like manner make way by sodaine impresaions

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

EM-PLEAD. See IMPLEAD. In the passages there quoted from Glanvill and Dryden, some editions read Em.

EMPLOY', v. } (Or Im.) Fr. Employer;
EMPLOY', n. } It. Impiegare; Sp. Emplear;
EMPLOY'EDNESS. } from the Lat. Implic-are, to EMPLOY'ER. } infold.
EMPLOY'MENT. }

To enfold, to enclose, to entangle, to engage, to occupy, to busy, or be busy, to exercise.

The ships and the stocks araced with the flood moten assemblen, and the waters ymedled, wrappeth or empleth many fortunell happes or manners.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

They determyned to make promysion of all thynges meete for their voyage: as namely in bynge of all the cartes and caryage beastes they could come by, in employing all their ground to tyllage, to the intent to furnyshe theim selues abundantly with corn in their iourneye

Golding. Cæsar, fol. 2.

He answered, that when he beheld the boorde, whereupon Darius was wont to eate, employed to so base an use, he could not beholde it withoute great griefe.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 109.

During which time that he did there remaine,
His studie was true justice how to deale,
And day and night employ'd his busie paine
How to reforme that ragged common weale.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

——— So that now he must
Bring home his reputation cauteris'd
With idle mark of serving others' lust
In frivolous employments, or be sent
Out of the way, to colour some intent.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

Remember I am she who sav'd your life,
Your loving, lawful, and complying wife:
Not thus you swore in your unhappy hour,
Nor I, for this return, employ'd my power.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

The honours and the burthens of great posts and employs, as they were joined together at the first, so were they designed never to be separated.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

But I shall not only consent, but article, that not alone all ceremony and compliment, but even all rhetoric and care of language, may be severally banished from our commerce; as things yet less consistent with chemistry and employedness, than with freedom, or with truth.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 38.

Poets we prize, when in their verse we find
Some great employment of a worthy mind.

Waller. Of Divine Poesy.

By a short contract you are sure of making it the interest of the contractor to exert that skill for the satisfaction of his employers.—Burke. On the Œconomical Reform.

Had Jesus, on the contrary, made choice of the great and learned for this employment, they had discredited their own success; it might have been then objected, that the gospel had made its way by the aid of human power or sophistry.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

EM-PLUNGE, v. "Fr. Plonger,—to plunge, dive, duck, run over head and ears, thrust far into," (Cotgrave.)

Soone as the cruell flames yflanked were,
Malbecco, seeing how his loss did lye,
Out of the flames, which he had quench't whylere
Into huge waues of griefe and jealousie
Full deepe emplonged was.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

EM-POISON, v. } (Or Im.) Fr. Empoi-
EMPO'ISONER. } sonner, poison; Sp. Em-
EMPO'ISONING, n. } ponzonar, ponzona; from EMPO'ISONMENT. } the Lat. Potio, a drink;
simply a drink; then applied to a medicated drink or draught, and thence to one in which some venomous, mortal, or deadly ingredient is mixed; and further, to other venomous, mortal, or deadly substances.

To give or administer such potion or poison; to apply, or in any way affect, with any thing poisonous or venomous.

Lima hire husbond on an even late
Empoysoned hath, for that she was his fo.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6333.

Or dedly empoyson, like the sugar white.

Id. The Remedie of Love.

If thou hast not knowen the exilyng of Anaxagoras, ne the empoysoning of Socrates, ne the tourments of Zeno, for they weren straungers, yet mightest thou haue knowen the Senecas, the Camos, and the Soranos.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Thus ended ben these homicides two,
And eke the false empoysoner also.

Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,528.

Ladies and lords she euery where mote heare
Complayning, how with his empoys'ned shot
Their wofull harts he wounded had whyleare,
And so had left them languishing twixt hope and feare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

Empoysoning with pride her bishop's heart,
More weak with God, when with the world grown strong.

Stirling. Doomes-Day. The Ninth Houre.

And therefore the empoysoning of aer was ever estoem'd no les fatall then the poysoning of water or meate itself, and forborn ever among barbarians.

Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. i.

The empoysonment of particular persons, by odours, hath been reported to be in perfumed gloves, or the like.

Bacon. Naturall History, § 916.

When ill his purpose, eloquent his strain;
His malice had a look and voice humane,
His smile the signal of some vile intent,
A private pontard, or empoison'd scent.

Savage. The Wanderer, c. 5.

——— We fled the feast,
Resolv'd in vengeance nothing more to taste;
As if Canidia, with empoison'd breath
Worse than a serpent's, blasted it with death.

Francis. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 8.

EMPO'RIUM. Lat. Emporium; Gr. Εμποριον, from Εμπορ-ειν; εν, and περ-ειν, transire, to pass over. The Gr. Εμπορος is one who passes over, (sc.) for purposes of merchandise. And emporium is consequentially applied to—

A place, to which merchandise is conveyed; a mart or market, a place of commerce, a storehouse.

One of Boyle's correspondents uses the word Empory.

Who has taken notice of the ancient port of Wisby, formerly a receptacle of ships, and famous emporium in those parts?—Evelyn. Navigation & Commerce, § 20.

And we have good ground to hope, that in a short time, by God's blessing, they may be the most famous and prosperous empory that we know of.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 445.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,
That those, who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 303.

It is pride, avarice, or voluptuousness, which fills our streets, our emporiums, our theatres, with all the bustle of business and alacrity of motion.

Knox. On the Lord's Supper, s. 21.

EM-PO'VERISH, v. } (Also anciently, and EMPO'VERISHING, n. } now more commonly, Im.) To reduce to poverty; to bring to want; to deprive of wealth or fruitfulness.

And so they overran the marches of Rouergue, of Quercy, and of Lymosyn, and dyd great domage, and empouerysshed greately the countrey, for nothynge beide agaynste them.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol i. c. 251.

But now the kynge beinge young and the Regent his frende, he obtained that dignitie to his greate profite, and to the empouerishynge of the spiritualitie.

Hall. Hen. VI. an. 5.

EM-POWER, v. (Or Im.) To give, bestow, or invest with power or authority; to authorize.

For let a vicious person be in never so high a command, yet still he will be lookt upon but as one great vice empowered to correct and chastise others.—South, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Yet were they taught their comfortable creed,
The promise of the woman's conquering seed;
As here, th' apostles were empower'd to see
That Jesus, God's beloved son, was he

Byrom. Remarks on Dr. Middleton's Examination.

EM-PRENT, v. } Now Imprint, (qr.)
E'MPRESS. } To press upon, to fix or mark by pressure; to fix or mark, (sc.) upon the mind.

Empreneth wel this lesson in your minde,
For comun profit, sith it may availle.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9068.

This freshe May, of which I speke of yore,
In warm wax hath empreinted the cliket,
That January bare of the smal wiket
By which into his gardin oft he went.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9991.

High fantasie and curious besinesse
Fro day to day gan in the soule empresse
Of January about his mariage.—Id. Ib. v. 9452.

(Swiche fondly thoughtes in his herte empresse.)
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,539.

I thanked her moche of her most noble offer
Affiaunsynge her myne hole assurannce
For her pleasure to make a large profer
Empryntyng her wordes in my remembraunce.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

This maketh me not a littell to muse thinkynge that you haue some other preuie imaginacion, by love or by grudge, engraued and emprinted in your harte.
Hall. Rich. III. an. 2.

The seconde cause of their instruccion is, that they maye be a meane to bring ye vnto his faith, and to emprente it the deeper in ye.—A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 10.

EM-PRISE. Fr. Emprise; Sp. Empresa; It. Impresa. A contraction of Enterprise, (qv.)

For thei wille vndertong a fulle gre emprise,
& susteyn it with wrong, with sleiht & quaintise.
R. Brunne, p. 129.

And she had this emprise ytaken in hond
Which ye shull herin that I shall devise.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4768.

For it fit wel in all wise
A knight to ben of highe emprise.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Ah dearest lord, said then the doughty knight,
Of ease or rest I may not yet deuise;
For by the faith which I to armes haue plight
I bounden am, straight after this emprise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Thus till the sun had travell'd half the skies,
Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Queen of the human heart! at whose command
The swelling tides of mighty passion rise,
Melpomene, support my vent'rous hand,
And aid thy suppliant in his bold emprise.
Dodsley. Melpomene.

EM-PRI'SON, v. } (Also anciently, and now
EMPRI'SONMENT. } usually, Im.) To put into prison, a place for those taken, for captives; to confine any one taken; to put, or keep in captivity.

Muche robberye me dude aboute in euerych toun,
And bounde men & emprisonede.—R. Gloucester, p. 463.

When thou wer arested, and first time emprisoned, thou were loth to change thy way, for in thy hart thou wèdest to haue bin there thou sholdest.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

Let them inhybyte his trueth, and forbyd his gospell, take, spoyle, emprison, exyle, mourther, hange, heade, drowne, & borne, yet wyll Christ haue the victory ouer them, though it otherwyse seme to the fleshelye chyldré of darkenesse.
Bale. Image of both Churches, pt. i.

And pointing forth, "Lo, yonder is" (said she)
"The brazen towre, in whiche my parents deare
For dread of that huge feend emprison'd be."
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

By that which lately hap'ned, Vna saw,
That this her knight was feble and too faint:
And all his sinewes woxen weake and raw,
Through long emprisonment, and hard constraint.
Ib. Ib.

E'MPTY, v. }
E'MPTY, adj. }
E'MPTER. }
E'MPTINESS. } A. S. Empt-ian, vacuare, to put out, to throw, cast, or clear out; to draw out or exhaust; to drive out or expel; to cast out or eject; (sc.) that which is within; that which is contained; the contents; to cause to be or become, to make or render, void or vacant; to evacuate.

The adjective is applied metaphorically: having nothing in it, (sc.) no brains, no sense, no thought or reflection; vacant, vain, unsubstantial, unsolid, unproductive, unfruitful.

What maner man that casteth him therto,
If he continue, I holp his thrift ydo;
So help me God, therby shal he nat winne,
But empte his purse, and make his wittes thinne.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,209.

Heere's hore aren shad ouertimeliche vpon my head: and the slack skinne trembleth of mine empted body.
Id. Boecius, b. i.

For sikirly, whan I was borne, anon
Deth drow the tappe of life, and let it gon:
And ever sith so the tappe yronne,
Til that almost all empty is the tonne.
Chaucer. The Revet Prologue, v. 3891.

Hir chekes ben with teres wette,
And rivelyn, as an empty skyn,
Hangyng downe vnto the chyn.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Semblably where the body is long empty by longe sykneese or abstinence, slepe comforteth nature, as wel in the principall members, as in all the other.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

All people in comparyson of hym are rakened as nothynge, yea vayne vanyte and emptynesse.—Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 11.

The moderation of slepe must be measured by helthe and syckenes, by age, by time, by emptyness or fulnesse of the body, & by naturall complexions.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

For the Lord hathe turned away the glory of Jaakób, as the glorie of Israel: for the emptiers haue empted them out and marred their vine branches.
Geneva Bible. Nahúm, ii. 2.

The palmer seeing his left empty place,
And his slowe eyes beguiled of their sight,
Woxe sore affraid, and standing still a space,
Gaz'd after him, as fowle escapt by flight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Upon the head he lent so violent a stroke,
That the poor empty skull like some thin potsherd broke:
The brains and mingled blood were spirted on the wall.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

But more she maruailed, that no footings trace,
Nor wight appear'd but wasteful emptinesse,
And solemne silence ouer all that place.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

For this th' avenging power employs his darts,
And empties all his quivers in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be rendered to her sire.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

A word may be of frequent use and great credit with several authors, and be by them made use of as if it stood for some real being, but yet if he that reads cannot frame any distinct idea of that being, it is certain to him a mere empty sound, without a meaning, and he learns no more by all that is said of it, or attributed to it, than if it were affirmed only of that bare empty sound.—Locke. Cond. of the Underst. s. 28.

——— Where cities stood,
Well fenc'd and numerous, desolation reigns,
And emptiness. J. Philips. Blenheim.

Shall every fowl the waters skim,
Because we geese are known to swim?
Humility they soon shall learn,
And their own emptiness discern.
E. More. Fables for the Ladies, Fab. 7.

EMPU'GN, v. (Now Im.) Fr. Impugner; Lat. Impugnare; (in, and pugn-are, from pugnus, the fist;) eo quod principio homines pugnis confligere solent, (Vossius.)

To oppose or contend against, to resist or withstand.

For Piers love the Plouhman that empugnede ones
Alle kyne kunynges, and all kyne craftes
Saue love and leaute, and louhnesse of herte.
Piers Ploughman, p. 249.

Leste they shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges sauegarde whome no man empugned, but for theyr destruccion.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 41.

EM-PU'RPLE, v. (Or Im.) Lat. Purpura; Gr. Πορφυρα, which Martinius thinks is a Tyrian word.

To die, stain or imbue, tinge or steep, in purple.

And ouer it his huge great nose did grow,
Full dreadfully empurpled all with bloud.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Ouer the hedge depends the grasping elm,
Whose greener head, empurpled in wine,
Seemed to wonder at the bloody helm.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

——— Now shake the teeming trunk,
Down run th' empurpled balls, ambrosial fruit.
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

——— Tho' roseate morn
Pour all her splendours on th' empurpled scene.
Warton. The Pleasures of Melancholy.

EM-PUSE. Gr. Εμπουσα, (ἐν, one, and πους, a foot.) See the explanation by Holland.

Empuse; a certain vain and fantasticall illusion, sent by the Deuill, or, as the Painime say, by Hecate, to fright infortunate people. It appears in divers forms, and seems to go with one leg (whereupon it took the name, quasi Εμπουσα:) for it has one foot, or leg of brasse, the other of an asse, and therefore it is named also ονοσκελης, or ονοσκελις.
Holland. Plutarch. Explanation of Obscure Words.

And this is not a severe, fearful and austere conceit, as these imagine, who traduce and slander divine Providence, to make it odious and terrible, as folk do by little children, whom they use to scare with the fantastical illusion, Empuse, as if it were some infernal Fury, or tragical vengeance seizing upon them.—Id. Ib. p. 491.

And to this it were well if the exorcist would rail upon, mock and jeer the Devil; for he cannot endure a witty and a sharpe taunt, and loves jesting and railing, no more than he loves holy water, and this was well tried of old against an Empuse that met Apollonius Tyanæus at Mount Caucasus, against whom he rail'd and exhorted his company to do so.—Bp. Taylor. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. c. 2. § 10.

EM-PU'ZZLE, v. To pose or appose, (sc.) till brought to a stand; to perplex, to confuse or confound.

It hath empuzzeled the enquiries of others to apprehend, and enforce them into strange conceptions, to make out how without fear or doubt he could discourse with such a creature, or hear a serpent speak without suspition of imposture.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 1.

EM-PY'REUM. }
EMPY'REAL. }
EMPYRE'AN. } Gr. Εμ-πυρ-εω, incendere, from εν, and πυρ, fire. Fr. Ciel empyré; It. and Sp. Cielo empireo; Lat. Cælum empyrium; Gr. Ουρανος εμπυρος, igniferum celum. The supreme heaven, says Minshew, is so called, the place and abode of God and the blessed, not because it contains any fire within itself, but on account of its excelling clearness, and, as it were, fiery brightness or splendour.

Neither can any boast of a knowledge, which is depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphear of flesh; it dwels no where in unblended proportions, on this side the empyreum.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 7.

So God's throne is the most glorious heaven, the heaven of heavens, for you see that the heaven and earth passe away, yet God's throne remain'd still, and he sitting on it; neither sinne nor dissolution may reach to the empyreall heaven the seat of God.—Bp. Hall. A Farewell Sermon, &c.

But the vast ocean of unbounded day,
In th' empyræan heaven does stay.
Cowley. Hymn to Light.

Throughout the spacious earth's extended frame,
How great is thy adored name!
Thy glories thou hast seated, Lord, on high,
Above the empirean sky.—Cotton. Psalm 8 Paraphrased.

The saints no more shall conflict on the deep;
Nor rugged waves insult the labouring ship;
But from the wreck in triumph they arise,
And borne to bliss shall tread empyreal skies.
Pomfret. The Last Epiphany.

Far above all heavens. In the exposition of which words it is strange to consider the puerile fondness of some expositors; who will needs have the sense of them to be, that Christ ascended above the empyreum heaven, the highest of all the rest, and there sits enthroned in the convexity and outside of it, like a man sitting upon a globe.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

Thus stood th' angelic power, prepar'd for flight,
Then instant darted from th' empyreal height,
Direct to Lebanon his course he bent,
There clos'd his plumes, and made his first descent.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. i.

From yonder realms of empyrean day
Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay:
There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine.
Gray. Ode for Music

E'MULE. }
E'MULATE, v. }
E'MULATE, adj. }
EMULA'TION. }
E'MULATIVE. }
E'MULATOR. }
E'MULATRESS. }
E'MULOUS. }
E'MULOUSLY. } Fr. Emuler; It. Emulare; Sp. Emular; Lat. Æmulari, from the Gr. Αμιλλ-αω, certare, contendere, to strive or contend.

To strive or contend with or against; to strive or endeavour to surpass or excel, depress or degrade; to rival, to vie with.

Edwards revived Spenser's verb to emule. See in v. DEPT.

And, when he heard the musicke which I made,
He found himselfe full greatly pleased at it;
Yet emuling my pipe, he tooke in hond
My pipe, before that—emuled of many,
And plaid theron.—Spenser. Colin Clout's come home.

This I say to all, for none are so complete but they may espy some imitable and emulable good, even in meaner Christians: acquaint yourselves with the word, the rule of holiness; and then, with an eye to that, look on one another, and be zealous of progress in the ways of holiness.

Leighton. On 1 Peter, iii. 13.

And euermore the shepheard Cordon,
What euer thing he did her to aggrate,
Did striue to match, with strong contention,
And all his paines did closely emulate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

Cati. If an oration, or high language, father,
Could make me guiltie, here is one hath done it:
Has strove to emulate this morning's thunder,
With his prodigious rhetorick.—B Jonson. Catiline, Act iv.

——— Our last king,
Whose image euen but now appear'd to vs,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway
(Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride)
Dar'd to the combat.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

Their fortune at the bloudy game,
Who hazard would for hope of game,
Vnlesse first burn'd by thirst of praise!
The learned to a higher straine,
Their wits by emulation raise,
As those who hold applauses deare.

Stirling. Chorusses in Julius Cæsar, Ch. 4.

I'le tell thee, Charles, it is the stubbornest young fellow in France, full of ambition, an enuious emulator of euery man's good parts, a secret and vilanous contriuer against mee his naturall brother.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 1.

A youth [Octavian] at first despis'd and slighted by the experience and haughtinesse of his jealous emulators; but after bowed and kneel'd to, by all that drew breath under the wing of the Roman eagle.—Feltham, pt ii. Res 74

Look into the Court, there you see tedious attendance, emulatory officiousness.—Bp Hall. A Farewell Sermon, &c.

Whether some secret and emulatory brawles passed betwene Zipporah and Miriam.—Emulation is curious: and out of the best person or act, will raise something to cavill at.—Id. Cont. Aaron & Miriam.

Which was very ill done, seeing that historiographers ought and should be very precise, true, and unpassionate, and that neither profit or fear, rancour or affection should make them to tread awry from the truth, whose mother is History, the emulatress of time, the treasury of actions, the witness of things past, and advertiser of things to come.

Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. ii. c. 1.

Because in her her virtues did outgo
Her years, would'st thou, O emulous Death, do so,
And kill her young to thy losse?—Donne. Mrs. Boulstred.

These with all else that here most rare have beene,
In smell or show, the scent or sight to feed,
Have gorgeous garments of eternall greene,
And eminently emulously breed,
With many sorts that we have never seene.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The Twelfth Houre.

Now an example, merely, and a name,
Willing to rouse the younger sort he came,
And fire their souls to emulate his fame.—Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

Those masters then, but seen, not understood,
With generous emulation fir'd thy blood:
For what in Nature's dawn the child admir'd,
The youth endeavour'd, and the man acquir'd.

Dryden. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

That is, let not children whom nature itself would bear up by an innate, generous principle of emulation, be exposed, cow'd, and depressed with scoffs and contumelies (founded perhaps upon the master's own guilt) to the scorn and contempt of their equals and emulators.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

For when, like you, some noble youth appears,
For wit and humour fam'd above his years;
Each emulous Muse, that views the laurel won,
Must praise the worth so much transcends their own,
And, while his fame they envy, add to his renown.

Yalden. To Mr. Congreve.

So tempt they him, and emulously vie
To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy.

Lansdowne. To the Earl of Peterborough.

When Phœbus thus his flying fingers flings
Across the chords, and sweeps the trembling strings;
If e'er a lyre at unison there be,
It swells with emulating harmony.

Smart. Of the Propagation of Yawning.

A noble emulation prevailed among the companions, to obtain the first place in the esteem of their chief; among the chiefs, to acquire the greatest number of valiant companions.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 9.

Yet since her swift departure thence she prest'd,
He saw th' election on himself would rest:
While all, with emulative zeal, demand
To fill the number of th' elected band

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. v.

Permit me only to take notice, that this was the second species of the epic poem, our own countryman, Milton, having produced the third; for just as Virgil rivalled Homer, so Milton was the emulator of both.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

On thee Sylvanus, thee each rural God,
On thee chief Ceres with unfailing love
And fond distinction, emulously gaze.

Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

EMU'LGENT. Lat. Emulgere, emulgens, to milk out; e, and mulg-ere, to milk. A.S. Melc-an.

"Fr. Emulgent, veine emulgente; one of the two main branches of the hollow vein, which goes to the reins, and there is divided into divers others; some call it the pumping vein," (Cotgrave.)

The watery matter the two kidnies expurgate, by those emulgent veines, and ureteres: the emulgent draw this superfluous moisture from the bloud; the two ureteres convey it to the bladder.—Burton. Anat. of Melanc. p. 18.

In the same person, though he had been as good a fellow all his life as any of the college, yet he had but one kidney, but that was recompensed by its unusual greatness; and being divided into several lobes, it had likewise two emulgent arteries, and two emulgent veins, and two ureters.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 471.

We see the blood, or part of the blood, after it had passed through and undergone the action of the gland, coming from it by an emulgent vein or artery, i. e. by another pipe or conduit.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 7.

EMU'LSION. Fr. and Sp. Emulsion; It. Emulcione; Lat. Mulc-ere; A.S. Milsc-ian, to soften, to soothe.

Cotgrave calls it, "Any kind of seed, &c. brayed in water, and then strained to the consistence of an almond milk; also, any kind of cream or milkie humour."

Look now to your aviary; for now the birds grow sick of their feathers: therefore assist them with emulsions of the cooler seeds bruised in their water as melons, cucumbers, &c

Evelyn. Kalendarium, (June.)

And so to the small tuberous roots of gramen amygdalosum which they also roast, and make an emulsion of, to use in broathe as a great restorative.—Id. Acetaria.

EMU'NCTORY. Fr. Emunctorie; It. Emuntorio; Lat. Emunctoria, from Emungere, (e, and mung-ere; Gr. Μυ-ειν, μυξ-ειν, μυγ-ειν, to close or press close; μυσσ-ειν, mucum (nasi) exprimere.)

"An emunctorie,—certain kernally places in the body, by which the principal parts void their superfluities, as under the arme-pits for the heart, and under the eares for the braine, and groin for the liver," (Minshew.)

The juice of pimpernell conveighed up into the nosthrils, cleanseth the braine by the emunctorie of the nose, so that afterwards the patient doe draw up wine into the nosthrils for a collution to wash them.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 13.

It is rather a collection of some superfluous matter deflowing from the body, especially the parts of nutrition as into their proper emunctories.—Brown. Vul. Err. b. iii. c. 4.

When, therefore, there is a secretion made of any noxious humour, it is carried off by that emunctory whose pores are fitted to receive and transmit the minute parts of it.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

EMUSCA'TION. Lat. Emuscare, to clear or cleanse from moss.

Moss is to be rubb'd and scrap'd off with some fit instrument of wood, which may not excorticate the tree, or with a piece of hair cloth after a sobbing rain: But the most infallible art of emuscation is taking away the cause, which is superfluous moisture in clayie and spewing grounds.

Evelyn. Of Forest Trees, c. 26.

EN. The letters e and i have such nearness (as Ben Jonson has observed) in our tongue, as oftentimes to interchange places; as *e*ndure for *in*dure, *e*ndite for *in*dite. In our old writers, many words now written in were by them written en; and some words both ways, without much discrimination.

We have em or im, en or in, augmentative, and we have im or in (also un) negative: the latter are never written with e, and it might be a means of avoiding uncertainty and confusion if the augmentatives were always written with e; especially as there are some words, to which both negative and augmentative are prefixed. Usage has however rendered this a matter of difficulty in various instances, (e.g.) *In*clude and *in*tend; the former perhaps never at all, the latter never by modern authors written with e. In others, the e or i seems indiscriminate; as en or *in*close, en or *in*crease. In others again the e seems to prevail, as *en*force, *en*croach. It would be an advance towards uniformity if in all unsettled cases the e were steadily observed. See Wallis, p. 132.

En, in Composition, was used by our old writers more lavishly than now. Skelton appears to have wantoned in such compounds. In the very short space of six pages, in Mr. Chalmer's edition of the Poets, the following occur; of which (as they have not been met with elsewhere) the bare enumeration must suffice; viz. *en*craumpysh (i. e. *en*cramp,) *en*sowk, *en*hack, *en*hard, *en*crisp, *en*galary, *en*losenge, *en*pave, *en*vaut, *en*bulion, *en*glase, *en*crown, *en*tacle, *en*sand, *en*turf, *en*grape, *en*gush, *en*swymm, *en*silure, (ensilver,) *en*glister, *en*verdure, *en*brethe, en-beauty, *en*bud, *en*picture, *en*flore, *en*vive.

En,—termination. (See An.) En affixed as a termination, denotes, addition, in other cases besides those specified under an, as to length-en, to add length; to bright-en, to heart-en, to add brightness or heart.

May not this en or an, with the Lat. article is or us, Gr. os, (the northern as or es) post-fixed, have furnished the Lat. termination—an-us, humanus; en-us, terrenus; in-us, caninus,—and, by contraction, the participial termination ans, ens; from the plural of which, in tia, are our terminations ance, ence?

EN-A'BLE. } (Also In.) Goth. Abal, roENA'BLEMENT. } bur, strength.

To give force, power, strength; to strengthen, to empower.

Clerely to answere ye would aske long space,
The matter is doubtfull and opinable
To assertain you I woll myselfe enable.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

And therefore, I haue so farre as my slender practice hath enabled me, enterprised to loigne an acquaintaunce betweene logike, and my countrimen: from the which they haue beene heretofore barred by tongues vnacquainted

Wilson. The Arte of Logike, Epistle.

Now may I have your license, as I know
With willingness I shall, to make the best
Of the commodities, though you have execution,
And after judgment, against all that's mine,
As my poor body, I shall be enabled
To make payment of my debts to all the world,
And leave myself a competence.

Massinger. The City Madam, Act iv. sc. 1.

This is the property of religion, that it can enable a man to be content with his estate, and to live comfortably without such things as others know not how to want.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 4.

If exercise raises proper ferments in the humours, and promotes the circulation in the blood, temperance gives nature her full play, and enables her to exert herself in all her force and vigour.—Spectator, No. 195.

These honours she [Venice] acquired by her commerce and by her fleets, which enabled her often to dispute, and frequently to share the empire of the seas with her adversary.

Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 14

EN-ACT, v. } (Also In.) To put in act or ENA'CTOR. } action; to perform; to do or cause, to require, to do, to require or determine to be done; to determine or decree to be law.

Such indignacion he had against the pope, by reason of the scisme whiche than was at Rome, that he in his parlamente enacted it, that none of hys subiectes should thytherward repayre vnder forfeiture of bodye and goodes, or els vnder paine of perpetuall exyle.

Bale. English Votaries, pt ii.

But from cloudy pillar then
God did daigne to talk with men:
He enacting, they observing,
From his will there was no swerving.

Sir P. Sidney, Psalm 185.

Euen so may wee iudge of the ceremoniall lawe, that although it appertaine nothing to vs, to keepe such ceremonies as Moses and Aaron haue enacted, yet, it is needfull that there bee an order in all our doings.

Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 15

The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Daring an opposite to every danger:
His horse is slaine, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.

Shakespeare. Richard III. Act v. sc. 4.

At what time the tribunes, like conquerors, seeing the nobles appauled at the banishment of Caeso, supposed now their law was in manner fully established and enacted.
Holland. Livius, p. 97.

What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy,
Their own enactors with themselues destroy.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 2.

In none of these are we to yield obedience to the law, by what authority soever it was enacted. And the reason is plain: we must always chuse to obey God rather than men. Where God's law hath commanded us, there no human law can absolve us from the obligation: where God's law hath forbidden us, there no human law can lay obligations upon us.—Sharp, vol. ii. p. 46.

This is an assertion by which the great author of our nature, and enactor of the law of good and evil, is highly dishonoured and blasphemed, and which cannot by any one, who hath the least sense of religion, be repeated, without being abhorred.—Atterbury. Sermons, vol. ii. Pref.

And doth he reprobate, and will he damn
The use of his own bounty? making first
So frail a kind, and then enacting laws
So strict, that less than perfect must despair?
Falsehood! which whoso but suspects of truth
Dishonours God, and makes a slave of man
Cowper. The Task, b. v.

It was but reasonable, that every conspiracy against the administration should be detected and punished; yet what terrible slaughters succeeded in consequence of its enactment; (the law of læse majestatis) proscriptions, stranglings, poisonings, in almost every family of distinction.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 79.

EN-A'MBUSH, v. See EMBUSH.

—— When they came where that was to be urg'd
For which they went, within a vale, close to a flood, whose streame
Vade to give all their cattell drinke; they there enambusht them:
And sent two scouts out.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Explor'd th' embattled van, the deep'ning line,
Th' enambush'd phalanx, and the springing mine;
Then, pale with horrour, bent the suppliant knee,
And heav'd the sigh, and drop'd the tear for thee!
Cawthorne. An Elegy to the Memory of Capt. Hughes.

EN-A'MEL, v. }
ENA'MEL, n. }
ENA'MELLER. } (Also In.) Fr. Esmailter; Sp. Esmaltar; It. Smaltare; Ger. Schmetzen; Dut. Smelten, from the A. S. Myltan or meltan, to melt.
ENA'MELLING, n. }
In English, also, we have "to smelt," i. e. to melt. And thus, to enamel is—

To fix colour, or a variety of colours, by melting in fire.

To enamel, (met.) is, to diversify, to variegate, to spot, to deck with spots or variations of colour.

About her necke a sort of faire rubies
In white floures of right fine enamaile.
Chaucer. The Assemblie of Ladies.

And another bande had them all enameled azure.
Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

I see the jewell best enameled
Will loose his beauty.—Shakes. Com. of Err. Act ii. sc. 1

Crown'd with embroider'd banks, and gorgeously array'd,
With all th' enamell'd flowers of many a goodly mead
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3.

Then quickly mount thy golden wain
Drawn by the softly-sliding Hours:
And make apparent to all eyes
With what enamel thou dost paint the skies.
Sherburne. The Sunrise.

Come hither, that thou maiest keep in memory all that thou hast seen the better, wherewith she put forth unto him a little rod or wand all fiery, such as painters or enamellers use.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 461.

Here nature all her sweets profusely pours,
And paints th' enamell'd ground with various flowers.
Gay. The Fan, b. i.

Elate with joy Etruscan Tiber views
Her spreading scenes enamelling his waves,
Her huts and hollow dells, and flocks and herds,
And gathering swains. Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

All the bones of the body are covered with a periosteum, except the teeth; where it ceases, and an enamel of ivory, which saws and files will hardly touch, comes into its place.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

It is certain that in the reigns of the two first Edwards there were Greek enamellers in England, who both practised and taught the art.—Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. i. c. 2. Note.

Rich plate, even to the enamelling on gold, rich stuffs and curious armour were carried to excess.
Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. i. c. 2. Note.

EN-A'MOUR, v. }
ENAMORA'TO. } (Also In.) Fr. Enamourer; It. Inamorare; Sp. Enamorar; Lat. Amor, from Am-are, to love.

To cause to love; to inspire or inflame with love; to kindle the passion of love; to fill with delight.

Enamoured bicom Edward of dame Blanche, alas!
R. Brunne, p. 254.

Nor no beauty doth so enamour our eies, and taketh & holdeth, as honestie should both take and lead with her, if shee were opened & shewed vnto vs
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 11.

—— What trust is in these times?
They that when Richard liu'd would have him dye,
Are now becom enamour'd on his graue.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 3.

Some also, from the help of this, (spiritual discerning faculty,) spy out that true loveliness and beauty in the ways of God, as to enamour them to a practice of them, and that even with delight, while others, void of this power, do indeed see and behold those ways, but see no beauty in them, why they should desire them.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 13.

What though your beauty bless the faithful swain,
And in th' enamour'd heart like queens ye reign,
Yet in their prime does death the fairest kill,
As ruthless winds the tender blossoms spill.
Philips, Past. 4.

No matter what the object is, whether business, pleasures, or the fine arts; whoever pursues them to any purpose, must do so con amore; and enamoratos, you know, of every kind, are all enthusiasts.—Fitzosborne, Let. 1.

EN-A'RCHED. To bow or curve towards a circular shape; to make, form or fashion in the shape of a bow, or curve. See IN-ARCH.

And in a porche, hilt of square stones
Full mightily enarched enuiron
Where the domes, and pies (pleas) of the toun
Were executed, and lawes of the king.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

E-NARRA'TION. Lat. Narratio, from Narrare, i. e. Gnarum reddere, to make knowing, to cause to know.

A telling or communication of any thing unknown: and, generally, a tale, a relation; a detail of facts or circumstances.

As for Sainct Augustine (ad Bonifacium) thauctor shall perceiue his faulte at Martyn Bucers hand, who in his epistel dedicatorye of hise narracions of the gospels, reher seth his mynde of Sainct Augustine in this wise
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 43.

This book did that high-priest embezell, wherein was contained their genealogies to the daves of Phineas, together with an historicall enarration of the years of their generation of life.—Bp. Hall. Defence of the Remonstrance.

E-NA'SCENT. }
E'NATE. } Lat. Enasci, (e, and nasci, nascens.)

Rising, springing forth; at the instant of its birth.

Osteologers have very well observed, that the parts appertaining to the bones, which stand out at a distance from their bodies, are either the adnate or the enate parts, either the epiphyses, or the apophyses of the bones.
Smith. Portraiture of Old Age, p. 176.

But he begins with explaining, in a comparison by—by comparison: in which you just get the first glympse, as it were, of an enascent equivocation.
Warburton. On several Occasional Reflections, pt. ii.

EN-AU'NTER. (See ADVENTURE.) In adventure, in case; perchance, perhaps.

Anger would let him speake to the tree;
Enaunter his rage mought cooled bee
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. February.

EN-BIBE, v. (Now Im.) To drink, to draw in; to suck or soak in.

Cley made with hors and mannes here, and oile
Of tartre, alum, glas, berme, wort, and argoile,
Rosaigar, and other materes enbibing.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,282.

Dryades there daunsed vpon that goodly solle
With the nyne Muses, Pierides by name,
Philis and Testalis there tresses with oyle
Were newly enbyked.—Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

EN-BO'LNED. En, and bole, (qv.)
Rounded or swelled into a round or globular form.

Your grene eyen frowning and not glad,
Your chekes enbolned like a melow custard.
Chaucer. Another Balade.

EN-CAGE, v. (Also In.) To shut in and fasten, to confine, to imprison.

When he rises, and in a mocke of those ambushes which the Azzahites layd for him, he carries away the gates wherein they thought to haue encaged him.
Bp. Hall. Cont. vol. i. p. 976. Samson's End.

EN-CA'LENDER, v. To enter into, to record or register in a calendar.

Of which we find these four have been for saints preferr'd,
(And with their leader still do live encalender'd)
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

EN-CAMP, v. }
ENCA'MPING, n. }
ENCA'MPMENT. } (Also In.) To place or lodge, to station or form into, camps; to fix or pitch the camps, (or lodgments for an army;) to lodge or dwell in camps.

Uercingetorix by easy and small iorneies folowed after Cesar, and chose a place to encampe in, fortified wyth woodes and marisi grounides, aboute xv. miles distante from Auaricum.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 185.

They wanted not in anye place either ground for their encamping or victuailes for their feeding, whereby their small nomber was alwayes sufficient whē they came to fyght.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 25.

Encamping both their powers, divided by a brook,
Thereby the prudent earl, this strong advantage took.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

He saw by the last, that he had of his forces sent into Britaine, that the French knew well enough how to make warre with the English, by not putting things to the hazard of a battaile, but wearing them by long sieges of townes, and strong encampings.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 99.

And scarce any nation, though their enemies, but served to improve them (the Romans) in their encampments, weapons, husbandry, or something else which was useful to them.—Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. iii. c. 3.

Here interwoven branches from a wall,
And from the living fence green turrets rise
There ships of myrtle sail in seas of box;
A green encampment yonder meets the eye,
And loaded citrons bearing shields and spears.
Guardian, No. 173.

King Agremont his numerous foot had plac'd
In suburbs near; where part encamping fac'd
The threaten'd walls, far stretch'd from tower to tower
In that assault to prove his utmost power.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xiv.

Its form (a camp) was an exact quadrangle: and we may calculate, that a square of about seven hundred yards was sufficient for the encampment of twenty thousand Romans: though a similar number of our own troops would expose to the enemy a front of more than treble that extent.
Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 1.

EN-CASE, v. (Also In.) To hold, surround, contain, enwrap, (sc.) as in a case.

—— Yes, and can weep too:
But 'tis for you, that ever I believ'd you,
Tears of more pious value than your marriage;
You would encase yourself, and I must credit you,
So much my old obedience compels from me.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Night Walker, Act i. sc. 1.

Of deathful arts expert, his lord employs
The ministers of blood in dark surprise:
And twenty youths in radiant mail encas'd,
Close ambush'd nigh the spacious hall he plac'd.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

EN-CA'USTICK. Fr. Encaustique; Gr. Εν, and καυστικος, from και-ειν, to burn.

That which can or may burn. Evelyn speaks of encaustic as a kind of enamel; A certain encaustic, or black enamel. See his Sculptura, p. 258 and 277 in Upcott's edition of his miscellaneous works.

Lysippus also in his painted tables that he made at Ægina, used to entitle them with this inscription, Λυσιππος εγραφσεν, i. Lysippus painted this with fire: which verily he would never have done, if the art of painting so with fire (called encaustice) had not been before devised.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 11.

EN-CAVE, v. To hide or be hid, (sc.) as in a cave.

—— Do but encave yourselfe
And marke the fleeres, the gybes, and notable scornes
That dwell in every region of his face.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iv. sc. 1

EN-CENSE, v. (Now In.) Fr. Encens; It. ENCE'NSE, n. Incenso; Sp. Encienso, (q.d.) incensum, burnt; quia, (sc.) incenditur hoc est, adoletur, (Skinner,) because it is burnt.

To burn, (sc.) perfumes.

After the custom of the presthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encencen: and al the multitude of the puple was without fourth and preyede in the hour of encencyng.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 1.

(Accordinge to the custome of the prieste's office) his lot was to burne incense, and he wēt into the temple of the Lord, and the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer whyle the incense was a burnynge.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thi smoke of encensis of the preieris of the hooli men stiede up fro the aungel's hond bifore God.

Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 8.

But when they weren to the place ybrought,
To tellen shortly the conclusioun,
They n' olde encense, ne sacrifice right nought.

Chaucer. The Seconde Nonnes Tale, v. 15,863.

Hire maydens, that she thider with hire ladde,
Ful redily with hem the fire they hadde,
Th' encense, the clothes, and the remenant all,
That to the sacrifice longen shall.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2279.

But thē there shal be solemne ensensing the chiefest idoles, & great plentie of swete fumigatiōs powred out, the which is a kinde of sacrifice the Scripture teacheth.

Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 1.

EN-CHAFE, v. (Also In.) To warm, heat, ENCHA'FING, n. kindle, inflame.

For when that some shrewes seen, that they suffre wrongfully felonies of other shrewes, they waxen enchaufed into hate of hem that anoied hem.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Ever the greater merite shall he have that most restraineth the wicked enchaufing or ardure of this ire.

Id. The Persones Tale.

——— They are as gentle
As Zephires blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough
(Their royal blood enchaf'd) as the rud'st winde
That by the top doth take the mountain pine
And make him stoope to the vale.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

So in the body of man, when the bloud is moved, it invadeth the vitall and spirituall vessels, and being set on fire, it enchafeth the whole body.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 694.

EN-CHAIN, v. (Also In.) Fr. Enchainer.
ENCHA'INMENT.

To fasten, bind or confine with a chain; to reduce to the state or condition of those chained; and hence, to enslave, to enthral.

It was the time when silent night began
T' enchain with sleep the busy spirits of man.

Cowley. The Davideis, b. i.

In times past the Tyrians, as we find upon record, when their city was besieged, enchained the images of their Gods to their shrines, for fear they would abandon their city and be gone.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 712.

Who can express the wretchedness of that folly, which so entangleth us with inextricable knots, and enchaineth our soules so rashly with desperate obligations?

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 15.

And we shall see such a connection and enchainment of one fact to another, throughout the whole, as will force the most backward to confess, that the hand of God was of a truth in this wonderful defeat.

Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple, b. ii. c. 3.

EN-CHANT, v. (Also In.) Fr. Enchanter;
ENCHA'NTER. It. Incantare; Sp. Encantar;
ENCHA'NTING, n. Lat. Incantare, (in, and can- ENCHA'NTINGLY. tare,) to sing, i. e. magicum
ENCHA'NTMENT. carmen, a magic song; and
ENCHA'NTRESS. thus, to act upon, to influence by charms or incantations. And, consequentially—

To delight or please in a high degree; to charm, to enrapture; to enslave or enthral the affections, (sc.) with delight, with any subduing, overpowering influence, so as to stun or palsy the faculties of the mind, to deprive them of action, of discrimination, of discernment.

The kyng ascode at enchanteres, war on yt was ylong?
The enchanteres seide that me a childe sogte,
That were ygete with oute fader.—R. Gloucester, p. 128.

Tho the clerk hadde yseid hys enchaunterye,
Ther fore Silui hym let sle.—Id. p. 10.

A clerk thoru enchantement hym bi gan to telle
That the schulde first fader and moder quelle.—Id.

And enchaunt hem to charite.—Piers Ploukman, p. 201.

Flaterers ben the Devil's enchauntours, for they maken a man to wenen himself be like that he is not like.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Amphitrion hym hath supplanted
With sleight of loue, and hir enchanted.

Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And thervpon he gan coniure,
So that through his enchantement,
This ladie, whiche was innocent,
And wiste nothynge of this guile
Motte, (i. e. dreamt.)—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Neither hast thou killed him with the sword, but poisoned him with thy tongue, so that I may call it rather an enchaunting, than a murther.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 189.

Than Pharo called for the wyse men and enchaunters of Egypte: and they did in lyke manner with their sorcery.

Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 7.

Attalus Kyng of Asia distayned his moste florishyng kyngdome which he had receyued of his uncle Eumenes, with the slaughter of his frendes, and the execution of his kynsfolke; falsely surmisyng one while that the olde lady his mother, and otherwhile that his owne spouse Beronice were by their sorcery and enchauntmentes kylled.

Golding. Justine, fol. 138.

The Furies flung their snaky whips away,
And melt in tears at his enchanting lay.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 5.

Through that late vision which th' enchanter wrought.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

Yet hee's gentle, neuer schoold, and yet learned, full of noble deuise, of all sorts enchantingly beloued.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 1.

Much lesse then shall yee haue me to write of magicke, witchcraft, charmes, enchantments, and sorceries, unlesse it be to give warning that folke should not meddle with them, or to disprove those courses for their vanities, and principally to give an item, how little trust and assurance there is to bee had in such tromperie.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 3.

Him fortuned (hard fortune ye may ghesse
To come where vile Acrasia does wonne,
Acrasia, a false enchaunteresse,
That many errant knights hath foule fordonne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Such an enchantment is there in words; and so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ruined plausibly, and to be ushered to their destruction with panegyrick and acclamation.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

He [Shakspeare] made one nature, and another found
Both in his page with master-strokes abound.
His witches, fairies, and enchanted isle,
Bid us no longer at our nurses smile.

Young. Epistle to Lord Lansdown.

But now, ere custom binds his powerful chains,
Come, from the base enchanter set me free;
While yet my soul its first, best taste retains,
Recall that soul to reason, peace, and thee.

Mason, Elegy 2. (1758)

We all promise ourselves great pleasure in our journey homewards; and we have great reason to believe it will be enchantingly pleasant.—Sir W. Jones. To Lady Spencer.

In a word, this enthusiasm for which I am pleading is a beneficent enchantress, who never exerts her magic but to our advantage, and only deals about her friendly spells in order to raise imaginary beauties, or to improve real ones.

Fitzosborne, Let. 1.

EN-CHARGE, v. (Also In.) To load; to place, put, or lay cargo, a load or burthen; to impose a weight or burthen. And (met.)—

To impose the weight or burthen, (sc.) of a commission, trust or duty.

Great necessitie of prowes and of vertue, is encharged and commaunded to you if ye nil not dissimulen.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

The evil [spirits] are oneiy let loose to tempt us by a permission of the Almighty, whereas the good are by a gracious delegation from God encharged with our custody.

Bp. Hall, Soliloquy 8.

I have dispatched away Mr. Meredith his Majesty's secretary of the embassy here, by the Catherine yacht, and encharged with my main pacquet to the secretary.

Sir W. Temple. To my Lord Treasurer, July 20, 1678.

EN-CHASE, v. (Also In.) Fr. Enchasser, to encase, to enclose, to insert; and as these cases were usually much ornamented, to enchase is, consequentially, to adorn or embellish; to set off, to show off, (sc.) in an ornamental style or manner.

All which who so dare think for to enchace
Him needeth sure a golden pen I wene,
To tell the feature of each goodly face.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c 5.

Lo, how good fortune doth to you present
This little babe, of sweet and lovely face,
And spotless spirit, in which ye may enchace
What euer formes ye list therto apply.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 4.

And, as that ground by him were conquered,
A leafy garland weare he on his head,
Enchas'd with little fruits, so red and bright,
That for them you would call your love's lips white.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul

And precious stone in studs of gold enchased
The shaggy velvet of his buskins graced.

Mickle. The Lusiad, b. ii

First, I with living gems enchase,
The name of her, whom for this festive day
With zone and mantle elegantly gay
The Graces have adorn'd.

Jones. Ode on the Nuptials of Lord Althorp

EN-CHEAR, v. (Also In.) To enliven, gladden, exhilarate, hearten, encourage.

And in his soueraine throne gan straight dispose
Himselfe, more full of grace and majestie
That mote encheare his friends, and foes mote terrifie.

Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 6.

EN-CHE'ASON. Cowell says that it is an old French word, signifying the occasion or cause of action. I believe, adds Skinner, that it is from the old verb encheoir, to fall; befall or happen, from en, and cheoir, cadere, to fall.

He ascode hem,
For wat encheson heo come and wat thing thei sogte.

R. Gloucester, p. 111.

Ion did ay trespas, men fond in him encheesons,
He lyued in woe and strife, and in tribulacioun.

R. Brunne, p. 206.

For ther is a versifiour sayth, that the idel man excuseth him in winter, because of the grete cold, and in summer by encheson of the hete.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Thou railest on right, without reason,
And blamest hem much for small encheason.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. May.

Is thilke the cause that thou been ligge so laid,
Who whilom no encheson could fore-saile.

Browne. Eclogue between Willie & Wernock.

ENCHIRI'DION. It. and Sp. Enchiridio; Lat. Enchiridium, (qv.) Εγχειριδιον, from εν, and χειρ, the hand; quia manu claudi queat, (Vossius.)

Any thing that may be held in the hand; a book that may be so held or carried. A small manuall booke (says Minshew) that one may claspe in the hand.

Some have beene found, and those not of the vulgar only but of professed mathematicians, constantly to affirme (as witnesseth Bartholinus in his enchiridion of naturale philosophy,) that eclipses are in these latter ages more frequent then in former times.—Hakewill. Apologie, p. 152.

In the mean time, we have at the instance of very many persons who have been pleased to acknowledge the effects of a former less perfect impression, thought good to publish an edition in a smaller volume, that as an enchiridion it may be more ready and usefull.—Evelyn. Kalendarium, Introd.

I can shew it with more unblameable lustre in the successes of Erasmus, whom I take to have written the most and the best that ever man wrote; yet almost all were first sent abroad in very few sheets, or small enchiridions, and did infinite good over all the Christian world, to allay the furies of that age, and for the general restoration of literature, considerable antiquities, and holy truth.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 413.

EN-CHRI'STALED.

We hear of some enchristal'd, such as have
That, which produc'd their death, become their grave.

Carteright. On the Great Frost.

EN-CI'RCLE, v. (Also In.) Fr. Encercler;
ENCI'RCLET. It. Incerchiare.

To go round, to surround, to enclose, to encompass; to move round about, so as to return to the point from which motion commenced.

The third of softer mold, is like a grape,
Which all entwines with his encircling side.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 5.

——— Vpon their sight,
We two, in great amazednesse will flye:
Then let them all encircle him about,
And Fairy-like, to pinch the vncleane knight.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv sc. 4.

In whose incircles if ye gaze,
Your eyes may tread the lover's maze.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Young Hermes next, a close contriving God,
Her browes encircled with his serpent rod,
Then plots and fair excuses fill'd her brain.
Parnell. Hesiod. On the Rise of Woman.

Come, all ye quack bards and ye quacking divines,
Come, and dance on the spot where your tyrant reclines,
When satire and censure encircled his soul,
I fear'd for your safety, I fear'd for my own.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

EN-CLEAR, v. Lat. Clarus, illustrious or conspicuous.
To brighten, to illuminate.

While light of lightnings flash
Did pitchy clouds enclears,
Did round with terror role
And rattling horror rore. Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 87.

EN-CLINE, v. (Now In) "Fr. Encliner,—to incline, decline; bend, bow, look, stoop downward, to begin or be ready to fall," (Cotgrave.)
To bend or lean; (met.) the mind.

And Thomas trout him plight and suore on the messe,
Of Inglond alle the right, and Wales more and lease,
And of Scotland all the men, that were of pris,
Suld enclyn and falle to Philip Fitz Lowys.
R. Brunne, p. 268.

For certes, the more that a man chargeth his soule with venial sinnes, the more he is enclined to fall into dedly sinne.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And for that he was obstinate,
And wold nouht to trouth encline,
He fell euer into ruine. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

I wyl enclyne myne eare to the parable, and shewe my darcke speache vpon the harpe.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 69.

Againe, whē we see our frend enclined to any kind of learning, we must counsaile him to take that way still, and by reason perswade him, that it were the meetest way for him to doe his countre most good.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 81.

EN-CLOG, v. See CLOG, and the quotation from Shakespeare, in v. Ensteep.

EN-CLOISTER, v. Lat. Claustrum, in which any thing is closed, or shut up.
To shut up or enclose, (sc.) as in a cloister.

—— But, Muse, on in our song
With other princely maids, but first with those that sprung
From Ponda, that great king of Mercia; holy Tweed,
And Kinisdred, with these their sisters, Kinisweed,
And Eadburg, last, not least, at Godmanchester all
Enclouster'd. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

As when the Fates of life King Ethelwold depriv'd,
That o'er th' East Angles reign'd, bright Heriswid his wife,
Betaking her to lead a strict monastic life,
Departing hence to France received the holy veil,
And lived many a day encloister'd there at Caie.—Id. Ib.

EN-CLOSE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Enclorre; It. Inchiudere; Lat. Includere, inclusum; in, and clausum, the past part. of claudere, to be or cause to be so near as to touch.
ENCLO'SER. }
ENCLO'SURE. }
To close in; to close on all sides, to close round; to surround, to encircle, to encompass, to environ.

Which thing also I dide in Jerusalem, and I encloside manye of seintis in prisoun whanne I hadde take power of the prynces of preestis.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 26.

A yerd she had, enclosed all about
With stickes, and a dreé diche without,
In which she had a cok hight Chaunteclere.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,853.

But though this mayden tender were of age,
Yet in the brest of hire virginitee
Ther was enclosed sad and ripe corage.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8096.

That roume that the riuer enclosed not, (whych was the space of not aboue six hundred foote) was fortified wyth a hyll of a great heyghth, so that the foote of it on both sydes touched the very brym of the ryuer.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 29.

And when the dead, by cruel tyrant's spite,
Lie out to rav'nous birds and beasts expos'd,
His yearnful heart pitying that wretched sight,
In seemly graves their weary flesh enclos'd.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island.

Claud. The grand encloser of the commons, for
His private profit or delight, with all
His herds that graze upon 't are lawfull prize.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act ii. sc. 4.

And these were called Linteata Legio [i. e. the Linen Legion] taking the name of the covering of that enclosure, wherein the nobilitie of the Samnites was sworne.
Holland. Livius, p. 330.

When Guiscard next was in the circle seen,
Where Sigismonda held the place of Queen,
A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had encloséd a note.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

The toils were pitch'd, a spacious tract of ground,
With expert huntsmen was encompass'd round,
Th' enclosure narrow'd; the sagacious power
Of hounds and death drew nearer every hour.
Id. The Hind & the Panther, pt. ii.

And before any special revelation made, or any particular covenant enacted (before the enclosure of a particular people or church, the confinement of God's extraordinary presence and providence to one place) divine grace appears diffused over several nations, being watchful in guiding and moving men to good, and withdrawing them from evil
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

Then from their battlements and lofty spires,
They see their champaign shine with hostile fires;
And, pitch'd around them, hosts of armed foes,
With strict embrace, their straiten'd walls enclose.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. viii.

Arise, my Lycas: in yon woody wilds
From a rough rock in deep enclosure hid
Of thickest oaks, a gushing fountain falls,
And pours its airy stream with torrent pure.
Warton, Ecl. 1.

EN-CLOUD, v. A. S. Ge-hlidan, to hide, to cover; ge-hlod, ge-hloud, gloud, cloud, is the regular past part. See Tooke.
To cover; and, consequentially, to throw into, to involve in, shade, gloom, obscurity or darkness.

Suddenly, whether through the God's decree,
Or hapless rising of some froward starre,
The heavens on everie side enclowded bee.
Spenser. Virgil's Gnat.

—— In their thicke breathes,
Ranke of grosse dyet, shall we be enclowded,
And forc'd to drinke their vapour.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act v. sc. 2.

EN-COLDEN, v. A. S. Kel-an, to keel or cool.

The hands and feet, being the most remote from it, are by degrees encoldened to a fashionable clay.
Feltham, pt i. Res. 47.

EN-COMIAST. } Fr. It. and Sp. Encomiaste; Lat. Encomiastes; Gr. Εγκωμιαστης, from Εγκωμιαζειν: laudare, to praise, or bestow praise.
ENCOMIA'STICK, adj.
ENCOMIA'STICK, n.
ENCOMIA'STICALLY.
ENCO'MIUM.
Cockeram has the verb Encomionize. From the noun κωμ-ος vel κωμη, vicus, the compound εγκωμιον, denotes laudationem, quæ publicè in vicis fit: whence afterwards it signified generally, laudatoriam orationem; a laudatory oration. See Vossius, and Lennep.
Praise, commendation.

Let his shrill trumpet, with her silver blast
Of fair Eclecta, and her spousal bed,
Be the sweet pipe, and smooth encomiast.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

Dia. I thanke you, Mr. Compasse, for your short encomiastick.
Rut. It is much in little, sir.
Pat. Concise, and quick: the true stile of an orator.
B. Jonson. The Magnetic Lady, Act i. sc. 6.

If I have not spoken of your majesty encomiastically, your majesty will be pleased only to ascribe it to the law of an history: which doeth not clutter together praises upon the first mention of a name, but rather disperseth and weaveth them through the whole narrative.
Bacon. To the King, Let. 84.

Well, sister, you have a simple servant here, that crownes your beauty with such encomions and devices, you may see, what it is to be the mistris of a wit.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iv. sc. 2.

I will close his life with this encomium, which I find in a worthy author, his disposition was rather to seek after the antiquities and the weal-publick of those countries which he governed, then to obtain lands and revenues within the same.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

The missionaries of China, even the Jesuits themselves, the great encomiasts of the Chineses, do all to a man agree, and will convince us that the sect of the literati, or learned, keeping to the old religion of China, and the ruling party there, are all of them atheists.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

The first part of which consisted of satyrical invectives against Cromwell, fanatics, the Royal Society, and new philosophy; the next, of encomiastics in praise of the archbishop, the theatre, the vice-chancellor, the architect, and the painter.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 459.

It being well known, that they in their encomiastick speeches, as orateurs are wont, following the heat and gaiety of fancy, doe sometimes overlavish.
Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy.

Friendship, tenderness, and constancy, drest in a simplicity of expression, recommended themselves by a more native elegance, than passionate raptures, extravagant encomiums, and slavish adoration.—Spectator, No. 525.

In smooth and flowery paths th' encomiast treads,
When to the mansions of the good and great,
In pomp the Nymphs of Helicon he leads.
West. The Second Isthmian Ode.

In December, 1725, the king in his passage from Helvoetsluys escaped with great difficulty from a storm by landing at Rye; and the conclusion of the satire turns the escape into a miracle, in such an encomiastick strain of compliment as Poetry too often seeks to pay to Royalty.
Johnson. Life of Young.

Thus Plutarch assures us, that our author [Cicero] having made a speech in public full of the highest encomiums on Crassus, he did not scruple a few days afterwards to reverse the panegyric, and represent him before the same audience in all the darkest colours of his invectives.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. i. Let. 5. Note 3.

EN-COMPASS, v. } (Also In.) Passibus circuire, circumcingere, to pace or go round.
ENCO'MPASSMENT. }
To move or go round; to surround or encircle; to gird around; to environ.

With the great glorie of that wond'rous light
His throne is all encompassed around,
And hid in his own brightnesse from the sight
Of all that looke thereon with eyes unsound.
Spenser Of Heavenly Beautie

Some there are that by a spirituall antiperistasis have growne hotter in their zeale, by being encompassed with the outward cold of irreligion and error, who as they owe not this grace to themselves, so are they more for wonder than imitation.—Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis, s. 14.

—— And finding
By this encompassment and drift of question,
That they doe know my sonne.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 1.

Our right wing being strengthened by those of our left that were rallied by their officers, fell upon the enemy's left wing; and having broken and repulsed them, resolving to improve the opportunity, charged the main body of the king's army, and, with the assistance of two or three regiments of our infantry, entirely encompassed the enemy's body of foot.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 131.

Near Gaza's walls, a little plain is found,
From public ways with hills encompass'd round;
A riv'let murmurs down the mountain's sides,
And through the shade with gentle current glides.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. viii.

EN-CORPORATE, v. } Also In, and now usually so. See CORPORATE.
ENCO'RPORE. }

And eke of our materes encorporing.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,283.

These are encorporated to Bermuda towne, which is made a corporation, according to certaine orders and constitutions.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. viii. c. 5. s. 4.

EN-CORTINED. En, and curtain, (qv.)
To enclose or surround with a curtain.

And all within in preuy place
A softe bedde of large space
Thei hadde made, and encorteined.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

EN-COUNTER, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Encontrer; Sp. Encontrar; It. Incontrare, occurrere, obviam habere (en, and contra;) to run or go counter or against.
ENCO'UNTER, n.
ENCO'UNTERER.
ENCO'UNTERING, n. }
To run or go against, to oppose, to meet in opposition, front to front, to engage with or attack; and, generally, to meet.

These ben then the causes, of the abredgyng of fortuit hap, ye which abredgyng of fortuit hap commeth, of causes of encounteryng and flowyng togyther to hemselfe, and not by the intencion of the doer.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

And the fleting streme that relleth doun diuersly from high mountaines is arrested and resisted ofte time by the encountrinyng of a stone, that is departed and fallen from some rock.—Ib. Ib. b. ii.

He tolde theym that the frute of all theyr former encounters, consisted altogether in that daye and in that one howre.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 235.

At the first he was sore encountred, and put in great hasarde of repulse, but at length he vanquished and overthrew his enemies.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 17.

And by cause hys ennemies were no further of than a man might throw a dart, he gaue them a signe of encountryng: ye whych done, as he was goyng to another part to encourage them likewise, he found them feightyng already.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 57.

Thus as they two of kindnesse treated long
There them by chance encountred on the way
An armed knight, vpon a courser strong,
Whose tramping feet vpon the hollow lay
Seemed to thunder.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

For ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encountred by a mighty rocke,
Which, being violently borne vp,
Our helpeful ship was splitted in the midst.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act i. sc. 1.

His angry steed did chide his foming bit;
As much disdaining to the curb to yield:
Full iolly knight he seem'd, and faire did sit
As one for knightly giusts and fierce encounters fitt.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Oh these encounterers so glib of tongue,
That giue a coasting welcome ere it comes;
And wide vnclaspe the tables of their thoughts,
To euery tickling reader.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

With a good share of this vanity in my heart, I make it my business these three days to listen after my own fame: and as I have sometimes met with circumstances which did not displease me, I was encountered by others which gave me as much mortification.—Spectator, No 4.

The fleet, favoured by the weather, passed the Canary and Cape de Verde Islands. But had now to encounter other fortune: sometimes stopped by dead calms, but for the most part tost by tempests, which increased their violence and horrours as they proceeded to the south.
Mickle. History of the Discovery of India.

——— But while he stood with helm unlac'd,
Guichardo eager, with preventive haste,
Th' encounter dar'd; nor better could maintain
His seat, but with his brethren press'd the plain.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxi.

EN-COU'RAGE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Encourager; It. Incorare, incoraggiare.
ENCOU'RAGER.
ENCOU'RAGMENT.

To inspire or animate with courage, with strength and vigour of heart, with resolution, with fortitude; to give, or confirm, or strengthen, bravery, boldness, hardihood or daringness; a hearty devotedness, a deep fixed resolution.

Thei wer not tangled nor letted with ani charge of worldly matters, and might bi their exaumple of constancy, encourage, allure, & prouoke other of the weaker sorte to become souldiours of that band also.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 44.

Therefore they that be duil are not to be discouraged, and those that bee apt, should bee harted and encouraged.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. i. c. 4.

[Tyrteus] summoning his armye together, rehearsed vnto them certaine verses that he had compiled wherin was contained the encouragements of vertue, the comfort of aduersity, and the policies of warre.—Golding. Justine, fol. 23.

Those in whom zeal and amity had bred
A fore impression of the right he had,
These stirring words so much encouraged
That (with desire of innovation mad)
They seemed to run afore, not to be led,
And to his fire do quicker fuel add.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

And all the way the prince sought to appease
The bitter anguish of their sharpe disease,
By all the courteous meanes he could inuent;
Somewhile with merry purpose fit to please,
And otherwhile with good encouragement.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

Only lovers will dye for their friends, and in their mistriss quarrell. And for that cause he [Plato] would have women follow the camp, to be spectators and encouragers of noble actions.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 529.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Fast by the stream where Babel's waters run:
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue,
Nor cheerful dance their feet.—Prior. Solomon, b. iii.

This was such an encouragement to look after him, [Sir Phelim O Neal] that one of the county people having notice that he was in an island in the north, gave intelligence hereof to the Lord Cawfield, who, having brought together a party of horse and foot, entered the island in boats, and seized him there.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 10.

When in a revolution a prince was advanced to the throne, that they looked upon to be a good man, and an encourager of the true religion, in that case they did not only readily submit to him, but acknowledged it as a great blessing of God to them, that he had raised up such a man to rule over them.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 9.

To you, the polish'd judges of our cause,
Whose smiles are honour, and whose nods applause,
Humble we bend: encourage arts like these:
For tho' the actors fail'd—they strove to please.
Thompson. Epilogue to Cato.

Our Father which art in heaven—
Father—To think of his paternal care
Is a most sweet encouragement to prayer.
Byrom. On the Lord's Prayer.

EN-CRA'DLE, v. To place or lay in a cradle. A little car, or carriage, for an infant.

Begin from first, where he encradled was
In simple cratch, wrapt in a wad of hay,
Between the toylefull oxe and humble ass.
Spenser. Hymne of Heauenly Loue.

EN-CREASE, v. } (Now more commonly In.) Lat. Increscere, (in, and crescere, to grow,) opposed to decrease. As the—
ENCRE'ASE, n.
ENCRE'ASEMENT.
ENCRE'ASER.
ENCRE'ASING, n.

"Fr. Accroistre,—to increase, augment, amplifie, enlarge, (grow or become, or) make bigger, and bigger; also, to multiply, or wax many." (Cotgrave.)

And the Apostlis seiden to the Lord, increase to us feith.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 17.

And the Apostles said vnto the Lord: increase our fayth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And he that mynystrith seed to the sower schal ghyue also breed to ete, and he shall multiplie ghoure seede, and make mych the encreessynge of fruytis of ghour rightwisnesse.—Wiclif. 2 Corynth. c. 9.

He yt fyn leth ye sower sede, shal minyster bread for fode, & shall multiplye youre sede & increase the frutes of your rightwisnes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For he [Solomon] saith, that swete wordes multiplien and encreesen frendes and maken shrewes to be debonaire and meke.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Swelleth the brest of Arcite, and the sore
Encreseth at his herte more and more.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2746.

His resons spake he ful solempnely,
Souning alway the encrese of his winning.
Id. The Prologue, v. 277.

Peace and accorde away shall wend
And all charitee shall crase
Amonge the men, and hate encrease.
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But thus I saie natheles,
That I woll shape thine encrease,
What worldes good that thou wolt crase
Axe of my yefte and thou shalt haue.—Id. Ib. b. i.

It seemeth no great pointe of wisedome, M. Hardinge, to vpbraide others with folie without cause. God encrease both you and vs in all wisedome, and vnderstanding in Christe Jesu.—Jewell. Defence, p. 69.

By these wordis the aungell describeth the flourishing encrease and destruccion of great Alexander.
Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 2.

And therefore the emperour (to the hinderance of his treasure) suffered the children to enter wholy vpon their father's possession, forasmuch as he knewe well, that his realm was more strengthened with encrease of children, then with store of money.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 46.

Throughe the malice of the people of Spain their next neybors, enuying thēcreasment of their new city, and thervpō infestyng the Gaditanes with warre, they sent to their kynamen the Carthigenienses for helpe.
Golding. Justine, fol. 182.

The inferiour orbes in the heuens he led about in their course by the fyrst orbe. And last ye firste orbe hath al his vertue and strengthe of Almighty God, encreasen of al thinges.—Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

That seemed those two vertues strone to find
The higher place in her heroick mind.
So striuing each did other more augment,
And both encreast the praise of woman-kind,
And both encreast her beauty excellent;
So all did make in her a perfect complement.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

——— I to blesse this feast
Will summon up with my all charming rod
The Nymphs of fountains from whose watry locks
(Hung with the due of blessing and encrease)
The greedy rivers take their nourishment.
F. Beaumont. A Mask at Graies Inne.

What aggravates the matter is, that those persons who, the better to prepare themselves for this study, have made some progress in others, have, by addicting themselves to letters, encreased their natural modesty, and consequently heighten'd the obstruction of this sort of preferment.
Spectator, No. 484.

For who that should view the small, despicable beginnings of some things and persons at first could imagine or prognosticate those vast and stupendous encreases of fortune, that have afterwards followed them?—South, vol. i. Ser. 8.

EN-CRIMSONED. Coloured like crimson; having the hue of crimson.

Look here what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they their passions likewise sent me,
Of grief and blushes aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

ENCRO'ACH, v. } (Also In.) En, or in, and croc, uncus, a hook, (q.d.) says Skinner, unco adjecto sibi attrahere; to draw any thing away by a hook cast upon it. (See ACCROACH.) And thus, consequentially,— ENCRO'ACH, n.
ENCRO'ACHER.
ENCRO'ACHMENT.

To grasp, to seize upon, to trespass upon, the rights and property of others; to intrude, to set footing, to advance gradually, step by step, to steal on beyond due bounds or limits, (&c.) into the rights and property of others.

But as other stories testifie, they were shortly after restored againe, & the Mōks who had encroached their places were deprived.—Bale. Pageant of Popes, b. iv. fol. 67.

So many sundry miseries abroach,
Giving full speed to their unbridled rage,
That did our ancient liberty encroach,
And in these strong conspiracies engage
The worthiest blood.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

Tlaxalla, for their merits in the conquest of Mexico, as before is shewed, is free: only they pay a handfull of wheate a man in signe of subiection: but some later encroachers have forced them to till at their own charge as much ground as their tribute would amount to.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. viii. c. 10. s. 3.

She is not the true Catholic church, for this she doth not pretend to, but upon the account of an universall jurisdiction over all the churches of Christ, which pretension, where it prevails, is a sacrilegious encroachment, and where it doth not, is a meer fable.—Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 2. p. 35.

Disobedience if complyed with is infinitely encroaching, and having gained one degree of liberty upon indulgence, will demand another upon claim.—South, vol. i. Ser. 5.

He that proceedeth otherwise (but according to the standing laws) is an arbitrary and a slippery judge: he encroacheth upon the right and liberty of those with whom he meddleth, pronouncing them guilty, whom God and reason do proclaime blameless.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 20.

I must confess I cannot imagine that those hereticks who err fundamentally, and by consequence damnably, took the first rise, and began to set up with a fundamental error, but grew into it by insensible encroaches, and gradual insinuations.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

But I shall now proceed from these arguments, to such considerations, as will be more strong to keep off the encroaches of presumption, than these can be to invite them.
Id. vol. ix. Ser. 7.

The bold encroachers on the deep
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land.
Till Neptune, with one general sweep
Turns all again to barren strand.
Swift. The Run upon the Bankers, 1720.

And so, this main concernment of ours [thanksgiving] this most excellent part of our duty, if we do not separate some vacant seasons for it, and observe some peculiar resources thereof, we shall be tempted often to omit it; we shall be listless to doe it, apt to defer it, and easily diverted from it by the encroachments of other less behoovful affairs.
Barrow vol. i. Ser. 19.

Th' encroaching nuisance asks a faithful hand,
Patient, affectionate, of high command,
To check the procreation of a breed
Sure to exhaust the plant on which they feed.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

Nor are there ever wanting numbers of artful men who stimulate a weak or wicked prince in his encroachments; sensible as they are, that their own power and priviledges will be augmented with those of the prince, whose exclusive favour they have gained, by sycophantick arts and by co-operation in the fallacious service of enlarging his prerogative.—Knox. The Spirit of Despotism.

EN-CRUST, v. (Commonly In.) To cover with, or draw over, any hard surface, coat or case.

—— Ready Nymphs
Received the bursting gems, and Tritons lent
A happier polish to the encrusted stone.
Whitehead. To the Nymph of Bristol Spring.

EN-CU'MBER, or ENCO'MBER, v. ENCU'MBER, n. ENC'UMBERING, n. ENCU'MBRANCE. ENCU'MBERMENT. (Also In.) Lat. En, and comber or cumber, (qv.) Fr. Encombrer; It. Ingombrare, (q.d.) incumulare, that is cumulo rerum impedire; to impede by an accumulation of difficulties.

To overload, to oppress with a load or burthen; with toil or trouble; with vexation; to embarrass, to harass, to trouble.

Thys withouten encumbre with suerd in his hand
He slouh withouten numbre, bifor him mot non stand.
R. Brunne, p. 189.

& other withouten numbir, ther names I may not telle,
All thei gede tille encumbir, & or went to helle.
Id. p. 317.

The Scottis said, "alias! this a grete encumberyng."
Id. p. 117.

In to the se of Spayn wer dryuen in a torment
Among the Sarazins, bot God, that grace tham lent,
Saued tham alle tho tymes fro ther encumberment.
Id. p. 148.

Encombre nevere thy conscience.—Piers Ploughman, p. 26.

His beauty greatly was to prise
But of his robe to deuise
I drede encombred for to be.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Much more there was, wherof she shuld complain,
But she thought it to gret encombraince
So much to write.—Id. The Assemblie of Ladies.

So that it might not be nombred
The folke, whiche after were encombred
Throughe him, that God would ouerthrow.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

S. Augustine bryngeth an example that by ordre of tellyng, Adam was in paradise or any tree was brought forth for feedyng, with diuerse other, wherewith I will not encobre the reader.—Bp. Gardner. Explic. of Transubstantiacion, fol. 97.

And therin is conteigned certayne right highe and profound sentences, and holsome counsailes, and marualious deuices agaynst the encumbraunce of fortune: and right sweete consolacions for theim that are ouerthrowen by fortune.—Golden Boke, Let. 19.

Whereupon, the townesmen all at once set up a crie, and beat the enemies back to the very breaches, and ruins of the wall, and from thence thrust them out cleane whiles they were thus encombred and affrighted.
Holland. Livius, p. 398.

Another genuine derivation of this selfish fondness, by reason of which we miscarry of science, is the almost insuperable prejudice of custom, and education, by which our minds are encumber'd, and the most are held in a fatal ignorance.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 14.

For b'ing unapt for what they took in hand,
And for ought else wherto they shall b' address'd,
They ev'n become th' encumbrance of the land,
As out of rank, disord'ring all the rest.
Daniel. Musophilus.

To the end he might not be hindred by any let or encumbrance [Theodocius] threw away the packs of precious wares and commodities which he had brought away with him.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 370.

The best advisement was, of bad to let her
Sleepe out her fill without encomberment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8

Encumber'd sore with many a painful wound,
Tardy and stiff he treads the hostile round:
Gloomy and fierce his eyes the crowd survey,
Mark where to fix, and single out the prey.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vi.

They to free themselves from distracting cares voluntarily disburthened themselves of all needless encombrances, and we are wholly busie in heaping up wealth, and driving on worldly interests.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

Knowledge, a rude unprofitable mass,
The mere materials with which wisdom builds,
Till smooth'd, and squar'd, and fitted to its place,
Does but encumber whom it seems t' enrich.
Cowper. The Task, b. vi.

—— And goodly mountains hurl'd
In whirlwind from their seat, obstruct the plain
With rough encumbrance; or through depths of earth
Fall ruinous, with all their woods immers'd.
Mallet. The Excursion, c. 1.

EN-CY'CLICAL. Gr. Εγκυκλιος; εν, and κυκλος, a circle.
Circular.

And no less can be imagined, since their prime and most learned prelate, besides what he did in the council, did also after the council publish an encyclical epistle against the definition of the council, as may be seen in Binius his narrative of the council of Florence.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. ii. s. 2.

And he told your lordships, that when the bill for the relief of the Roman Catholics was brought into parliament, the apostolical vicars put forth an encyclical letter forbidding the people of their communion to take the oath prepared for them.
Horsley. Speech on Petition from the Rom. Cath.

Three of our Roman Catholic bishops who call themselves the apostolical vicars of the four districts of this county—three out of these four have promulgated an encyclical letter, in which they reprobate the oath as it stands in the present bill.—Id. On Relief of Roman Catholicks.

ENCYCLOPÆ'DY. ENCYCLOPÆ'DIA. ENCYCLOPÆ'DIAN. ENCYCLOPÆ'DIST. Gr. Εγκυκλοπαιδεια, (εν, κυκλος, and παιδεια.) The circle of instruction, knowledge, learning.

And therefore in this encyclopedie and round of knowledge like the great and exemplary wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles: that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course, in the slow and sober wheel of the other.—Brown. Vulg. Err. To the Reader.

So then, every science borrows from all the rest; and we cannot attain any single one, without the encyclopædy.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

Let them have that encyclopædian, all the learning in the world, they must keep it to themselves, live in base esteeme, and starve, except they will submit, as Budæus well hath it; so many good parts, so many ensigns of arts, vertues, bee slavishly obnoxious to some illiterate potentate, and live under his insolent worship, or honour like parasites.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 133.

Some by this art have become universally learned in a far larger compass than the old reputed encyclopedy.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 335.

Among the authors who have paid the most attention to the subject, [the passions] professor Hutcheson, Dr. Watts, Mr. Grove, the writer of the article "On the Passions of Men," in the British Encyclopædia, and Mr. Hume, may justly be placed in the first rank.
Cogan. On the Passions, Pref.

So far, my dear lord, we have no reason to censure the thoughts or expressions of the learned encyclopedist; what follows is so profligate, that I would not transcribe it, if I were not sure that you would join with me in condemning it.—Sir W. Jones. Works, vol. i. Let. to Ld. Althorp.

END, v. END, n. E'NDER. E'NDING, n. E'NDLESS. E'NDLESSLY. A. S. End, endelease; endeleaslic; endleas-nysse; end-mest; end-mest-nesse. Endian, finire, desinere, to end, to make an end. End is opposed to the beginning, as from beginning to end: it is also applied to either extremity: as from one end to the other.

To come to, reach, arrive at, the last or final point of time or space, as the end of the year, the end of a journey; to come to, reach or arrive, at the point when or where any thing ceases, terminates, concludes; at the termination, conclusion, extreme limit; to finish, to terminate, to conclude. End is also applied to—

The point to which our course is directed; when or where our progress ceases or is to cease; the point we seek or intend to reach, the point aimed at; the object or purpose in view.

End-day in Robert of Gloucester (see it) is, the last day, the day of death. Ender-day, latter day, day lately passed.

Ending,—end of this life; death.

That was ye laste chyualerye, tha [that] vayre ended ynou.
R. Gloucester, p. 223.

Fayre weyes mony on ther beth in Engolonde,
Ac foure mest of alle ther beth ich vnderstonde,
That the old kynges mad, wer thoru me may wende,
From the on ende of Engolonde north to the other ende.
Id. p. 7.

And althe at his ende-day he was buried there.
Id. p. 610. Appendix.

And the eldest dogter mid hire del he gaf with oute faile
The kyng of Scotland and the other the kyng of Cornewall,
To haue half ye lond myd hem at the begynnyng,
And eoththe al ye kyndom aftur ys endyng.—Id. p. 31.

"Alas!" he seyde, "the dolful harm, that ys endeles."
Id. p. 152.

After in his thrid gere Steuen fulle seke gan lie,
& in that grete languour endid he is life.
R. Brunne, p. 127.

The kyng from day to day he heuyed more and more
Ner hand his endyng. sekenes greued him sore.—Id. p. 65.

Bothe he that reuel lyveth, revel shal ende.
Piers Ploughman, p. 162.

What man that me lovyth, and my wylle followeth
Shall haue grace to good ynow and a good end.—Id. p. 25.

And an Austyn this ender day, egged me faste
That he wolde techen me wel, he plyght me his trouthe.
Id. Crede.

And ye schulen be in hate to alle men for my name but he that lasteth into the ende schal be saaf.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 13.

And ye shal be hated of al men for my name sake. But whosoeuer shall endure vnto ye ende, the same shal be safe.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Beholdynge in to the maker of feith, and the parfyt ender, Jesu.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 12.

The enemy that sowith hem is the fend, and the ripe corn is the endynge of the world, the repers ben aungels.
Id. Matthew, c. 13.

And the enemye that soweth them is the Deuyll. The harvest is the ende of the world, and the repers be the angels.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Who can the pitous joye tellen all
Betwixt hem thre, sin they ben thus ymette?
But of my tale make an ende I shal,
The day goth fast, I wol no longer lette.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5536.

Alas min hertes quene! alas my wif!
Min hertes ladie, ender of my lif!
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2778.

Now herken who that wol it here
Of my fortune howe that it ferde
This ender-daie, as I forthe ferde
To walke, as I tell you maie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

O dere doughter, endir of my lif,
Whiche I have fostred up with swiche plesance,
That thou were never out of my remembrance.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,152.

And yet was he to me the moste shrew,
That feles on my ribbes all by rew,
And ever shal, unto min ending day.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prol v. 6089.

My sone, God of his endeles goodnesse
Walled a tongue with teeth, and lippes eke,
For man should him avisen what he speke
Id. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,271.

For of Surry a worthy kynge
Him slewe, and that was his endynge.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

For he hath then at all tide
Of loue suche maner pride,
Him thinketh his joy is endeles.—Id. Ib. b i.

Whiche out of heauen into helle,
From angels in to fendes felle,
Where that there nis no loye of light,
But more derke than any night,
The peyne shall ben endeleue.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

Which whoso list look back to former ages,
And call to count the things that then were donne,
Shall find, that all the workes of those wise sages,
And braue exploits which great heroes woune,
In loue were either ended or begunne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. s. 3.

That hath he kept, which beaten was most pleine,
He neuer would to any by-way bend,
But still did follow one unto the end.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 1.

Full dreadfull things out of that balefull booke
He read, and measur'd many a sad verse,
That horror gan the virgin's heart to perse,
And her faire locks vp stared stiffe on end,
Hearing him those same bloody times reherse.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 12.

But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is to you, my origin and ender.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint

The king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his souldiers, the father of his sonne, nor the master of his seruaunt, for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their seruices.—Shakespeare. Henry V. Act iv. sc. 1.

And can it be imaginable, that life itself, and a long life, an eternal and happy life, a kingdom, a perfect kingdom and glorious, that shall never have ending, nor ever shall be abated with rebellion, or fears, or sorrow, or care, that such a kingdom should not be worth the praying for, and quitting of an idle company, and a foolish humour, or a little drink, or a vicious silly woman for it.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 1.

He [the scoffer] will tell you, he believes there is an heaven of eternal happiness; and scorns those that seek it: that there is an hell of endless woe and torment, and makes sport of all endeavours to avoid it.—Glanvill, Ser. 4.

From glooming shadows of eternal night,
Shut up in darkness endlessly to dwell,
Oh! here behold me, miserable wight,
A while releas'd, my tragedy to tell.
Drayton. The Legend of Pierce Gaveston.

For such a dream I had of dire portent,
That much I fear my body will be shent:
It bodes I shall have wars and woful strife,
Or in a loathsome dungeon end my life.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Religion is totum hominis, with respect to happiness and well-being of man. That is properly said to be the chief end or happiness of a thing which doth raise its nature to the utmost perfection of which it is capable, according to its rank and kind.—Watkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 1.

Ends, in their nature different, can never be attained by one and the same means.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 5.

And what then? It is the business of art first to choose some determinate end and purpose, and to select those parts of nature, and those only, which conduce to that end, avoiding, with most religious exactness, the intermixture of any thing, which would contradict it.
Burke. Hints for an Essay on the Drama.

'Ημίονοι, mules, tho' a masculine ender,
Is always in Greek of the feminine gender.
Byron, Epistle 3.

EN-DA'MAGE, v. } (Also In.) See Con-
ENDA'MAGEMENT. } DEMN.

To hurt, injure, or harm; to inflict any injury or detriment.

For Erasmus sayth; damnatus dicitur, qui damno afficitur. He is called damnatus, that is endamaged or hurte any wayes.—Bale. Apology, fol. 137.

Conditionally that vnto our subiects, which be endamaged, correspondent satisfaccion be likewise on your part within the terme of the foresayde three yeares performed.
Hacklyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 177.

The one partie may not make warre nor endomage the other, nor theyr allyes, nor subiectes vnder any coulour or occasion what soeuer it may be.—Nicolls. Thucid. fol. 138.

No ought he car'd, whom he endamaged
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereau'd of right.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Dec. Where your good word cannot aduantage him,
Your slaunder neuer can endamage him.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 2.

These flagges of France that are aduanced heere
Before the eye and prospect of your towne,
Haue hither march'd to your endamagement.
Id. John, Act ii. sc. 1.

To which I answer, that it is impossible for any man living to know how much he is endamaged by a slander: for like some poisons, it may destroy at two, five, seven, ten, or perhaps twenty years' distance.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

EN-DA'NGER, v. } (Also In.) To endan-
ENDA'NGERMENT. } ger or to danger is—

To be or cause to be within the action or agency, the reach or risk of damage, of pain or penalty, of hurt, ill or mischief; within the reach or risk of penal, hurtful, mischievous power.

They must needes little consider themselues, who bring in this necessitie, rather to stande to the pleasure of a man's will, then to abide the reason of the law, and to be endaungered more whan an other man lyeth, then when himselfe offendeth.—Sir John Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Yet here had he not speedy succour lent,
To his endanger'd father, near oppress'd,
That day had been the full accomplishment
Of all his travels and his final rest.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I:
I hold him but a foole that will endanger
His body for a girle that loues him not.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act v. sc. 4.

I could plead for him necessity: his owne nation was shut up to him: if he would have tried to fetch a daughter of Israell; he had endangered to leave himself behind.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Casting of Moses.

That he was forced to withdraw aside;
And bade his seruant Talus to attend
Which way he enter might, without endangerment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

Wherefore serves our happy redemption, and the liberty we have in Christ, but to deliver us from calamitous yokes, not to be liv'd under without the endangerment of our souls, and to restore us in some competent measure to right in every good thing both of this life, and the other.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

If he has a natural inclination to it [paint ng] it will endanger the neglect of all other more useful studies, to give way to that; and if he have no inclination to it, all the time, pains, and money that shall be employ'd in it, will be thrown away to no purpose.—Locke. Of Education, s. 203.

As the King [Henry I.] extricated himself happily from so great an affair, so all the other difficulties of his reign only exercised, without endangering him.
Burke. An Abridgment of English History, c. 4.

EN-DARK, v. } "A. S. Adeorc-ian, obscu-
ENDA'RKEN. } rare, to obscure, to make darke or dimme, to darken, to hide," (Somner.)

Yet dyuerse there be indu'tri us of reason,
Som what wedde gadder in their conjecture
Of such an endarked chapitre some season
Howe be it, it were hard to construe this lecture.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

If beauty thus be clouded with a frown,
That pity shines no comfort to my bliss,
And vapours of disdain so overgrown,
That my life's light wholly endarken'd is:
Why should I more molest the world with cries;
Tho air with sighs, the earth below with tears?
Daniel. Sonnets to Delia, s. 21.

EN-DART, v. "Fr. Darder; to dart, to fling, hurl, cast or throw a dart; also, to hit, wound, pierce, or hurt with a dart," (Cotgrave.)

Juli. He looke to like, if looking liking moue.
But no more deepe will I endart mine eye.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 3.

EN-DEAR, v. } (Also In.) A.S. Derian, to ENDE'ARMENT. } dere, to hurt, to do mischief; and, consequentially, to cause to be or become scarce or rare; and thence, costly, precious. And to endear, is—

To cause to be, to make dear or precious; highly or greatly prized, much or highly beloved.

Whereas, the excesse of newe buildings and erections hath daily more encreased, and is still like to do so; wherby and by the immoderate confluence of people thither, our said city [London] and the places adjoyning are, and daily will be, more and more pestred, all victuals and other provisions endeared, &c.
K. James's Procl. conc. Buildings, 1618. Rym. Fœd. i. 107.

There beautie's Goddesse with these dainty Greekes,
Who did endeare the treasure of a face,
And (fond of that which idle fancy seekes)
Would kisse like doves, like ivie did embrace
Stirling. Doomes-Day. The Seuenth Houre.

Trusting in God is an endearing him, and doubting is a dishonour to him.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 6.

When he in triumph of his victory,
Under a rich embroider'd canopy
Enter'd proud Tournay, which did trembling stand,
To beg for mercy at his conqu'ring hand:
To hear of his endearments, how I joy'd!
But see, this calm was suddenly destroy'd.
Drayton. The French Queen to C. Brandon.

And although in matters of religion the husband hath no empire and command, yet if there be a place left to persuade, and intreat, and induce by arguments, there is not in a family a greater endearment of affections than the unity of religion.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 18.

For ah! no more Andromache shall come,
With joyful tears, to welcome Hector home;
No more officious, with endearing charms
From thy tir'd limbs unbrace Pelides' arms.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Love is a medley of endearments, jars,
Suspicions, quarrels, reconcilements, wars;
Then peace again. Walsh. To his Book.

His force of genius burn'd in early youth,
With thirst of knowledge, and with love of truth;
His learning, join'd with each endearing art,
Charm'd every ear, and gain'd on ev'ry heart.
Johnson. Paraphrase of an Epitaph on Sir T. Hanmer.

—— O! deemest thou indeed
No kind endearment here by nature given
To mutual terror and compassion's tears.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii.

EN-DEA'VOUR, v. } (Also In.) See De-
ENDEA'VOUR, n. } VOIR. Dever is used by
ENDEA'VOURER. } Chaucer for endeavour,
ENDEA'VOURING, n. } says Junius; and it is ENDEA'VOURMENT. } so used in the north of England to this day. Devoir or dever, is from the Lat. Debere; and thus endeavour is, as Minshew expresses it, debitum officium præstare; or, as Skinner, officium suum, prout debet, exequi; and, in its application, is equivalent to the—

"Fr. S'efforcer,—to endeavour, labour, enforce himself, to strive with might and main, to use his (utmost) strength, apply (all) his vigour, employ his (whole) power," (Cotgrave:) and also, to try, attempt, or essay.

Some were of this opinion, that it was best to abandon al theyr stuffe and caryages, and so yssuing out to endeuor to scape wyth theyr lyues by the same way that they came thither.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 66.

Let us endeavour ourselves [good Christian people] diligently to keep the presence of his Holy Spirit.
Homilie. Rogation Weeke, pt. iii.

Brother Skelton, your endeavorment
So have ye done, that meretoriously
Ye have deserved.—Skelton. Maister Gower to Skelton.

Why should I strive to make her live for ever,
That never deigns to give me joy to live?
Why should m' afflicted Muse so much endeavour,
Such honour unto cruelty to give.—Daniel, Son. 17.

Whilst Somerset with main endeavour lay
To get his g.v'n (but ungot) government,
The stout Calesians (bent another way)
Fiercely repel him, frustrate his intent.
Id. Civil Wars, b. viii.

Greater matters may be looked for, than those which were the inventions of single endeavourers or results of chance.
Glanvill, Ess. 3.

Which president, of pestilent import,
(Had not the heav'ns bless'd thy endeavourings)
Against thee, Henry, had been likewise brought,
Th' example made of thy example wrought.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

The husbandman was meanly well content
Triall to make of his endeavourment
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

He is a man, that does not pick and choose out of God's commandments which to observe, to the neglect of the rest: but endeavours uprightly and sincerely to observe them all.
Sharp, vol. i. ser. 5.

His ashes in a peaceful urn shall rest,
His name a great example stands, to show
How strangely high endeavours may be blest,
Where piety and valour jointly go.
Dryden. On the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

It is one among many reasons for which I purpose to endeavour the entertainment of my countrymen by a short essay on Tuesday and Saturday, that I hope not much to tire those whom I do not happen to please; and if I am not commended for the beauty of my works, to be at least pardoned for their brevity.—Rambler, No. 1.

It ought to be the first endeavour of a writer to distinguish nature from custom, or that which is established because it is right, from that which is right only because it is established; that he may neither violate essential principles by a desire of novelty, nor debar himself from the attainment of beauties within his view, by a needless fear of breaking rules which no literary dictator had authority to enact.
Id. No. 156.

EN-DE'MIAL. } Gr. Ενδημιος, (εν, and δημος, ENDE'MIC. } a people.)
ENDE'MICAL. } Peculiar to a people.

It seems, in general, that raw sallets and herbs have experimentally been found to be the most sovereign diet in that endemial (and indeed with us epidemical and almost universal) contagion, the scorbute, to which we of this nation, and most other islanders, are obnoxious.
Evelyn. Acetaria.

That fluxes are the general and endemical diseases in Ireland, I need not tell you.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 190.

Nor lest delightful blooms the logwood hedge,
Whose wood to coction yields a precious balm,
Specific in the flux: endemial ail,
Much cause have I to weep thy fatal sway.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

A traveller, in his way to Italy, found himself in a country where the inhabitants had each a large excrescence depending from the chin: a deformity which, as it was endemick, and the people little used to strangers, it had been the custom, time immemorial, to look upon them as the greatest beauty.—Goldsmith, Ess. 1.

EN-DEMO'NIASM. See DEMON.

Whenever it is so, the variety of delusion with which a different spirit may then possess its votaries, will centre, properly speaking, in endemoniasm.

Byron. Enthusiasm, a Poetical Essay.

EN-DE'NIZE, v. } (Also In.) A denizen is END'NIZEN. } an alien born, who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject. To endenize—

To give or bestow the rights of a natural born subject, of a native; to admit, to introduce, to the enjoyment of such rights and usages.

And having by little and little in many victories vanquished the nations bordering upon them [they] brought them at length to be endenized and naturalized in their owne name, like as the Persians also did.

Holland. Ammianus, p. 401.

For it is vertue that gives glory: that will endenizon a man every where. It is only that can naturalize him. A native, if hee be vicious, deserves to be a stranger, and cast out of the common-wealth, as an alien.

B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Thus then you order the matter; Jews and Mahometans may be permitted to live in a Christian commonwealth with the exercise of their religion, but not to be endenizon'd: Pagans may also be permitted to live there, but not to have the exercise of their religion, nor be endenizon'd.

Locke. A Third Letter of Toleration, c. 3.

New words he shall endenizen, which use
Shall authorise, and currently produce.

Francis. Horace. Epistles, b. II.

EN-DE'TTED, i. e. Indebted, (qv.) and also debt.

And yet I am endetted so therby
Of gold, that I have borowed trewely,
That while I live, I shal it quiten never.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,202.

For if we be so endetted and bounde to God, that for the knowledge he hath given us, we ought to geue to him honourable and thankfull testimony, why is our stomach so abashed and fearful to enter into the battell?

Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

EN-DITE, or } Now more commonly In.(qv.)
END'CT, v. } Fr. Enditer, enditer; It. Indettare, inditture. To endite, END'TER. } is—
END'TING, n. }
END'CTMENT. } To write, (sc.) what the muse or the mind of the writer may dictate; what the law, or, in the form and manner which the law, may dictate or prescribe; to charge or accuse in a dictated or prescribed form of words; and, generally, to accuse.

He coude songes make, and wel endite,
Juste and eke dance, and wel pourtraie and write.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 95.

The temporal theft is, as for to take thy neighbour's catel ayenst his will, be it by force or by sleight; be it in meting or measure; by steling; by false enditements upon him.

Id. The Persones Tale.

Wherefore I beseke you mekely for the mercie of God that ye preye for me, that Christ have mercie of me and forgeve me my giltes, and namely of myn translations and enditinges of worldly vanitees.—Id. Ib.

And I sat downe vpon the grene,
Fulfylled of loue's fantasie,
And with the teres of mine eie,
In stede of ynke, I gan to write
The wordes, whiche I wel endite.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

The first were of enditours
Of olde Cronike, and eke auctoures.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

At the daye appointed for the pleadinge of his cause, Orgetorix called to the sessions all his kynred and alyance, to the number of ten thousand men, together with all his reteynours and dettours, of whom he had a great cõpany. By them he so wrought that he came not to answere his enditement.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 4.

By knowing what he taketh himselfe vnto, and wherein hee most delighteth, I may commend him for his learning, for his skill in the French, or in the Italian, for his knowledge in cosmographie, for his skill in the lawes, in the histories of all coutries, and for his gift of enditing.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 13.

Of warlike puissaunce in ages spent,
Be thou faire Britomart, whose praise I write;
But of all wisedome be thou precedent,
O soueraigne queene whose praise I would endite.
Endite I would as dutie doth exette

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

And forthwith would the dictat. have resigned up his office, but that the court, held for the trial of M. Volscius, endited for bearing false witnesse, staied him.

Holland. Livius, p. 107.

Having graunted libertye thereof to preferre slanders and false enditements, a number were brought into question from all parts (in manner) of the earth, as well of noble birth as of obscure parentage.—Id. Ammianus, p. 140.

But aboue all these, he held in greatest esteeme, Narcissus his secretarie or enditer of epistles, and Pallas the keeper of his bookes of accounts.—Id. Suetonius, p. 198

Every sermon we hear, that showeth vs our duty, will in effect be an enditement upon us, will ground a sentence of condemnation, if we transgress it.—Barrow, vol iii Ser 26.

Upon whatever occasion these words [Psalm lxxv. v. 1] were originally endited, the Christian church now celebrates in them that great deliverance, which, by so many miracles of mercy and power, hath been accomplished for her through Messiah, who is in Scriptures frequently styled, "the Name of Jehovah."—Horne. Com. Psalm 75.

E'NDLONG. A. S. Andlang, andlong, endlong, i. e. on long, now written along, (qv.) And Tooke, i. p. 424.

She slough them in a sodeine rage
Endelonge the borde as their ben set.—Gower. Con. A. b.ii.

Thys kynge the wether gan beholde,
And wist well, they moten holde
Her cours endlonge. Id. Ib.

This lady rometh by the clyffe to play
With her meyne, endlonge the strond

Chaucer. Legend of Hypolitus.

That who from East to West will end-long seeke,
Cannot two fairer cities find this day,
Except Cleopolis. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

The singular discipline and order of that nation in old time, was going downward and endlong many yeeres and ages alredie, and the popular government of many, growne to decay and ruine, which can not possibly continue long without some chaunge and alteration of state.

Holland. Livius, p. 921.

EN-DO'CTRINE, v. } (Also In.) To teach
END'CTRINATED. } or instruct.

Ptolomæus Philadelphus was endoctrined in the science of good letters by Strabo.

Donne. Hist. of the Sept. (1633.) p. 2.

Now then suppose, that one of those should have preached over and over again the same doctrine, not long, nor hard to be carried away, in all the cities, townes, and boroughs of some great country, so that whilst he staved there, they were throughly understanding and endoctrinated in that way.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 608.

EN-DORSE, or } (Also In.) Dorse, from
END'SS, v. } the Lat. Dorsum, the back.
END'RSEMENT. } To back; to put on, get on, sit on, write on, strike on, the back. It is used by Spenser generally—to write, inscribe or ingrave, cut or carve.

"Fr. Endosser,—to indorse; also, to back, to put a back unto; also, to put on the back, whence, Endosser un harnois, to arm himself, to put on his harness; to get an armour on his back," (Cotgrave.)

True is, that I at first was dubbed knight
By a good knight, the knight of the Redcrosse;
Who, when he gaue me armes, in field to fight,
Gaue me a shield in which he did endosse
His deere Redeemer's badge vpon the bosse.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

Her name on every tree I will endosse,
That as the trees do grow, her name may grow;
And in the ground each where will it engrosse;
And fill with stones that all men may it knowe,

Id. Colin Clout's come Home again.

They no sooner espyed the morninges mistresse, with disheueled tresses, to mount her luerie chariot, but they endossed their armours.

Knight of the Sea. (See Todd's Spenser, vol. vi. p. 294. N.)

Nay, so your seate his beauties did endorse
As I began to wish myself a horse.

B. Jonson. To the Earl of Newcastle.

The field all iron cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers all in steel for standing fight,
Chariots or elephants endorst with towers
Of archers. Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

This perchance may be your policy, to endorse me your brothir, thereby to endear me the more to you.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 1.

Sire was also appropriate only to the king: but now, adding a name after it, 'tis applicable to any mean man upon the endorsement of a letter or otherwise.—Id b. iv. Let. 19.

Or, whether the examples of men, either noble or religious, who haue sat down lately with a meek silence and sufferance under many libellous endorsements, may be a rule to others, I might well appease myself to put up any reproaches in such an honourable society of fellow sufferers, using no other defence.—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

He no sooner came within reach, but the first of them with his whip took the exact dimension of his shoulders, which he very ingeniously call'd endorsing; and indeed I must say that every one of them took due care to endorse him as he came through their hands.—Spectator, No. 498.

Care will be taken for the future, that the letters I send to you be dated. But in case at any time it should be forgotten, you may be pleased in great part to supply the omission, by endorsing on the letter when you receive it; for by that it will appear, that at least it was written as early as the time mentioned in the endorsement.

Boyle Works, vol. vi. p. 70.

For I am much mistaken, Mr Spec if some of these endorsements were not wrote in so strong a hand, that they are still legible.—Spectator, No 498.

What he [Hastings] has endorsed on the bonds, or when he made the endorsement, or whether in fact he has made it at all, are matters known only to himself.

Burke. Report of a Committee on the Affairs of India.

EN-DOUBT, v. To throw into doubt or fear; to fear.

And if I ne had endoubted me
To haue ben hated or assailed
My thankes woll I not haue failed.

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

EN-DOW, or } Endew, by Spenser. Skin-
END'E, v. } ner has no doubt that endue
END'WMENT. } (or indue) is corruptly written for endow; en, and dow, (qv.) from the Lat. Dos; Gr. Δως, any thing given.

To give; to bestow; to give or bestow, (sc.) a dowery or gift on marriage; a marriage portion; to bestow or settle any gift of property upon; to give or bestow, (sc.) any qualities of mind or body.

Take measure in your talking, be not outrage,
For thus rehearseth Romance de la Rose,
A man endued with plenteous language
Oft time is denyed his purpose.—Chaucer. Balade. Mess.

Among so manye notable benefites wherewith God hath alreadie liberally and plentifullye endued vs there is nothing more beneficiall, than that wee haue by hys grace kept vs quiet from rebellion at this time.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

And to aduance his name and glory more,
Her sea god syre she dearely did perswade,
T' endow her sonne, with treasure rich and store
Bove all her sonnes, that were of earthly wombes ybore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

——— Thou losell base
That hast with borrowed plumes thyself endewed,
And others worth with leasing doost deface,
When they are all restor'd thou shalt rest in disgrace.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 3.

Then like a faery knight himself he drest;
For, euery shape on him he could endew:
Then like a king he was to her exprest,
And offred kingdomes vnto her in view.—Id. Ib. b iii. c.8.

To tell my riches, and endowments rare,
That by my foes are now all spent and gone;
To tell my forces matchable to none.—Id. Ruines of Time.

Our laws give great encouragement to the best, the noblest, the most lasting works of charity: such as erecting workhouses for the poor that are able to work, endowing hospitals and alms-houses for the impotent, distempered and aged poor; setting up free-schools for the education of youth.

Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Now an unintelligent being, 'tis evident, cannot be endued with all the perfections of all things in the world; because intelligence is one of those perfections.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 8.

And yet I do not take humility in man to consist in disowing or denying any gift or ability that is in him, but in a just valuation of such gifts and endowments, yet rather thinking too meanly than too highly of them.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. viii.

But in my Delia all endowments meet,
All that is just, agreeable or sweet;
All that can praise and admiration move,
All that the wisest and the bravest love.

Pomfret. Strephon's Love for Delia.

For some there are whose mighty frame
The hand of Jove at birth endow'd
With hopes that mock the gazing crowd.

Akenside. On Lyric Poetry.

Neither, in those days of feodal rigour, was the husband allowed to endow her ad ostium ecclesiæ with more than the third part of the lands whereof he then was seized, though he might endow her with less; lest by such liberal endowments the lord should be defrauded of his wardships and other feodal profits.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 8.

O Hastings, not to all
Can ruling heaven the same endowments lend,
Yet still doth nature to her offspring cast,
That to one general weal their different powers they bend,
Unenvious.—Akenside, b. i. Ode 18.

EN-DRUDGE. A. S. Dreog-an;—
To labour, to undergo.

A slave's slave goes in rank with a beast; such is every one that endrudgeth himself to any known sin.
Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 29.

EN-DUCE. Commonly In, (qv.)
To draw or lead to or into.

I was easily enduced to turne it into English, vnderstanding that the same was no lesse gratefull to you here, then I know it to be acceptable to many great and worthie persons there.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 301.

EN-DURE, v. / ENDU'RANCE. / ENDU'RER. / ENDU'RING, n. (Also In.) Lat. Indurare; Fr. Endurer; Lat. Durare, to be or cause to be hard, or hardy; from Gr. Δουρον, lignum, wood. Wielif renders the Vulg. Indurarentur, were harded, (Acts, xix. 9.)

To harden; to suffer, to bear up against hardships; and thus, to abide, to last, (sc.) without yielding, without decay.

"Fr. Endurer,—to dure, last, continue long; also (and most properly) to indure, tolerate, suffer, bear, sustain, abide, undergo," (Cotgrave.)

Therfore of whom God wole he hath mercy, and whom he wole he endurith.—Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 9.

For she, that doth me all this wo endure,
Ne receeth never, whether I sinke or flete.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2398.

And first of o thing warne I thee
That paine and great aduersitie
He mote endure. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Now he hurteth, and now he cureth
For seld in o point Loue endureth.—Id. Ib.

And the thinges eke, that men weenen me haue no soules, ne desire they not by semblable reason, to kepen that is his, that is to sain, that is according to hor nature, in conseruacion of hor being and enduring!—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

For certes suche a maladie
As I now haue, and longe haue hadde,
It might make a wise man madde,
If that it shulde longe endure.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For in their complaynt Diorippus perceyued by lookes, that they noted hym as the chiefe, which he could not endure, but partyng out of the feast (after hee had written a letter to the kyng) he killed himselfe
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 275.

And eke that age despised niceness vaine,
Enur'd to hardnesse and to homely fare.
Which them to war-like discipline did traine,
And manly limbs endur'd with little care,
Against all hard mishaps, and fortunelesse misfare
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

And now he has so long remained there,
That vitall powres gan waxe both weake and wan,
For want of food, and sleepe; which two vpheare,
Like mighty pillours, this fraile life of man,
That none without the same endurен can.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 8.

All which, when she with hard endurance had Heard to the end, she was right sore bestad,
With sodaine stounds of wrath and griefe attone.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

Lap. Say no more, sir,
I'll fit you with my scholars, new practitioners,
Endurers of the time.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Passionate Madman, Act iv. sc. 1.

His hardinesse in fight, the many warres that hee made, sufficiently do prove: as also his patient enduring of extreame cold and heat both.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 268.

And I am sure it will be no comfort to them in another world, that they were accounted wits for deriding those miseries which they then feel and smart under the severity of: it will be no mitigation of their flames that they go laughing into them: nor will they endure them the better because they would not believe them.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 1.

'Tis confessed, when through the cross circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience,—then religion bids him quit it,—that is, it bids him prefer the endurance of a lesser evil before a greater, and nature itself does no less.—South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Certainly these examples [Regulus and Socrates] should make us courageous in the endurement of all worldly misery, if not out of religion, yet at least out of shame.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 9.

Each in his tent invoke the pow'r of sleep
To brace his vigour, to enlarge his strength
For long endurance. Glover. Leonidas, b. x.

The favour of God is, to them that obtain it, a better and an enduring substance, which, like the widow's barrel and cruse, wasted not in the evil days of famine, nor will fail in that evil day of eternal want, when the foolish virgins shall be calling in vain for oil, and the rich glutton as vainly imploring a drop of water to cool his tongue.
Horne. Com. on Psalms, Ps. 37.

E'NEMY. / E'NMITY. Fr. Ennemi; It. Inimico; Sp. Enemigo; Lat. Inimicus; qui non amat; minimè amicus. The adjective is written inimical.

One who loves not; one who dislikes; who opposes our good; does, or endeavours to do, ill; bears ill will or malice.

An adversary, foe, antagonist; emphatically, the devil is so called.

And he werred ofte tyme and wise
Worthily vpon Godes enemyse.—R. Gloucester, p. 588. App.

In the morning it was, he mette with his enemys
& alle the day thei fauht, at euen he had the pris.
R. Brunne, p. 67.

——— Ne be afered of enemye.—Piers Ploukman, p. 215.

Ghe han herd that it was seid thou schalt love thi neighbore, and hate thin enemy. But I seye to you, love ye your enemyes, do ye wel to hem that haten you, and prie for hem that pursuen and sclaundren you.—Wiclif. Matth. c. 5.

Ye have heard howe it is sayde: Thou shalt loue thy neighboure, and hate thine enemie. But I say vnto you, love your enemies, blesse them that curse you, doe good to them that hate you. Praye for them whiche doe you wronge and persecute you.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Witchcraftes, enemytees, striuingis, yndignacionns.
Wiclif. Galathies, c. 5.

And now I am so caitif and so thral,
That he that is my mortal enemy,
I serve him as his squier prively.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1556.

The book sayth, that no wight retourneth safely into the grace of his olde enemie. And Ysope sayth, Ne trost not to hem, to which thou hast somtime had werre or enmitee, ne telle hem not thy counseil.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

——— Hym were leuer for to sane
One of his liges, than to haue
Of enemies an hundred dede.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

A lawe was made, that no prince should shette his gates night nor daye: for thei saied, thei had made hym kyng for to dryue awaie their enemies, and not to be dayntily nourished.—Golden Boke, c. 17.

Juste forgettynge that their captiuitee hadde not mitigated their enemitelyke myndes so much, but yt his wrongfull demeanor towardes thē had more styrred thē to [be] displeasūt against him.—Golding. Justine, fol. 172.

Nath'lesse, th' enchaunter would not spare his paine,
In hope to win occasion to his will;
Which when he long awaited had in vaine,
He chang'd his mind from one to other ill:
For to all good he enemy was still.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Valum. Prythe now,
Goe, and be rul'd, although I know thou hadst rather
Follow thine enemie in a fiery gulfe,
Than flatter him in a bower.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 2.

The man, it may be, is chaste, because he hates the immodesty of those addresses which prepare to uncleanness; or he loves his quiet, or fears the accidents of his enemy-crime.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2.

For, th' aire was milde, and cleared was the sky,
And all his windes Dan Aeolus did keepe
From stirring vp the stormy enmity.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

So civil and temperate were men's enmities at that time, regarding the common benefit of their publick state and weal: and so much did their ambition (being the most vehement passion of all others, and that most troubleth men's minds) give place, and yield to the necessities and affairs of the commonweal.—North. Plutarch, p. 419.

Is it not much better to be let into the knowledge of one's self, than to hear what passes in Muscovy or Poland; and to amuse ourselves with such writings as tend to the wearing out of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, then such as naturally conduce to inflame hatreds and make enmities irreconcileable?—Spectator, No. 10.

He who does a man an injury, generally, becomes the rancorous enemy of the injured man; and even the friends of him, whose power is on the decline, cautiously withdraw from his interest.
Mickle. History of the Portuguese Empire in Asia.

And by these guileful means he more prevail'd
Than had he open enmity profest;
The wolf more safely wounds when in sheep's clothing dresst.—Lloyd. The Progress of Envy.

E'NERGY. / ENE'RGICK. / ENERGE'TICK. / ENERGE'TICAL. / ENERGE'TICALLY. / E'NERGIZE, v. / E'NERGIZER. Gr. Ενεργεια; εν and εργον, an act, work, operation. Wilkins calls it—efficient faculty, or act.

"Fr. Energie, — energy, effectual operation, force, efficacy," (Cotgrave.) It is applied to—

Vigorous power to act; vigorous power in action; active resolution; a lively strength; a forcible spiritedness.

The spirit of grace is the spirit of wisdom, and teaches us by secret inspirations, by proper arguments, by actual persuasions, by personal applications, by effects and energies.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

These species are made a medium between body and spirit, and therefore partake of no more of being, then what the charity of our imaginations affords them; and the supposition infers a creative energie in the object their producent, which philosophy allows not to creature effic ents.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 4.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and as far as we can, adequately; we must look upon him not only as an eternal, but also as a being eternally energetick.
Grew. Cosmologia, b. i. c. 1.

Of the same consideration is the form of our church collecta, which are made pleasant by their variety of matter, are made energetical and potent by that great endearment of, [per Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum.]
Bp. Taylor. Polemical Discourses, Pref.

So does all our naturall endeavour, when first set awork by God's preventing grace, decline to the imperfection of its owne kinde, unlesse the same force be made energetical and operative by the continuation and renewing of the same supernatural influence.—Id. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 4.

As eloquent as they [some of the Fathers] naturally were, yet they never appear so eloquent, never put on such a variety of thought and expression, such an elevation of soul and style, as when they are discoursing of the energy and power of church music.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

The Holy Ghost or the Spirit of the Father and the Son: is shadowed out to us by the most penetrating energie things known; (to wit) wind, light, and fire.
Cheyne. On Regimen, Disc. 4. § 33.

The great energies of nature are known to us only by their effects. The substances which produce them, are as much concealed from our senses as the divine essence itself.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

Arise, as in that elder time,
Warm, energick, chaste, sublime!—Collins. The Passions.

Martha, we know, was so overwhelmed with family cares and embarrassments, so immoderately anxious to provide an entertainment worthy of her illustrious guest, so cumbered, as our version very energetically expresses it, with much serving, that, like many others engaged in the bustle of active life, she conceived the business she was employed in to be the most important of all human concerns.
Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

For I trust it is less the purpose of our present meeting to feast the ravished ear with the enchanting sounds of holy harmony (which afford indeed the purest of the pleasures of the senses) than to taste those nobler ecstasies of energizing love, of which flesh and blood, the animal part of us, can no more partake than it can inherit heaven.
Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 25.

All verbs, that are strictly so called, denote energies. Now as all energies are attributes, they have reference of course to certain energizing substances.—Harris. Hermes, b. i. c. 9.

Farther, every energy doth not only require an energizer, but is necessarily conversant about some subject.—Id. Ib.

ENE'RVE, v. / ENE'RVATE. / ENE'RVATE, adj. / ENERVA'TION. / ENE'RVOUS. Fr. Enerver; Sp. Enervar; It. and Lat. Enervare, (q.d.) eximere nervos.—Gr. Εκνευριζ-ειν, from εκ, and νευρον, nervus: a string, that which stringeth or strengtheneth. See STRENGTH.

To take away, to deprive of, nerve; "to bereave of force, of pith, of vigour; to weaken, to debilitate, to enfeeble."

Such object hath the power to soft'n and tame
Severest temper, smooth the rugged'st brow,
Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii

But yet I feel no weakness, nor hath length
Of winters quite enervated my strength.
Denham. Of Old Age, pt. ii.

For great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their owne protecting forces.
Bacon. Ess. Of Vicissitude of Things.

For when they be praised exceedingly they waxe carelesse, dissolute and enervate; neither will they be willing afterwards to take more paines.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 9.

So that this colour of meliority and prehemmence is a signe of enervation and weaknesse.
Bacon. A Table of the Colours of Good and Evill.

They thought their whole party safe ensconced behind the sheriffs of London and Middlesex, with their partisans of ignoramus; and that the law was enervous as to them.
State Trials. Stephen Colledge, 1681. North's Examen.

But all in vain she throws her darts,
They hit, but cannot hurt our hearts:
Age has enerv'd her charms so much,
That fearless all her eyes approach.
Dorset. The Antiquated Coquet.

Then all the Muses in one ruin lie,
And rhyme began t' enervate poetry.
Dryden. To Sir Godfrey Kneller

The Muse, which should instruct, now entertains,
On trifling subjects, in enervate strains.
Somerville. To Allan Ramsay.

Hail, noble Albion: where no golden mines,
No soft perfumes, nor oils, nor myrtle bowers,
The vigorous frame and lofty heart of man
Enervate. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

In a word, we ought to act in party with all the moderation which does not absolutely enervate that vigour, and quench that fervency of spirit, without which the best wishes for the publick good must evaporate in empty speculation.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

Cold blooded critics, by enervate sires
Scarce hammer'd out, when Nature's feeble fires
Glimmer'd their last. Churchill. The Rosciad.

EN-FAME, i. e. Infamy.

Ye forsooth (qd. I) and that so comenly the people woll lie and bring aboute suche enfame.
Chaucer The Test. of Love, b. i.

Some men there been that their owne enfame can none otherwise void, or els excuse, but be hindering of other men's fame.—Id. Ib.

EN-FA'MINED, i. e. Famished, hungry.

Unneth is Demophon to lond ywonne
Weake and eke wery, and his folke forpined
Of wetnesse, and also enfamined.
Chaucer, Legend of Phillis.

EN-FA'MOUSED, i. e. rendered famous.

The midland sea so swiftly was she scouring,
The Adriatic Gulfe brave ships devouring,
To Padus' silver streame then glides she on (Enfamoused by rekeles' Phaeton.)
Browne. Pastorals, b. i., s. 1.

EN-FAUNCE, i. e. Infancy.

The which Deuil in her enfaunce
Had lerned of louer's art.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

EN-FECT, v. i. e. Infect.

For all the world they stinken as a gote;
Her savour is so rammish and so hote,
That though a man a mile from hem be
The savour wol enfect him, trusteth me.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,357

There was a chanon of religioun
Amonges us, wold enfect al a toun,
Though it as gret were as was Nimive.—Ib. Ib. v. 16,416.

EN-FE'EBLE, v. } (In.) Fr. Foible, fible;
ENFE'EBLER. } Sp. Feble; It. Fiebole, fierole, debilis, languidus, (q. d.) flebilis, as we say (Skinner adds) lamentable, and pitiful, weak. See also Menage, Le Origini della Lingua Italiana, in v. Fiebole; and in Du Cange, Flebilis, and Flebilitas, which were used in Low Latin as equivalent to debilis and debilitas.

To weaken, to debilitate, to enervate, to deprive of strength; to reduce to infirmity or imbecility.

They say that they spende vpon noughty beggers the good that was wonte to keepe good yomen, and that thereby they both enfeable & also dishonour the realme.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 892.

Onely I fear my wits, enfeebled late
Through the sharp sorrows which thou hast me bred,
Should faint, and words should fail me to relate
The wondrous triumphs of thy great God-hed.
Spenser. Hymn in Honour of Love.

My people are with sickenesse much enfeebled.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act III. s. 6.

Their tongue, enfeebled, is refin'd too much;
And, like pure gold, it bends at every touch.
Dryden. Ep. To Mr. Motteux.

Bane of every manly art,
Sweet enfeebler of the heart!
O, too pleasing in thy strain,
Hence, to southern climes again
Philips. Ode to Signora Cuzzino.

Abject fear, which views some tremendous evil impending, from which it cannot possibly escape, as it depresses the spirits, so it enfeebles the corporeal frame; and it renders the victim an easy prey to the evil he dreads.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. i. s. 2.

EN-FE'LONED. See FELON.

"Fr. Enfelonni,—become fierce, waxt curst, grown cruel," (Cotgrave.)

With that, like one enfelon'd or distraught,
She forth did rome, whither her rage her bore
With frantick passion, and with fury fraught.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

EN-FEOFF, v. } (Also In.) To give or
ENFE'OFFMENT. } grant, yield, surrender, or give possession of, (sc.) a feud, fief, or fee; which last appellation (says Blackstone) signifies in the northern languages, a conditional stipend or reward. Blackstone is probably right as to the legal application, but not as to the meaning of the word. (See FEE.) Fee is the old Fr. Fe; Lat. Fides; and a fee, any thing granted by one, and held by another, upon oath or promise of fealty or fidelity. Enfeoffment is a common legal term.

Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himselfe to popularitie.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 2.

Imputation doth both: it is that which enfeoffes our sinnes upon Christ, and us in his righteousnesse, as he was made our sinne.—Bp. Hall The Old Religion, s. 2.

He that so gives or enfeoffs, is called the feoffor; and the person enfeoffed is denominated the feoffee.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

EN-FETTER, v. To bind or fasten the feet, to bind, fasten or enslave.

His soule is so enfetter'd to her loue,
That she may make, vnmake, do what she list,
Euen as her appetite shall play the God,
With his weak function.—Shakes. Othello, Act II. sc. 3.

EN-FIERCE, v. (See also EFFIERCE.) Lat. Ferus.

To render fierce, cruel, savage.

——— Yet nathmore
Was he abashed now, not fighting so:
But, ma enfierced through his currish play,
Hym sternely gryp't, and hailing to and fro,
To ouerthrowe him strongly did assay.
Spenser Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

EN-FILADE. Lat. Filum; Fr. Filer, (Enfiler,) to draw out threads; to extend in length, in a line.

To enfilade, (a military term,) is to proceed in a straight line, to pierce or penetrate straight forwards; and, further, to sweep the whole length of a straight line with artillery.

In the course of a century, nature has obliterated the forms of art, the trees have swelled out beyond the line traced for them, and destroyed the enfilade, by advancing into the walks, or returing from them.
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 38.

EN-FILE, v. A. S. Feol-an, limare; Ger. Feelen. To smoothen, to polish, (sc.) with a file, (qv.)

Thei taughten hym a lace to braied,
And weue a purs, and to enfile
A perle. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And verily, the common people of India make holes through them, and so wear them enfiled as carkans and collars about their neckes onely.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 6.

EN-FIRE, v. To warm, to heat, to inflame, to enkindle.

Whom as sore your pleasant looke enfireth
That printed is your beauty in his hart.
Chaucer. Balade. Fine.

So hard those heauenly beauties be enfired,
As things diuine, least passions doo impresse,
The more of stedfast minds to be admired,
The more they stayed be on stedfastuesse.
Spenser. Hymn in Honour of Loue.

EN-FLAME, v. (Commonly In.) It. Fiamma; Sp. Llama; Lat. Flamma; Gr. Φλεγμα, φλεγ-ειν, ardere, urere, to burn.

To warm, to enkindle, to fill with warmth, with ardour, with any warm, animating feeling or passion, or affection.

The tunge is ordeyned in oure membris which defoulith al the bodie, and it is enflawmed of helle, and enflawmeth the wheel of oure birthe.—Wiclif. James, c. 3.

Exceeding rage enflam'd the furious beast,
To be avenged of so great despight;
For, neuer felt his impearceable brest
So woundrous force from hand of liuing wight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

——— I then express'd my zeale
Unto the glory; now, the need enflames me.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act I.

——— The gen'rous youth,
My lov'd compeers, hence with redoubled toil
Shall strive to merit such auspicious smiles;
And through life's various walks, in arts or arms,
Or tuneful numbers, with their country's love
And with true loyalty enflam'd, t' adorn
This happy realm.
Dr. Warton. Spoken to the King by Lord Shaftesbury.

EN-FOLD, v. (Commonly In.) Goth. Fald-an; A. S. Feald-an; Dut. Vouden; Ger. Falten, plicare, complicare.

To lap or wrap over, to enwrap, to enclose, to encircle.

Let them all being quite forgoe,
And make it playne,
That God, who Jacob's rule upholds,
Rules all, all bearing earth enfolds.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 69.

A wounded dragon vnder him did lie,
Whose hideous tail his left foot did enfold,
And with a shaft was shot through either eye,
That no man forth might drawe, ne no man remedy.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

——— Noble Banquo,
Thou hast no lesse deserv'd, nor must be knowne
No less to haue done so: let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act I. sc. 4.

Shep. Are you a Courtier, and 't like you, sir?
Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a Courtier. Seest thou not the ayre of the Court in these enfoldings?
Id. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

The holy Jesus made a whip of corde to represent and to chastise the implications and enfoldings of synne and the corde of vanity.—Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 3.

Around this world a waxen vault extends,
And wide like you enfolding concave bends;
Magnific cupola; on either hand,
Unfolded, two mysterious portals stand,
Emblems of human life.—Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. vi.

EN-FORCE, v. }
ENFO'RCE, n. }
ENFO'RCEDLY. }
ENFO'RCEMENT. } (Also In.) Fr. Forcer; It. Forzare; Sp. Forzar, from the Lat. Fortis, strong, q. d. (says Skinner,) fortiare.
ENFO'RCER. }
ENFO'RCIVE. }

"Fr. Enforcer,—to enforce, confirm, strengthen, add power, apply force, give strength unto," (Cotgrave.)

To do, or try, or attempt to do, with force or strength; with violence; to compel; to give force or strength to; to give energy, power, weight or authority; to urge, to press, to impress, strongly or deeply.

He also enforsede to defoule the temple, whom also we tooken and wolden deme after our lawe.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 24.

And whanne the schip was rauyschid and myghte not enforse agheus the wynd, whanne the schip was ghouun to the blowingis of the wynd we weren borun with cours into an yle that is clepid Canda.—Id. Ib. c. 27.

And yet, with sorwe, thou enforcest thee,
And sayest thise wordes in the apostle's name.
Chaucer. Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5922.

For Salomon saith, Ther as thou ne mayst have non audience, enforce thee not to speke.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

So haue I enforsed myselfe to preache the gospell, not where Christe was named, lest I shoulde haue bylte on another man's foundacion.—Bible, 1551. Romanes, c. 15.

Such a newe herte and lusty corage vnto the lawe warde, canste thou neuer come by of thyne owne strength and enforcement, but by the operacion and workinge of the spirite.
Udal. Prologue to the Romayns.

And so muche the rather, that they offer themselues to stand to iudgemente, by whyche thair coinge, we may not reasonably gr agaynste them, as outrazuus & enf. seers.
Nicolas. Thucidides, fol. 32.

Feare gave her winges, and rage enforst my flight:
Through woods and plaines so long I did her chace,
Till this mad man, whom your victorious might
Hath now fast bound, me met in middle space.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

Sici. —— Let them assemble:
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election: enforce his pride,
And his old hate vnto you.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

Bas. Portia, forgiue me this enforced wrong,
And in the hearing of so many friends
I sweare to thee, euen by thine owne faire eyes
Wherein I see myself——
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

These shifts refuted, answer thy appellant,
Though by his blindness maim'd for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight;
As a petty enterprise of small enforce.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, v. 1225.

Ape. If thou didst put this sowre cold habit on
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: thou dst Courtier be againe
Wert thou not beggar.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

—— With my soveraignes leave
I'll wed thee to this man, will he, will he.
Phil. Pardon me, sir, I'll be no love enforcer
I use no power of mine unto those ends
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid of the Mill, Act v. sc. 1.

A sucking hinde calfe [the eagle] trust, in her enforcive seeres,
And by Jove's altar let it fall, amongst th' amazed peeres.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

If good and evil, right and wrong, fitness and unfitness of being practised, be (as has been shown) originally, eternally and necessarily, in the nature of things themselves; 'tis plain that the view of particular rewards or punishments, which is only an after-consideration, and does not at all alter the course of things, cannot be the original cause of the obligation of the law, but is only an additional weight to enforce the practice of what men were before obliged to by right reason.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

Our gospel-scribe or preacher, in the entertainment of his spiritual guests, is not always to set before them, only the main substantials of religion, whether for belief, or practice, but as the matter shall require, to add also illustration to the one, and enforcement to the other, sometimes persuading, sometimes terrifying.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

Here by a set of men 'tis thought,
A scheme, by politicians wrought,
To strengthen and enforce the law,
And keep the vulgar more in awe.
Dodsley. Religion, a Simile

—— Were my friend
Less than he is, among the satraps least,
At my enforcement shall the king unite
Their nuptial hands.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. xx.

EN-FORM, v. i. e. to form, frame, or fashion. Fr. Enformer.

Tho messengers camen, the consell that he ches
Bifor R. alle samen, and enformed his pes.
R. Brunne, p. 163.

Thider to Saynt Edmour com the tresorere,
Walter of Langtoun, that had been messengere
With the cardinalle forto enforme the pes.—Id. p. 255.

He knew the diuerse went of mortall wales,
And in the mindes of men had great insight;
Which, with sage counsell, when they went astray,
He could enforme, and them reduce aright,
And al the passions heale, which wold the weaker spright.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6. s. 3.

EN-FORM, v. } (Now commonly In.) Fr. Enformer; It. Informare; Sp. Informar; Low Lat. Informare; a word indeed (says Skinner) entirely unknown to classic authors, yet truly elegant.
ENFO'RMING, n.
ENFORMA'TION.

To represent to, and impress upon the mind or intellect of another, the form or idea of any thing. To give or convey ideas; to convey or communicate knowledge; to instruct with knowledge or intelligence, to teach; to fill with ideas or sensations; to inspire with, to animate.

But therfore I haue getun merci, that Crist Iesu schuld eschewe in me first al pacience to the enformyng of hem that schulen bileeue to him into euerlastynge lyf.
Wiclif. 1 Tim. c. 1.

For, as sayth the philosophere, a man is a quick thing, by nature debonaire, and treatable to goodnesse: but whan debonairtee is enformed of grace then it is the more worth
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

When that his doughter twelve yere was of age,
He to the court of Rome, in subtile wise
Enformed of his will, sent his message.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8614.

Enformed whan the king was of the knight,
And hath conceived in his wit aright
The maner and the forme of all this thing,
Full glad and blith, this noble doughty king
Repaireth to his revel, as beforne.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,649.

For thou wer wont to hurtelen and dispisen her with many words, whã she was blandishing and present, and pursadest her with sentences that were drawen out of mine entre, that is to say, of mine enformation
Id. Boecius, b. ii

And to the kynge knelende he tolde,
As he enformed was to fore.
Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And for thyn enformacion,
That thou this vice (as I the rede)
Eschewe shalte, a tale I rede.
Id. Ib.

He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance.
That he myght enforme hys prynces after his wyll, and teach his senatours wysedome.—Bible, 1551. Psalm, c. 105.

—— Unkinde fate—
To play the tyrant and subvert the state
Of acted goodnesse! Who shall henceforth stand
A pure example to enforme the land
Of her loose riot!—Habington. Death of the Earle of S.

EN-FO'RREST, v. To make or turn into forest; to invest with the exclusive privileges of forest.

Let me add, that Henry the VIIIth enforested the grounds thereabouts, (the last of that kind in England,) though they never attained the full reputation of a forrest in common discourse.—Fuller. Worthies. Middlesex.

EN-FO'RTED. Surrounded, or guarded with a fort or fortress.

As Salem braveth with her hilly bullwarke,
Roundly enforted: soe the greate Jehova
Closeth his servantes, as a hilly bullwark
Ever abiding.
Sir P. Sidney. Psalm 125.

EN-FOULDRED. "Fr. Fouldroyer,—to cast or dart thunderbolts; to strike, burn, or blast with lightning or (inlightened thunderbolts,") Cotgrave.

Hart cannot thinke, what outrage, and what cries,
With foul enfouldred smoke and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies,
That all was couered with darkness dire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

EN-FRA'NCHISE, v. } (Also In.) To endow with the liberties and privileges of a free citizen; to free, to set at liberty; to admit to freedom, to endenizen.
ENFRA'NCHISING, n.
ENFRA'NCHISEMENT.

An olde man late enfranchised,
in dawnynge of the day,
With hãds fair washe wold walk the stretes
and most deuoutlye praye.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 3.

But when he saw his love, his youth's fair foe,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

—— Alas! and must it be
That love, which thus torments and troubles me
In settling it, so small advice hath lent
To make me captive, where enfranchisement
Cannot be gotten.—Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i.

Such illustrious and noble geniuses were Cosmo di Medicis, Francis the First, Carlo Borromeo, and others, who built or appointed for them stately apartments even in their own palaces, and under the same roofe: procuring models, and endowing them with charters, enfranchisements, and ample honoraries.—Evelyn. Sculpture, c. 5.

Now as concerning the multitude, so augmented by the enfranchising of slaves: as touching the land also, parted and distributed among the poor and needie, I can maintaine and justify my doings herein, and protect me under the defence and priviledge of the very time.
Holland. Livius, p. 870.

Within the silent shades of soft repose,
Where Fancy's boundless stream for ever flows;
Where the enfranchis'd soul at ease can play
Tir'd with the toilsome business of the day.
Duke of Buckinghamshire. The Vision.

O Freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their master's find,
The privilege of doles: nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found:
Slaves are made Citizens, by turning round.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 3.

The Provincials flocked in; even slaves were no sooner enfranchised than they were advanced to the highest posts; and the plan of comprehension, which had overturned the Republick strengthened the Monarchy.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. i. c. 3.

He holds an estate under certain cities in your government, of which he is desirous to procure the enfranchisement; and I am persuaded he may easily obtain his point by the intervention of your good offices.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. iii. Let 24.

EN-FREED. } To give or bestow freedom or liberty; to set free.
ENFRE'EDOMING.

Par. His purpose meets you: it was to bring this Greek
To Calchas' house; and there to render him,
For the enfreed Anthenor, the fair Cressid.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 1.

Arm. By my sweete soule I meane, setting thee at libertie, enfreedoming thy person.
Id. Love's Labour Lost, Act iii. sc. 1.

EN-FRO'ZEN, v. Past part. of Enfreeze. (Met.)—to chill; to render insensible.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozened her disdainfull brest,
That no one drop of pitie there doth rest.
Spenser. An Hymn in Honour of Love.

EN-GAGE, v. } (In.) Fr. Engager; It. Ingaggiare. Gage, from A. S. Cagg-ian, observare, "that by which a man is bound to certain fulfilments," (Tooke.)
ENGA'GEMENT.
ENGA'GER.

To engage, is—
To bind or pledge, (sc.) to certain fulfilments,—to fulfil or perform certain promises or conditions; to stake, to hazard; to undertake to do, to embark in, to occupy or employ, to be busy in, to be (busily, earnestly, zealously) occupied or employed, (sc. in a conflict, a battle;) to bind, attach, enlist.

The queen perceiving in what case she stood,
To loose her minion, or engage her state;
After with long contention in her blood,
(Love and ambition did the cause debate)
She yields to pride.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

—— Or consume,
In prodigal and wanton gifts on drones,
The Kingdom's treasure, yet detain from us
The debt that with the hazard of our lives,
We have made you stand engaged for.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iii. sc. 3.

—— Portia go in awhile,
And by and by thy bosome shall partake
The secrets of my heart,
All my engagements I will construe to thee.
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act ii. sc. 1.

And here again, in the opinion of many judicious persons, we lost, as at Edge-hill before, a favourable opportunity of engaging the enemy with great advantage; our numbers exceeding theirs, and their reputation being utterly lost in the last attempt.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 47.

The king objected, that the rendezvous being appointed for the next week, he was not willing to quit the army till that was passed: because if the superior officers prevailed, they would be able to make good their engagement; if not, they must apply themselves to him for their own security
Id. Ib. p. 186.

And that they [the Italian Opera] might be performed with all decency, seemliness, and without rudeness and profaneness, John Maynard, Sergeant at Law, and several sufficient citizens were engagers.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. D'Avenant.

Important is the moral we would teach:
Oh may this island practice what we preach!
Vice in its first approach with care to shun;
The wretch, who once engages, is undone.
Mallet. Prologue to Mr. Thomson's Agamemnon.

The battle proved decisive in favour of the house of York, and in consequence of it, Edward was, in June, 1461, crowned King of England, &c. There were killed in this engagement 36,776 men.—Fawkes. Braham Park, Note 8.

EN-GA'LLANT, v. To make a gallant, a fine fellow.

I would have you direct all your courtship thither: if you cou'd but endeare yourself to her affection you were eternally engallanted.—B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act iv. sc. 3.

EN-GAOL, or } To imprison, to confine.
ENJAIL, v.

Thinner than burnt aire flies this soule, and she,
Whom four new coming, and four parting suns
Had found, and left the mandrake's tenant, runs
Thoughtlesse of change, when her firm destiny
Confin'd, and enjail'd her, that seem'd so free,
Into a small blew shell.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul, s. 18.

Within my mouth you haue engaol'd my tongue
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act I. sc. 3.

EN-GA'RBOIL, v. To confuse or confound, to throw into disorder, to disturb.

It is strange, that for wishing, advising, and in his owne particular using and ensuing that moderation, thereby not to engarboile the church, and disturb the course of piety, he should so, by you and yours, ben blamed, accused, and traduced for a papist and an Arminian.
Montagu. Appeale to Cæsar, c. 9.

EN-GA'RRISON, v. To prepare, provide or furnish, (sc.) with military stores, with ammunition, with arms, with soldiery; to fortify, to intrench.

There was John engarrison'd, and provided for the assault with a trusty sword, and other implements of war.
Grancill. Witchcraft, p. 127.

The Romanes, the centurion and his band, were there as actors, as supervisors of the execution: those strangers were no otherwise impaged, than as they that would hold fare correspondence with the citizens, where they were engarrisoned.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Crucifixion.

Every man has corrupt sinful habits that have overspread, and, as it were, engarrison'd themselves in the most inward parts of his soul. habits deeply fixt and not easily dispossessed.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 3.

In this case we encounter sin in the body, like a besieged enemy. and such an one, when he has engarrison'd himself in a strong hold, will endure a storm, and repel assaults.
Id. vol. ix. Ser. 5.

EN-GE'NDER, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Gendre,
ENGE'NDURE. } from the ablative genere, from gignere, (qv.) γεν-εν, to beget.

"Fr. Engendrer,—to ingender, to procreate, beget, breed; cause, make, procure, begin," (Cotgrave.)

Seth Adames sone. sitthen was engendrede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 179.

For al so siker as cold engendreth hayl,
A likerous mouth most han a likerous tayl.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6017.

This every lewed vicar and parson
Can say, how ire engendreth homicide;
Ire is in soth executour of pride.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7391.

Thou woldest han ben a trede-foul aright,
Haddest thou as grete leve, as thou hast might,
To parfourme all thy lust in engendrure,
Thou haddest begeten many a creature.
Id. The Monkes Prologue, v. 15,952.

Right so maie no pitee arreste
Of cruelte the great vltrage,
Whiche the tyranne in his corage
Engendred hath. Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

When straight another new conspiracy
(As if it were a certain successor,
Ally'd to this) engender'd in the north,
Is by the Archbishop Scroope with pow'r brought forth.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Du. Sen. True it is that we have seen better dayes,
And haue with holy bell bin knowld to church,
And sat at good men's feasts, and wip'd our eyes
Of drops, that sacred pity had engendred.
Shakespeare. As you Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

Mercy should pardon, but the sword compel:
Compassion's eine a Kingdom's greatest harm,
Its warmth engenders rebels till they swarm.
Otway. Windsor Castle.

Dropp'd hints they scarcely wished to smother,
And talk'd not to, but at each other,
Till strife engend'ring more and more,
They downright wrangled, if not swore.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

E'NGHILE See ANGLE.

EN-GILD, v. To cover with gold; with the brightness, the brilliancy of gold.

Faire Helena; who more engilds the night,
Then all yon fierie oes, and eies of light.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iii. sc. 2.

EN-GINE. } (Also In.) From the Lat. In-
E'NGINOUS. } genium, used as equivalent to ingenuity, (qv.)

"Fr. Engin,—understanding, policy, reach of wit," (Cotgrave.)

The 4to B. Jonson reads enginous; the folio ginious. Engine and ingine, Mr. Gifford adds, are both used by our old poets for craft, artifice, and sometimes, in a better sense, for wit, that is, genius or the inventive faculty.

Right as a man hath sapiences three,
Memorie, engine, and intellect also
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,807.

If any vertue in thee be
To tell all my drome aright,
Now kith thy engin and thy might.
Id. The House of Fame, b. ii.

Arte thou my sonne of suche enayn,
Telle on? Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The women were of great enyne.—Id. Ib. b. iv

It maketh a man ben enginous,
And swifte of fote, and eke yrous.—Id. Ib. b. vii

——— Then wrought her wit
With her broke vow,—her Goddess wrath,—her fame,—
All tools that enginous despair could frame:
Which made her strow the floor with her torn hair,
And spread her mantle piecemeal in the air.
Marlowe. Hero & Leander, Sestyad 2.

For that's the marke of all their inginous drifts,
To wound my patience, howsoo're they seeme
To aime at other objects.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act iii. sc. 4.

EN-GINE, v. }
E'NGINE, s. }
ENGINE'ER; or }
E'NGINER. }
E'NGINERY. }
ENGINE'ERING, s. } Fr. Engin; It. Ingegno; Sp. Engeno, (q d.) Ingenio, because not made without great effort (ingenii) of genius, of ingenuity, of contrivance. And thus it is applied to any—

Machine, tool, or instrument, ingeniously worked, wrought, or contrived,—whether of war, of torture, to throw water, &c. And, generally, a machine, tool, or instrument.

To engine, in Chaucer, is to put upon an engine of torture; and thus, to torture, to torment. In the second quotation of Gower, "engined together," contrived to get together.

Thrittene grete enygnes of alle the reame the best
Brouht thei to Struelyne, the kastele doun to kest.
R. Brunne, p. 326.

And right anon, the ministres of the toun
Han hent the carter, and so sore him pined,
And eke the hosteler so sore engined,
That they beknew hir wikednesse anon,
And were anhanged by the necke bon.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,066.

And all within in preuy place
A softe bed of large space
Thei hadde made, and encorteined,
Where she was afterward engined.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

——— Thei treate
With faire behestes and yeftes greate
Of golde, that thei than haue engined
Together Id. Ib.

He tolde hym eke as for the myne
He wolde ordeine suche enygne,
That thei the werke should vndersette
With tymbre. Id. Ib. b. v.

Therefore his subtile engines he does bend
His practick witt and his fayre fyled tonge,
With thousand other sleightes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

The same he snatcht, and with exceeding sway
Threw at his foe, who was right well aware
To shunne the engin of his meant decay;
It booted not to thinke that throwe to beare,
But ground he gaue, and lightly leap'd areare.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 11.

Proceeded on with no less art,
My tongue was engineer:
I thought to undermine the heart
By whispering in the ear.
Suckling. 'Tis now, since I sate down before.

Who, when they would not lend their helping hand to any man in engine-worke, nor making of bulwarkes and fortifications, used foole-hardily to sallie forth and fight most courageously.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 127.

He is a good enginer that alone can make an instrument to get preferment.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 134.

——— When behold
Not distant far with heavie pace the foe
Approaching gross and huge; in hollow cube
Training his devilish enginrie.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. vi.

In the like manner as skilful an engineer as the Devil is, he will never be able to play his engines to any purpose, unless he finds something to fasten them to.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

Safe they advance, while with unweary'd pain
The wrathful engines waste their stores in vain;
High o'er their heads the destin'd deaths are tost
And far behind in vacant earth are lost.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

More dismal than the loud disploded roar
Of brazen enginry, that ceaseless storm
The bastion of a well-built city, deem'd
Impregnable. J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

These from on high, fire, darts, and jav'lins throw,
And pond'rous stones the rafters send below.
The thund'ring tempest fails, and batters down
The planks of engines rais'd against the town.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xi.

What once gave a rational pleasure will continue to give it, like a natural spring, which, though it may not throw its waters into so great a variety of forms as the artificial fountain of the engineer, will continue to supply an exuberant stream, when the scanty canal is exhausted, or machinery is destroyed.—ANON. Winter Evenings, Even. 3.

The Roman Conclave succeeded to the Roman senate in this engineering work.
Warburton. Div. Leg. Pref. to the Ed. of 1758.

Who kindling a combustion of desire,
With some cold moral think to quench the fire,
Though all your engineering proves in vain,—
The dribbling stream ne'er puts it out again
Cowper. The Progress of Error.

Genius and Art, Ambition's boasted wings
Our boast but ill deserve A feeble aid!
Dedalian enginery! if those alone
Assist our flight, Fame's flight is Glory's fall.
Young. Complaint, Night 6.

EN-GIRD, or } A. S. Gyrdan.
ENGI'RT, v. } To enclose, to surround, to
ENGI'RDLE, v. } encompass, to environ.

First th' earth, on adamantine pillers founded
Amid the sea, engirt with brazen bands,
Then th' aire still flitting, but yet firmely bounded
On everie side, with pyles of flaming brands.
Spenser. Of Heavenly Beauty, Hymne 6.

King. I, Margaret: my heart is drown'd with grefe,
Whose flood begins to flowe within mine eyes;
My body round engirt with miserie
For what's more miserable than discontent.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

The insulting waters for three moneths' space trample over all, and send colonies of fishes to inhabite the soile, engirling meane while all the townes with a strait siege.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. vi. c. 14. s. 1.

About which lodgings, tow'rds the upper face,
Ran a fine bordure circularly led,
As equal 'twixt the high'st point and the base,
That as a zone the waist engirdled.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. vi.

She saw him smile along the tissu'd clouds,
In colours rich embroider'd by the sun,
Engirt with cherub-wings and kindred forms.
Thompson. Sickness, b. ii.

——— A sash of tincture bright
Which rivall'd Flora's brilliancy of dye,
Engirds his loins. Grower. The Athenaid, b. xxvii.

No longer now on thee, amaz'd we call,
No longer tremble at imagin'd ills,
When comets blaze tremendous from on high,
Or when extending wide their flaming trains
With hideous grasp the skies engirdle round,
And spread the terrours of their burning locks.
Id. On Sir Isaac Newton.

EN-GLAD, v. } To cheer, to enliven, to ex-
ENGLA'DDEN. } hilarate.

Lyke as the larke vpon the somer's daye,
When Titan radiant burnisheth his beames bright,
Mounteth on hye, with her melodious laye
Of the son shyne engladed with her lyght.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Th' engladden'd Spring forgetful now to weep,
Began t' emblazon from her leavy bed.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

E'NGLE. See ANGLE, and INGLE.

ENGLE'YME, v. Lye says, for enclcamed, i. e. clammed. See CLAM.

The man that muche honeye eet. is mawe it englyeth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 275.

His tongue englymed, and his nose black.
Lib. Festiv. p. 61. B.

ENGLISH, v. }
E'NGLISH, s. }
E'NGLISH, adj. } To English,—to render into, to translate into English, or the English language.

And therfore he that hath translate Peter Martyr in to Englishe doth trãslate it thus. The diuine cõstitutiõ the nature of the body adioyned, these two both togyther make one sonne and one person.
Bp. Gardner. Explication of Transubst. fol. 117.

Where ere I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a true born Englishman.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act I. sc. 3.

Sul. There was an Englishman.
Ja. There was an Englishman!
You'l scant find any now to make that name good;
There were those Englishe that were men indeed,
And would perform like men, but now they are vanisht.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iii. sc. 3.

Lucretius English'd! 'twas a work might shake
The power of English verse to undertake;
This all men thought; but you are born we find,
T' out do the expectations of mankind.
Otway. To Mr. Creech.

EN-GLUE, v. "Fr. Engluer, gluer; to lime, to glew, to join or close very fast, as with birdlime, or glew," (Cotgrave.)

For thy my sonne holde vp thin heade,
And let no slepe thyn eye englue,
But whan it is to reason due.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But whan he sawe, and redie fonde
This coffre made, and well englued,
The dead bodie was besewed
In cloth of golde, and leide therin.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

EN-GLUT, v. (Also In.) Fr. Engloutir; Lat. Glutire, gluttus, (Gr. Γλωττις,) that part of the neck by which food is transmitted. See DEGLUTITION.

To swallow; to swallow in abundance; to fill by swallowing, to fill, to cram full.

——— For my particular griefe
Is of so flood-gate and orc bearing nature,
That it engluts and swallows other sorrowes,
And it is full itselfe.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry,
If for thy ransome thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured ouerthrow;
For certainly, thou art so neere the gulfe,
Thou needs must be englutted.—Id. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 3.

EN-GLU'TING. Perhaps Engluing, (qv.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, rather Enluting, stopping with clay. Skinner, Glued, stopped. See GLUTINOUS.

And of the pottes, and glasses engluting,
That of the aire might passen out no thing.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,234.

EN-GORE, v. To penetrate, to pierce; to bore through.

As when an eager mastiff once doth proue
The taste of bloud of some engored beast,
No words may rate, nor rigour him remoue
From greedy hold of that his bloody feast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

As salvage bull whom two fierce mastiues bayt,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with warie ward them to await,
But with his dreadfull hornes them driues afore.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 8.

EN-GORGE, v. (In.) Fr. Engorger; It. Ingorgiare; Lat. Ingurgitare, from the Lat. Gurges. "Fr. Engorger,—to raven, devour, glut, swill up, swallow down," (Cotgrave.)

But everie man's bellie is his dyall or clocke, which when it strikes, they fall to whatsoever comes next hand: neither doth any man after he hath once satisfied hunger, engorge superfluous meats.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 237.

Then fraught with rancour, and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all,
And gathering vp himselfe out of the mire,
With his vneuen wings did fiercely fall
Vpon his sunne-bright shield, and gript it fast withall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

EN-GRAFF, v. } (Also In.) See ENGRAVE.
ENGRA'FT, v. } To carve or cut into, to ENGRA'FTMENT. } hollow out; to insert (one thing) into a hole cut out (of another); and thus, to impregnate the one with the qualities of the other; to insert or set in, to seat deeply, to implant, to root deeply.

——— For that false spright,
Which that same witch had in his form engraft,
Was so expert in euery subtile slight,
That it could ouer-reach the wisest earthly wight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Yet him in euery part before she knew,
How-euer list her now her knowledge faine,
Sith him whilome in Britaine she did view,
To her reuealed in a mirrour plaine,
Whereof did growe her first engraffed paine.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my loue engrafted to this store.
Shakespeare, Son. 37.

Things very bitter may work pleasant effects: upon the wildest stock divine husbandry can engraft most excellent fruit.—Barrow, vol. iii. ser. 23.

Neither can that reciprocal attraction in the minds of men be accounted for by any other cause. It is not the result of education, law or fashion; but is a principle originally engrafted in the very first formation of the soul by the author of our nature.—Guardian, No. 126.

Those trees with sweetest charms invite our eyes,
Which, from our own engraftment, fruitful rise.
Still we love best what we with labour gain,
As the child's dearer for the mother's pain.
Savage. Epistle to Mr. John Dyer.

Why could not nature (fostering nurse of earth!)
Without thy aid give man his happier birth?
As trees, by human skill engrafted bear
The juicy fig, smooth plum, or racy pear.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxvii.

Much puzzle hath been occasioned among the naturalists concerning the engraftment here mentioned.
Smart. The Hilliad, Notes.

EN-GRAIL, v. Fr. Engrelle; en, and grelle, hail; which Menage thinks is derived from grandine, the ablative of grando.

To dot or spot, as with hail; to variegate, to notch, to indent, to jag, (sc.) the edges, as in Heraldry.

——— The people wondered,
And stood astonisht, th' archer pleas'd, Æacides then shewes
A long lance, and a caldron, new engrail'd with twenty hewes;
Priside at an oxe. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, p. 325.

EN-GRAIN, v. (Also In.) To work into the natural texture; to impregnate the whole texture.

Seest how fresh my flowers bene apredde,
Dyed in lilly white and cremsin redde
With leaves engrained in lustie green.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. February.

EN-GRA'PPLE, v. (Also In.) To gripe or seize hold of.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he:
There martial Worc'ster, long experienced
In foreign arms, shall come t'encounter thee.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

EN-GRASP, v. To grasp, gripe, or seize fast hold of.

Now gan Pyrrhochles wax as wood as hee,
And him affronted with impatient might:
So both together fierce engrasped bee,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their vncouth strife does see.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Vpon him lightly leaping without heed,
'Twixt his two mighty armes engrasped fast,
Thinking to ouerthrowe, and down him tread.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 8.

EN-GRAVE, v. }
ENGRA'VER. }
ENGRA'VEMENT. } (Also In.) Fr. Engraver; from the A. S. Graf-an, fodere, insculpere, excavare, to dig, to cut into, to ENGRA'VING, n. } hollow out.

To dig out a grave; and, consequentially, to bury in a grave, or place dug out.

To cut a grave or groove into; to cut or carve into; to make incisions; (met.) to imprint or impress, (sc.) upon the mind.

For he shall make ye no image (saithe the Lorde) nor engraue non (nor set vp non) no not so miche as a stonne to helpe your memory or imaginacion of any saint to thentent ye shuld do by it, at it or before it, any externe reuerēt behauior.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

Sometime t'encrease his [Phereus] horrid crueltie,
The quick with face to face engraued he
Each other's death that each might liuing see.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 441.

The sixt had charge of them now being dead,
In seemly sort their corses to engraue,
And deck with dainty flowres their bridal bed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

So both agree their bodies to engraue:
The great earth's wombe they open to the sky,
And with sad cypresse seemly it embraue,
Then couering with a clod their closed eye,
They lay therein those corses tenderly,
And bid them sleep in euerlasting peace.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

And eke by that he saw on every tree,
How he the name of one engraues had,
Which likely was his liefest loue to bee
For whom he now so sorely was bestad.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

As for that manner of paving with small tiles or quarrels engraues, the first that ever was seene at Rome, was made within the temple of Jupiter Capitolinum, and not before the thirde Punicke warre begun.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 25.

But before they went out of the cittie, the decemvirall lawes (which now are knowne by the name of the twelve tables,) they set up openly to be seene, engraven in brasse.
Id. Livie, p. 127.

Only it seems to me that these images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the image in the table or metal, but are imprinted in a wonderfull method in the very soul it selfe.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 47.

It would be tedious (as we said) to transcribe the names but of the pieces only of all those renowned men whom he there celebrates for their engravings on armour, caps, rings, glass.—Evelyn. Sculptura, c. 3.

On the other side was engraven the cross and the harp, being the arms of England and Ireland, with this inscription, "God with us:" ordering all writs formally running in the king's name to be issued out in the names of the keepers of the liberty of England.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 247.

Can it be thought, that the ideas men have of God, are the characters and marks of himself, engraven in their minds by his own finger, when we see that in the same country, under one and the same name, men have far different, nay often contrary and inconsistent ideas and conceptions of him?—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4. s. 14.

I have by me a lump of mineral substance, wherein a petrescent liquor, that fills the large intervals between them, is transparent enough and harder than most stones, as far as we could guess by some trial of it made by a skilful engraver of gems.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 547.

We therefore being the offspring of God, ought not to think that the God head is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, the engrauement of art, and man's deuice.
Barrow. Exposition of the Decalogue.

Those faults which artful men conceal
Stand here engraved with pen of steel,
By conscience, that impartial scribe!
Whose honest palm disdains a bribe.
Cotton. Fusions in Verse.

Were it not for these prejudices, could we easily think that a printseller or engraver should be able to obtain that for his baubles, which learning hath so long sued for in vain.
Warburton. Letter concerning Literary Property.

It appears from two stone tables of the law, and from the engravings on Aaron's breast-plate, that letters were in common use amongst the Israelites at the time of their egression from Egypt.—Id. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 5.

ENGRE'GGEN. "Fr. S'engreger, to grow worse, become sorer, wax more painful, grievous, or troublesome," (Cotgrave.)

To aggravate, (qv.)

All thise thinges, after that thei ben gret or smale, engreggen the conscience of a man or woman.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

EN-GRIEVE, v. Fr. Grever, from the Lat. Gravare, to weigh down.

"Fr. Grever,—to grieve, to aggrieve, pain, vex, hurt, afflict, annoy, trouble, disquiet, molest, wrong, injure, overcharge, overburthen, oppress," (Cotgrave.)

For yet nothing engreueth me.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Apollo came; who soone as he had sought,
Through his disease, did by and by out find,
That he did languish of some inward thought,
The which inflicted his engrieued mind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

The gnawing anguish and sharp jealousie,
Which his sad speech infixed in my breast,
Rankled so sore and festered inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 4.

EN-GROSS, v. }
ENGRO'SSER. }
ENGRO'SSING, n. } (Also In.) Fr. Engrosser; It. Ingrossare; Fr. Gros; It. Grosso; Ger. Gross;
ENGRO'SSMENT. } Mid. Lat. Grossus, from the Lat. Crassus, (a multâ carne, Vossius,) fleshy; thick in flesh.

To thicken, to enlarge, to increase; to be or become thick, large, heavy, fat; to do any thing large or largely; to write in large letters; and, generally, to write or copy fair; also, to buy in large quantities, in gross weights or quantities: to take or appropriate largely. See the quotation from Blackstone.

By iust accord made in parlement
At your deuise, which sitten here a row,
Engrossed was vp, as it is well know
And enrolled onely for witnes
In your registers.—Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. II.

—— The conuencion
Of olde engrossed, by great puruciaunce,
Which is enrolled, and put in remembraunce,
Id. Ib. pt. III.

But from out the book be crossed
Where the good men liue engrossed.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 69

The waues thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engrost with mud, which did them foule agriève,
That euery weighty thing they did vpheare,
Ne ought mote euer sink doune to the bottome there
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II.

We are a people now again, and may
Stile ourselves subjects: your prolong'd delay
Had almost made our jealousy engross
New feares, and raise your absence into loss.
Carturight. To the King, on his Return from Scotland.

Whilst the unsteady multitude presume,
How that you, Aretus, and I engross,
Out of particular ambition,
Th' affairs of government, which I for my part
Groan under and am weary of Massinger. The Lover's Melancholy, Act ii. sc. 1.

Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines.
Not sleeping, to engrosse his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchfull soule.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 7.

—— If out of those inventions
Which flow in Athens, thou hast here engross'd
Some rarity of wit to grace the nuptials
Of thy fair sister, and renown our court
In th' eyes of this young prince, we shall be debtor
To thy conceit.—Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 3.

What should ye do then, should ye suppress all this flowry crop of knowledge and new light sprung up, and yet springing daily in this city! should ye set an oligarchy of twenty engrossers over it, to bring a famine upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measur'd to us by the bushel?—Milton. Liberty of Unlicens'd Printing.

—— And [he] never had the mind
T' impart a part with others, who would look
To have likewise some honour in their hands,
And griev'd at such engrossing of command.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

When, like the bee, culling from every flower
The virtuous sweetes, our thighes packt with wax,
Our mouthes with honey, we bring it to the hive;
And, like the bees, are murthered for our paines.
This bitter taste yields his engrossements
To the ending father.—Shakes. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 4.

Too long hath love engross'd Britannia's stage
And sunk to softness all our Tragic rage:
By that alone did Empires fall or rise,
And fate depended on a fair one's eyes.
Tickell. To Mr. Addison on his Tragedy of Cato.

You mourn'd for ruin'd man and virtue lost,
And seem'd to feel of keen remorse the wound,
Pondering on former days by guilt engross'd
Or in the giddy storm of dissipation toss'd.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. II.

There is a practice particularly mean and oppressive, which very much prevails in this selfish age, among the engrossers of that part of the creation which God and nature have constituted free as the seas and winds.—Knox, Ess. 119.

Lord Bolingbroke tells us, that "we have lost the spirit of our Constitution; and therefore we bear, from little engrossers of delegated power, that which our fathers would not have suffered from true proprietors of the Royal authority."—Id. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 29.

8. Engrossing was also described to be the getting into ones possession, or buying up, large quantities of corn or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 12.

EN-GUARD, v. Fr. Garder, which (Tooke) is the same word as the A. S. Ward-ian, weard-ian, to look at, to direct the view; to guard well, or look well after; and, consequentially—
To watch, to protect, to keep, to preserve.

—— A hundred knights: yea, that on euerie dreame
Each buz, each fancie, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage with their powres,
And hold our liues in mercy.—Shakes. Lear, Act I. sc. 4.

They still appear of the same froward race, whereof their predecessors were, that to the miracles of a journey both night and day engarded by a Deity, dare besottedly prefer the garlick and the onyons of Egypt.
Feltham. Something upon St. Luke, xiv. 20

EN-GULF, (Also In.) Fr. Engolfer, gouffre; It. Ingolfare; Sp. Engolfar; Dut. Golpen, to gulp or swallow largely; to swallow eagerly, greedily. Skinner thinks, from the Lat. Gula, or from the sound.

To swallow up, or plunge, as into a gulf; to absorb.

And in destruction's river
Engulph and swallow those
Whose hate thus makes in anguish,
My soule afflicted languish.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 143.

Like an huge Aetna of deepe engulfed gryefe,
Sorrow is heaped in thy hollow chest,
Whence foorth it breakes in sighes and anguish rife
As smoke and sulphure mingled with confused stryfe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

—— As waves on waves succeed,
On the bleak beach they toss the sea-green weed,
Now bare the dangers of th' engulphing sand,
Now swelling high roll foaming on the strand
Fawkes. An Eulogy on Sir Isaac Newton.

EN-HA'BIT, v. (Now commonly In.) Lat. Habitare, i. e. habere, (sc.) domicilium, to have, hold or keep (sc.) a dwelling or abiding place.

To dwell or abide, to reside, to remain or live.

Ac eremites that enhabiten hem.—Piers Ploughman, p. 107.

& yet was Rome wel waxen and redoubted of the Parthes, and eke of other folke enhabityng aboute.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

That of hem thre, and hir issue
There was so large a retinue
Of nacions seuentie and two,
In sondrie place eche one of tho
The wide worlde haue enhabited.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And this erth which we wretched sinners do habite is not set vp on highe but down in a low place, ful of synes & wickednes euerye place of it.
Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, Ps. 142. pt. ii.

EN-HALSE, v. To take round the neck.

First to mine Inne commeth in my brother false,
Embraceth me: wel met good brother Scales,
And weepes withal: the other me enhalse
With welcome cosin, now welcome out of Wales.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 406.

EN-HANCE, v. } (Also In.) Perhaps from ENHA'NCEMENT. } the Fr. Hausser, which
ENHA'NCER. } Wachter thinks, with the Fr. Haut, and the Ger. Hat, altus, hæd, heighth, are the same words with the A. S. Hethe, head; the height or top of a thing.

"Fr. Hausser,—to hoise (i. e. hoist) raise, elevate, heave up, lift high, set aloft, advance," (Cotgrave.)

To heave, raise, or lift up; to elevate, to exalt, to advance, to augment, to increase.

—— So is pryde enhaunsed.
Piers Ploughman, p. 186.

For he that highith himself, schal be mekid, and he that mekith himself, shal be enhaunsid.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 23.

Hester by hire conseil enhaunsed gretly the peple of God, in the regne of Assuerus the king.
Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

He doth no pastour's office that robeth Christen kinges of their princely power & autorite, to enhaunce the tyrannouse vsurpacyons of Antichrist.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Both of them high attonce their hands enhaunst,
And both attonce their huge blowes downe did sway.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

After hir also no small attendants came in with Edward the Confessour, whom he preferred to the greatest officers in the realme, in so much that one Robert, a Norman, became Archbishop of Canturburie whose preferment much enhanced the minds of the French.
Holinshed. Description of Britain, c. 4.

Their yearly rents, by which most commonly their value to her majesty is accounted, are not to this day improved at all, the landlords making no less gain by fines and income, then there is raised in other places by enhancement of rents.
Bacon. The Office of Alienations.

And yet should God thus hearken to that prayer, continue us under this discipline longer, provide a new stock of artillery, and empty another heaven, another magazine, and armory upon us, and all prove but brutа fulmina still, another seven years of judgments thrive no better with us, than the last sad apprentiship hath done: oh what an enhancement would this be of our reckoning.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 537.

There may be just reason upon a general mortality of cattle to set those beasts that remain at an higher rate, or upon a dearth of grain or other commodities, to highten the price; but in such cases we must be so affected, as that we grudge to ourselves our own gain, that we be not in the first file of enhancers.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. I. Case 2.

But to enhance their pain, they view below,
Where lakes stand full, and plenteous rivers flow,
Between two streams expires the panting host
And in a land of water are they lost.—Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

Th' excise and chimney publican,
The Jew-fore-staller and enhancer,
To him for all their crimes did answer.
Butler. To the Memory of Duval.

Quoth Dick, "'Tis difficult to know
The truth of facts so long ago.
Writers enhance their hero's glory,
The better to set off their story."
Cambridge. Learning. A Dialogue.

If it has had any thing like an uniform rise, this enhancement may easily be proved not to be owing to the encrease of taxes, but to uniform encrease of consumption and of money.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

EN-HA'RBOUR, v. To protect, to cover, to lodge, to dwell, to inhabit.

O true delight! enharboring the breste
Of those sweet creatures with the plumy creste.
Browne. Pastorals, b. I. s. 3.

EN-HARMO'NIAN, } Fr. Harmonie; It.
ENHARMO'NICK, n. } Armonia; Sp. Armo-
ENHARMO'NICK, adj. } nia; Lat. Harmonia; Gr. Ἁρμονία, from ἁρμοζειν, convenire, congruere.

The Greeks distributed their music into three genera: the Diatonic for tones and semitones; the Chromatic for semitones and minor thirds; and the Enharmonic for quarter tones and major thirds.

And Olympus, as Aristocritus writeth, is reputed by musicians to have been the inventor of the musick called enharmonian.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1090.

Thus you see what were the first rudiments and beginnings of enharmoniques.—Id. Ib.

Enharmonion, one of the three general sorts of musick: song of many parts, or a curious concent of sundry tunes
Id. Ib. Explanation of Obscure Words.

Those, it seems, were the first enharmonick melodies; and are still retained by some, who play on the flute in the antique stile without any division of a semitone.
Sir W. Jones. On the Musical Modes of the Hindus.

EN-HASTE. "Fr. Haster,—to hasten, accelerate, speed, quicken, set forward apace," (Cotgrave.)

But to Edippus I will retourne ayen,
Which him enhastith sie, from day to day
Towards Thebes, in all that euer he may.
Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. I.

And they enhasted hem, making none abode.
Id. Ib. pt. III.

EN-HE'RITANCE. } (Now In.) Fr. Hériter;
ENHE'RITAGE. } Sp. Heridar; Lat. Hereditare, from heres. See DISHERIT.

Any thing received by hereditary descent; by descent from an ancestor.

For this ye knowe that no whoremonger either vncleane person or couetous person (which is the worshipper of images) hath any enheritaunce in the kingdome of Christ and of God.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 104.

Than answered Rahell and Lea, & sayde vnto hym we haue no parte nor enheritaūce in our father's house, he counteth vs euen as straungers, for he hath solde us, & hath euen eaten vp the price of vs.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 21.

The prince being bold of stomake & of good courage, answered saiyng, to recouer my father's kyngdome & enheritage from his father and grandfather to him, and from him, after him, to me lyneally deuoluted.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 10.

EN-HORT, v. i. e. Exhort, (qv.)

And over all this yet said he moohel more
To this effect, ful wisely to enhort
The peple, that they shuld hem recomfort.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2853.

EN-HUME, v. (Commonly In.) Lat. Humus, the ground.

To receive into, to put into the ground; to bury, to swallow up.

Soon as the monster, that to shore pursu'd
His deathful way, the boat and champion view'd,
He op'd his greedy throat that might enhanse
A horse and horseman in its living tomb!
Hoole. Of Orlando Furioso, b. xl.

EN'IGMA. EN'IGMA'TICK. EN'IGMA'TICAL. EN'IGMA'TICALLY. } Fr. Enigme; It. Sp. and Lat. Enigma; Gr. Αινιγμα; ainos, dark, obscure; and when used substantively, says Lennep, signifies any thing obscure; and thus enigma, or ænigma, an obscure speech, an obscure saying.

An obscure, dark, doubtful, or ambiguous saying.

Ar. Some enigma, some riddle, come thy leuny begin.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iii. sc. 1.

That ænigmatick foe, whose ammunition
Is nothing else but want of all provision.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 9. s. 59.

Certainly so wealthy a queene, so great a louer of wisdome could not want great scholiers at home; them she had first opposed with her enigmaticall demands; and now finding herselfe unsatisfied, she takes herselfe to this oracle of God.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Salomon and the Queene of Sheba.

This freedom of the first man Adam, and our first father, was enigmatically described by Asclepius Atheniensis (saith Mirandula) in the person and fable of Proteus, who was said, as often as he pleased to change his shape.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 2. s. 6.

At length Deucalion clear'd his cloudy brow,
And said, "the dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the God's command:
This earth our mighty mother is; the stones
In her capacious body are her bones:
These we must cast behind."—Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. i.

His death also was enigmatically described by the destruction, or demolishment of his bodily temple, answerable to those circumlocutious concerning our ordinary death.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser 27.

His immortality alone can solve
The darkest of enigmas, human hope,
Of all the darkest, if at death we die.
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

Another very persuasive argument, that the antichristian power in question is the growth of these latter times, is the mysterious darkness which in the enigmatic prophecies in the Apocalypse concerning antichrist lay involved for many ages.—Warburton. The Rise of Antichrist.

He hath done this likewise in the allegorical descent of Æneas into hell; which is no other than an enigmatical representation of his initiation into the mysteries.
Id. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

This [that he would rise again on the third day] he generally declared enigmatically to the Jews, but in the most explicit terms to the apostles in private.
Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 41.

EN-JOIN. (Also In.) Fr. Enjoindre; Lat. Injung-ere, to join to, put with or upon.

To put upon, to lay upon, (sc.) an order, an admonition; and thus to admonish, to exhort, to exhort earnestly.

The penaunce that the preat enjoyneth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 113.

But peraventure he hath swiche heviness and swiche wrath to us ward, because of oure offence, that he wol enjoyne us swiche a peine, as we moun not here ne susteine.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

We wil you also to enioyne him penaunce, as ye shal se it conuenient, for the health of his soul.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

In the meane time that theis things were a doing, the fotemen out of Auuerne and the horsmen that were enioyned to all Gallia assembled together.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 220.

Ah! nay, sir knight, said she, it may not be,
But that I needs must by all meanes fulfill
This penance, which enioyned is to me,
Least vnto me betide a greater ill.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Montr. Do not contemn me:
Enjoin me what you please, with any hazard
I'll undertake it.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iv. sc. 2.

To what the laws enjoin submission pay;
And what the senate shall command, obey.
Stepney. Juvenal, Sat. 1.

To them more awful than the name of king
To Asia's trembling millions, is the law;
Whose sacred voice enjoins them to confront
Unnumber'd foes, to vanquish, or to die.
Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

EN-JOY, v. ENJO'YER. ENJO'YING, n. ENJO'YMENT. } (Also In.) Fr. Jouir; It. Godere; Sp. Goçar, gozar, from the Lat. Gaud-ere, to be glad or gladden.

To have, possess, use with gladness, with pleasure or delight; to take delight, to feel pleasure in.

And upon alle these thingis haue ghe charite, that is the boond of perfeccioun, and the pees of Crist enioie in ghoure hertis in which ghe ben clepid in oo bodi, and be ghe kynde.
Wiclif. Colocensis, c. 3.

Or if the iudgements of the senate oughte to be obserued, then ought Fraunce to be free, for as much as it was decreed that beinge conquered by battell, it should stylI enioy their owne lawes and customes.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 37.

Nowe, therefore, since the Goddes haue suffered to you the thing whiche ye durst neuer haue wished for, that is your countrey, your wiues, and your children, being the thinges whiche men esteeme more than life, and redeeme often tymes with death, why do you doubt for the enioyment of those thinges to breake out of this imprisonment?
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 119.

Her ioyous presence and sweet company
In full content he there did long enioy,
Ne wicked envie, nor vile iealousie
His deare delights were able to annoy.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

But unfitness and contrariety frustrates and nullifies for ever, unless it be a rare chance, all the good and peace of wedded conversation; and leaves nothing between them enjoyable, but a prone and savage necessity, not worth the name of marriage unaccompanied with love.
Milton. Colasterion.

—— I hold such strife
As 'tixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure.
Shakespeare, Son. 75.

What is it to deny a base inclination that will undo me; in obedience to him that made, and redeemed me, and to despise the little things of present sense, for the hope of everlasting enjoyments; trifling pleasure, for hallelujahs?
Glanvill, Ser. 1.

And happier lives the homely swain,
Who, in some cottage, far from noise,
His few paternal goods enjoys,
Nor knows the sordid lust of gain.
Hughes. Horace, b. ii. Ode 16.

God can order even his word and precepts so, and turn them to the destruction of the unprofitable, unworthy enjoyers of them; that, as it is in Isaiah xxviii. 13, They shall go backward, and be broken, and snared and taken.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 2.

Neither is the enjoying a more profitable ministry, or living under a more pure discipline in the separate congregation, a just cause of forsaking the communion of the church of which we are members; and the reason is, because we are not to commit a sin for the promoting a good end.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Aristotle, in particular, doth affirm that the true nature of riches doth consist in the contented use and enjoyment of the things we have, rather then in the possession of them.
Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 4.

And thus to come to the words of the text, his eternal power is made manifest in his having created us; and his Godhead in his being the author of all those perfections, which we enjoy only in a small degree, but which he possesses in a full and unlimited manner.—Pearce, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Every man that has felt pain, knows how little all other comforts can gladden him to whom health is denied. Yet who is there does not sometimes hazard it for the enjoyment of an hour!—Rambler, No. 178.

EN-I'SLED. (Also In.) Stationed, situated, formed into, an isle or inland.

Upon her nobler side, and to the southward near,
Fair Purbeck she beholds, which no where hath her peer:
So pleasantly en-isl'd on mighty Neptune's marge.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

EN-KI'NDLE, v. (Also In.) See CANDLE.

To be, or cause to be, on fire; to burn, or cause to burn; to heat, to inflame, to enlighten; and met. to warm, to inflame, to heat, to animate, to enliven.

Let vs comforte them that stagger, and not make them desperate, no nor let vs extinguishe the smoldering flaxe, but enkendle it.—Udal. Romaynes, c. 13.

For what shame should such mighty persons get,
For two weak women's cause to disagree?
Nay, what shall I that shall be deem'd to set
Th' enkindled fire, seeming inflamed for me?
Daniel. Octavia to Marcus Antonius.

—— May we, remote
From the hoarse, brazen sound of war, enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth, and hospitable love.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

I oft was wont, invited to his cell,
At noon beneath his cavern to retire
From the sun's heat, where all the passing hours,
The good old man improv'd with converse high,
And in my breast enkindled virtue's love.—Warton, Ecl 5.

EN-LA'CED. (Also In.) Fr. Enlacer,—to entangle, to ensnare; (in Fletcher) to surround, to enrap, to enfold.

But with hou great harme these forsaid waies ben enlaced [implicita] I shall shew you shortly.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Most, whom thou most admir'st, may she embrace thee;
And flaming in thy love; with snowy arms enlace thee.
P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 7. s. 34.

EN-LA'NGUORED. Fr. Languer; Lat. Languere.

To pine, to decay, to droop, to faint.

For on that horse no colour is,
But onely dedde and pale ywis,
Of such a colour enlangored
Was abstinence ywis coloured.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R

EN-LAP, v. Involvere, to cover, to enwrap.

Boethus writeth, that there be brought rubies from Marsils and Lisbon in Portugall; but with much adoe and great difficultie they are found, by reason of the clay wherein they be enlapped in certaine desarts and forrests burnt with the sun.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 7.

EN-LARD, v. Fr. Larder; Sp. Enlardar.

To stick, season or dress with lard; which Cotgrave calls the fat of bacon or of pork.

—— By going to Achilles,
That were to enlard his fat already pride,
And adde more coles to Cancer when he burnes
With entertaining great Hiperion.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 3.

EN-LARGE, v. ENLA'RGEDLY. ENLA'RGEMENT. ENLA'RGER. ENLA'RGING, n. } (Also In.) Fr. Eslargir; It. Allargare; Lat. Largus. To magnify, to amplify; to make great or greater; to aggrandize, to increase, to augment, to extend, to dilate, to expand, to expatiate; and also, to set at large, to free, to give liberty or freedom to.

I must of pitee my charitie enlarge.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

For whereas by the affinity of King Philip, he hoped to haue his kingdom enlarged, he was by the same Philip deprived of his owne realme, and compelled in his old age to liue a banished man.—Golding. Justine, fol. 41.

The Macedons marched xxxii. in a ranke, for the straytgtnes of the ground wolde not suffer thē to go any broader, but by lytle & little as the plaine betwene the mountaines begā to enarge, so they had libertie both to make theire battailes broader & also for the horsemē to march vpō the sides.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 37.

See ye what manier ministers and enlargers of his dominions & iurisdiccion he chose out for the nones—poore felowes, men of lowe degree, men of no learning ne knowledge, but euen of the bare mother witte & tonge.
Udal. Luke, c. 24.

And more than that, she promist that she would,
In case she might finde fauour in his eye,
Deuise how to enlarge him out of holde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

I will enlarge myself no further to you at this time, but conclude with this tetrastic, which my brain ran upon in my bed this morning.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let 29.

Justification is taken two ways in Scripture; strictè magis, and extensivè: precisely for remission of sinnes, by the onely merits and satisfaction of Christ, accepted for us, and imputed to us, and enlargedly for that act of God, and the necessary and immediate concomitants unto, and consequents upon that, the whole and entire state and quality and condition of man regenerate, changed; by which a sinner guilty of death, is acquitted, cleansed, made just in himselfe, reconciled unto God, appointed to walke, and beginning to walke in holinesse and in newnesse of life.
Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, c. 6.

The opening of other vicine passages might quickly obliterate any tracks of these: as the making of one hole in the yeelding mud, defaces the print of another near it, at least the accession of enlargement, which was derived from such transitions, would be as soon lost as made.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 14.

Rock. I then desire the liberty of Romont,
And that my Lord Novall, whose private wrong
Was equal to the injury that was done
To the dignity of the court, will pardon it,
And now sign his enlargement.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act i. sc. 2.

Unto whom notwithstanding, we shall not contentiously rejoin, or only to justifie our own, but to applaud or confirm his maturer assertions; and shall confer what is in us unto his name and honour: ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger.—Brown. Vulgar Errours. To the Reader, sig. A 3.

By her [Argo] made bold, the daring race defy'd
The winds tempestuous and the swelling tide:
Much she enlarg'd destruction's ample power,
And open'd ways to death unknown before.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

He that is in such a condition as doth place him above contempt, and below envy, cannot by any enlargement of his fortune be made really more rich or more happy than he is.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 4.

Whose mean acrostics, labour'd in a frame
On scatter'd letters, raise a painful scheme;
And, by confinement in their work, control
The great enlargings of the boundless soul.
Parnell. To Lord Bolingbroke.

While to the north of their own beauteous fields
The pictur'd scene they view, where Avon shapes
His winding way, enlarging as it flows,
Nor hastes to join Sabrina's prouder wave.
Jago. Edge-Hill, b. i.

Yet, permit me just to hint, my lord, while I restrain my pen from all enlargement, that if the fa rest public character must be raised upon private virtue, as surely it must, your grace has laid already the securest foundation of the former, in the latter.—Mallet. To the Duke of Marlborough.

EN-LENGTH, v. } To extend or stretch
ENLE'NGTHEN. } out. As a term of measurement distinguished from breadth, width, &c.

What a new season of encouraging
Begins t' enlength the days dispos'd to good.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlengthened filament, stirreth the bodies interposed.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

EN-LIGHT, v. } (Also In.) A. S. On-leoht-an, leoht-an, to illuminate; that which illuminates.
ENLI'GHTEN, v. }
ENLI'GHTENER. }

To give light unto, to throw light upon, to illuminate, to illustrate; to make clear or bright; (met.) to throw light upon the understanding, to free from obscurity, to give power to see clearly, to clear the views or perceptions.

Ever nigh to such as stand
In his feare, his favour is:
How can then his glory misse
Shortly to enlight our land. Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 75.

From thence this pow'r the shapes of things abstracts,
And them within her passive part receives,
Which are enlightened by that part which acts;
And so the forms of single things perceives.
Davies. The Immortalitie of the Soul.

Here Adam interpos'd. O sent from heaven,
Enlightner of my darkness, gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd; those chiefly, which concerne
Just Abraham and his seed.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. xii.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine,
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes;
Which from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

1. We may consider, that religion doth prescribe the truest and best rules of action; thence enlightning our mind, and rectifying our practice in all matters, and upon all occasions, so that whatever is performed according to it, is well done and wisely.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 3.

The sun, in the evening, is out of our sight,
And the moon is enlighten'd to govern the night:
His power we behold in yon high-arch'd roof,
When the stars, in their order, shine forth in its proof.
Byrom. A Thanksgiving Hymn.

The light itself became darkness, and then was a proper season for the great enlightener of the world to appear.
Secker, vol. i. Ser. 11.

EN-LINK, v. Link, annulus catenæ, from Lenck-en, flectere, to bend. See LINK.
To connect, to enchain.

Who hauing lately left that louely paire,
Enlinked fast in wedlock's loyall band,
Bold Marinell with Florimell the faire,
With whom great feast and goodly glee he fond,
Departed from the castle.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

What is it then to me, if impious Warre,
Arrayed in flames like to the Prince of fiends,
Doe with his smyrcht complexion all fell feats,
Enlynckt to wast and desolation
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 3.

EN-LIST, v. (Also In.) Fr. Liste; It. Lista; from Goth. and A. S. Lis-an; Ger. and Dut. Les-en, colligere; and thus list, (qv.): a collection (sc.) of words, names, &c. And to enlist—

To enroll, to put down, to write in a roll or list, or catalogue; to register, (sc.) the names of those who are engaged for a particular purpose, as, for military service; and thus, to engage the services.

A story, in which native humour reigns,
Is often useful, always entertains:
A graver fact, enlisted on your side,
May furnish illustration well applied.
Cowper. Conversation.

EN-LIVE, v. } (Also In.) A. S. Libban, leof-an; Ger. Leb-en; Dut. Leven, vivere, to live.
ENLI'VEN.
ENLI'VENER.
ENLI'VENING, n. }

To give life, spirit, animation to; to quicken, to animate; to give sprightliness, cheerfulness; to exhilarate, to gladden.

Prince of the orchard, fair as dawning morn,
Fenc'd with the law, and ripe as soon as born,
That apple grew, which this soul did enlive.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul, s. 9.

See, see! the darts by which we burn'd
Are bright Louisa's pencils turn'd,
With which she now enliveth more
Beauties than they destroy'd before.
Lovelace. Princess Louisa Drawing.

Lo, of themselves th' enliven'd chess men move!
Lo, the unbred, ill-organis'd pieces prove
As full of art and industry,
Of courage and of policy,
As we ourselves, who think there's nothing wise but we.
Cowley. Destiny.

The good man is full of joyful enlivenings. (In some editions "gladding vivification."—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 84.

They become members of Christ, and members one of another. This, I say, is done by means of that one spirit which animates and enlivens that whole body, and gives strength and nourishment to every part of that body.
Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 6.

——— For the seed conjoin'd
Lets into nature's work the imperfect kind;
But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

For by this means, I was enabled to enliven the poems by various touches of pastoral description; not affectedly brought in from the store-house of a picturesque imagination, but necessarily resulting from the scenery of the place itself.—Mason. Elfrida, Let. 1.

EN-LOCK, v. A. S. Lyc-an, obserare, claudere.
To close or shut up.

But to that sacred saint my souereigne queene,
In whose chaste breast all bounty naturall,
And treasures of true loue enlocked beene,
Bove all her sex that euer yet was seene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

EN-LOOSE. A. S. On-les-an, to loose. See UN-LOOSE and UNLESS.

EN-LU'MINE, v. (See ILLUMINE.) "Fr. Enluminer,—
To illuminate, inlighten, clear, brighten, illustrate," (Cotgrave.)

Frauncois Petrark, the laureat poete,
Hlighte this clerk, whos retorike swete
Enlumined all Itaillie of poetrie.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Prologue, v. 7909.

Of theorike principalle
The philosopher in specialle
The propirtees hath determined,
As thilke whiche is enlumined
Of wisdome, and of high prudence.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Whose glory shineth as the morning starre,
And with her light the earth enlumines cleare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

EN-MA'RBLE. See EMMARBLE.

EN-MA'RVEL, v. "Fr. Esmerveiller,—to make to wonder, admire, or marvel at; to breed astonishment or admiration in," (Cotgrave.) The allusion to Spenser probably caused Gray to coin this word.

Now I talk of verses, Mr. Walpole and I have frequently wondered you should never mention a certain imitation of Spenser, published last year by a namesake of yours, (West, "On the Abuse of Travelling,") with which we are all enraptured and enmarvelled.—Gray. To West, Let. 25.

EN-MESH, or } Fr. Mache, macles, macques.
ENMA'SH, v. } The meshes or holes of a net between thread and thread; Lat. Macula.
To catch as in a net; to ensnare.

So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodnesse make the net,
That shall enmesh them all.—Shakes. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

E'NMITY. See ENEMY.

ENMO'ISED. It is explained, says Skinner, comforted; the etymology is uncertain.

Also ladie mine, desire hath longe dured some speakinge to haue, or else at the leaste haue been enmoised with sight and for wanting of these thinges, my mouth woulde and he durst, pleine right sore, sithen cuils for my goodnesse, arne manifolde to mee holden.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

EN-MO'VED, i. e. moved, or emoved.

The knight was much enmoued with his speech,
That as a sword's point through his hart did pearce.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

EN-MURE, v. To shut up, confine or enclose, within a wall; to imprison. See To INMURE.

Not to be tempted, would she be enmur'd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procur'd.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

EN-NEW, v. To make new, to give newness or novelty, or freshness to.

Our naturall tonge is rude,
And hard to be ennewde
Wyth polyshed termes lustye.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparrow.

The lady saphyre blewe
Her veynes doth ennew. Id. Ib.

EN-NO'BLE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Ennoblir; Sp. Enoblicer; Lat. Nobilis, from notum, known. So called a nominis claritate, from the lustre or brightness of the name.
ENNO'BLEMENT. }

To make known, or renowned, or famous; to confer renown, rank or title; to raise, elevate or exalt; to dignify, to aggrandize.

Among whom was Surus a Heduan, a man both for mánod and for birth greatlye ennobled, who all only of the Heduans had vnto that day cõtinued in arms against y^e people of Rome.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 267.

Begin then, ô my dearest sacred dame,
Daughter of Phœbus and of Memorie,
That doest ennoble with immortall name
The warlike worthies, from antiquitie,
In thy great volume of eternity.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

——— I finde that she which late
Was of my nobler thoughts, most base: is now
The praised of the King, who so ennobled,
Is as 'twere borne so.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 3.

But, that God, who justly ties men to his lawes, will not abide that we should tie him to our lawes, or his owne; he can both rectifie and ennoble the blood of Jeptha.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Jeptha

Zenyma likewise 72 miles from Samosatre is ennobled for the passage over Euphrates: for joined it is to Apamia right against, by a bridge, which Seleucus the founder of both, caused to be made.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 24.

He [Henry VII.] added during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or aduancement in nobilitie of a few others.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 15.

The eternal wisdome having made that creature whose crown it was to be like his maker's, enricht him with those ennoblements which were worthy him that gave them, and made no less for the benefit of the receiver, then the glory of their author.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 1.

Prayer is the most proper means to ennoble, and refine, and spiritualize our natures.—Sharp. Works, vol. i. Ser. 15.

Virgil has represented an heroic lawgiver in the person of Æneas; now, initiation into the mysteries was what sanctified his character and ennobled his function.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. sc. 4.

EN-O'RDER, v. To command.

Whereas we are informed that you are indebted to several of the English nation, it seemeth right to us to enorder you to make satisfaction to these your just debts.
Evelyn. The Three late Impostors.

ENO'RM, a. lj. ENO'RMITY. ENO'RMOUS. ENO'RMOUSLY. } Lat. Enormis, enormitas; Fr. Enorme, énormité; It. Enorme, enormità; Sp. Enorme, enormidad. Enormis, from e, and norma, which Vossius calls an instrument by which it is distinguished, whether angles are right angles or not. And which Scaliger (de Causs. c. 26.) derives from Gr. Γνωριμα, notum, by throwing out the n: and this from γνωριζειν, to make known, to ascertain. Glanvill also writes inormous.

Out of rule, measurement, or proportion; disordered, immoderate, huge, excessive, heinous.

But here thei say that in healing these euills and enormities we do more hurte than good as to make tumultes, seditions and cause the people to rebell ayenste the magistrats and the ordinarie powrs.—Joye. Expos. of Dan. c. 12.

Blessed be thou most deare and mercyfull father, which of thy tender fauour and benignite, notwithstandinge our grieuous enormyties committed agaynste the, vouchesauedst to send thine oune deare sonne, to suffre moste wyle death for our redempcyon.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 82.

But it wyll not be graunted you, that detestable professyon of a lyfe so enormiouse, shall be a prohybycion of Godly marriage and a doctrine of Deuils in h poetisy, thoughe ye shew a thousad colours to ye contrary.—Bale. Apol. fol. 99.

Nought scorching, nought glowing, nought enorm.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 2. s. 22.

Nor have men's practices come short of the malignity of their belief, but if possible have out done it. Atheism hath not rested in the judgement, but proceeded to all enormities, and debauches —Glanvill, Ser. 3.

Which thing supposed, the influences of a spirit possess'd of an active and enormous imagination, may be malign and fatal where they cannot be resisted.—Id. Ess. 6.

The same earle of Suffolke was charged with manie and verie great enormious crimes, fraude falshoods, and treasons which he had practised, to the great prejudice of the king and reaume, and therevpon was committed to ward in the castell of Windsore.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1386.

If our souls came immediately out of the hands of God when we came first into these bodies, whence then are those enormously brutish inclinations, that strong natural proclivity to vice and impiety that are extant in the children of men!—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 2.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousnesse of our works, what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciple.
Decay of Piety.

And whenever it comes to fare thus with any civil state, virtue and common honesty seem to make their appeal to the supreme governor of all things, to take the matter into his own hands, and to correct those clamorous enormities, which are grown too big and strong for law or shame, or any human coertion —South, vol. iv. Ser. 3.

Yet not in vain th' enormous weight was cast,
Which Crantor's body sunder'd at the waist.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

And on the other hand, had man's body been made too monstrously strong, too enormously gigantick, it would have rendered him a dangerous tyrant in the world, too strong in some respects, even for his own kind, as well as the other creatures.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 4.

Dare I in such momentous points advise,
I should condemn the hoop's enormous size
Of ills I speak by long experience found,
Oft have I trod th' immeasurable round,
And mourn'd my shins bruis'd black with many a wound.
Jenyns. The Art of Dancing, c. 1.

If I am correctly informed, the rise in the last year, after every deduction that can be made, affords the most consoling and encouraging prospect. It is enormously out of all proportion.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

ENO'UGH, or ENO'W. } Used as a noun, substantive, and adjective; and also adverbially. Dut. Genoeg, from the verb genoeg-en, to content, to satisfy. In the A.S. it is genog or genoh; and appears to be the past part. genoged, multiplicatum, manifold, of the verb genog-an, multiplicare, (Tooke, i. 472.) In the Ger. it is genug, from the verb genug-en, to suffice, content, or satisfy.

Sufficient, contenting, satisfying or satisfactory.

For Engelond ys ful gnow of fruyt and of tren,
Of wodes and of parkes. R. Gloucester, p. 1.

He gadred of Danes folk right inowh,
& did him toward the se. R. Brunne, p. 51.

It is ynowgh to the disciple that he be as his maister.
Wiclif. Mat. c. 10.

Lo, this declaring ought ynough suffice.
Chaucer. The Monkes Prologue, v. 13,988.

I pray to God that it may plesen you,
Than wot I wel that it is good ynow.
Chaucer. Frankeleines Prologue, v. 11,020.

So that with falling of th is hille
This Polyphemus Acis slouch,
Wherof she made sorowe enough.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,
Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store,
Whose need had end, but no end couetise,
Whose wealth was want, whose plenty made him pore,
Who had enough, yet wished euermore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

He is to me a the'tre large enow,
And his applause only sufficient is.—Daniel. Musophilus.

And at his birth, as all the stars heav'n had,
Were not enow, but a new star was made,
So now, both new, and old, and all away did fade.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

There being field room enough, the fight lasted but a quarter of an hour before the Duke of Newcastle's forces were totally routed, and many of them killed.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p 60.

There are both heads enow to contrive the particular ways of curing those evils, and hands enow that will be open to contribute what is needful to so useful a work.
Sharp. vol. i. Ser. 4.

From errours past the king more prudent grown;
Believes he never can enough atone
For such misdeed, by which he brought to shame
A knight whose worth might every tribute claim.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b xviii.

For, in good truth, full many an ass was
Among the doctors of Parnassus,
Who scarce had skill enough to teach
Old Lilly's elements of speech.
Cawthorn. Birth and Education of Genius.

E-NOUNCE, v. ENU'NCIATE, v. ENUNCIA'TION. ENU'NCIATIVE. } Lat. Enunciare, atum, (e, and nuncius,) from the Gr. Neos, (Scal. supposes νουγκιος,) new, quia, aliquid novi apportat; because he bears or brings something new, some news. See ANNOUNCE.

To tell, to report, to declare, (sc.) something new; to declare, to publish, to proclaim.

Enounce is of modern introduction.

And therfore seying this auctor hath lefte them out, I will go no further thē is here alleged. The callyng of bread by enunciation, for a name is not material.
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 49.

Also Esdras, Nemias, Ezechiell, and Daniel, all though they were prophetes: yet be their warkes compacte in fourme of narrations, whiche by oratours be called enunciatyue.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 24.

The specifical preferences that it [intellective memory] hath above all the sensible memory are these: 1. That it remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense, as the conceptions, enuntiations, and actions of the intellect and will, the conviction of truth or falsehood of propositions or reasonings, the conceptions of universals.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 56.

The other of passing God's act upon the penitent is by way of interpretation and enunciation, as an ambassador, and by the word of his ministery; In persona Christi condonasti, I pardon in the person of Christ, saith St. Paul.
Bp. Taylor. Ser. The Office Ministerial.

And I understand, though not the degree and excellency, yet the truth of this manner of operation in the instance of Isaac blessing Jacob, which in the several parts was expressed in all forms, indicative, optative, enunciative.
Id. Ib.

I know that there is such a man as Plato, though in the mean time I cannot tell what he is, nor what are all the truths that may be enunciated concerning him.
Bp. Barlow. Rem. p. 553.

To deny this great principle is likewise to do as Epicurus did; who was reduced to deny that other great principle, viz. The principle of contradiction: which is, that every intelligible enunciation must be either true or false.
Clarke. Mr. Leibnitz's Fifth Paper.

In the maxim, therefore, which you would defend, substitute for the word "morality" those two words which in your apprehension render its exact meaning; you will then have before you the proposition you would defend enounced in unequivocal terms.—Horsley. Charge, an. 1790.

When the pious, the learned, and the wise, on both sides, explain, the controversy turns out to be mere contest about words; the matter in dispute being nothing more than this,—in what words a proposition in which all agree may be best enounced.—Id. Ib.

From limbs of this great Hercules are fram'd
Whole groups of pigmies, who are verse-men nam'd:
Each has a little sound he calls his own,
And each enunciates with a human tone.
Hart. Vision of Death.

They saw, though this academician does not, that the absence of the doctrine of a future state of reward and punishment in the Mosaic law evinces its imperfection, and verifies the enunciation of the gospel, that life and immortality were brought to light by Jesus Christ.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iv. Notes.

EN-OYNT, v. i. e. anoint.

& enoynted he was als kyng thorgh resoun.
R. Brunne, p. 206.

And whanne the sabot was passide Marye Maudelyn and Marye of James and Salome broughten swete smellynge oynementis to come and to enoynte Jhesus
Wiclif. Mark, c. 16.

Who wrestled best naked, with oil enoint,
Ne who that bare him best in no disjoint.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2963.

EN-PA'TRON, v. Lat. Patronus, from pater, a father; quia patris sit loco.

To patronize, to take under the protection, (q. d.) of a father.

For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatron me.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

EN-PE'OPLE, v. See EMPEOPLE.

To fill with people.

But we know 'tis very well enpeopled, and the habitation thereof esteemed so happy, that some have made it the proper seat of Paradise.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 6.

EN-PIERCE, v. Also empierce.

To pierce or penetrate.

Mer. You are a lover, borrow Cupid's wings,
And soare with them aboue a common bound.
Rom. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft,
To soare with his light feathers, and to bound.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 4.

EN-POWDERED. Sprinkled, as if with powder.

It would then among the rude and homely doinges of me and such as I am, none otherwise haue glittered, than clothe of golde enpowdered emong patches of canuesse, or perles and diamond emong peeble stones.
Udal. To Queene Katherine.

EN-PRINT, v. To imprint, or impress.

Partelye that he might the more effectuallye stirre vp in them an earnest desire to learne, & partly that it might ye more diepely settle & rest in their mindes, yt had been enprinted by a mystical derke colour of speaking.
Udal. Luke, c. 8.

EN-QUIRE, v. ENQUI'RE, s. ENQUI'RER. ENQUI'RING, s. ENQUI'RY. ENQUE'ST. } (Also In.) Fr. Enquérir; It. Inquirere; Sp. Inquirer; Lat. Inquirere, (in, and quærere, to seek.)

To seek, search or examine into; to ask or interrogate; to investigate.

The kyng Wyllam, vorto wyte the wurth of lond
Let enquery streytlyche thoru al Engeloud
How mony plou lond, and hou mony hyden al so, &c.
R. Gloucester, p. 373.

& the king enquerede of his men al, wat hii awel here.
Id. p. 508.

The kyng was enquere of ther wikked dedes;
So many ther were, dome on tham salle nedes.
R. Brunne, p. 24.

Ne in enquestes to come. Piers Ploughman, p. 219.

And he [Heroude] sente and slowgh alle the children that weren in Bethleem and in alle the coostis thereof fro two yeer age and wyth ynne, after the time he hadde enquired of the astronomyens.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 2.

And when Eroude hadde soughte and fownde not, after that he hadde maad enquerynge of the keperis he comaundide hem to be brought to hym.—Id. Dedis.

This gentil king hath caught a gret mot.f
Of this witnes, and thought he wold enquere
Deper in this cas trouthe for to lere.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5049.

And thus by wit and subtil enquering
Imagined was by whom this harm gan spring.
Id. Ib. v. 5564.

Wandering in this place, as in wildernesse
Ne comfort haue I ne yet assurannce,
Desolate of joy, replete with faintnesse
No answere receiuing of min enquirannce
Id. Lamentation of Marie Magdalene.

And many times I make enquest.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Whan he made a gouernour
By wele of substitucion,
Of prouince or of region,
He wolde first enquire his name,
And lete it openly proclame
What man he were, or euill or good.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And Jehosaphat sayde: Is there neuer a prophet of the Lordes here more, that we might enquyre of him?
Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 22.

We could learne nothinge therof by enquiry; but we saw it tried bi howre glasses of water, that the nygates were shorter there, then in the firme lande.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 116.

For of those witnesses so brought into the kynges courte to giue euidence to an enquest at the common law, no mẽcion shal be made in the records, ne the iury be not bound alway to folow the wytnesse.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 996.

Henry the Fifth, that man made out of fire,
Th' imperial wreath plac'd on his princely brow,
His lion's courage stands not to enquire
Which way old Henry came by it; or how
At Pomfret-castle Richard should expire.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Superficial enquirers may easily satisfie themselves by answering, that it is done by muscles, nerves, and other like strings and ligaments, which nature hath destin'd to that office.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 5

There be certain qualifications that do much commend an object to a man's enquiry, which are principally these. 1st The nobleness, &c.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 3.

And here two things are to be enquired into, first, Who are those principalities and powers, and magistrates, to whom we are to be subject, and whom we are to obey? and secondly: wherein consists that subjection and obedience that we are to give them?—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

The difference between him and a more improved Englishman lying barely in this, that exercise of his faculties was bounded within the ways, modes and notions of his own country, and never directed to any other, or further enquiries.—Locke. Of Humane Understanding, b. i. c. 4.

In this section Saint Paul vindicates his apostleship. And in answer to these enquirers, gives the reason why, though he had a right to maintenance, yet he preached gratis to the Corinthians.—Id. On 1 Cor. ix. 1—27.

Without entering therefore into enquiries of this nature, which for want of data must be conjectural and unsatisfactory, it will be more correspondent with my plan, simply to state interesting facts, and leave it to the metaphysician to draw such consequences as he may deem most legitimate.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

Prejudices mislead the enquirer no less than his passions. He venerates the notions he received from his forefathers, he rests in them on the authority of those whose judgment he esteems.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Introd.

EN-RACE, v. "Fr. Enraciner; to settle, to root in a thing," (Cotgrave.) Lat. Radix, radicina, racine, a root.

To enroot; to infix or implant, as a root.

But that fourth maid, which there amidst them traced,
Who can aread, what creature mote she be,
Whether a creature or a goddesse graced
With heauenly gifts from heauen first enraced.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

Eternall God, in his almightie powre,
To make ensample of his heauenly grace,
In paradise whylome did plant this flowre;
Whence he it fetcht out of her natiue place,
And did in stock of earthly flesh enrace,
That mortall men her glory should admire.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 6.

EN-RAGE, v. (Also In.) Fr. Enrager; It. Arrabbiare; Sp. Arrabear; Lat. Rabies. See RABID.

To fill with rage, with raving passion; to vex, provoke, or irritate, excessively; to exasperate.

These were the causes that incens'd so far
The civil-wounding hand, enrag'd with spoil;
That now the living, with afflicted eye,
Look back with grief on such calamity.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

La. I pray you speak not: he grows worse and worse;
Question enrages him: at once good night,
Stand not vpon the order of your going,
But go at once.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 4.

The sharp point enter'd in the Centaur's side:
Both hands, to wrench it out the monster join'd,
And wrench'd it out, but left the steel behind.
Stuck in his lungs it stood: enrag'd he rears
His hoof, and down to ground thy father bears.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xii.

On him, enrag'd, the fiend in angry mood,
Shall never look with pity's kind concern,
But instant, furious raise the whelming flood
O'er its drown'd banks, forbidding all return!
Collins. Ode, on the Sup. of the Highlands of Scotland.

EN-RAIL, v. (Also In.) Rails, by which any area, court-yard, or other place is thinly (i. e. not closely, but with small intervals) covered, (Tooke.)

To surround or enclose with rails.

With alleys enaunded about in compass,
The bankes enturfed with singular solas
Enrailed with rosers, and vines engraped,
It was a new comfort of sorrowes escaped.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An enrail'd column rears its lofty head,
Here to seuen streets seven dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

EN-RANGE, v. See also ARRANGE. (Ger. Ring or circle.)

To set in rank or order; to put in order, to dispose or place in an orderly manner, (q.d. in a ring; as those who meet at public assemblies usually do.)

As faire Diana in fresh sommer's day
Beholdes her nymphes enranged in shadie wood,
Some wrestle, some doe run, some bathe in crystall flood.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

All which together sung full cheerfully
A lay of loue's delight, with sweet consent,
After whom marcht a jolly company,
In manner of a maske, enranged orderly.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 12.

EN-RANGE, v. Dut. Rennen or ranghen, to wander, to ramble. (A. S. Rennan, to run.)

In all this forrest, and wilde woody raine —
Where, as this day I was enranging it,
I chaunc'd to meet this knight, who there lies slaine,
Together with this lady, pasing on the plaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2. s. 9.

EN-RANK, v. To set in rank or order; to arrange, to enrange, (qv.)

By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompass'd, and set vpon!
No leisure had he to enranke his men.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 1.

EN-RAP, v. } (Also In.) Lat. Raptare, (from ENRA'PTURE. } Rapere,) to bear away. Dulcis raptat amor, (Vir. Geo. iii. 392.)

To bear or carry away, (sc.) with any overpowering feeling; to ecstasy.

—— And I myselfe,
Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore come back.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act v. sc. 3.

Well he deserves Apollo's laurell'd crown,
Whether new words he rolls enraptur'd down
Impetuous through the dithyrambic strains;
Free from all laws, but what himself ordains.
Francis. Horace, b. iv. Ode 4.

Explore thy heart, that rous'd by glory's name,
Pants all enraptur'd with the mighty charm;
And does ambition quench each milder flame?
And is it conquest that alone can warm?
Beattie. Judgment of Paris.

EN-RA'VEL. } See UN-RAVEL, UNRAVE.
ENRA'VE. }

EN-RA'VISH, v. }
ENRA'VISHINGLY, } Fr. Ravir; Lat. Rap-ere, to bear away.
ENRA'VISHMENT. } To bear, carry, hurry away, transport, enrap, (sc.) the senses with delight, with excess of pleasure; to delight excessively.

What wonder then if with such rage extreme,
Frale men, whose eyes seeke heauenly things to see
At sight thereof so much enrauisht bee?
Spenser. A Hymn of Heauenly Loue.

The subtilty of the matter will more punctually hit, and more powerfully reach the organs of sense, and more exquisitely and enravishingly move the nerves, than any terrestrial body can possibly.
More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c. 13.

And 'tis for the majestye of nature, like the Persian kings, sometimes to cover, and not alway to prostrate her beauties to the naked view: yea they contract a kind of splendour from the seemingly obscuring veil; which adds to the enravishments of her transported admirers.
Glanvill. Van. of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

And these [the pleasures of religion] are of so excellent a kind, so delicious, so enravishing, that the highest gratifications of sense are not comparable to them.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 2.

We shall spend the whole eternity in loving God, in searching into his wonderful works, in being enravished with all his wise contrivances, in continually singing praises to our great and good Creator and Redeemer, and in doing all the kind offices we possibly can to our fellow-creatures.
Sharp. vol. iii. Ser. 15.

EN-RE'GISTER, v. Register; Re-rum gestarum, i. e. a record or account of things done. (Tooke, MS. Note on Pegge's Anecdotes, p. 333.) Vossius says, Regesta; a regerendo, (De Vit. p. 74;) Fr. Enregistrer.

To enrol, to record, (sc.) things done.

To read enregistred in euery nooke
His goodnes, which his beautie doth declare;
For all that's good, is beautiful and faire.
Spenser. A Hymn of Heauenly Beautie.

EN-RICH, v. }
ENRI'CHMENT. } (Also In.) Fr. Enricher. Rich, from Goth. Ric-yan, congerere, colligere, to collect, to draw together, to rake together.
ENRI'CHING, n. }

To collect, accumulate, heap or rake together, (sc.) money, cattle, lands, knowledge; any thing coveted or desired; to acquire or confer wealth or opulence; to confer fertility or productiveness; to make or cause to be productive or fruitful, to fertilize.

Seeing, O Lord, your great mercy
Us hath enriched, so openly
That we deserue may neuer more.—Chaucer. Dreame.

We being werie of pouertie would seeke to enriche our selues, we should go a farre other way to worke than this, and so shoulde wee rightly come to our desire.
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The nerenesse of our prouince, and the experience of trauelling in straunge contryes beyond the sea, hath helped the Galles wyth many thynges to theyr enriching and commodity.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 162.

But wicked times that all good thoughts doth waste,
And werkes of noblest wits to nought out-weare,
That famous monument hath quite defac't,
And rob'd the world of treasure endlesse deare,
To which mote haue enriched al vs here.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

The Britaines and Frenchmen have devised another meanes to manure their ground, by a kind of limestone or clay, which they call Marga. [Marle.] And verily they have a great opinion of the same, that it mightily enricheth it, and maketh it more plentifull.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 6.

Neither did they often fill the pedestals with relievo, nor the staves in the flutings; and rarely ever allow the corona any enrichment at all, or so much as rounded.
Evelyn. On Architecture

The main of this text is (and the total of my discourse shall be) bent quite toward another coast, that which in the sincerity of my heart, I conceive may best comply with your designs, either as Christians, or as men, most tend to your serving of Christ, and enriching of yourselves, with the increase of your wealth here and glory hereafter.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 548

For which service the king gaue him great gifts, made him his counceller, and chamberlaine, and (somewhat contrarie to his nature) had winked at the great spoiles of Bosworth Field, which came almost wholly to this man's (Stanley's) hands, to his infinite enriching.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 135.

His active soul from labours ne'er did cease,
Valiant in war, and vigilant in peace:
Studious with traffic to enrich the land;
Strong to protect, and skilful to command.
Dryden. Torquin & Tunis.

—— There an ancient fane is plac'd,
No splendid seat oracular, enrich'd
By proud donations, but a mossy pile,
Where ev'ry Grecian hath from age to age
Adorn'd the Muses. Glover. The Athenaid, b. ix.

EN-RI'DGED. Having, or being covered with ridges.

—— He had a thousand noses,
Horns whelk'd, and wav'd like the enridged sea;
It was some fiend.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

EN-RING, v. To surround, as with a ring; to encircle, to clasp.

—— The female ivy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elme.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iv. sc.)

EN-RIP. See UNRIP.

EN-RI'PEN, v. A. S. Rip-ian, matuescere, to mature.

The Summer, how it enripen'd the year;
And Autumn, what our golden harvests were.
Donne, Elegie 11

EN-RIVE, v. To reave. To tear, split or cleave asunder.

The wicked shaft guided through th' ayrie wide,
By some bad spirit, that it to mischiefe bore,
Staid not till through his cural it did glide,
And made a griefly wound in his enriven side.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

EN-ROBE, v. Fr. Robbe; Sp. Ropa; It. Roba. To cover, as with a robe; to enwrap, to clothe, to invest.

—— Dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side
Would scatter all her spices on the streame,
Enrobe the roring waters with my silkes.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 1.

A brighter blue enrobes the skies,
From laughing fields the Zephyrs rise
On wings that breathe perfume
Whitehead. For his Majesty's Birth-Day, 1765.

EN-ROL, v. (Also In.) Dut. and Ger. ENRO'LMENT. Rollen, volvere. "Fr. Roll-er,—to rowl, turn round; fold up, wrap inwards," (Cotgrave.) To enroll, also, is—To write or inscribe upon a roll, (sc.) of parchment, paper; to enregister, to record; to write or inscribe in a register or record.

Liche the couenant, and conuencioun
Enrolled vp, by lordes of the toun.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

—— The conuencioun
Of old engrossed, by great purueiaunce
Which is enrolled, and put in remembraunce.
Id. Ib. pt. iii.

Whose name enrolde
With silk and golde
I dare be bold
Thus far to were.—Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Whose noble deeds aboue the northern starre,
Immortall fame for euer hath enrold.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

And as she passed through th' vnruly preace
Of people, thronging thick her to behold,
Her angry teame breaking their bonds of peace,
Great heapes of them, like sheep in narrow fold,
For haste did ouer runne, in dust enrould.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 3.

When Macedonie was thus diuided and each part distinguished by their severall uses and commodities, hee appointed a generall review to be made, and enrolment of all Macedonians; having declared unto them before, that he purposed to give laws unto them.—Holland. Livius, p. 1221.

Many at last, (to purchase this glory, to be deemed considerable in this faculty, and enrolled among the wittes,) do make shipwreck of conscience, abandon virtue, and forfeit all pretences to wisdom.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

Griev'd I behold, and ever shall behold
Rogero's force with Agrament enroll'd,
Or mix'd with Moors, unless with sword in hand
To scatter slaughter through their hated band.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxvi.

EN-ROOT, v. To fix deeply, as a root; to set deeply, to implant.

To heale the sores of sinfull soules vnsound
And cleanse the guilt of that infected crime,
Which was enrooted in all fleshly slime.
Spenser. An Hymne of Heauenly Loue.

For, so must all things excellent begin,
And eke enrooted deepe must be the tree,
Whose big embodied branches shall not lin,
Till they to heauen's hight forth stretched bee.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to vnfix an enemie,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

EN-ROUND, v. To encircle; to surround.

When nations goe against her bent,
And kings with siege her walls enround:
The volde of air his voice doth rent,
Earth failes their feete with melting ground.
Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 46.

Vpon his royall face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrounded him.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Chor. 4.

ENS. E'NTITY. E'NTITATIVE. } Lat. Ens, from Εἰς, ἐντος, Æol. for ων, οντος, from εω-αι, to be. Low Lat. Entitas. See EN.

Being, existence.

Why, humour (as 'tis ens) we thus define it,
To be a qualitie of ayre, or water,
And in itselfe holds these two properties,
Moisture or fluxure.
B. Jonson. Every Man Out of his Humour, Introd.

His father-in-law an higher place does claim,
In the seraphic entity of fame;
He, since that toy his death,
Does fill all mouths, and breathes in all men's breath.
Cowley. Life and Fame.

Whereby it is apparent that the ens, vigour, activity or energy that is in natural bodies and in the universe, as it came from no other principle than matter, so it is an entity of a distinct nature from matter or material substance simply as such, and indeed an entity of a nobler extraction and nature than bare matter or material substance.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 293.

Justifying and sanctifying grace is the proper entitative product in all; but it hath divers appellatives and connotations in the several rites.
Bp. Taylor. A Discourse on Confirmation, Introd.

To this I answer, that the notion of an ens per accidens belongs rather to metaphysicks than natural philosophy; and in what its essence consists, is still so hotly disputed among the moderns, that till the business be agreed on, or at least more clearly stated, an argument drawn from thence will not much press us.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 132.

How the dim speck of entity began,
T' extend its recent form, and stretch to man.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 1.

To thee, Creator uncreate
O entium ens! divinely great.—Green. The Spleen.

When first thou gav'st the promise of a man,
When th' embryon speck of entity began,
Was not the plastic atom at a strife,
'Twixt death ambiguous and a twilight life.
Hart. The Vision of Death.

EN-SA'FFRONING. Covering, surrounding or enveloping, in a saffron colour.

The winds all silent are,
And Phœbus in the chair
Ensaffroning sea and air
Makes vanish every star.
Drummond. Sonnets, &c. pt. i. s. 36.

EN-SA'MPLE, v. ENSA'MPLE, s. ENSA'MPLER. ENSA'MPLARY. } I. q. Example, anciently so written. See EXAMPLE.

This men mowe here ensample nime, [take] to late here sones wyue,
And geue hem vp here lond al be here lyue.
R. Gloucester, p. 35.

God lufed tham & thei him, and he half tham at ther nede,
Ensample I rede ge nym, that ge may so well spede.
R. Brunne, p. 290.

Her mygt thow see ensample. In hymself one
That he was myghtful & meuk.—Piers Ploughman, p. 21.

For I haue gouun ensaumple to you, that as I haue don to you, so do ye.—Wiclif. John, c. 13.

For I haue geuen you an ensample, that ye should do as I haue done to you.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This noble ensample to his shepe he yaf,
That first he wrought, and afterward he taught.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 498.

Thou drawest all thing on thy souerain ensampler, and commaundest that this world perfetlich ymaked haue freely and absolute his parfite parties.—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

The bookes shewen here and there
Wherof the worlde ensampled is,
And tho that diden thau amis
Through tyrannie and crueltie,
Right as thei stonden in degree,
So was the writyng of the worke.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

In a cronike, as thou shalt witte
A great ensample I finde writte,
Whiche I shall tell vpon this thynge.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

And if a kynge the life preserue
Of hym, whiche ought for to die,
He seweth not the ensamplarie,
Whiche in the Bible is euident.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Peraduenture there is an euill custome brought vp, bee thou the first to lay it downe, and thou shalt haue the praise of it, and other shall follow thine ensample.
Vives. Instruction to Christian Women, b. i. c. 9.

In which I haue followed all the antique poets historicall: first Homer, who in the persons of Agamemnon and Vlysses hath ensampled a good gouerner and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis.
Spenser. The Author's Intention. To Sir W. Raleigh.

Rather for variety of matter, then for profit of the ensample, I chose the historie of King Arthur as most fit for the excellencie of his person, being made famous by many men's former workes, and also furthest from the danger of enuie, and suspicion of present time.
Spenser. The Author's Intention. To Sir W. Raleigh.

Which are the proper sports of those who sit idle in playhouses, from thence these pernicious ensamples are brought in among us.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 4.

Let this inscription
(Appealing yet to testimonies manifold)
Recall to every surviving witness,
And, for ensample, record to posterity
Her endowments. Philips. Epitaph.

EN-SA'NGUINED. Covered with, soaked, steeped in blood; died, stained, embrued, besprinkled with blood.

Where cattle pastur'd late, now scattered lies
With carcasses and arms th' ensanguin'd field
Deserted. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

—— His listning spouse turns pale
With pleasing horrour at the dreadful tale,
Sleepless devours each word, and hears how slain
Cicons on Cicons swell th' ensanguin'd plain.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

Not to th' ensanguin'd field of death alone
Is valour limited: she sits serene
In the delib'rate council.
Smollet. The Regicide. Act i. sc. 1.

The fiercest monsters of each brake or wood
His youthful arm withstood,
And from the rank mire of the stagnant lake
Drew the crush'd serpent with ensanguin'd blood.
Jones. Hymn to Lacshmi.

EN-SCHE'DULE, v. To write in a schedule; on a scrowle of paper, (schedula.)

—— You must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands,
Whose tenures and particular effects
You have enschedul'd briefly in your hands.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

EN-SCONCE, v. (Also In.) Ger. Schantz; Dut. Schantse. Sconce, primarily, says Skinner, signifies a bulwark; secondarily, the head. To cover or protect the head; to cover, protect, or secure.

Leo. Convey him to the sanctuary of rebels,
Nestorius' house, where our proud brother has
Ensconc'd himself.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act iv. sc. 1.

—— For now the rout,
We left engag'd to seek him out
By speedy marches were advanc'd
Up to the fort where he ensconc'd,
And all th' avennes had possest,
About the place, from east to west.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 4.

A fort of error to ensconce
Absurdity and ignorance,
That renders all the avenues
To truth impervious and abstruse,
By making plaine things in debate
By art perplext and intricate. Id. Ib.

EN-SEAL, v. (Also In.) To mark, stamp, or impress, (with a seal,) to press or tread.

The kyng perceyued nouht of that ilk deceit
The chartre was forth brouht with wittnes enseled streit.
R. Brunne, p. 215.

And truely, after time that such accorde, by their consent in heart, is enseled and putte in my tresorie, emongs my priuie thinges: then gonneth the name of spousaile, and although they breaken frowarde both, yet soche matter enseled is kept in remembraunce for euer.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

Past gloomy bottomes and high waving woods,
Climb'd mountaines, where the wanton kidling dallyes,
Then with soft steps enseal'd the meekened valleys,
In quest of memory.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1

EN-SEAM. (Also In.) Ger. Seem; "A. S. Seime, pinguedo, arvina, Seame, or swelt tallow," (Somner.)

Mr. Upton, upon no just grounds in Mr. Todd's opinion, interprets the word in Spenser, fatterns. Enseamed bed, the Commentators agree, is, greasy bed. Mr. Steevens quotes from the Academy of Armory and Blazon; "Enseame is the purging of a hawk from her glut and grease."

And next to him the Nene downe softly slid,
And bounteous Trent, that in himself enseames
Both thirty sorts of fish, and thirty sundry streames.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the ranke sweat of an enseamed bed,
Stew'd in corruption.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

EN-SEAR, v. A. S. Sear-an, siccare. arefacere, to dry.

To dry, to dry up.

Ensear thy fertile and conceptious wombe,
Let it no more bring out ungrateful man
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

EN-SEARCH, v. (Also In.) To look around, cast our eyes around to discover, where that may lay, which we seek to find. (Junius, and see also Menage.)

For a man's enemy ensearcheth narrowly and gathereth together all that he can imagine, and so accuseth a man more of a fumous heate then of any veritie.
Frith. Workes. To the Christian Reader.

At whiche tyme as they beganne fyrst to ensearche by reason and by reporte of olde menne there about, what thing had bene the occasion that so good an hauen was in so fewe years so sore decayed.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 227.

EN-SHIELD. "An enshield beauty," says Mr. Steevens, "is a shielded beauty, a beauty covered or protected as with a shield." See SHIELD.

——— These blacke masques
Proclaime an en-shield beauty ten times louder
Then beauty could displaie.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 4.

EN-SHRINE, v. (Also In.) Lat. Scrinia, says Vossius, are caskets or chests in which books, writings or other secret things were deposited.

To deposit, to place in a shrine, or casket, in a place of security; and thus, to store or treasure up, as a thing consecrated.

For else what booteth that celestiall ray,
If it in darknesse be enshrined ever,
That it of louling eyes be viewed never?
Spenser. Hymne in Honour of Beautie.

Time him enshrin'd in Paul's—
Which with revenues large, and privileges he Had wondrously endow'd.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

——— One smile, I pray you,
On your poor servants, or a fiddler's fee;
Coming from those fair hands though but a ducat,
We will enshrine it as a holy relic.
Massinger. The Duke of Milan.

While by mean arts and meaner patrons rise
Priests whom the learned and the good despise;
This sees fair Knight, in whose transcendent mind
Are wisdom, purity, and truth enshrin'd.
Savage. Verses to the Honourable Mr. Knight.

Approaching seraphim the babe surround,
And, with adoring reverence, bow profound,
Amaz'd to see their infinite confin'd,
And ancient of all days, in infancy enshrin'd.
Brooke. Redemption.

EN-SHROUD, v. To clothe, to invest, to shelter.

Conscious of guilt, and fearful of the light,
They lurk enshrouded in the vale of night;
Safe from detection, seize th' unwary prey,
And stab, like bravoes, all who came that way.
Churchill. The Apology.

Oft Phœbus self left his divine abode,
And here enshrouded in a shady bow'r,
Regardless of his state, lay'd by the God,
And own'd sweet Music's more alluring pow'r.
Lloyd. The Progress of Bury.

EN-SIGN, s. / E'NSIGN, v. / E'NSIGNCY. } Fr. Enseigne; It. Insegna; Sp. Ensena; Lat. Insigne, from in, and signum, a mark or sign; and so called a signo vel signis, depictured upon them, (Minshew.) Generally—

Any sign or mark by which one thing may be known from another; any mark or note of distinction; a badge, a standard, a flag. It is also applied to—

The person bearing the ensign, flag, or standard. See ANCIENT.

To ensign, is to mark with, to distinguish by, any such sign.

An ensigncy is common in speech and official papers.

Euerye souldier is obediēt to that which is cōmaūded him, redy at his captain's beck whether it be to folow his ensigne, to keep his aray, to stand still, to runne, to fetche a cōpasse, to change thorder of ye battail, to fight on this side or on that side.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 21.

In his time, King Richard with all endeauour prepared a fleet and all things necessary for waging of warre against the infidels at Jarusalem, taking with him the standard and ensignes of his kingdome.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. pt. i. p. 28.

And at this time here is arriued Don Garsias Vrtado de Mendoca viceroy of these realmes who hath chosen me to be chiefe ensigne bearer of an army which departed from hence to scoure the coast.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 502.

Henry but joyn'd the roses, that ensign'd
Particular families; but this hath joyn'd
The rose and thistle, and in them comhin'd
A union, that shall never be declin'd
B. Jonson. Speeches at K. Henry's Barriers.

——— Stay, methinks I see
A person in yon cave, who should that be?
I know her ensignes now. Id. Lady of the Lake.

Han. We see no ensignes of a wedding here; no character of a bridale: where be our skarfes, and our gloves!
Id. The Silent Woman, Act iii. sc. 6.

There was also another skirmish where his enemies had the upper hand, in the which it is reported, that Cæsar taking the ensign bearer by the collar that carried the eagle in his hand, staid him by force, and turning his face told him; See, there be thy enemies.—North. Plutarch, p. 610.

Their saints have been their ensign bearers, particularly S. Dominick; and an office of torment and inquisition is erected in their most zealous countries.
Bp. Taylor. The Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. s. 7.

The widow goes through all her forms;
New lovers now will come in swarms.
Oh! may I see her soon dispensing
Her favours on some broken ensign.
Swift. The Progress of Marriage.

Princes and nations whom wide seas divide,
Where other stars far distant heavens do guide,
Have brought their ensigns to the Roman side.
Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

Yon ensign view, where, waving in the wind,
Appear the fleur-de lys and leopards join'd
That trophy'd sign the gallant chief displays,
Whose sovereign rule each subject band obeys.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. x.

EN-SKI'ED. Removed to, placed in, the skies, the heavens.

I hold you as a thing enskied, and sainted.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas, Act i. sc. 3.

EN-SLAVE, v. / ENSLA'VER. / ENSLA'VEMENT. } (Also In.) Ger. Schlav; Dan. and Sw. Slaf; Fr. Esclave; It. Schiavo; Sp. Esclavo; Low Lat. Sclavus, from the Sclavi, a people reduced to servitude by the Germans. See SLAVE.

To reduce to servitude, to captivity; to deliver over, or consign to bondage.

None might mount to any places of publike trust, but by their deare purchased private recommendations, the cause of so many unworthy, untrusty, corrupt publicke officers and judges of late times, who have (as much as in them lay) endeavoured to enslave both us and our posterities by publike illegall resolutions against their oaths and consciences.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. ii. p. 43.

He overacts the office of an interpreter, who doth enslave himself too strictly to words or phrases.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 21.

Sensual pleasure is a great abuse to the spirit of a man, being a kind of fascination or witchcraft, blinding the understanding and enslaving the will.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Living, c. 2. s. 1.

Protect us, mighty Providence,
What would these mad men have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without power enslave.
Dryden. Ode on the Young Statesmen.

The children of Israel, according to their usual method of sinning, after mercies and deliverances, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection to the Midianites, a potent and insulting enemy.—South, vol. i. Ser. 11.

What indignation in her mind
Against enslavers of mankind. Swift.

Will the fierce unicorn obey thy call,
Enslav'd to man, and patient of the stall?
Say, will he stubborn stoop thy yoke to bear,
And thro' the furrow drag the tardy share
Warton. Job, c. 35.

EN-SNARE, v. (Also In.) To catch or take by guile; take in a net; to allure, to seduce, to inveigle, to entrap, to surround, or entangle, by treachery or guile, by allurements or enticements.

Now speak they of this course, and then of that,
As to ensnare him how they might devise;
Something they fain would do but knew not what.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon:
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-diuell,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soule and body.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act v. sc. 2.

The Scribes and Pharisees are often brought in by the Evangelists tempting our Saviour; that is, they were still trying him with captious, ensnaring questions, as we find in Luke, ch. xi. v. 55. and elsewhere, to get something out of his mouth to accuse and destroy him.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

For Venus, ev'ry heart to ensnare,
With all her charms has deck'd thy face,
And Pallas, with unusual care,
Bids wisdom heighten every grace.
Hamilton. To a Lady.

EN-SNARLE, v. Used by Spenser as equivalent to—

To ensnare, surround or entangle with snares; to entangle.

With noyse whereof when as the caytiue carle
Should issue forth in hope to find some spoyle,
They in awayt would closely him ensnarle,
Ere to his den he backward could recoyle.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

EN-SO'BER, v. To restore, to return, to abstain, from ebriety or drunkenness; from intoxication or giddiness; to stay, to steady.

When he despised the first great mercies, God sent him sharpness and sad accidents to ensober his spirits.
Bp. Taylor, pt. ii. Ser. 13.

EN-SPHERE, v. (Also In.) To conglobe; to gather or collect, to place, in a globe or ball, or sphere.

——— She whose eyes ensphear'd
Star-light enough, t' have made the south control
(Had she been there) the star full northern pole;
She, she is gone. Donne. Of the Progress of the Soul.

His ample shoulders in a cloud ensphear'd
Of fierie chrimsine.—Chapman. Hom. Hymne to Hermes.

Virgins of equal birth, of equal years,
Whose virtues held with thine an emulous strife,
Shall draw thy picture, and record thy life:
One shall ensphere thine eyes; another shall
Impearl thy teeth; a third thy white and small
Hand shall besnow.
Carew. Obsequies to the Lady Ann Hay.

EN-SPIRE, v. (Now In.) See CONSPIRE.

To breathe into, to blow or fill with breath, with spirit, with animation; to animate.

As holyness and honestete. out of holy churche
Spryngeth and spredeth. and enspireth the puple.
Piers Ploughman, p. 216.

Whan Zephirus eke with his sote brethe
Enspired hath in every holte and hethe
The tendre croppes. Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 6.

And thus the fooles audience,
Which was of God's grace enspired
Maketh good councelle was desired.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii

EN-STA'LLED. (Usually In.) Fr. Installer; Barb. Lat. Installare; Lat. Stabulum, i. e. (says Skinner,) locus ubi statur; with us it signifies—

To place any one solemnly in his seat or station.

Numa Pompilius descended from the Sabines: Tarquinius Priscus from the city of Tarquinii, whom being aliens and meer strangers she enstalled kings, and enthronized in the royal seat of Romulus.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 517.

Some who of late had been enstalled in thrones,
Are then abhor'd as Stygian monsters foule.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The fifth Houre.

EN-STAMP, v. (Also In.) To mark or impress by stamping, beating or striking; to impress or infix.

It is this principle which enstamps an inestimable value upon the relicts of saints and martyrs; and empowers fragments of their garments, their very teeth and nails, to work miracles, in the opinion of the devotee.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 2. s. 13.

It is the motive, the disposition, the actuating principle, which enstamps the character.—Id. Ethical Questions, Q. 2.

EN-STATE, v. (Commonly In.) Lat. Status, from stare, to stand; the place, situation, or condition in which we stand.

To put in a situation or condition; to put in or invest with a certain condition or rank.

——— For his possessions,
Although by confutation [confiscation?] they are ours;
We doe enstate, and widow you withall,
To buy you a better husband.
Shakes. Meas. for Meas. Act v. sc. 1.

Nor, perhaps, had thy birth enstated thee in the same wealth and greatness, wouldst thou have been at all better.
South, vol. xi. Ser. 10.

And thus I affirm, that the crucifiction of sin realized in a sincere though partial mortification of it, makes a man a believer, enstates him in grace, entitles him to glory and, in a word, renders him truly Christ's.—Id. vol. xi. Ser. 1.

EN-STEEP, v. (Also In.) To plunge, immerse, sink or soak.

Tempests themselues, high seas, and howling windes,
The gutter'd rockes, and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd, to enclogge the guiltlesse keele,
As hauing sence of beautie, do omit
Their mortall natures, letting go safely by
The diuine Desdemona.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

EN-STORE, v. (Also In.) To lay up in store; to lay up, treasure up; to stock.

For he that is with life and will enstor'd
Hath (for revenge) enough, and needs not care;
For time brings means to furnish him withall;
Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

EN-STRUCT, v. } (Now In.) Lat. In-
EN-STRU'CTION. } struere, instructum, (in, and struere, to build,) met.

To strengthen, to furnish or provide, (sc.) with knowledge; and thus, to teach.

For els how shulde they enstructe other and leade them to the ryghte wave, yf they themselues werre so rude and vnlearned.—A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 63.

Here vpon he grew to suche an hautinesse, and so wonderful an arrogancy was rooted in his stomache, that the gentlenesse which he had learned by the literature of ye Grekes and the enstructions of the Macedones was quite raced out of his thought.—Goldinge. Justine, fol. 56.

EN-STUFF, v. To stuff or stow, to cram, or press close into.

In the dark bulk they closde bodies of men
Chosen by lot, and did enstuff by stelth
The hollow womb with armed soldiers.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Hast thou not read how wise Ulysses did
Enstuffe his eares with waxe.—Wyatt. To his Friend T.

EN-STYLE, v. To enstyle, is, consequentially—

To call by name or title; to name or entitle.

With what consternation did Haman now stand? How do we thinke he lookt to heare himselfe thus enstyled, thus accused, yea thus condemned!
Bp. Hall. Cont. Haman Hanged.

High on the plaines of that renowned isle,
Which all men Beauties' garden-plot enstyle,
A shepherd dwelt, whom fortune had made rich
With all the gifts that seely men bewitch.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

EN-SUE, v. Fr. Ensuyure; It. Seguire; Sp. Seguir; Lat. Sequi, to follow.

To follow, to succeed, to come next after or in consequence of; to result from.

Our enemyes ensuing with a great noyse, as if ye victory had bene theirs out of all crye, began to driue theyr towres and engines forward, and to scale the rampier with ladders.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 134.

Moreouer his sonnes and kinsmen euery one of them, (were they neuer so giltlesse,) were all put to execution, to thentent there should not of so wicked a stocke remaine any time eyther to ensue his example in doynge the like mischiefe, or to reuenge his death.—Id. Justine, fol. 97.

Wherefore of the sayde vnequall myxture, nedes must ensue corruption, and consequently sickness.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Who then ought more to fauour her, then you
Most noble lord, the honour of this age,
And precedent of all that armes ensue!
Spenser. To Sir John Norris.

One wold haue thought so cunningly the rude
And scorned parts were mingled with the fine,
That nature had for wantonnesse ensude
Art, and that art at nature did repine
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10

Yet from thy wound ensued no purple flood;
But look'd a bubling mass of frying blood.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

And because much of the intentions of the parliament appear in the said proposal, and for that they were in effect the principal foundation of the ensuing war, I conceive it will not be amiss to recite them in this place, as they were agreed on by both houses the 2d of June, 1642, with the title of "their humble petition and advice in nineteen propositions sent to the king."—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 26.

Discourse ensues, not trivial, yet not dull,
Nor such as with a frown forbids the play
Of fancy, or proscribes the sound of mirth
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

EN-SURE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Seur, sûr;
ENSU'RANCE. } Lat. Securus, (sine curâ,) care-
ENSU'RER. } less, confident.

To make sure, or secure, firm, steady, certain; to give security or assurance, to affirm or confirm, to secure, free, or exempt from hazard, risk, or loss.

This juge unto this cherl his tale hath told
In seere wise, and made him to ensure,
He shoulde telle it to no creature,
And if he did, he shulde lese his hede.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,077

Thus ben they knit with eterne alliance
And eche of hem gan other for to ensure
Of brotherhed, while that hire lif may dure.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 12,972.

The exercise of this duty of almsgiving was never the impoverishing of any family, but constantly the enriching. Let it be tried. I will once set up the ensurer's office, that whatever goes out on that voyage shall never miss to come home again: there is no man that parteth with any thing for Christ's sake, saith he, but he shall have an hundredfold more in this life.—Hammond, vol. iv. p. 481.

What we give, is not thrown away, but saved from danger; while we detain it at home (as it seems to us) it runs by is abroad, and at adventures, it is out at sea, sailing perilously in storms, near rocks and shelves, amongst pirates; nor can it ever be safe, till it is brought into this port, or ensured this way.—Barrow, vol. i. ser. 31.

If N has 10,000*l.* in Holland: which the greater advantage he could make of it in England, either by use or purchase, tempts him to transfer into England, 'tis probable he will give as much to a merchant in Holland to pay him 10 000*l.* in England, as the ensurance at that time between Holland and England is worth.
Locke. Of Lowering of Interest.

Faith is the best ensurer of thy bliss,
The bank above must fail before the venture miss.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The virtue and power of conscience, is the band of all society, the guardian of faith and honesty, the best ensurer of justice, order and peace in the state.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 33.

But those on Charles with double ardour press,
His kinsman's absence must ensure success,
Orlando lost, of all your Christian foes
Not one shall more your rising fates oppose.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxviii.

ENTA'BLATURE. } "Fr. Entablement,—a ENTA'BLEMENT. } boarding or planking. Entablement d'un piller,—the square foot or base of a pillar," (Cotgrave.)

Entablature, on the contrary, consists of that part of the order which is over the capital of the column; comprehending the architrave, frieze, and cornice.

The general rule is to divide the whole into nineteen parts, the pedestal shall have four, the entablature three: but if a column be without pedestal, divide the height but into five equal parts, four to the column, and to the entablature one.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

They differ in nothing either in height, substance, or entablement from the feminine Ionic, and masculine Doric.
Id. Ib.

They knew little, imagined much, built beyond nature: and terms and phrases, which supported their schemes, covered equally the deficiency and the futility of their matter, not unlike to those columns and entablatures of painted pasteboard, that imitate the solidity of marble and deceive the eye.—Bolingbroke, Ess. 4. Authority in matters of Relig.

Thence [from the pit] rise the seats forming the side of an ellipsis, and above them the gallery composed of a range of Corinthian pillars with their full entablature surmounted by a balustrade and adorned with statues of marble.
Eustace. Classical Tour, vol. i. p. 133.

EN-TAIL, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Entailler; It.
ENTA'IL, n. } Intagliare, insculpere, incidere, to inscribe or cut into.

"Fr. Entailler,—to intail, grave, carve, cut in," (Cotgrave.) Also, to cut into shape or form; and the noun is used by Chaucer as equivalent to shape.

In legal usage, to entail, Fr. Tailler, It. Tagliare, is to cut off, (sc.) an estate from the heirs general, (see Spelman, Gloss. fol. 331, and Blackstone, ii. 113,) and, consequentially—

To limit an estate or property to heirs special; to an especial descent: to settle unchangeably, inalienably in an especial line of descent.

And a curios cros, craftily entayled.
Piers Ploughman (C.) 2.

And these images all without
He did hem both entaile and paint.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Portrayed without, and well entailed
With many rich portretures
And both yet images and peintures.—Id. Ib.

An image of another entaile
A lift halfe was her fast by,
Her name aboue her heed saw I,
And she was called Beauty.—Id. Ib.

This lady was of good entaile
Right wonderful of apparaile.—Id. Ib.

He made an image of entaile
Liche to a woman in semblance,
Of feature, and of countenance,
So fayre yet neuer was figure,
Right as a liue's creature
She seemeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

For thy me sonne of suche entaile
If that thyn herte be disposed,
Felle out and let it nought be glosed.—Id. Ib. b. i.

The mortall steele dispiteously entayld
Deepe in their flesh, quite through the iron walles
That a large purple streame adeim their giambeaux falles?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6

We adhere to the determinations of our fathers, as if their opinions were entail'd on us as their lands; or (as some conceive) part of the parent's soul were portion'd out to his offspring, and the conceptions of our minds were ex traduce.
Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15

——— I here entayle
The crowne to thee and thine heires for ever.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 1.

Dying, he added to my weight of care;
He made me to his crimes undoubted heir,
Left his unfinish'd murder to his son,
And Joab's blood entail'd on Judah's crown.
Prior. Solomon, b. iii.

Suppose St. Peter had privileges above the rest of the apostles; how comes the entail to be made to all his successors, and only at Rome and no where else?
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

He [Ed. I.] passed a statute, which, by allowing them to entail their estates, made it impracticable to diminish the property of the great families, and left them every means of encrease and acquisition.—Hume. Hist. of England, c. 13.

But the most important law in its consequences which was enacted during the reign of Henry [7th], was that by which the nobility and gentry acquired a power of breaking the ancient entails, and of alienating their estates.
Id. Ib. c. 26.

EN-TA'LENT, v. "Fr. Entalenter,—to breed a longing, imprint a desire in; beget an affection, give a great appetite unto," (Cotgrave.)

And all be it so yt the qualities of bodies, that be elect fro without foorthe, mouen and entalenten [excite] the instruments of the wits.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Trust parfite loue, entire charite,
Feruent will, and entalented corage.
Id. The Letter of Cupide.

EN-TAME, v. A. S. Tam-ian, domare, mansuefacere, cicurare, to tame, to accustom to the hand.

To subdue; to reduce to quiet obedience or subserviency.

My sonne, if thou thy conscience
Entamed haste in suche a wise,
In shrifte thou the might auise
And tell it me, if it be so.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

'Tis not your inkie browes, your blacke silke haire,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheeks of creame
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 5.

EN-TA'NGLE, v. } (Also In.) See TANGLE.
ENTA'NGLEMENT. } Minshew says, quasi inter aliquem ducere. Skinner derives from tan, dim. of tangl, a twig. Junius from Ger. Tang, (A. S. Tang,) forceps, in Eng. Tongs; to entangle, he says, is properly to seize with pincers, (forcipe,) and to hold at pleasure when so seized. Fr. Tenailler; It. Attanagliare. Serenius gives the Goth. Teingia, to bind together. The A. S. Tian, to tie, to bind, to fasten, is probably the root.

To tie, to bind, to fold, to knit, to lace, to perplex; to make or cause to be, perplexed, embarrassed, intricate; to ensnare.

It came to their remembraunce, that Mithridates on thone syde was entangled with the warres of the Romayns, and that Ptolomy on thother syde, hadde euer ben an enemie to the kyngdome of Syria.—Goldinge. Justine, fol. 152.

For they that were vertuous wold not entangle themselues wyth the vayne pryde of thys worlde, and weare iii. crownes of golde, where Christ dyd weare one of thorne.
A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 17.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was hight)
Lay lurking couertly him to surprise,
And all his gins that him entangle might,
Drest in good order as he could deuise.
Spenser. Muiopotmos.

But I find it true by experience, as thou affirmedst, that the question of prouidence is entangled with many other.
Boetius. Philosophical Comfort, p. 121. (1609.)

Whereby they also avoided the perill of συναθρισμοι or one tree perishing with another, as it happeneth oftimes from the sick effluviums or entanglements of the roots falling foul of each other.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

Yea the highest and most improved parts of rationality, are frequently caught in the entanglements of a tenacious imagination; and submit to its obstinate, but delusory dictamens.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 11.

Now the unregenerate man has not so much as the habit or principle of faith, and so upon no hand can have his prayers accepted; and he that is truly regenerate, and endued with this principle, yet while he is entangled with the love of sin, cannot act nor exercise that principle, and so neither can his prayers be acceptable.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 10.

It (integrity) is much plainer and easier, much the safer and more secure way of dealing in the world; it has less of trouble and difficulty, of entanglement and perplexity, of danger and hazard in it.—Spectator, No. 353.

She caroll'd, and her various song
Gave lessons to the listening throng:
But (the entangling boughs between)
'Twas her delight to teach unseen.
Cunningham. The Contemplatist.

Nay, so insensibly does this inveterate fallacy insinuate itself into our reasonings on this subject, that even Grotius himself appears not to be quite free from the entanglement.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 2.

ENTE'CHED. "Fr. Entecher,—to stain, to imbue, (q. d.) with virtues or vices," (Skinner.) And Chaucer renders—afficitur, enteched.

One of the best enteched creature
That is or shal, while that y° world may dure.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

Than who so euer is enteched [afficitur] and defould with payne, he ne doubteth not, that he is enteteched [afficitur] and defould with yuel.—Id. Boecius, b. 4.

ENTE'ND, v. } (Now In.) Fr. Entendre; It.
ENTE'NDABLE. } & Lat. Intendere, (in, and tendere; Gr. Τεν-ειν, to stretch.)
ENTE'NDANCE. } To stretch or direct, (met.)
ENTE'NDMENT. } the mind, the thoughts; to ENTE'NT. } have or give a direction or
ENTE'NTION. } course, a design, purpose or
ENTE'NTIVE. } meaning; to design, to pur-
ENTE'NTIVELY. } pose, to mean. Also used by our older writers as equivalent to attend, attention, &c.

Entendment,—Fr. Entendement; intellectus vel intentio, (Skinner.)

Ne in non other entente we hider ne come,
Bote that we vor holi churche the deth of the nome.
R. Gloucester, p. 503.

O January, dronken in plesance
Of marinage, see how thy Damian,
Thin owen squier and thy boren man,
Entendeth for to do thee vilanie.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9665.

For I entend to nothing
But to my ioy, and my playing.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

This vertue bringeth a man to great degree
Ecus wight that lust to do him entendaunce.
Id. To the Lorde and Gentilmen.

And for to haue none other entendaunce
Unto nothing, but to mine ease.
Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

The peace is as it were a sacrament
To fore the God, and shal with words plaine
Without any double entendement
Be treated. Chaucer. A Balade to King Hen. IV.

For mannes hedde imaginen ne can
Ne entendement consider, ne tongue tell
The cruell paines of this sorrowful man
That passen euery tourment donne in helle.
Id. Troilus, b. v.

Soon after this, a furlong way or two,
He prively hath told his entent
Unto a man, and to his wif him sent
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 3263.

Who is so trewe and eke so ententif
To kepe him, alle and hole, as is his make?
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9164.

The peple came into the house withoute
And wondred hem, in how honest manere
Ententifly she kept hire fader dere.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 3210.

Let no man besie him this arte to seche,
But if that he the entention and speche
Of philosophres understonden can;
And if he do he is a lewed man.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,912.

Now set well thine entencion
To hear of Loue the discription.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

For these craftes (as I finde)
A man maie do by wate of kinde:
Be so, it be to good entent. Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

For who that is not entendable
To holde vp right his kinges name
Him ought for to be to blame. Id. Ib. b. vii.

For thy if that it be thy will
To stande vpon amendment,
A tale of great entendement
I thinke telle for thy sake,
Wherof thou might ensample take. Id. Ib. b. ii.

And kepe in his entencion
The point of sublimacion. Id. Ib. b. iv.

Thys I denye not, but that God coulde haue done it, yf he had so entended, when he spake the wordes: But now the Scripture standynge as it doth, I thinke he can not do it.
A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 59.

Fye on double entendment and cloked adulacion, whiche hath bene the common scruituers in all palacies, both imperiall and regall.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 36.

EN-TE'NDER, v. To be or cause to be tender, delicate, affectionate, warm-hearted.

For whatsoever creates fear, or makes the spirit to dwell in a righteous sadness, is apt to entender the spirit, and to make it devoute and pliant to any part of duty.
Bp Taylor Holy Living, s. 4.

True love strikes root in reason passion's foe;
Virtue alone entenders us for life:
I wrong her much—entenders us for ever.
Young. The Complaint, Night 2.

E'NTER, v. } Fr. Entrer; Sp. Entrar; It.
E'NTRER, n. } Entrare; Lat. Intrare, to go or E'NTERING, n. } come, to move, in or into.
E'NTRANCE. } To go or come, to move or
E'NTRY. } cause to move, in; to bring in, to put in (sc. in writing,) to put or place.

An entry, (a way or path, or passage in,) is a term of the chase, says Mr. Gifford, and means, "Places through (in or into) which deer have lately passed, by which their size is guessed at."

Tho the emperour herde this, to schippes he wende faste,
And al hys power forth with hym, and sailes vp enste.
Thei entrede in at Temse mouth.—R. Gloucester, p. 47.

For the se geth al aboute, bute entre on ther nys,
And that ys vp on harde roches. & so narw wel it ys.
That ther may go bote on, & on, that thre men with inne
Mygte ale al the lond, or heo come ther inne.—Id. p. 158.

Now has R. entre, & Acres taken es,
The Sarazens com fulle fre, & offred him grete riches.
R. Brunne, p. 127.

His lord sayde to hym wel be thou goode seruaunt and feithful for on fewe thingis thou hast be trewe, I shall ordeyne the on many thingis, entre thou into the joie of thi lord.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 25.

Then his master sayde vnto him: Well good seruaunt and faithful. Thou hast bene faythfull in lytel, I wyll make the ruler ouer muche: enter in unto thy master's ioye.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Ye litel children how hard it is for men that triston in richessis to entre into the kyngdom of God.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 4.

Chyldren, how harde is it for them that trust in ryches, to entre into the kyngdome of God.—Bible, 1551. Mark, c. 4.

For britheren ghe witen oure entree to ghou, for it was not veyn.—Wiclif. 1 Thessal. c. 2.

But of o thing I warne thee ful right,
Be wel avised on that ilke night,
That we ben entred into shippes bord
That non of us ne speke not a word
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3585.

Aviseth you, ye ben a man of age,
How that ye entren into mariage;
And namely with a yong wif and a faire.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9430.

Warre at his beginning hath so great an entring and so large, that euerie wight may enter whan him liketh, and lightly find werre; but certes what end that shal befalle, it is not light to know.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

She saide, at entre of the pas,
Howe Mars, which God of armes was,
Hath set two oxen sterne and stoute,
That casten fire and flam aboute,
Both at mouth and at nase,
So that they setten all on blase.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And downward from an hill under a bent,
Ther stood the temple of Mars armipotent,
Wrought all of burned stele, of which th' entree
Was longe and streite, and gastly for to see.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1985.

But of their entree whan thei sought,
The gates weren all to smale,
And therevpon was many a tale.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And entre not into iudgement with thy seruaunt, for in thy syghte shall no man lyuyng be iustified.
Bible, 1551. Psalme 113.

And therefore reader let this entre of the matter serue for an argument with what spirite this matter is handled.
Bp. Gardner. Explication of Transubstantiation, fol. 94.

When Adam transgressed my statutes, thē was the thing iudged that was done. Then were the entraunces of the worlde made narowe, ful of sorow and trauayle: they are but fewe and euell, full of parylles and labours.
Bible, 1551. Esdras, b. iv. c. 7.

That darkesome caue they enter, where they find
That cursed man, lowe sitting on the ground,
Musing full sadly in his sullen mind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

I saw the sin wherein my foot did enring;
I saw how that dishonour did attend it;
I saw the shame whereon my flesh was vent'ring,
Yet had I not the power for to defend it.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

Thence, forth descending to that perlous porch,
Those dreadfull flames she also found delayd,
And quenched quite like a consumed torch,
That erst all entrers wont so cruelly to scorch.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

That on the rocks he fell so flat and light,
That he thereby receiv'd no hurt at all,
But chaunced on a craggy cliffe to light:
Whence he with crooked clawes so long did crawl,
That at the last he found a caue with entrance small.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 10.

Is. And a hart of ten,
I'trow hee be, madam, or blame your men
For by his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, fawmets, he doth promise sport,
And standing 'fore the dogs
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd.

I thought it my duty, upon consideration of my age and vigorous constitution, as an Englishman, and an invitation to that purpose from my father, to enter into the service of my country, in the army commanded by the Earl of Essex under the authority of the Parliament.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 36.

He [Sir Roger de Coverly] made indeed a little mistake as to one of her pages, whom at his first entring, he took for Astyanax.—Spectator, No. 335.

Languages are useful to men of all conditions, and they equally open them the entrance, either to the most profound, or the more easy and entertaining parts of learning.
Locke. Of Education, s. 195.

——— Heroic maid!
She to th' assaulted threshold bravely ran,
And with her snowy arms supply'd a bolt
To bar their entrance.—Smollet. The Regicide, Act v. sc. 6.

I shall be contented here, with what ever they will have the goodness to leave me, and pass to another entry, which is less ambiguous; I mean that of silk.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

ENTER-CHA'NGE, v. } (Now Inter.) Fr.
ENTERCHA'NGE, n. } Entrechanger, changer. See CHANGE,
ENTERCHA'NGEABLY. } and EXCHANGE.
ENTERCHA'NGEMENT. }

To change one with another, alternately, mutually; to give one thing, and take or receive another; to move or remove from one place to another, (the one to succeed the other alternately;) to have or cause a vicissitude, a mutation.

Sone after this, they spake of sondry things
As fil to purpose of this auenture
And playing enterchaungeden herrings.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

If the forme of this worlde is so selde stable, and if it turneth by so many enterchaunges: wilt thou than trusten in the tombling fortunes of men?—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

The eighth daie is the daie of immortalitee: in the which, rest and wernesse, woorke and idlenesse, shall not by course entrechaungeably the one succede the other, but thei shall be the euerlasting gladnesse.—Udal. Luke, c. 23.

Were you no king, and free from those moods, should I choose a companion for wit and pleasure, it should be you: or for honesty to enterchange my bosome with, it should be you.—Beaum. & Fletch. A King and no King, Act i. sc. 1.

Captaine George Weymouth saw the south part of Gronland, and had water in 120 fadome, blacke, as thicke as puddle, and in a little space cleere, with many such enterchanges.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. viii. c. 3. s. 4.

Thereupon he did frame himself the more to live after the fashion of the countrey there, and enterchangeably also to bring the men of that countrey unto the manner of the Macedonians: being perswaded that by this mixture and enterchange of manners one with another, he should by friendship more than force, make them agree lovingly together, when that he should be so far from the countrey of Persia.—North. Plutarch, p. 578.

And our indentures tripartite are drawne:
Which being sealed enterchangeably,
(A busineese that this night may execute)
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you and I,
And my good Lord of Worcester, will set forth.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

Priest. A contract;—
Attested by the holy close of lippes
Strengthned by enterchangement of your rings,
And all the ceremonie of this compact
Seal'd in my presence.—Id. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

ENTER-CO'MMUNE, v. } See COMMON, and ENTERCOMMU'NING, n. } INTERCOMMON.

To have, or do, or act in common or in community with others; to do or act, to share or participate with others, or as others do.

For if that it be peace, mine hart dere
The nature of the peace mote nedes driue
That men must entrecomune yfere
And to and fro eke ride —Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

The which nacions what for difficultie of wayes, and what for diuersitie of language, and what for defaulte of enuisage, (commercii insolentia) and entercomuning of marchandise: not onely the names of singular men ne may not stretchen, but eke the fame of cities may not stretchen
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Yet he lived and died childlesse, entercommoning therein with many worthies.—Fuller. Worthies. Hertfordshire.

E'NTER-COURSE. (Commonly Inter.) Fr. Entrecours; Lat. Cursus.

Course, or way, or passage, between one and another; dealing between.

Thus in discerning contracts and other entercourses, the substance of the thing and the present employment is more to be considered than any improper or equivocal exoression, or quirk in the words of the law or entercourse.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 6.

Lest the spinal pith should be compressed, and so the free entercourse or passage of the spirits to and fro be stopt.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

ENTER-DE'AL. (Also Inter.) A dealing between different parties; a communication; mutual or reciprocal dealings or transactions; intercourse.

So me in message unto her she sent,
To treat with her, by way of enterdeale
Of finall peace and faire attonement
Which might concluded be by mutuall consent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

For he is practiz'd well in policie,
And thereto doth his courting most apply:
To learne the enterdeale of Princes strange,
To marke th' intent of counsells, and the change
Of States, and eke of priuate men some-while Supplanted by fine falshood and faire guile.
Id. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

ENTERDI'T, n. & v. i. e. Interdict.

——— So that atten ende
This bissopes to Londone echone gonne wende,
A lute biuore Candlemasse, & abbodes al so,
& conceil made general, this entredit to do.
R Gloucester, p. 495.

The pape sauh out of cours the wikkednes of Ion,
Him & his fautours he cursed euerilkon
& enterdited this lond.—R. Brunne, p. 209.

& if he wild nouht com to amendement,
Alle France suld be brouht tille encumberment,
Thorgh comon enterdite.—Id. p. 330.

Thyn enterdite, and thy sentence
Ayen thin owne conscience
Hereafter thou shalt fele and grope.—Gower. Con. A. b ii.

ENTE'REMENT, i. e. Interment, (qv.) A funeral.

And for to yiue a more feith
Her husbonde, and eke she both
In blacke clothes thei hem cloth,
And make a great enterement.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

ENTER-GLA'NCING. Inter-changing glances, (quick, oblique looks.)

Nowe, although there wanted no delicate viands to content them, yet their chiefe repast was by enterglancing of lokes.
Gascoigne. Flowers.

ENTER-LA'CE. (Now Inter.) See ENLACE. Fr. Entrelasser.

Looke how the woods, where enterlaced trees
Spread friendly arms each other to embrace,
Joyne at the head, though distant at the knees,
Waving with wind, and lording on the place.
Sidney, Psalm 72.

The Grecian writers described it to be like in leaf unto plantaine: in stem four square, bringing forth certain little cods full of seed, enfolded and enterlaced one within another, after the manner of the tufted and curled haire about the pourcuttle fishes, called Polypi.
Holland. Plinie, b xxv. c. 7.

ENTER-ME'DDLE, v. } (Now Inter.) Fr.
ENTERME'DDLING, n. } Entremesler; inter, and meddle, (qv.) Fr. Mesler; It. Mescolare, meschaire, from the Lat. Miscere, (Menage,) to mix.

To intermix, to intermingle; to mix or mingle; to busy or be busy, (in the concerns of others.)

For why, the nature of euery thing maketh his property, no it is not entermedled, with the effect of contrarious thynge.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

In John I haue in a manier doen nothing at al, sauing only placed the texte, and diuided the paraphrase: because I knew the translatours therof, wyth whose exquisite doinges, I might not without the crime of great arrogancie and presumpcion be busye to entermedle.
Udal. To Queene Katherine.

In these entermedlynges, the ambassadours, that the Mytylenians had firste sente vnto the Lacedemonyans, by those Lacedemonians bene referred to the next assemblie, that shulde be made of all Grece.—Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 73.

ENTER-ME'TE. Fr. Entre mettre or entremester, to intermeddle, to interpose, (Skinner.)

Tuo cardenalles of Rome the pape hider sent,
To Paris bothe thei come, to the parlement,
Thei said luf to make, the pape wild entermet,
That non ageyn other take, tille tyme that he had set.
R Brunne, p. 266.

For reson wolde haue reherced to the ryght as clergie scide,
Ac for thyn entermetyng, her hert thow for sake.
Piers Ploughman, p. 227.

A frere wol entermete him evermo;
Lo, good men, a flie and eke a frere
Wol fall in every dish and eke matere.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6416.

But if he would him entermette.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

ENTER-PA'RLE. A parley between; a conference.

And therefore doth an enterparle exhort;
Persuades him leave that unbeseeming place,
And with a princely hardiness resort
Unto his people, that attend his grace.
Daniel. Ciell War, b. ii.

ENTER-PA'RT, v. To part, or share between, or among.

I will parten with thee all thy paine
If it so be I do thee no comfort
As it is frendes right, sothe for to saine
To enterparten wo, a glad disport.—Chaucer. Troilus, b i.

ENTE'RPRET, i. e. Interpret, (qv.) Lat. Interpres.

Other did enterprete it otherwise: that the lyghtening in the Macedon's campe, signified glory & victory to Alexander, & also theioymet of the empyre of Asia.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 23.

E'NTER-PRISE, v. } Fr. Enterprinse, from E'NTERPRISE, n. } the verb enterprendre;
E'NTERPRISER. } It. Intra-prendere, from the Lat. Prehendere, (hendere, used by the Latins only in composition, from the A. S. Hent-an, capere, to take hold of.) Equivalent to this is the A. S. and old Eng. Underfangan, and the modern Eng. Undertake. See HAND.

To take in hand, to undertake, to venture, to attempt; and by Spenser, to receive, (q.d. by the hand,) to entertain.

And also that longe time before we enterprise hereunto, we ought not onely to haue a little snatche of ciuile policy, but also, that we ought to be fully resolued and established in ourselues, as concernynge the whole tenure of our life.
Golding. Justine, Pref.

And as I thus sadly among them aduysed
I saw Gower, that first garnisshed our English rude,
And Maister Chaucer, that nobly enterprised
How that our Englishe myght freshely be ennewed.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

And now at the like request I haue made the lyke enterpryse to translate the canonical Epistles of St. Peter, Jude, James, and John.—John Olde. To the Duchesse of Somerset.

Oh how much haue they neede of, that will neuer be contented, and what richesse can suffice any that will attempt high enterprises aboue their estate.
Sir John Cheeke. The Hurte of Sedition

The chief enterpriser with the fauour of her maiestie hath not onely since continued the action by sending into the country againe and replanting this last yeere a new colony, but is also ready, according as the times and meanes will afford, to follow and prosecute the same.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 266.

Perdy not so, said shee, for shamefull thing
It were t' abandon noble cheuisaunce,
For show of perill, without venturing:
Rather let try extremities of chaunce
Then enterprised praise for dread to disauaunce.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

In goodly garments that her well became,
Fair marching forth in honourable wise,
Him at the threshold met, and well did enterprize.—Id. Ib.

And daily how through hardy enterprise
Many great regions are discouered,
Which to late age were neuer mentioned.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

Whereupon it was alledged, that love is of great power to move a man for to be bold, hardy, and adventurous, yea, and ministreth a readinesse to attempt all novelties, according as Plato named it, the enterpriser of all things.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 536.

An hasty fortune maketh an enterpriser, and remover, (the French hath it better; entreprenant, or remuant,) but the exercised fortune maketh the able man.
Bacon. Ess. Of Fortune.

I could not help both fearing and presaging, that these nations would some time or other, if ever we should have an enterprising prince upon the throne, of more ambition than virtue, justice, and true honour, fall into the way of all other nations, and loose their liberty.—Spectator, No. 338.

The king followed them thither with a slender, or rather no guard, (so far was he from fearing either parliament or city:) designing to engage the citizens to deliver up the five members to him, and to stand by him in this horrid enterprize: but they would not be persuaded to comply with his desires in that matter.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 22.

The Portuguese erected the first sugar-works in Brazil, as they are more lively and enterprising than the Spaniards.
Granger. The Sugar-Cane, b. i. Argument.

When young, with sanguine cheer and streamers gay,
We cut our cable, launch into the world,
And fondly dream each wind and star our friend:
All, in some darling enterprize embark'd.
Young. The Complaint, Night 8

——— In civil life
Wit makes an enterpriser; sense a man.

ENTERTA'IN, v. } (Also, in some of our ENTERTA'IN, n. } older writers, Inter.) Fr.
ENTERTA'INER. } Entretenir; It. Intrattenere; Sp. Entretener;
ENTERTA'ININGLY. } Lat. Inter, and tenere, to ENTERTA'INMENT. } keep among.

To keep, to take, admit, or receive, among, (sc.) as a guest, as a companion, as a servant, as a soldier; and thus—to receive and treat hospitably and kindly; to take into service, or pay for service; to cherish, to please, to gratify; and further, to amuse, to divert; also, to keep or hold, (sc.) a conversation, an argument or discourse; to keep the mind or attention engaged or occupied; to engage.

By Spenser, used simply as equivalent to, to take. He also uses entertaine as a noun; and Shakespeare once, in Pericles.

The embassadours of the Cirenians came to him [Alexander] thither, and brought him presentes, whom he gently entertained, assuring them of his friendship.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 71.

Who now but they in strength and number flowe!
Raisd by their God their hatere farre above!
For, chang'd by him, their entertainers grow
With guile to hate, who erst with truth did love.
Sidney, Psalm 105.

Whome Arsaces, Kyng of the Parthians, sent into Hyrcanie, and of his noble and royall courage, not onely gaue him entertenement like a kyng, but also gaue him his daughter in marriage.—Golding. Justine, fol. 147.

The knight and Vna entring, faire her greet,
And bid her joy of that her happy brood;
Who them requites with court'sies seeming meet,
And entertains with friendly cheerfull mood
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

But when he lookt about on euery side,
To weet which way were best to entertaine
To bring him to the place where he would faine,
He could no path nor traet of foot descry
Ne by inquiry learne, nor ghesse by ayme.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 4.

But Calidore, in th' entry close did stand,
And entertaining them with courage stout,
Still slew the foremost that came first to hand,
So long, till all the entry was with bodies man'd.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 11.

In all th' assembly there was not a man,
But put the project on with might and main,
So great applause it generally wan,
That else no business they would entertaine.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

But after all her princely entertaine,
To the hearing of that former cause in hand,
Herselfe eftsoones she gan conuert againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

Such was that hag, vnmeet to host such guests
Whom greatest Prince's Court would welcome faine,
But need (that answers not at all requests)
Bade him not look for better entertaine.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 8.

Where hearing of the goodly entertain
Your knight of holy Order of the Bell
Gives to all damsels, and all errant knights,
I thought to knock, and now am bold to enter.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 1.

And until then, your entertain shall be
As doth befit our honour, and your youth.
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act i. sc. 1.

Gon. When euery greefe is entertained
That's offer'd, comes the entertainer.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

Good purposes, when they are not held, doe so farre turne enemies to the entertainer of them, as that they help to double both his sin and punishment.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ before Caiaphas.

Note if your lady straine his entertainment,
With any strong, or vehement opportunitie:
Much will be seene in that.—Shakes. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

His office was to give entertainment
And lodging unto all that came and went,
Not unto such as could him feast againe,
And double quite for that he on them spent;
But such, as want of harbour did constraine:
Those for God's sake his dewty was to entertaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

The not entertaining a sincere love and affection for the duties of religion, does both naturally, and by the just judgment of God besides, dispose men to errors and deceptions about the great truths of religion.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

The argument with which this audience was entertained the last Lord's day, being the government of the tongue, I cannot think it improper or unseasonable for me, who have the honour to come next, to treat about the government of the thoughts.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 14.

You may easily imagine the confusion of the entertainer, who finding some of his friends very uneasy, desired to tell them a story of a great man, one Mr. Lock.—Spect. No. 533.

But the kind hosts their entertainment grace
With hearty welcome, and an open face.
In all they did, you might discern with ease
A willing mind, and a desire to please.
Dryden. Ovid Metam. b. viii.

And, to that end, [the king] encouraged a great number of loose debauched fellows about the town to repair to White-hall, where a constant table was provided for their entertainment.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 19.

A country vicar in his homely house,
Pleas'd with his lot, and happy in his spouse,
With simple diet, at his humble board
Once entertain'd the chaplain of a lord.
Fawkes. Parody on the City and Country Mouse.

My conversation, says Dryden, very entertainingly of himself, is dull and slow, my humour saturnine and reserved.
Dr. J. Warton. Essay on Pope.

When company meet, he that can talk entertainingly upon common subjects; and divert their minds with inoffensive wit, has an excellent talent.—Sherlock, Disc. 5.

ENTER-TA'KE, v. A word of Spenser's coinage.

To receive, to entertain.

So did this mightie ladie, when she saw
Those two strange knights, such homage to her make,
Bate somewhat of that maiestie and awe
That whylome wont to doe so many quake,
And with more mild aspect those two to entertake.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

ENTER-TI'SSUED. Tissue or tishew, (says Skinner,) from the Fr. Tissu, part. of tistre, texere, (q.d.) A cloth interwoven (intextum) with gold or silver.

'Tis not the balme, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mase, the crowne imperiall,
The entertissued robe of gold and pearle.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 1.

ENTER-VIEW. } (Now Inter.) Fr. S'entre-
ENTERVIEWING, s. } voir, to behold or visit one another.

A view or visit between persons.

Antigonus licked them up one after another, sent letters of encouragement one to another, appointing a time and place of meting and enterview, and so laid all their powers together for the war.—Golding. Justine, fol. 77.

Therefore, first, he wrote many and diuers letters to Syr John Carew, and Syr Thomas Trenchard, wylinge and warnynge them with all kyndnes of humanitie to enterteyne the Kyng of Castel, tyll he in person approched in some place mete and conuenyent for the entreuieuynge and entreteignynge of so noble a personage.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 20.

But if the busie tell-tale day,
Our happy enterview betray;
Lest thou confesse too, melt away.
Habington. Castara, pt. i.

ENTER-WO'VEN. (Now Inter.)

On her head a gyrland of flowers, corne, vine-leaves, and olive-branches enterwoven.
B. Jonson. The second Masque of Beauty.

To you that are by excellence a Queene!
The top of beauty! but of such an ayre,
As onely by the mind's eye may be seene
Your enterwoven lines of good and fayre!
Id. Love's Triumph through Callipolis.

EN-THEAT. } Gr. Ενθεος, (εν, and θεος, a E'NTHEASM. } God;) Lat. Entheatus, divino spiritu adflatus, inspired by divine spirit. See ENTHUSIASM.

Their orby crystals move
More active than before,
And entheate from above,
Their sovereign prince, laud, glorify, adore.
Drummond. Divine Poems.

His genius justly, in an entheat rage,
Oft lash'd the dull-sworn factors for the stage;
For Alchymy, though't make a glorious gloss,
Compar'd with gold is bullion and base drosse.
Will. Hodgson. On B. Jonson.

Altho' in one absurdity they chime
To make religious entheasm a crime.—Byrom. Enthusiasm.

Without the entheus Nature's self bestows,
The world no painter nor no poet knows.
J. Scott. Essay on Painting.

EN-THRAL, v. } (Also In.) A. S. Thræl;
ENTHRA'LMENT. } Sw. Træl, which Ihre (after a review of different etymologies proposed) thinks are from Thre-an, to chastise, to correct; and applied to those slaves whom their masters chastised at pleasure. See DISENTHRALL.

To reduce or subject, to servitude or slavery; under the dominion of a master or tyrant; to enslave, to deliver over, to consign to, bondage.

It is reported that there was such a grieuous dearth of corne in the years 1586 and 1587, thorowout Hungary, that some being compelled for want of food were faine to sell their children vnto the most bloudy and barbarous enemie of Christians, and so to enthrall them to the perpetuall yoke of Turkish slauery.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 185.

Thus did my youth but exercise extremes,
My heed was rashness to forerun my fall,
My wit but folly, and my hopes but dreams,
My counsel serv'd myself but to enthral.
Drayton. The Legend of Pierce Gaveston.

Through our forwardness to suppress, and our backwardness to recover an enthral'd piece of truth out of the gripe of the custom, we care not to keep truth separated from truth, which is the fiercest rent and diuulsion of all.
Milton. On the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

Till by two brethren (those two brethren call Moses and Aaron) sent from God to claime
His people from enthralment, they return
With glory and spoile back to their promised land.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

When I see the bright nymph who my heart does enthral,
When I view her soft eyes and her languishing air,
Her merit so great, my own merit so small,
It makes me adore, and it makes me despair.
Walsh. The Antidote.

—— Oh! look down,
With smiles indulgent, on his new designs;
Assist his useful works, facilitate
His honest aims, nor in exaction's gripe
Enthrall th' endeavouring swain.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 1.

EN-THRIL, v. A. S. Thirlian, to pierce or bore through.

Wherewith a dart we saw how it did light
Right on her breast, and therewithall pale death
Enthrilling it to reaue her of her breath.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 265.

EN-THRONE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Enthro-
ENTHRO'NIZE. } ner, throne, thron; Sp. Trono; It. Trono; Ger. Thron; Dut. Troon; Lat. Thronus; Gr. Θρονος, a seat, from the unused Θρα-ειν, sedere, to sit.

To place upon a throne or seat; emphatically applied to the seat of potentates; to seat, as in power or authority; to hold or occupy the seat of power, of sovereignty.

But when I saw it was enthron'd
In her celestial breast,
O then! I it no longer own'd
For mine was ne'er so blest.—Carew. The Mistake.

—— Oh now after
So many courses of the sun enthroned,
Still growing in a maiesty and pomp, the which
To leaue, a thousand fold more better, then
Tis sweet at first t' acquire.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act ii. sc. 3.

Right princely virtue fit to reign,
Enthroniz'd in her spirit remain,
Guiding our fortunes ever.—Davies, Hymn 22. To Astrea.

Enthroniz'd: Thy throne, O God, is for ever, and the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.
Bp. Hall. Serm. Christ & Cæsar.

Sometimes on flowery beds she [the Grecian Muse] lay supine
And gave her thoughts a loose to love and wine;
Or in her sable stole and buskins dress'd,
Show'd vice enthron'd, and virtuous kings oppress'd.
Fenton. Epistle to Mr. Southerne.

O who will bear me then to western climes,
The isles of innocence, from mortal view
Deeply retired, beneath a plantaines shade
Where happiness and quiet sit enthron'd.
Warton. The Enthusiast.

His [the divine Λογος] enthronisation after his resurrection, was nothing more than declaring the dignity of his person more solemnly, and investing him as God-man, in his whole person with the same power and authority, which as God he always had.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 191.

EN-THU'NDER, v. Fr. Tonner; Lat. Tonare.

Against them all she proudly did enthunder.
Vntill her masts were beaten ouer-bord,
Her deckes downe raix'd, her tackle cut asunder.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 550.

EN-THU'SIASM. } Fr. Enthusiasme; It.
ENTHU'SIAST. } Entusiasmo; Sp. Enthu-
ENTHUSIA'STIC. } siasmo; Gr. Ενθουσιασ-
ENTHUSIA'STICAL. } μος. Ενθεος, (εν, and θεος.)
ENTHUSIA'STICALLY. } ενθεαζ-ειν, ενθουσιαζ-ειν,
ENTHU'SIASM. } to be acted upon by di-
ENTHU'SIAN. } vine spirit. (See ENTHEAT.) Cotgrave calls it—

A ravishment of the spirit; divine motion or inspiration; poetical fury. And see the quotations from Holland and Warburton.

This passion in general is named enthusiasmus, as one would say a divine inspiration, for like as ενθουσιαω in Greek signifieth repletion with spirit or winde, and ἐνθεος that which is full of prudence and wit, even so, saith he [Plato] an agitation and shaking of the soul is called ενθουσιασμος by the participation and society of some more heavenly and divine power. Now this enthusiasme is subdivided.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 932.

Now that power or faculty of divination (like unto a pair of blank writing tables, wherein there is nothing written) void of reason, and not determinate of itself, but only apt and meet to receive fancies, affections, and presensions, without any discourse of reason, or ratiocination, hitteth upon that which is to come, at what time it is most removed from that which is present, and in that extasie is it transmuted by a certain temperature and disposition of the body, which we call enthusiasm or inspiration.—Id. Ib. p. 1092.

When heated melancholy hath kindled the busy and active fancy; the enthusiast then talks of illuminations, new lights, revelations, and many wonderful fine things, which are ascribed to the same spirit, [the Holy Ghost]

Glanvill, Ser. 10.

For no men in the world except enthusiasts and mad-men ever obtruded a doctrine upon the church, but he pretended Scripture for it or tradition, and therefore no man could be pressed by these words, no man confuted, no man instructed, no not enthusiasts or Montinists.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, s. 5.

Hence 'tis my humble fancy finds no wings,
No nimble rapture starts to heaven and brings Enthusiastic flames.—Crashaw. To the Morning.

But (2) there is another mischief of the enthusiastick spirit behind, and that is, its bringing reason into disgrace, and denying the use thereof in the affairs of faith and religion.—Glanvill, Ess. 4. p. 20.

[This] Alexander ab Alexandro. Gen. dier. lib. vi. cap. 21. [relates] of an enthusiasticall prisoner.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 657.

Of prophets, enthusiasms and impostors, our ecclesiasticall stories afford many examples.—Id. Ib. p. 673.

I mean enthusiasm: which laying by reason, would set up revelation without it. Whereby in effect it takes away both reason and revelation, and substitutes in the room of it the ungrounded fancies of a man's own brain, and assumes them for a foundation both of opinion and conduct.

Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19.

If it be true, that all knowledge lies only in the perception of the agreement or disagreement of our own ideas, the visions of an enthusiast and the reasonings of a sober man will be equally certain.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 4.

A numerous host of dreaming saints succeed,
Of the true old enthusiastic breed,
Gainst form and order they their power employ,
Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Very extravagant, therefore, and unwarrantable are those flights of devotion, which some enthusiastical saints of the church of Rome have indulged themselves in; who make it necessary for every Christian, in order to his arriving at perfection to divest himself of all manner of regard for himself; nay, to despise, to hate and to abhor himself in the utmost propriety of the expression.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 9.

He [John Oxenbridge] preached very enthusiastically in several places in his travels to and fro, while his dear wife preached in the house among her gossips and others.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Enthusiasm is that temper of mind, in which the imagination has got the better of the judgment. In this disordered state of things, enthusiasm, when it happens to be turned upon religious matters, becomes fanaticism: and this, in its extreme, begets the fancy of our being the peculiar favourites of heaven.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. App.

He comes! he comes! the saviour of the land!
His drawn sword flames in his uplifted hand,
Enthusiast in his Country's cause;
Whose firm resolve obeys a nation's call,
To rise deliv'rer, or a martyr fall
To Liberty, to dying laws. Logan. Ode to Paoli.

Each youth, inspired by your persuasive art,
Clasps the dear form of Virtue to his heart;
And feels in his transported soul
Enthusiastic raptures roll.—Mason. For Music. Ode 1.

There is a fervour in the performance of religious duties when they arise from a sincere heart, which is really a most exquisite sensation. It is a sensation in the bosom, far removed from any thing enthusiastical. It is warm, but not violent; it is zealous, but not unreasonable.

Knox. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 9.

Though I was at first, like the rest, much disposed to disapprove the solitude of my friend's habitation, yet when I had resided with him a little while, and had enjoyed the calm and rational pleasure of philosophic ease, I became enthusiastically fond of a sequestered life.—Id. Ess. No. 29.

ENTHYMEME. Gr. Ενθυμημα, from εν, and θυμος, the mind. Syllogismus imperfecte prolatus (subintellectâ alterâ præmissarum.) A syllogism imperfectly produced, (one of the premises remaining within the mind, i. e. not expressed.) See the quotation from the Art of Thinking.

Neither ought the same to be so painfully studied and premeditated as that oration of Demosthenes was, which Pytheas said (by way of reproach) that it smelled of lampe oyle; nor full of over much sophisticall curiosity of enthymemes and arguments too witty and subtile, nor yet with clauses and periods exactly measured to the rule and compasse.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 291.

Must we learn from canons and quaint sermonings, interlined with barbarous Latin, to illumine a period, to wreath an enthymeme with masterous dexterity.

Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

I remember Chillingworth somewhere puts up this request to his adversary Knot; "Sir, I beseech you, when you write again, to do us the favour to write nothing but syllogisms. For I find it still an extreme trouble to find out the conceal'd propositions, which are to connect the parts of your enthymems."—Locke. Sec. Vind. of the Reasonableness of Christ.

The word enthymeme is of a Greek original, and implies that one of the premises is understood in the mind.

Crousaz. Art of Thinking, pt. iii. c. 9.

EN-TICE, v. } (Also In.) Roquefort, Glossaire de la Langue Romaine, has enticement; excitation, instigation: enticer, exciter, provoquer. Skinner refers to the Fr. Attiser, to kindle, from the Lat. Titio, a firebrand, (and this is approved by Junius,) or to the A. S. Tihtan, atihtan, to allure, persuade, solicit, incite. The common word in the north of England is, to tice, which Mr. Brocket has noticed. To tice, or entice, is—

ENTI'CEMENT.
ENTI'CER.
ENTI'CING, s.
ENTI'CINGLY.

To allure, to tempt; to hold out or offer, or present allurements or temptations; to throw out or offer baits.

Enticingly,—see Intice.

Edelfred, that was kyng of Northomberlond,
He entyced and other kynges here of thys lond.

R. Gloucester, p. 235.

Rygt so flaterers and foles, aren the fendes procuratores
Entysen men thorgh here tales, to synne and harlotrie.

Piers Ploughman, p. 114.

The fourth circumstance is, by whiche meditatours, as by messagers, or for enticement, or for consentment, to bare compagnie with felawship.—Chaucer. Persones Tale.

And therefore thou ne shalt do him no damage in wicked word, ne harme in his body, ne in his catel, ne in his soule by entising of wicked example.—Id. Ib.

My sonne, consente not vnto synners, if they entyce thee.

Bible, 1551. Proverbes, c. 1.

Hugh the olde Earle of Chestre, beynge sycke unto deathe in the same self yeare, caused by the entycement of Anselme, the prestes entely to be expelled out of the three churche of Westchestre, and the monkes to be placed for them.

Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Goe now Clarinda, well thy wits advise,
And all thy forces gather vnto thee;
Armies of lovely lookes, and speeches wise,
With which thou canst euen Joue himselfe to loue entire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

The little fishes (dreading the deceit)
With fearful nibbling fly th' enticing gin,
By nature taught what danger lies therein.

Drayton. Rosamond to King Henry.

To call for aid, and then to lie in wait,
So the hyæna murthers by deceit:
By sweet enticement sudden death to bring.
So from the rocks th' alluring mermaids sing.

Id. King John to Matilda.

An upright, a comely grace, curtesies, general salutations, cringes, a mincing gate, a decent and an affected peace are most powerful enticers.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 467.

The Syrens, once deluded, vainly charm'd,
Ty'd to the mast, Ulysses sail'd unharm'd;
Had Myra's voice entic'd his listening ear,
The Greek had stopt, and would have dy'd to hear.

Lansdown. Myra Singing.

We must through many tribulacions enter into the kingdom of God; every one that will live godlily in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution; if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me: such are the promises and enticements it useth.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

3dly. The third and last sign that I shall mention, of a temptation's attaining its full hour or maturity, is a more than usual restlessness and importunity in its enticings or instigations.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

Yet nought beheld, save meadows deck'd with flowers,
Clear waters, cooling caves, and leafy bowers,
The enticing scenes a while the youth delay'd;
He stretch'd his weary limbs beneath the shade.

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. xiv.

Up yon green slope, of hazels trim,
An avenue so cool and dim
Shall to an harbour at the end,
In spite of gout, entice a friend.

Warton. The Progress of Discontent.

ENTI'RE, adj. } (Also In.) Fr. Entier; It. Intiero; Sp. Entero; Lat. Integer, from the ancient tag-ere (tang-ere,) Gr. Θιγ-ειν, to touch. Integer, non tactus, cujus nemo tetigit aut abstulit quicquam. Untouched,—no part of which has been touched or taken. See INTEGER.

ENTI'RELY.
ENTI'RENESS.

Untouched, and thus unmixed, unmingled, pure, uncorrupt; all or whole; from which nothing has been taken; undivided, unshared, unbroken; full, complete: unbroken, (sc.) in bodily strength; undivided, (sc.) in affection, attachment or fidelity; and thus, sincere, faithful.

And thanne dude we all wel, and gut wel bet to lovye
Oure enemye entyreliche, and helpe hem at here needo.

Piers Ploughman, p. 175.

Blithly ladye (qd. I) me list this matter entirely to vnderstond. Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. iii.

And so of many kindes of people & manye nations he made one entire kingdom, & one people.—Golding Justine, fol. 44.

Which he following as things better than his countrey vsages, offended therby greatlye both the eies and the harts of his nacion, and caused many that loved him before entirely, to hate him then as an enemy.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 140.

With hym haue we sent the brother, whose faythe and entyrenesse in preachynge the gospell throughout all the congregacions is well tryed.—Udal. Corinthians, c. 8.

Her fickle hart conceiued hastie fire,
Like sparks of fire which fall in slender flex,
That shortly brent vnto extreme desire,
And ransackt all her veines with passion entire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1

Well were the men and their commission match'd
For they had their authority entire,
To take the king, his guardian to acquit,
And to bestow him where they thought it fit.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. v

Good or bad (qan his brother fierce reply)
What doe I recke, sith that he dyde entire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

——— For what can scape the eye
Of God all-seeing, or deceave his heart
Omniscient, who in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the munde
Of man, with strength entire, and free-will arm'd,
Complete to have discover'd and repulst
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Which when his pensive lady saw from farre,
Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,
As weening that the sad end of the warre,
And gan to highest God entirely pray,
That feared chance from her to turn away.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Sometimes the attorney, or follower of the cause, unskilfully thrusteth into the writ, both the uttermost quantity, or more, of the land, and the full rent also that is given for it: or else setteth down an entirety, where but a moiety, a third, or fourth part only was to be passed.

Bacon. Of the Office of Alienations.

——— But I
Should injure nature, virtue and destiny,
Should I divide and discontinue so
Virtue, which did in one entireness grow.

Donne. Obsequies on the Lord Harrington.

Christ, the bride-groome, praises the bride, his church, for her beauty, for her entireness: for her beauty, she is columba, a dove she is perfecta, undefiled: her entireness is praysed by her propriety, in respect of him; columba mea, my dove, by her unity in respect of herselfe, una, one alone, my dove, my undefiled is but one.

Bp. Hall. A Sermon. Beauty and Vnitie of the Church.

Such might that great fire in Rome be in Nero's time, which whether began casually, or by design, (which was disputed then, as it hath been about others since) did presently spread itself with greater speed over the Cirque (as the Historian tells us) than the wind itself, and never left burning till of fourteen regions in Rome but four were left entire.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 14.

Blest is the maid and worthy to be blest,
Whose soul, entire by him she loves possest,
Feels every vanity in fondness lost,
And asks no power but that of pleasing most.

Litttelton. Advice to a Lady.

EN-TITLE, v. (Also In.) Fr. Intituler; It. Intitulare; Sp. Intitular; Lat. Titulare; i. e. Indere titulum vel nomen,—to bestow a title or name.

To have, receive, or bestow, a name or title; to name or call; to give a name or title, (sc.) as owner, possessor, as having a right to own or possess, as claimant; and thus, to have or give a right or claim.

Accept in gree this litle short treatisse
That is entituled thus the Court of Loue.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

When I had suffycently published my mynde, he desired me to entitle the somme of my wordes and wryte them for hym, because they semed ouerlong to be well reteyned in memory.—A Boke made by John Fryth, Pref.

Lewes of Burbon, second yet to none,
Led on the left; with him that mighty peer,
The Earl of Vendome, who of all her men
Large France entitled her great master then.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

I rather quarrel with mine own ambition,
That durst to soar so high, as to feed hope
Of any least desert, that might entitle
My duty to a pension from your favours.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act iv. sc. 1.

Let us all lay our hands upon our hearts, and examine ourselves, whether, and how far we may be said to be in such a state, to have fulfilled the duties, and undergone the hardships, which entitle us to the privileges of it [the Christian Religion]—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

[The republick of regicide] so subdued the minds of the rulers in every nation, that hardly any resource presents itself to them, except that of entitling themselves to a contemptuous mercy by a display of their imbecility and meanness.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

EN-TOIL, v. Fr. Toille; Lat. Tela, a net.
To take in a net, in any snare; to ensnare.

He handled the matter so, as he cut off their land forces from their ships, and entoyled both their navy, and their camp, with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land, and compelled them to render themselves without striking a stroke.—Bacon. New Atlantis.

EN-TOMB, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Entomber: ENTO'MBMENT. } the Lat. Tumulus, a diminutive from tum-ere, to swell.
To place or deposit within a tomb; to inter, to inhume, to bury, to put in the grave.

The ruin'd wals he did remdifye
Of Troynovant, gainst force of enimy,
And built that gate which of his name is hight,
By which he lyes entombed solemnly.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Delia, these eyes that so admire thine,
Have seen those walls which proud ambition rear'd
To check the world; how they entomb'd have li'n
Within themselves, and on them ploughs have ear'd.
Donne, son. 41.

Mes. My noble generall, Timon is dead
Entomb'd vpon the very hemme o' th' sea
And on his gravestone this inscripture.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 5.

Oh, help, she cry'd, in this extremest need
If water Gods are Deities indeed:
Gape, Earth, and this unhappy wretch entomb,
Or change my form whence all my sorrows come.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Indeed the strictest imprisonment is far more tolerable than being under restraint by a lazy humour from profitable employment, that enchaineth a man, hand and foot, with more than iron fetters, this is beyond any imprisonment, it is the very entombment of a man, quite in effect sequestering him from the world, or debarring him from any valuable concerns therein—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

Thou noblest monument of Albion's isle!
Whether by Merlin's aid from Scythia's shore!
To Amber's fatal plain Pendragon bore,
Huge frame of giant hands, the mighty pile,
T' entomb his Briton's slain by Hengist's guile.
Warton, son. 4.

EN-TRAILS, n. } (Also In.) Fr. Entrailles; ENTRA'IL, v. } It. Entraglie; (q.d.), internalia, (Skinner.) Sp. Entranas; Lat. Interranea, (Minshew.) From the Gr. Εντερα, from εντος, Intus, within. Of this etymology it may be remarked, that the word does not by it pass in the usual course from the Greek through the Latin into the Italian and French; the internalia of Skinner, and interranea of Minshew, being coined.
The Dut. Treylen; Eng. Trail, is to drag or draw, (perhaps corrupted from draggle,) and the verb, to entrail, is commonly explained, to intermingle; it may mean to draw between or among, through and through; and thus, consequentially,—

To intermingle, to interweave, to intertwine, intwine, or intwist. And this meaning accounts well for the application of the noun to the bowels; (so called for a similar reason. See BOWELS.)

And this Iudas hadde a feelde of the hire of wickednesse, and he was hanged and to barst the myddil, and alle his entrailis weren sched abrood.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 1.

The most ardaund loue of his wife, brende the entrailes of his breast, ne the songs that had ouercommen all thynge, ne mighte not aswagen her lord Orpheus.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

And whē for gredines they had gulled in the troubled water, they begā to swell, when the mudde once entered into their entrayles.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol 100.

The entrayles, which be venderneth the myddreffe, be exercised by blowinge, eyther by constraint, or playeng on shaulmes, or sackbottes, or other lyke instruments, which doe require moch wynde.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

To shew Dan Cupid's powre and great effort:
And round about a border was entrayl'd
Of broken boawes and arrowes shiuered short.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

Their dam vpstart, out of her den effraid,
And rushed forth, hurling her hideous taile
About her cursed head, whose folds displaid
Were stretcht now forth at length without entrail.
Id. Ib b. i. c. 1.

Behold the boyling Bathes at Cairbadon
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrailes full of quick brimstone
Norish the flames, which they are warm'd vpon.
Id. Ib b. ii. c. 10.

I will, hereafter, call her step-dame ever.
If she can lose her nature, I can lose
My piety, and in her stony entrailes,
Dig me a seate.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act i.

And lo! while in the shock of war they close,
While swords meet swords, and foes encounter foes,
The treacherous earth beneath their footsteps cleaves,
Her entrails tremble and her bosome heaves.
Broome. On the Seat of War in Flanders.

Here Thamis ended. Now the goodly train
Of all the Nayads, in most comely wise,
A present make of myrtle girland green,
Entrail'd with flowrets and with rare devise.
Thompson. Epithalamium.

——— The barbed shaft
Had then no poison'd point; nor thou, fell tube!
Whose iron entrails hide the sulphurous blast,
Satanic engine, knew at the ruthless power
Of thundering death around thee.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

EN-TRANCE, v. } (Also In.) Fr. Transe, ENTRA'NCEMENT. } from the Lat. Trans-ire, to go or pass over; q. d. (says Skinner,) transitus in alium mundam: a transit or passage into another world.
To be or cause to be in "a trance or swoon, a great astonishment, an appallment," (Cotgrave;) to ecstasy, to transport out of the senses.

This Queen will live—nature awakes; a warmth
Breathes out of her, she hath not been entranc'd
Above five hours.—Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— I am entranced; our fancy,
Some say, in sleep works stronger.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act v. sc. 2.

Him still entranc'd, and in a litter laid
They bore from field, and to the bed convey'd.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

And as we did in our entrancements lie,
I thought no pleasure e'er was wrought so high,
No pair so happy as my Muse and I.
Otway. The Poet's Complaint of his Muse.

His frame with shivery horrour stirr'd, his eyes
From outward vision held, and all the man
Entranc'd in wonder at th' unfolding scene.
Mallet. To the Duke of Marlborough.

EN-TRAP, v. } (Also In.) To catch, to apENTRA'PMENT. } prehend, to seize in a trap or snare; to ensnare, to catch or take by guile; to enveigle, to entangle.

Yet notwythstanding he would not geue occasion by puttyng his enemies to flyght, to haue it said that breakyng promis with them he had entrapped them vnder pretence of communication.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 196.

Whē he vnderstode of his enemies cōming, both in auoidyng to be enclosed in walles, and trusting besydes to take some aduauntage of the Macedons, [he] layde an embushemente to entrappe him.—Brende. Quintus Curtius fol. 196.

Still as he went, he craftie stales did lay,
With cunning traynes him to entrap vnwares,
And priuie spials plac't in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares;
To ketch him at avantage in his snares
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

——— If not,
I have an entrapping question, or two more
To put vnto him, a crosse interogatory,
And I shall catch him.
B. Jonson. The Staple of Newes, Act v. sc. 4.

——— Where given to understand
Of some entrapment by conspiracy,
Gets into Wales; whence he adventured
T' attempt another day, and lost his head.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

The Pharisees and Herodians, as we find in the fifteenth verse of this chapter [Math. xxii.] had taken counsel together how they might entrap our Saviour in his talk, and for that end they put several ensnaring questions to him.
Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

Yet here this original genius, [Sir William D'Avenant] who was not to be held by the shackles of superstition, suffered himself to be entrapped in the silken net of love and honour.—Hurd. On Poetical Imitation.

EN-TRE'ASURE, v. (Also In.) Fr. Thresor; It. Tesauro; Sp. Thresor; Lat. Thesaurus; Gr. Θησαυρος, which Vossius derives from the Gr. Θησαυρος, which Vossius derives from the Gr. Θησ-εω, and the ancient αυρος, or αυρον, whence the Lat. Aurum, to put up or store up gold; and then, generally,
To store up (sc. as gold or any thing valuable.)
To store or lay up carefully, fondly, anxiously.

For they, scorning the simple rudeness of the eyes, as easily defrauded of their too forwardly affected object, would securely entreasure it in a more precious place, by a piercing apprehension sinking it in the soul for ever.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

——— What's here? a corse!
1*st Gent.* Most strange.
Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and entreasured
With bags of spices full!
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iii. sc. 1.

Ye sacred writings, in whose antique leaves
The memories of heaven entreasur'd lie,
Say, what might be the cause that mercy heaves
The dust of sin above th' industrious sky,
And lets it not to dust and ashes fly?
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory in Heaven.

EN-TREAT, v. Fr. Traicter; It. Trattare; Sp. Tratar; Lat. Tractare, to handle. As the—"Fr. Traicter,—to treat, to intreat, entertain, use, handle, tend or look unto; to deal in or meddle with; to discourse, debate or make mention of," (Cotgrave.)

With their vengeaunce insaciable
Now haue they him entreated so
That to report it is to lamentable.
Chaucer. Lamentation of Marie Magdalene.

And as touching the proposition which the physicions entreteden in this cas, this is to sain, that in maladies, that a contrarie is warished by another contrarie; I wold fain knowe how ye understonde thilke text, and what is youre sentence.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Neuerthelesse he entreated wyth him by messengers, lamenting that the warres of so rich a prince as he was, shuld be forslowed for want of money.
Golding. Justine, fol. 35.

Furthermore by the sufferaunce of Hamilcar, he wrongfully entreated and shamefully handled the confederates of the Carthaginensis.—Id. Ib. fol. 99.

Eftsoones outspring two more of equall mold,
But I them both with equal hap defeated,
So all the twenty I likewise entreated,
And left them groning there vpon the plaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

EN-TREAT, v. } (Also In.) To entreat,—
ENTRE'AT, n. } to supplicate, (says Skinner,) ENTRE'ATANCE. } Dr. T. H. derives from in,
ENTRE'ATER. } and treat. Fr. Traicter, (q.d.)
ENTRE'ATIVE. } in i. e. secreto tractare, to ENTRE'ATMENT. } treat with secretly. See
ENTRE'ATY. } ENTREAT, above.
To treat or enter into treaty; to seek for or endeavour to obtain by treaty, promise or engagement; and thus,—
To beseech or beg, to ask, pray or solicit.

And whē he was in tribulaciō, he besaught the Lord hys God, and humbled himself exceedynglie before the God of his Fathers, and made intercession to hym: and he was entreated of hym and hearde hys prayer, and broughte hym againe to Jerusalem into hys kyngedome.
Bible, 1551. 2 Chron. c. 33.

It was the custome of the Germanes deliuered frō theyr auncestors, that whosoeuer made war vpon them, to make resistance by force and not by entreatance.

Golding. Cæsar, fol. 87.

—— This is he,
For whom I thwarted Soliman's entreats.

Tragedy of Soliman & Perseda, (1599.)

The captaines, call'd forthwith from euery tent,
Vnto the rende-vous he them inuites,
Letter on letter, post on post he sent,
Entreatance faire with counsell he unites.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. i. s. 19.

—— For this time, daughter,
Be somewhat scanter in your maiden presence;
Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
Than a command to parley.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

Oft have I seasoned savoury periods
With sugar'd words, to delude Gustus' taste,
And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase
With smiling flowers of vernant rhetoric.

Brewer. Lingua, Act i. sc. 1.

So well he woo'd her, and so well he wrought her,
With fair entreaty and sweet blandishment,
That at the length, unto a bay he brought her,
So as she to his speeches was content
To lend an eare, and softly to relent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

For being but meere strangers, they had, after much prayer and entreatie, as much ground allowed them and no more, to build them a citie in, as they could compasse with thongs cut out of one bull hide.—Holland. Livie, p. 887.

When for redress entreating armies call,
They who deny just things, permit them all.
The righteous Gods shall surely own the cause,
Which seeks not spoil, nor empire, but the laws.

Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

Entreaty shall not serve, nor violence,
To make me speak in such a play's defence:
A play where wit and humour do agree
To break all practis'd laws of Comedy.

Dorset. Epil. on the Rev. of "Every Man in his Humour."

If, bound by vows to friendship's gentle side,
And fond of soul thou hop'st an equal grace,
If youth or maid thy joys and griefs divide,
O, much entreated, leave this fatal place.

Collins. Verses, with a Piece of Bride Cake.

ENTREME'SSE. } ENTREME'TS. } "Fr. Entremets,—certain choice dishes served in between the courses at a feast or banquet," (Cotgrave,) i. e. between the messes or services of meat.

God wote it was a pitous entremesse.

Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

All but the poor are epicures,
And reason from effects to causes,
On roti's, entremets, and sauces.

Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

EN-TRENCH, v. } ENTRE'NCHMENT. } (Also In.) Fr. Trancher, or trencher, to cut or carve, which Caseneuve derives from Lat. Trans scindere, to cut across; and Menage, from trunc-are, to cut off, to maim.

To environ with or lodge in trenches, (Cotgrave,) to surround with, to enclose in, to fortify with trenches, with ditches, with earth, &c. cut or dug out, and thrown up; to cut, to carve; to cut into, carve out of, (sc.) the property of another, and thus, to encroach.

They thought none other, but that the Romanes hauing gayned one hyl from them alredy, if they shoulde obteyne thother also, they shoulde be as good as entrenched and foreclosed from stirring abroad or goynge a foraging.

Golding. Cæsar, fol. 205.

And when they saw that their enemies in foure dayes came not thither, they began to entrench aboue the Brey.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 125.

After we had passed this fort, and were come to another strong hold named Achaiacala, and the same entrenched, as it were about with the course of the river, difficult both for passage over, and accesse also unto it, repelled wee were with the like answer, and so departed.

Holland. Ammianus, p. 242.

And a wide wound therein (O ruefull sight!)
Entrenched deepe with knife accursed keene,
Yet freshly bleeding forth her fainting spright
(The worke of cruel hand) was to be seene,
That dyde in sanguine red her skin all snowy cleane.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Seuen of the same against the castle gate,
In strong entrenchments he did closely place,
Which, with incessant force and endless hate,
They battered day and night, and entrance did awate.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 11.

Ere the high rocks did o'er the shores arise,
Or snowy mountains tower'd amidst the skies;
Before the wat'ry troops fil'd off from land,
And lay amidst the rocks entrench'd in sand,

Blackmore. Creation, b. vii.

The weakness of some tempers perform upon them the very same effects that fasting works upon others, and therfore, those severities, which in others would be only an abridgment of their luxury, would in them be an entrenchment upon their being; and not only cut short their pleasure, but their very existence.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

Italian, English, German, French,
Who most laboriously entrench
In deep parade of language dead,
What would not in their own be read.

Lloyd. The Poetry Professors.

EN-TRICK, v. "Fr. Intriquer,—To intricate, perplex, pester, insnare, involve, intangle," (Cotgrave.) See INTRICATE.

But which of you, that loue most entriketh,
God send him her, that sorest for him siketh.

Chaucer. The Assemblie of Foules.

The first of hem, so as I rede,
Was Morpheus, he whose nature
Is for to take the fygure
Of that person, that hym liketh,
Wherof that he full oft entriketh
The slepe, which slepe shall by night.

Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

EN-TRIM, v. See UNTRIM.

EN-TROOP, v. Fr. Troupe; Sp. Tropa; It. Truppa.

To form into a troop; a collected number or multitude, a band.

At the very point of the medley on both sides, the horsemen strongly entrouped themselves, and the footmen stoutly fortified their own sides.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 73.

EN-TRUST, v. (Now In.) To place trust in; to commit or deliver in trust, i. e. in the truth; to confide.

He [the Lord of all the families of the earth] will enter into a severe scrutiny how we have employed all those talents that he hath entrusted us with.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 10.

EN-TUNE, v. } ENTU'NE, s. } Fr. Entonner; Sp. Entonar; It Intonare. Tune, from Lat. Tonus; Gr. Τονος, i. e. tensio seu intensio vocis, from τειν-ειν, tendere, to stretch.

"Fr. Entonner,—to tune, sing, chant it; sound, resound; and most properly, to begin, to give a tune in singing," &c. (Cotgrave.)

Ful wel she sange the service divine
Entuned in hire nose ful swetely.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 123.

So merie a sowne, so swete entunes
That certes for the towne of Tewnes
I nolde, but I had herde hem sing.—Id. Dreame.

And than the company answered all
With voice sweet entuned and so small,
That me thought it the sweetest melody
That euer I heard in my life sothly.

Id. The Floure and the Leafe.

Whose heuenly armony was so passing sure,
So truly proportioned, and so well dyd gree,
So duly entuned with euery measure.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

A company of yong gentlemen of greatest birth, standing on the one side, and maydes on the other, sung hymns and sonnets the one to the other, in commendation of the dead prince, entuned in a solemne and mournful note.

Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. c. 10. s. 2.

EN-TWINE, v. (Also In.) To make two or twain; to twine, twist, wreath or fold around.

There the soft poplar and smooth beach do bear
Our names, together carved every where,
And Gordian knots do curiously entwine
The names of Henry and of Geraldine.

Drayton. Howard, to the Lady Geraldine.

You two have one way left yourselves t' entwine
Besides this bishop's knot, of Bishop Valentine.

Donne. On the Count Palatine and the Lady Elizabeth.

Fly and entwine amid those locks of gold,
There loose the cords that keep my heart confin'd:
Those golden nets the captive sense infold,
And with resistless magic's power can bind.

P. Fletcher, Ecl. 3.

or him may love the myrtle wreath entwine
Though the sad willow suits a woe like mine.

Savage. Valentine's Day.

—— Harmonious youths,
Around whose brows entwining laurels play,
In lofty-sounding strains his praise record

Glover. Leonidas, b. i.

EN-TWIST, v. Twiced, twic'd, twist.

So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuccle
Gently entwist.

Shakespeare. Mids. Night's Dream, Act iv. sc. 1.

ENU'CLEATE, v. Lat. Enucleare, atum, to take out the kernel. Quasi nuculeus, a nuce. The kernel. Cotgrave calls enucleation, an unkernelling.

To take out the kernel; and thus,—to open, to disclose, to explain, to manifest, to declare.

And after this the kynge assembled his councell together, and demaunded of euery man seuerally, what they sayde of these thynges whych Perkyn had both enucleated and requyred, or whether they woulde take any further deliberation to aduyse theim selfes what to do in so great and weyghtie a matter.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

ENU'MERATE, v. } ENUMERA'TION. } ENU'MERATIVE. } Lat. Enumerare, atum. The Lat. Numerus, Vossius, (after C. Sculiger) derives from the Gr. Νεμ-ειν, to distribute, to divide.

To count or tell, (sc.) the parts or portions; to count, to reckon, to tell one by one, part by part; to tell, to repeat separately.

It is ordred to teache the people that in eche parte of the bread consecrate, broken, is the hole body of our Sauior Christ, which is agreeable to the Catholique doctrine: Upō occasiō hereof, it liketh this auctor to multiply language by enumeracio of partes.

Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 21.

If the priest pardons no sins but those which are enumerated, the penitent will be in an evil condition in most cases; but if he can and does pardon those which are forgotten, then the special enumeration is not indispensably necessary.—Bp. Taylor. Diss. from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. s. 11.

For by being particular and enumerative of the variety of evils which have disordered his life, his repentance is disposed to be more pungent and afflictive, and therefore more salutary and medicinal.—Id. Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 3.

[The Lord Broghill] enumerating the services he had done, the losses he had sustained, and the slender encouragements he had received; he declared his resolution not to obey the commands of any other but of General Cromwel and him.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 294.

But how comes the Apostle here to make a difference between prayers and supplications, and those other things? Why, certainly his design was, to make an enumeration of all those offices, or parts of which the public worship or service of the church is to consist.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

The extremes of irreligion and enthusiasm mark the manners of the capital. These, indeed, are the natural consequences of some among the many bad dispositions already enumerated.—Knox, Ess. 129.

Nightly rest and daily bread, the ordinary use of our limbs, and senses, and understandings, are gifts which admit of no comparison with any other. Yet, because almost every man we meet with possesses these, we leave them out of our enumeration.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

ENU'NCIATE. See ENOUNCE.

EN-URE, v. (Also In.) Ure, contracted from Lat. Usura, from uti, usus.

To use or practise habitually; to accustom, to habituate, to practise; to be or cause to be for the use, enjoyment or possession of.

By little and littel beyng enured to yeeld, and being vanquyshed in many battels, they themselues wyl not make comparison wyth thē in prowesse.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 162.

As he had said these words, he cōmaūded his battels to stād still again, to thentent yt by thys pausing, they might enure thēselues to behold yt huge nober of their enemies with opē eies.—Id. Justine, fol. 55.

But alwaye they shall be enured with contynuall hatred and blaspheminges, crying out vpon Almighty God and dispising his holy name.—Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 6.

He gan that lady strongly to appeale
Of many hainous crimes, by her enured;
And with sharp reasons rang her such a peale,
That those, whom she to pity had allured
He now t'abhorre and loath her person had procured.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

The wanton boy was shortly wel recured
Of that his malady,
But bee, soone after, fresh again enur'd
His former cruelty. Id. Poem 4.

Jockey and Sawney to their labours rose:
Soon clad I ween, where nature needs no clothes,
Where, from their youth enur'd to winter skies,
Dress and her vain refinements they despise.
Churchill. The Prophesy of Famine.

EN.VA'SSAL. Fr. Vassal; It. and Sp. Vassallo.

To reduce to vassalage or slavery; to subject to slavery.

But well I wote thou'lt not envassall me.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 1. s. 23.

EN.VEIGH. (Commonly In.) Lat. Invehere; Fr. Invectiver.

To bear or carry against, (sc.) ill will, an ill mind, an ill opinion, an ill report; to rail, to revile, to upbraid.

If a gentleman and an officer of the king's, being overcharged at supper with ouer much drinke, and surfetting with gorge vpon gorge, should vomite the next day in the parliament house, I might enueigh thus, O shamefull deede.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 124.

EN.VEIGLE, v. (Commonly In.) Junius and Skinner derive from the Fr. Aveugle, (ab oculus,) blind. Aveugler, to blind, to hoodwink, to deprive of eyes or sight; and thus, to inveigle will mean—

To blind the eyes; (met.) the senses; and thus, further, to mislead, to seduce, to delude, to allure, to entice. Equivalent is the vulgar English expression, To throw dust into the eyes.

For this second manor of asking, when of one thing, many are asked, one may easely be enueigled and brought to an inconuenience, before he be ware.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 81.

[They] enueagle and deceive by their subtile orations the integritie of judges, (whose name spring of justice) draw forth the keene blade of their wits.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 385.

Yet will he have no great cause to boast the purchase, when he seriously considers that the Devil, who seduces other sinners like men, with current coin or sparkling jewels, (something that either advantages their interests, or delights their senses,) hath enueigled him, like a child with a whistle.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 306.

EN.VE'LOPE, v. / ENVELO'PE, n. / ENVE'LOPEMENT. (Also In.) Written by Chaucer, Envolupe. (See DEVELOPE.) Fr. Enveloper; Lat. Involvere, to roll in.

To roll or fold in, to enfold, to enwrap, to enclose, to surround, to involve, to cover round or over.

I rede that our hoste shal beginne,
For he is most envoluped in sinne.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,876.

When suddenly a grosse fog ouerspread
With his dull vapour all that desert has,
And heaven's chearefull face enveloped,
That all things one, and one as nothing was,
And this great universe seem'd one confused mas.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

As when faire Cynthia, in darksome night,
Is in a noyous cloud enveloped,
Where she may find the substance thin and light
Breakes forth her siluer beames.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

——— Nocturnal shades
This world envelope, and the inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts
With pleasant wines, and crackling blaze of wood.
J. Philips. The Splendid Shilling.

Lend these to paper-sparing Pope;
And when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight.
Swift. Advice to Grub-Street Verse Writers.

At length the hero's meditations close,
The swelling transport of his heart subsides
In soft oblivion, and the silken plumes
Of sleep envelop his extended limbs.
Glover. Leonidas, b. x.

They have found so many contrary senses in the same text, that it is become difficult to see any sense at all, through their envelopements.
Search. Free Will, &c. 1763. Pref.

EN.VE'NOM, v. (Also In.) Fr. Envenimer. Venom from the Lat. Venenum, poison.

To poison; to infuse or impregnate with poison; (met.) to invest with the noxious, malignant, hateful qualities of poison.

& smote him in the schank, for that stroke, allas!
It began to rank, the querelle envenomed was.
R. Brunne, p. 205.

Envenomed knyfe he bare also priuely.
That non ther of were ware, whoso stod him by.
Id. p. 228.

But all amid is flatering
With his taile he wil sting
And envenim.
Chaucer. Dreame.

Thy tayl is deth, thurgh thin envenimeng.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9034.

And hapneth that he had a bowe,
The whiche in all hast he bende,
As he that wolde an arowe sende,
Which he tofore had envenymed.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Nothing but man of all envenom'd things
Doth work upon itself with inborn stings.
Donne. On the Lady Markham.

It [the humour of disputing] depraves Religion, and makes its sacred name an instrument to promote the projects of the Kingdom of darkness; by envenoming men one against another, and inflaming their spirits, and crumbling them into sects, and disturbing societies.—Glanvill, Ess. 4.

Happy Ierne, whose most wholsome air
Poisons envenomed spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad, and viper, from her shore!
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Were I with mean indifference to hear
The envenomed tongue of calumny traduce
Defenceless worth, I should but ill deserve
Your royal confidence.
Smollet. The Regicide.

EN.VE'RMEIL, v. Fr. Vermeil, vermillion, (qv.)

To tinge or suffuse with vermillion; with scarlet or bright red.

Ulnarie envermailed, refresher of our blood
Licour ayen al langour yt palled may not be.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

For he [Winter] being amorous on that lovely dye
That did thy check envermeil, thought to kiss,
But kill'd, alas, and then bewail'd his fatal bliss.
Milton. On the Death of a Fair Infant.

EN.VI'RON, v. / ENVI'RON, ad. / ENVI'RONS. / ENVI'RONING, n. / ENVI'RONMENT. (Also In.) Composed, says Menage, of en, and viron. And viron formed from gyrus. Gyrus, gyro, gyrone, viron.

Cotgrave says, "Engyronner,—to inviron, to incompass; as environner." And environner,—

To incompass, begird, enclose, hedge or hem in on all sides. The noun, Environ,—the compass of ground or circuit of country next about it. And the adverb, (used by Chaucer,) about.

But dayes schulen come in thee, and thin enemyes schulen envyrowne thee with a pale.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 19.

The grauell gold, the water pure as glasse,
The bankes round, the well environyng.
Chaucer. Of the Blacke Knight.

He lad me with right good chere
All environ the vergere.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Thus jelosie hath environ
Sette about his garnison
With walles round, and dich depe.—Id. Ib.

All the environing of the yearth about, ne hault but the reson of a pricke, at the regard of the greatnesse of the heauē.
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

This childe the worlde shall environe,
And aboue all, the corone
Hym shall befall.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Demetrius, beyng vanquished by Alexander, and beyng enuyroned on all sydes with vnauoydable daugers, was at the last forsaken of his own wyfe and childrē.
Golding. Justine, fol. 149.

Into that forest farre they thence him led,
Where was their dwelling, in a pleasant glaile
With mountaines round about environed,
And mighty woods, which did the valley shade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

——— Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest, as when a wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapor, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

And I wot not what complexions and environments.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 827.

I have seen Naples, Rome, Florence, Genoa, and Venice; all stately cities, and full of princely fabricks, but then I compare the extent, and here are many hundreds of noblemen's houses, both within the town, and the environs, which altogether approach, if not exceed, the best of them.

Evelyn. The State of France.

[The ring] from Saturn itself; not closely adhering to it, because that would annoy a large portion of Saturn's globe, by depriving it of the sun's rays, but environing it about the distance of its breadth.
Derham. Astro-Theology, b. vii. c. i.

These very eyes, those tunicles of flesh,
E'en tho' by worms destroy'd, shall see my God,
And seeing, ne'er remember darkness more,
Environ'd with eternity of day.
Thompson. Sickness, b. iii.

EN.VOKE, v. (Now In.) Lat. Invocare;—To call upon, (sc.) for aid, protection, &c.

Since I have envoked thee
Let me, Lord, thy succour see,
And what thy ordinaunces will
I will persist observing still.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 119.

EN.VOY. Fr. Envoyer, (q.d. in viam mittere.) Fr. Envoye, a messenger. "Envoy,—a message or sending; also, the envoy or conclusion of a ballet or sonnet; in a short stanza by itself, and serving oftentimes as a dedication of the whole," (Cotgrave.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, L'Envoy was a sort of postscript, sent with poetical compositions, and serving either to recommend them to the attention of some particular person, or to enforce what we call the moral of them. And he refers to the stanzas at the end of the Complaint of the Black Night, and of Chaucer's Dreame.

And then the women, as I have given the bride her instructions, to breake in upon him in the l'envoy.
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act v. sc. 1.

Alon. Long since
I look'd for this l'envoy.
Massinger. The Bashful Lover, Act v. sc. 1.

As when some faithful envoy who at large
Receives commission for a weighty charge,
Chides his neglect, recalling to his thought
Some valu'd purpose, midst his zeal forgot,
And, ere he sees his lord, with eager care
Bends every power th' omission to repair.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxiv.

E'NVY, v. / E'NVY, n. / E'NVIABLE. / E'NVIER. / E'NVIOUS. / E'NVIOUSLY. / E'NVYING, n. Fr. Envier; It. Invidiare; Sp. Embidiar; Lat. Invidere, to look at or upon, (in, and videre, to see, to look.) Aspiciunt invidi (says Vossius) aliena bona oculis non rectis, sed pravis, strabonum in morem. The envious look upon the good fortune of others, not with eyes direct, but askaunce, like persons who squint. See the quotations from Chaucer, Gower, Bacon, South, and Cogan; and see INVIDIOUS.

To look at or upon, (sc.) with malignant eyes, views, wishes; with ill will, maliciously; with malice or hatred; "with spite, grudge, repining, grief; displeasure at the prosperity or good parts of another; a malicious emulation." And thus, "to malign, spite, grudge, repine at the worth or good fortune of others," (Cotgrave.)

The Deuel hadde enuy that to, that he susteynede Christendam.
R. Gloucester, p. 122.

To the godnesse of thys holy mon the Deuel adde enuye, And the luther quene ys stepmoder, that vol was of trichorye.
Id. p. 281.

Wlaf, Bernewolf sonne, therwith had enuy.
R. Brunne, p. 15.

Grete scathe afterward in a litille thrawe
Com tille kyng R. for that envies sawe.—Id. p. 180.

For envye & uvel wil. ys uvel to defye.
Piers Ploughman, p. 91.

Charite enuyeth not.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 13.

Loue envyeth not.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And Pilat answerde to hem and seyde, Wolen ghe that Y leeve to ghou the Kyng of Jewis? for he wiste that the highestе prestis hadden take him by enuye.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 15.

Pilate answered them and sayde: Wyll ye that I lowse vnto you the kynge of the Jewes? for he knewe that the hye prestes had delyured him of enuy.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

While thou enquerist bisili of me the treuthe of Scripture, thou puttest out myn elde to be gnawe of envyous mennis teeth whiche seien that I am a peirer of hooli Scripturis.
Wiclif. Prologue to James.

For euery man of h'gh and low degree
Enuieth now, that other should thriue.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

The spices of envie ben these. There is first sorwe of other mennes goodnesse and of hir prosperitee; and prosperitee ought to be kindly mater of joye; than is envie a sinne ayenst kinde. The seconde spice of envie is joye of other mennes harme; and that is proprely like to the Divel, that ever rejoyseth him of mennes harme.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And as wel cometh ire of pride as of envie, for sothly he that is proude or envious is lightly worth.—Id. Ib.

And on her toures, as thei looken out,
They on Greekes enviously gan to shout,
And of despite, and great enmity,
Bad hem fooles goo home to her country.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

For in his thought he brenneth euer
Whan that he wote an other leuer,
Or more vertuos than hee:
Whiche passeth him in his degree,
Therof he taketh his maladie,
That vice is cleped hotte envie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

My good sonne yet there is
A vice reuers vnto this
Whiche envious taketh his gladnes
Of that he seeth the heauinesse
Of other men. Id. Ib. b. ii.

This sounde aduise and counsell sent from you
With friendly hart that you (my friend, do giue,
With willing minde I purpose to ensue,
And to beware of envie while I liue.
Turbervile. To a Friend that wil'd him to beware of Envie.

I envye not the lyuyng Goddes, nor the men that be dead, but for two thynges, and thei been these: The Goddes liue without feare of theim that be malicious, and they that be dead are in pence without nede of women.
Golden Boke, c. 19.

Now yf there be many suche, and all they with one assente enviously haue conspired the deathe of a symple personne, howe may he flee soo great malyce, and namely so muche put in exercise.—Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 38. pt ii.

Envy is ever joyned with the comparing of a man's selfe; and where there is no comparison, no envy; and therefore kings are not envied, but by kings.—Bacon. Ess. Of Envie.

——— But since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful meanes can carrie me
Out of his envies reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iv sc 1.

——— Tell our great Generall
That we are ready here, that Lucius Bastia,
The Tribune, is provided of a speech,
To lay the envie of the warre upon Cicero.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iv. sc. 5.

So much the sooner, because you haue endured so manie crosses, and haue through so much enuienge and misfortunes persecuered in your attempts, which no doubt shall at last by you be performed when it shall please him, who hath made you an instrument of so worthie a worke.
Hollinshed. Ireland. Ep. Ded. by Hooker, vol. vi.

——— For they ween'd
That self same day by fight, or by surprize
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer, but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain
In the mid way. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

This course doth too much noise abroad the disgrace itselfe; so as enemies and enviers become more confident to hurt, and friends more fearful to help him.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

Nay, some have been so curious, as to note, that the times when the stroke or persecution of an envious eye doth most hurt, are, when the party envied is beheld in glory or triumph.—Id. Ess. Of Envie.

Whilst these rebellions are in England broach'd,
As tho' the Fates should enviously conspire
Our ruin, which too fast approach'd,
About our ears was Aquitain a fire.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Hor. She speakes much of her father; saies she heares
There's tricks i' th' world, and hems, and beats her heart,
Spurns enviously at strawes, speakes things in doubt,
That carry but halfe sense.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 5.

Beside the champions, all of high degree,
Who knighthood lov'd and deeds of chivalry,
Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold
The names of others, not their own enroll'd.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Or yet more briefly; envy is a certain grief of mind conceived upon the sight of another's felicity, whether real or supposed; so that we see that it consists partly of hatred and partly of grief.—South, vol. v. Ser. 10.

Ah, wretched me! by Fates averse, decreed,
To bring thee forth with pain, with care to breed!
Did envious heaven not otherwise ordain,
Safe in thy hollow ships thou should'st remain:
Nor ever tempt the fatal field again.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Observing one person behold another, who was an utter stranger to him, with a cast in his eye, which methought expressed an emotion of heart very different from what could be raised by an object so agreeable as the gentleman he looked at, I began to consider, not without some secret sorrow, the condition of an envious man.—Spectator, No. 19.

Great neighbours enviously promote excess,
While they impose their splendour on the less.
Dryden. Prol. At the Opening of the New House.

Myself a captive, destin'd to fulfil,
In servile drudgery, a master's will,
Yet to a fall so low, the Gods decreed
This envy'd height of greatness to succeed.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. ix.

Envy; that is, a painful sensation excited by the view of something desirable in the state and situation of another, which self-love wishes to appropriate. To envy, is to repine at the good conferred upon another, or possessed by him.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

Benevolence places the mind at a remote distance from little jealousies and envyings: it tempers the irritative nature of anger, and teaches compassion to subdue it.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. c. 3 § 4.

His [Nebuchadnezzar] frowns were the signal of death, and his smiles ensured the most enviable prosperity.
Id. Theological Disquisitions, Dis 2. c. 2. § 3.

I mean that sort of courage which enables you to have a will of your own, and to pursue what is right amidst all the persecutions of surrounding enviers, dunces, and detractors.
Knox, Ess. 89.

Since the pain of absence is removed, let me thus remove the thin vest that enviously hides thy charms.
Sir W. Jones. The Songs of Jayadeva.

EN-VYNED. Fr. Envine; stored, furnished or seasoned with wine.

His brede, his ale, was alway after on;
A better envyned man was no wher non
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 344.

EN-WALL, v. (Also In.) To surround with a wall, i. e. with materials consolidated, cemented or fastened together; to surround, to environ.

Into a felde she brought me wyde and large
Enwalled about with the stony flint.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

There where the deepe did show his sandy flore,
And heaped waves an uncouth way enwall:
Whereby they past from one to other shore,
Walking on seas, and yet not wet at all.
Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 78.

O change my state, unthrall my soul enthralled:
Of my escape then will I tell the story,
And with a crown enwalled
Of godly men, will glory in thy glory.—Id. Ps. 142.

Once those fair bounds stretch'd out so far and wide,
Where towns, no shires enwall'd, endear each mile.
Drummond. Flowers in Sion.

EN-WALLOWED. A. S. Walw-ian, volvere, volutare,—
Rolled, rolled about.

So now all three one senselesse lumpe remaine,
Enwallow'd in his owne black bloudy gore,
And byting th' earth for very death's disdain.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b v. c. 11.

EN-WHEEL, v. (Also In.) To involve, to enfold.

Haile to thee ladie: and the grace of heauen
Before, behinde thee, and on euery hand
Enwheel thee round.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

EN-WO'MAN, v. To give or bestow the peculiar qualities of a woman; feminine qualities.

That grace which doth more than enwoman thee,
Lives in my lines, and must eternal be.—Daniel, son. 42.

EN-WOMB, v. To bear or carry, hide or conceal, in the womb.

Me then he left enwombed of this childe,
This luckles childe, whom thus you see with blood defil'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

——— I say I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc. 3.

Or as the Affrique Niger streame enwombs
Itselfe into the earth, and after comes (Having first made a naturall bridge, to passe
For many leagues) farre greater then it was,
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her, greater, purer, firmer, then before!
Donne. Funeral Elegies.

EN-WO'VEN. (Also In.) Intermixed, by weaving; intertwined, intertwisted.

And thou, faire Phoebus, in thy colours bright
Wast there enwouen, and the sad distresse
In which the boy thee plonged, for despight
That thou bewraidst his mother's wantonnesse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c. 12.

Festoons of flowers, enwove with ivy, shine,
Border the wondrous piece, and round the texture twine.
Gay. Ovid. Metam. b. vi.

He spake, and instant round they spread
Chaplets, where the yellow hue
Was mix'd with flow'rs of lively blue,
Where snow-white lillies with the blossoms red,
The apple boughs enwove.—Mickle, Ode. May-Day.

EN-WRAP, v. } (Also In.) To turn round,
ENWRA'PMENT. } fold round, to enfold, to involve.

Neither was there any straungenesse or cloking made of the kinde of doctrine, whiche he oftentimes vsed among the people, enwrapping his minde and sentence in the mistical darkenesse of parables.—Udal. Luke, c. 23.

Before, they fastened were under her knee
In a rich iewell, and therein entrayl'd
The ends of all the knots, that none might see
How they within their foldings close enwrapped be.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Least whiles wee make haste by leaps to return otherwhiles out of one place to another, we should in a confusion of all, enwrap the order and course of the storie with very foule obscuritie.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 290.

Lo! from that mount in blasting sulphur broke
Stream flames voluminous, enwrap'd with smoke.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 4.

Till sated with the pleasing ride,
From the lofty steed dismounting,
He lies along, enwrapt in conscious pride
By gurgling rill, or chrystal fountain.
Lloyd. Two Odes. Ode i.

EN-WREATHE, v. (Also In.) To twist or twine, to intwine.

Some there were of opinion among them, that we should be enwreathed in a sail and thrown into the sea.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. ii. c. 14.

EN-WROUGHT. (Also In.) Worked, worked in.

There royal Ganymede enwrought with art,
O'er hills and forests hunts the bounding hart;
The beauteous youth, all wondrous to behold!
Pants in the moving threads and lives in gold.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

Him, nor the stately mansion's gilded pride,
Rich with whate'er the imitative arts,
Painting or sculpture, yield to charm the eye;
Nor shining heaps of massy plate, enwrought
With curious, costly workmanship, allure.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. i.

EPACT. Fr. Epacte; It. Epact, epatta; Sp. Epata; Lat. Epacta; Gr. ΕΠΑΚΤΟΣ, ἐπακταὶ ἡμέραι, from ἐπαγ-ειν, adjicere, to throw to, to add; (ἐπι, and ἀγ-ειν, to bring.)
Days thrown in, added, (sc.) to find the age of the moon.

And afterwards, as he [Mercury] played at dice with the Moon, and won from her the seventieth part of every one of her illuminations, which being all put together, make five intire dayes, he added the same unto the three hundred and threescore dayes of the year; and so those od dayes the Egyptians do call at this present, the dayes of the epact, celebrating and solemnizing them as the birth-dayes of their Gods.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1051.

EPAULE'T. Fr. Espaulette. Epaulette, from epaule; It. Spalla, the shoulder; Lat. Scapula.
A shoulder knot, an ornament for the shoulder.

Their old vanity was led by art to take another turn: It was dazzled and seduced by military liveries, cockades, and epaulets, until the French populace was led to become the willing, but still the proud and thoughtless instrument and victim of another denomination.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

EPHE'MERA.
EPHE'MERAL.
EPHE'MERAN.
EPHEME'RIDES.
EPHE'MERON.
EPHE'MEROUS.

Gr. Εφημερος, (from επι, for, and ἡμερα, a day.)
For a day; during, lasting, living a day; and thus—perishing with the day.

As I was musing thus, I spied a swarm of gnats waving up and down the air about me; which I knew to be a part of the universe as well as I; and methought it was a strange opinion of our Aristotle to hold, that the least of these small insected ephemerans should be more noble than the sun, because it hath a sensitive soul in it.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 50.

Yet there are certain flies that are called ephemera, that live but a day.—Bacon. Naturall History, Cent. 8. s. 697.

But this was no more than a meer bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause, as eftsoons will appear in the sequel and train of his life.—Reliquiæ Wotton. p. 220.

Epigenes, an author as renowned, and of as good credite as any other, sheweth that among the Babylonians there were found ephemerides containing the observation of the stars for 720 yeeres, written in brickes and tiles: and they that speake of the least, to wit, Berosus and Critodemus, reporteth the like for 480 yeeres.—Holland. Plin. b. vii c. 56.

If God had gone on still in the same method, and shortned our dayes as we multiplyed our sinnes, we should have been but as an ephemeron, man should have lived the life of a fly, or a gourd, the morning should have seen his birth, his life have been the term of a day, and the evening must have provided him of a shroud.—Bp. Taylor. Gt. Exemp. pt. iii. Disc. 15.

Our many sudden, shortwinded ejaculations toward heaven, our frequent, but weak, inclinations to good, our ephemerous wishes, that no man can distinguish from true piety, but by their sudden death; our every day resolutions of obedience, whilst we continue in sin, are arguments that God's spirit hath shined on us, though the warmth that it produced be soon chill'd with the damp it meets within us.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 597.

It is usual with these to rise to universal fame immediately on publication; to bask like the ephemera, in the sunshine for a day, and then fall into irretrievable obscurity.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 6.

Esteem, lasting esteem, the esteem of good men, like himself, will be his reward, when the gale of ephemeral popularity shall have gradually subsided.
Id. On Grammar Schools.

These ephemerides of politicks are not made for our slow and coarse understandings.—Burke. Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

A black beetle, with gauze wings, and a crusty covering, produces a white, smooth, soft worm; an ephemeron fly, a cod-bait maggot.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

Hope, fear, alarm, jealousy, the ephemerous tale, that does its business, and dies in a day, all these things, which are the reins and spurs by which leaders check or urge the minds of followers, are not easily employed, or hardly at all, amongst scattered people.—Burke. French Revolution.

E'PHOD. Heb. "a priestly garment, used anciently to be worne by the priests among the Jewes. There were two kinds; the one made of gold, blewe silk, and purple, skarlet, and fine-twined linnen of broidered worke; and this only belonged unto the high priest, and was only used by him; the other was of white linnen, used by the other inferiour priests, Levites, and also by kings," (Minshew.)

No wonder though the people grew profane,
When churchmen's lives gave laymen leave to fall,
And did their former humbleness disdain;
The shirt of hair turn'd coat of costly pall,
The holy ephod made a cloak for gain.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

The bloody son of Jesse, when he saw
The mystic priesthood kept the Jews in awe,
He made himself an ephod to his mind,
And sought the Lord, and always found him kind.
Chatterton. Happiness, (1770.)

EPICE'DE. } Lat. Epicedium; Gr. Επικηδιον,
EPICE'DIAN. } from επι, on or upon, and κηδ-os, funus, a funeral. Epicedium dicitur, nondum sepulto cadavere, Epitaphium, post completam sepulturam. See Vossius.

Upon a funeral, a funeral song, an epitaph. Donne has some poems entitled, "Epicedes and Obsequies upon the Deaths of sundry Personages."

Upon whose brest (which trembled as it ranne)
Rode the faire downie silver-coated swan.
And on the banckes each cypress bow'd his head,
To hear the swan sing her owne epiced.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

The gentle turtles did with moans make swell
Their shining gorges: the white black-ey'd swains
Did sing as woful epicedians,
As they would straightways die.
Marlow & Chapman. Hero & Leander.

Whilst we behold the various fight,
With mingled pleasure and affright,
The humble hinds do fall to pray'r,
As when an army's seen i' th' air,
And the prophetic spaniels run,
And howl thy epicedium.—Lovelace. The Falcon.

E'PICK. adj. } Lat. Epicus; Gr. Επικος, from
E'PICK, s. } Επος, a word. Applied to a particular kind of poetry. See the quotation from Bossu, and Twining's Aristotle.

The epick poem is a discourse invented by art to form the manners, by such instructions as are disguised under the allegories of some one important action, which is related in verse, after a probable, diverting, and surprizing manner.
Pope. Odyssey. From Bossu.

In pompous epic, tow'ring odes,
I strut with heroes, feast with Gods;
Enjoy by turns the tuneful quire;
For me they touch each golden lyre.
Somervile. The Happy Lunatic.

We may collect that he [Aristotle] held the end of the epick poem to be according to the exact description of an eminent writer, [Hurd] "admiration, produced by a grandeur of design, and variety of important incidents, and sustained by all the energy and minute particularity of description."—Twining. Aristotle, Note 277.

E'PICURE.
EPICURE'AL.
EPICURE'AN, adj.
EPICURE'AN, s.
EPICURE'ANISM.
E'PICUREOUS.
E'PICURISM.
E'PICURISM.
E'PICURIZE.
} Fr. Epicure, Epicurien; It. and Sp. Epicuro; Lat. Epicurus—
A disciple of Epicurus; a follower of the doctrines unjustly imputed to Epicurus; and thus,
A sensualist, a voluptuary.

Here he describeth the furye of the epicures (which is the highest and depest mischeif of all impiete) euen to cõtempne the very God.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

Wonder it is, seeinge this epicury Godles furye be so horrible a sinne agayenst God's highe maiesty, that no man cã expresse the grauite therof, that so innumerable men so miche delyte withe the contempt of God in these epicurye opinions.—Id. Ib.

There is also a certē oratiō in Latin, made by D. Samson, late B. of Chichester, and now the double-faced epicureous bite-sheepe of Co. Lich.
Bp. Gardner. True Obedience. Translator to the Reader.

Den. I, then, would thus rise up,
And to his teeth tell him he was a tyrant,
A most voluptuous and insatiable epicure
In his own pleasures; which he huge so dearly
As proper and peculiar to himself,
That he denies a moderate, lawful use
Of all delight to others.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act iv. sc. 2.

When Epicurus to the world had taught,
That pleasure was the chiefest good,
(And was, perhaps, I' th' right, if rightly understood)
His life he to his doctrine brought,
And in a garden's shade that sovereign pleasure sought:
Whoever a true epicure would be,
May there find cheap and virtuous luxury.
Cowley. The Garden.

But these are epicureal tenets, tending to looseness of life, luxury, and atheism, maintained alone by some heathens, dissolute Arabians, prophane Christians.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 387.

But, when thou'st drunk, and danc'd, and sung
Thy fill, the flowery leaves among,
(Voluptuous, and wise withal,
Epicurean animal!)
Sated with thy summer feast,
Thou retir'st to endless rest.—Cowley. The Grasshopper.

We cannot tell, indeed, whether they [mushrooms] were so heated and accommodated for the most luxurious of the Cæsarean tables, when that monarchy was in its highest strain of epicurism, and engross'd this haut-gout for their second course; whilst this we know, that 'tis but what nature affords all her vagabonds under every hedge.
Evelyn. A Discourse of Sallets.

Let them be barbarous as they are, let them tyrannize, epicurize, oppresse, luxuriate, consume themselues with factions and contentions.
Burton. Democritus to the Reader, p. 60.

[There is] a fellow here about town, that epicurizes upon burning coals, & drinks healths in scalding brimstone.
Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 60.

Whatever esteem they had then, they have lost all their reputation among our modern epicures, who know no such things as pleasures of the mind, and would not much value whether they had any faculties of the mind or no, unless it were for the contrivance of new oaths and debaucheries.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Some think that they [Eccl. viii. 16] are spoken of in the person of an epicurean, who despised all religion, and thought it useful for nothing but to make men's lives uncomfortable to them, and so to shorten their days: and that the next verses are in answer to them, by shewing that wickedness doth much rather do it.—Id. vol. iv. Ser. 15.

Some men would be thought to be Deists, because they pretend to believe the existence of an eternal, infinite, independent, intelligent Being; and, to avoid the name of epicurean Atheists, teach also that the Supreme made the world.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Introd.

I will content myself to ask, whether he that should take all his notions of Stoicism from Velleius, or of Epicureanism from Balbus, or of both from the declamation of Cotta, would do much justice to the portic, or to the garden of Gargettus.—Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. Of Human Reason.

Infidelity, or modern Deism, is little else but revived Epicureism, Sadducism, and Zendichism.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 80.

The truth is, their very fasts and humiliations have been observed to be nothing else but a religious epicurism, and a neat contrivance of luxury: while they forbear dinner, only that they may treble their supper; and fast in the day, like the evening wolves, to whet their stomachs against night.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

It is a maxim with some in modern days, never to ask a favour of an epicure 'till after his meals, and the Ancients were not unacquainted with the mollia tempora fandi.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 2. § 18.

If Parliament, sir, had nothing to do with this charter, we might have some sort of epicurean excuse to stand aloof, indifferent spectators of what passes in the Company a name in India and in London.
Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Yet, when he observed that the same thing happened both to the fool and the wise; he rejected this likewise with the rest, and, now floundering deeper and deeper in his philosophical enquiries, he sinks at last into gross epicurism; There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink.—Warburton. Rem. on Occasional Reflections.

EPICY'CLE. Fr. Epicycle; It. Epiciclo; Sp. Epicyclo; Lat. Epicyclus; Gr. Επι-κυκλος, επι, in, and κυκλος, a circle.

"A lesser circle, whose centre is within the circumference of a greater; hence, a lesser circle, that comprehends, and carries about with it, a planet, itself being carried about by a greater: the seat of a planet, or story wherein it is fixed," (Cotgrave.)

They can tell you fine things of the fiery element under the moon, and the epicycles of the stars.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

The exquisite regularity of all the planets' motions, without epicycles, stations, retrogradations, or any other deviation or confusion whatsoever!
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 11.

A certain point, which seemed to be the centre of gravity of those two bodies, however posited (considered as one) seemed to be regularly mov'd in such a circle or ellipsis; the two balls having other peculiar motions in small epicycles about the same point.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 227.

Or should I rather, if I cou'd,
Talk of words little understood,
Centric, excentric, epicycle,
Fine words the vulgar ears to tickle.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle to • • • • • • •.

EPIDE'MY.
EPIDE'MICK, s.
EPIDE'MICK, adj.
EPIDE'MICAL.
EPIDE'MICALLY.
} Fr. Epidémie; It. and Sp. Epidemia; Lat. Epidemia; Gr. Επιδημος, επι, in, and δημος, a people; νοσος επιδημος, a disease, which spreads through the people.

Spreading, running through or among the people; among all people; general, of general usage or occurrence.

In the xix. yere of this Charlys, ye lande of Fraunce was greuously vexyd with the plage ipydymye, of whiche sykenesse a great multitude of people dyed.—Fabyan, an. 1599.

It was conceiued not to be an epidemicke disease, but to proceed from a malignitie in the constitution of the ayre, gathered by the predispositions of seasons; and the speedie cessation declared as much.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 9.

1625. This was the year in which the pestilence was so epidemical that there dy'd in London 5,000 a week.
Evelyn. Memoirs.

I believe it hath so wrought upon the general genius of the world, as it is not so audaciously and epidemically facinorous, as it was in times of Paganism, who were taught by their Gods to be loose and lease then men.
Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 46.

A vagary of fortune who is sometimes pleased to be frolicsome, and the epidemic madness of the times have given him reputation, and reputation (as Hobbes says) is power, and that has made him dangerous.
Dennis. Remarks on Homer.

Nor is it is any secret of the law which hath lain h'd from the beginning, and now brought out, to bring him to justice, but that which is co-natural with every man, and innate in his judgment and reason, and is as ancient as the first King, and an epidemical binding law in all nations in the world
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p 345. App. K. Charles's Case.

It is needful an ingredient should be generally friendly, before it be entertained epidemically in our daily diet.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 372.

We have seen no traces of those dreadful exterminating epidemicks, which, in consequence of scanty and unwholesome food, in former times, not unfrequently wasted whole nations —Burke. On Scarcity.

Whatever be the cause of this epidemic folly, it would be unjust to ascribe it to the freedom of the press, which wise men have ever held one of the most precious branches of national liberty.
Warburton. Dedication to the Freethinkers, (1738.)

EPIDI'CTIC. Gr. Επιδεικτικος, from Επιδεικνυμι, to show, to display, (sc.) the art, the eloquence.

I admire his [Junius] letters, as fine pieces of eloquence of that kind, which the ancient rhetoricians denominated the epidictio.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 29.

EPIGLO'TTIS. Fr. Epiglottide; It. Epiglotti, Sp. Epiglotas; Lat. Epiglottis; Gr. Επιγλωσσις. (επι, and γλωττα, the tongue.)
The flap or little tongue, which covers the aperture in the larynx or head of the windpipe.

And lest, when we swallow, our meat or drink should fall in there and obstruct it, it hath a strong shut or valve, called epiglottis, to cover it close and stop it when we swallow.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

In a city feast, for example, what deglutition, what anhelation! yet does this little cartilage, the epiglottis, so effectually interpose its office, so securely guard the entrance of the wind pipe, that whilst morsel after morsel, draught after draught, are coursing one another over it, an accident of a crumb or a drop slipping into that passage (which nevertheless must be opened for the breath every second of time,) excites in the whole company, not only alarm by its danger, but surprise by its novelty.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

EPIGRAM. Epigramma'tick. Epigramma'tical. Epigra'mmatist. } Fr. Epigramme; Sp. and It. Epigramma, Lat. Epigramma; Gr. Επιγραμμα, from Επι-γραφειν, superscribere, inscribere, to superscribe or write upon. The eulogy (Vossius says) which is usually inscribed upon statues, trophies, and monuments.
An inscription or superscription; and, as Cotgrave calls it, "a couplet, stanza or short poem, wittily taxing a particular person or fault."

A colledge of witte-crackers cannot flout mee out of my humour, dost thou think I care for a satyre or an epigram?
Shakespeare. Much Adoe About Nothing, Act v. sc. 4.

If you will reade carping, epigrammaticall verses of a Durham poet against Ralfe the prior, here you may have them.—Camden. Remaines. Epigrammes.

Break the beds, drink your wine, crown your heads with roses, and besmear your curled locks with nard; for God bids you to remember death; so the epigrammist speaks the sense of their drunken principles.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 1. s. 2.

Homer, Virgil, or Milton, so far as the language of their poems is understood, will please a reader of plain common sense, that would neither relish or comprehend an epigram of Martial or a poem of Cowley.—Spectator, No. 70.

He [Milton] has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid, none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan, none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian, none of those mixed embellishments of Tasso.—Id. No. 279.

Had this old song [Chevy Chase] been filled with epigrammatical turns and points of wit, it might perhaps have pleased the wrong taste of some readers; but it could never have become the delight of the common people, nor have warmed the heart of Sir Philip Sidney like the sound of a trumpet.—Id. No. 74.

It is not necessary in Poetry for the points of the comparison to correspond with one another exactly, but that a general resemblance is sufficient, and that too much nicety in this particular savours of the rhetorician and epigrammatist.—Id. No. 303.

Inscriptions, for such are epigrams according to the original meaning, are by no means in their own nature a contemptible species of composition.—Knox, Ess. 303.

With all the faults of Owen, such has been the sterility of epigrammatick genius in our country, that he may still retain the title, which he has acquired among foreigners, of the British Martial.—Knox, Ess. 305.

Of the different faces shown by the same objects, as they are viewed on opposite sides, and of the different inclinations, which they must constantly raise in him that contemplates them, a more striking example cannot easily be found, than two Greek epigrammatists will afford us, of their accounts of human life, which I shall lay before the reader in English prose.—Adventurer, No. 107.

EPILEPSY. Epile'ptic, adj. Epile'ptic, n. Epile'ptical. } Fr. Epilepsie; Sp. and It. Epilepsia; Lat. Epilepsia; Gr. Επιλημψια, επι, and λημψια, from Λαβειν, to take, to catch hold of. It is, says Minshew,
A strong and violent convulsion of the body, which taketh hold both of mind and sense together.

Cas. What's the matter?
Iago. My lord is fame into an epilepsie,
This is his second fit, he had one yesterday.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iv. sc. 1.

A plague vpon your epileptick visage.
Id. Lear, Act ii. sc. 2.

An epileptick son does often come from an epileptick father, and hereditary diseases are transmitted by generation.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 6. s. 7.

If it proceed from moisture, dulness, drousiness, headache follows; and as Salust Salvianus, cap. 1. lib. ii. out of his own experience found, epileptical, with a multitude of humours in the head.—Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p. 198.

It was customary to spit three times in their bosoms, at the sight of a madman, or one troubled with an epilepsy, of which custom Theocritus hath taken notice.
Potter. Antiquities of Greece, b. ii. c. 17.

And prescribing it to one, who was almost daily assaulted with epileptical fits, a few doses of it did, in a pretty while at first, make his fits come but seldom, and after not at all.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 223.

Besides madness, the ancients ascribed the epilepsy to possession, esteeming this disorder sacred on account of the entrance of demons into the bodies of those who suffered under it. These two, the epilepsy and madness, are kindred disorders, the former is often the consequence of the latter, and the fits of it are always attended with a deprivation of the understanding, and with convulsive agitations, or a frantic and mad behaviour.
Farmer. The Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 1. s. 5.

Besides madness, and (what are so nearly allied to it) epileptic fits, I know of no distemper that the ancients ascribed to possession; unless, perhaps, fits of apoplexy, which also affect the brain, the supposed residence of those demons who entered the bodies of men.—Id. Ib.

With regard to epileptics, it hath been observed above, that if their distemper was by the antients ascribed to possession, it was, because it was attended with a deprivation of the understanding, or loss of sense, and with the signs of phrenzy.—Id. Ib. c. 1. s. 6.

EPILOGA'TION. E'pilogue. Epi'logize. Epilogi'stic. } Fr. Epilogue; It. and Sp. Epilogo; Lat. Epilogus; Gr. Επιλογος, (επι, and λογ-os, sermo,) sermonem dicas quo tota clauditur oratio, (Skinner.) See the example from Udal.

Now wyl I dismisse thee from any longer beholding of this syght, after I haue rehersed vnto the by waye of epilogacion and gatheryng of the whole matter into a briefe summe, the persons of this scene or pageaunte.—Udal. Mark, c. 2.

Some make epilogation
Of highe predestination.—Skelton. Boke of Colin Clout.

Why there should be an epilogue to a play,
I know no cause, the old and usual way
For which they were made, was to entreat the grace
Of such as were spectators in this place.
F. Beaumont. Epilogue to the Custom of the Country.

The dances being ended, the spirit epiloguizes.
Milton. Comus, after l. 976.

These lines are an epilogistic palinode to the last elegy, (i. e. the 7th.)—Id Elegiarum.

EPI'PHANY. Fr. Epiphanie; It. Epifania; Lat. Epiphania; Gr. Επιφανεια, (from επι, and φαιν-ειν, apparere.)
An appearance, a manifestation.

But to cloke those matters in the meane time, upon that solemne holiday which the Christians celebrate in the moneth of Januarie, and commonly call the epiphanie, [Epiphania,] he [Julian, went into the church or congregation, and after he had solemnly done his worship and devotions to their God, departed.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 167.

It would have disturbed an excellent patience to see him, whom but just before they beheld transfigured, and in a glorious epiphany upon the mount, to be so neglected by a company of hated Samaritans, as to be forc'd to keep his vigils where nothing but the welkin should have been his roof.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

EPIPHONE'MA. Gr. Επιφωνημα, (επι, and φωνημα, the voice, from φων-ειν, to speak.) Applied to—
An exclamatory saying or sentence.

And for a concluding epiphonema, it is said of them in the last verse, That knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in those that do them.
South, vol. xi. Ser. 3.

And perhaps our Saviour used so frequently to conclude his divine discourses with that just epiphonema, "he that hath ears to hear, let him hear," but to teach us, that there is no employment of our faculties, that more deserves their utmost attention, than the scrutiny of divine truths.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 313

EPI'SCOPACY. Epi'scopal. Episcopa'lian, n. Epi'scopally. Epi'scopate. E'piscopy. Epi'scopize. } Gr. Επισκοπος, a bishop, from επι, and σκοπ-ειν, to look into; to overlook. See Bishop.

But this office of the ordinary apostleship or episcopacy, derives its fountain from a rock: Christ's own distinguishing the apostolate from the function of presbyters.
Bp. Taylor. Of Episcopacy, § 6.

In the eight session whereof it is reported, that M. G Grahame bishop of Orkney had openly, before the whole body of the assembly, renounced his episcopal function, and craved pardon for having accepted it, as if thereby he had committed some hainous offence.
Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, Pref.

There he commits to the presbyters only full authority, both of feeding the flock, and episcopating, and commands that obedience be given to them as to the mighty hand of God, which is his mighty ordinance.
Milton. Reason of Church Government.

And if the censor, in his moral episcopy, being to judge most in matters not answerable by writ or action, could not use an instrument so gross and bodily as jurisdiction is, how can the minister of the gospel manage the corpulent and secular trial of bill and process in things merely spiritual?
Id. Ib.

It was the universal doctrine of the church of God for many ages, even for fourteen centuries of years, that episcopy is the divine, or apostolical institution.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4. Rule 9

'Twas to make him (such honours to him given)
Regius professor to the king of heaven;
by whom he's prelated above the skies,
And the whole world's his seat t' episcopize.
Broome. On the Death of Mr. Josias Shute.

Those who seeme most doubtfull about the original of episcopacy, doe yield the general consent of the church in the practice of it.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

But the great objection against Timothy's being a pattern for episcopal power is this; that it appears by Scripture he was sent up and down to several places, as Paul thought fit.
Id. Ib.

When the act of uniformity required all men who held any benefices in England to be episcopally ordained, he [Sydserfe], with others of the Scotch clergy that gathered about him, did set up a very indefensible practice of ordaining all those of the English clergy who came to him, and that without demanding either oaths or subscriptions of them.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1661.

St. Cyprian expressly says, that all the apostles were equal in power, and that all the bishops were also equal, since the whole office and episcopate was one entire thing, of which every bishop had a complete and equal share.
Id. Hist. of Reformation, b. ii. an. 1533.

Your modesty refuses the just praises I give you by which you lay claim to more, as a bishop gains his bishopric by saying he will not episcopate
Pope. To Wycherly, April, 1705.

Election was, in very early times, the usual mode of elevating to the episcopal chair throughout all Christendom; and this was promiscuously performed by the laity as well as the clergy.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

It will also be observed here, that we are considered as parishioners of the missionaries, no less than professed episcopalians.—Secker. Ans. to Dr. Mayhew's Observations.

E'PISODE. } Gr. Επεισοδιον, (επι, εις, and EPISO'DIC. } οδος,) superinductum, any
EPISO'DICAL. } thing superinduced, intro-
EPISO'DICALLY. } duced.

Mr. Twining thinks the Gr. Επεισοδιον was always used by Aristotle in its proper, and derivative sense, of something more or less adventitious or accessory,—something inserted, superadded, introduced, at pleasure, by the poet; that by degrees, scarcely any other idea was annexed to the word than that of digression; something foreign to the subject, or connected with it only by a slight thread: and that, in modern language, the word is applied only to entire actions of this additional or digressive kind, (Twining. Aristotle, Treatise on Poetry, vol. i. N. 37.)

But it may be asked, does not Homer offend against all degrees of probability in these episodes of the Sirens, Scylla and Charybdis, Cyclops and Antiphates? how are these incredible stories to be reduced into the bounds of probability?—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. x. Note.

Besides the many other beauties in such an episode, its running parallel with the great action of the Poem, hinders it from breaking the unity so much as another episode would have done, that had not so great an affinity with the principal subject.—Spectator, No. 267.

Now this episodic narration gives the Poet an opportunity to relate all that is contained in four books without breaking in upon the time of action.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii. Note.

After this follow the episodes of Dido and Deiphobus, in imitation of Homer; where we find nothing explanatory of the true nature of this episode, but the strange description of Deiphobus; whose mangled phantom is drawn according to the Philosophy of Plato; which teaches that the dead not only retain all the passions of the mind, but all the marks and blemishes of the body.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

It is more glaringly inconsistent with the genius of the drama to admit of foreign and digressive ornaments, than of the extended episodical epopeia.

Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

A distant perspective of burning Troy might be thrown into a corner of the piece, that is, episodically, with good advantage.—Id. Ib.

EPI'STLE. } Fr. Epistre; It. and Sp.
EPI'STLER. } Epistola; Lat. Epistola; Gr.
EPI'STOLAR. } Επιστολη, (q.d.) missoria, from EPI'STOLARY. } επιστελλ-ειν, to send to, (επι, EPISTO'LICAL. } and στελλ-ειν, to send,) Vossius.
EPI'STOLIZE. } Any thing sent; or, in com-
EPI'STOLIZER. } mon English, a letter, written by one, and sent and addressed to another.

But that I be not gesside as to feere ghou bi epistlis, for thei sein that the epistles ben greuouse and strong, but the presence of the bodi is feeble, and the word worthi to be dispisid.—Wiclif. 2 Corynth. c. 10.

Thys saye I, least I shoulde seme as though I went about to make you afrayde wyth letters, For the epistles (sayth he) are sore and strong; but his bodely presence is weake, and his speache is rude.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For there was some epistel hem betwene
That would (as saith min auctor) wel contene
Nie half this boke. Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Epistles, or (according to the word in use) familiar letters, may be called the larum bells of love: I hope this will prove so to you, and have power to awaken you out of that silence wherein you have slept so long.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 1.

But what needs the man to be so furiously angry with the good old epistler for saying, that the apostle's charge (let every man have his own wife) is general to all; reaching to the clergy as well as the laity, excepting none but those which have the gift of continency.

Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie.

This epistolar way will have a considerable efficacy upon them.—More. On the Seven Churches, p. 7.

There are some who in lieu of letters write homilies, they preach when they should epistolize.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 1.

Some modern authors there are who have exposed their letters to the world, but most of them, I mean among your Latin epistolizers, freighted with mere Bartholomew ware, with trite and trivial phrases only, listed with pedantic shreds of school-boy verses.—Id. Ib.

I answer, that the epistles were written upon several occasions: and he that will read them as he ought, must observe what it is in them is principally aimed at, find what is the argument in hand, and how managed; if he will understand them right, and profit by them.

Locke. Reasonableness of Christianity.

For in this address to your lordship, I design not a treatise of Heroic Poetry, but write in a loose epistolary way, somewhat tending to that subject, after the example of Horace, in his first epistle of the second book to Augustus Cæsar, and of that to the Pisos, which we call the Art of Poetry.

Dryden. Dedication to Æneis.

I have an epistolical dissertation on John Malelas in Dr. Mill's hands.—Bentley. Letters, p. 154.

Cheering, as summer's balmy showers
To thirsty herbs and languid flowers,
Your late epistle reach'd my ear,
And fill'd my heart with joy sincere.

Blacklock. To Dr. Douenman.

It is also a fact, that the expressions, upon which the disputed doctrines of inference are founded, were not only incidentally used, in their epistolary correspondence, but occasionally urged, as containing the sublimest motives to the practice of every religious and moral duty.

Logan. Theological Disquisition, Conclus.

E'PISTYLE. Gr. Επιστυλιον, (επι, upon, and στυλος, a pillar or column.)

In a word [the Tænia] 'tis that in the Doric architrave which cymatium is in the other order, and separates the epistilium or architrave from the freeze.

Evelyn. On Architecture.

E'PITAPH. } Fr. Epitaphe; It. Epitaffio; Sp.
EPITA'PHIAN. } Epitaphio; Lat. Epitaphium; Gr. Επιταφιον, from επι, and ταφος, sepulchrum, from θαπτ-ειν, sepelire, to bury. Fuller coins a verb.

Any thing (written or inscribed) upon a tomb, and, generally, upon the dead; strictly, after burial. See EPICEDE.

And for men shall the soth witte
Thei haue her epitaphe writte;
As thynge, whiche shulde abide stable,
The letters grauen in a table
Of marble were, and saide this. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

I confess very many of her descendants dyed before her death; in which respect she was far surpassed by a Roman matron, on whom the poet thus epitapheth it in her own person.—Fuller. Worthies. Buckinghamshire.

He that would write an epitaph for thee,
And do it well, must first begin to be
Such as thou wert; for none can truly know
Thy worth, thy life, but he that hath liv'd so.

Donne, Elegy upon, by Dr. C. B. of O.

Like the doughty Centurion Afranius in Lucian; who, to imitate the noble Pericles in his epitaphian speech, stepping up after the battle to bewail the slain Severianus, falls into a pitiful condolement, to think of those costly suppers, and drinking banquets which he must now taste no more.

Milton. Animadversions on Remonstrants' Defence.

They only want an epitaph
That do remain alone
Alive in an inscription,
Remembered only on the brass, or marble stone.

Bp. Sprat. To the Memory of the late Lord Protector.

To define an epitaph is useless; every one knows it is an inscription on a tomb. An epitaph—is indeed commonly panegyrical: because we are seldom distinguished with a stone but by our friends.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

EPITASIS. Gr. Επιτασις, intensio, from επιτειν-ειν, intendere, (επι, and τειν-ειν, tendere, to stretch,) applied, as Ben Jonson says, to—
The busy part of the subject.

Here comes Micilente and Signior Brisk, freshly suted; loose not your selfe, for now the epitasis, or busie part of our subject, is in act.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iii. sc. 8.

It may indeed seem a very singular epitasis of a Poem to end as this does, with a great yawn, but we must consider it as the yawn of a God, and of powerful effects.

Pope. Dunciad, b. iv. (Rem. v. 606.)

EPITHA'LAMY. } Fr. Epithalame; It. Epi-
EPITHALA'MIUM. } talamio; Sp. Epithalamio; from επι, and θαλαμος, a couch or bed, the marriage couch or bed. See the quotation from Ben Jonson, who entitles his song Epithalamium.

A song or poem upon a marriage; a nuptial song.

He show'd us how for sins we ought to sigh,
And how to sing Christ's epithalamy.

Donne, Elegy upon, by J. Chudleigh.

I made it both in forme and matter to emulate the kind of poeme, which was called epithalamium, and (by the ancients) used to be sung, when the bride was led into her chamber.—B. Jonson. Masques. Hymenæi.

The merry torch burns with desire
To kindle the eternal fire,
And lightly dances in thine eyes
To tunes of epithalamies.

Lovelace. A Guiltless Lady Imprisoned.

It might however be expected, that if Theocritus had borrowed at all from the sacred writers, the celebrated epithalamium of Solomon, so much within his own walk of poetry, would not certainly have escaped his notice.

Langhorne. On Collins's Oriental Eclogues.

E'PITHEM. Fr. Epithème; It. Epitima, Sp. Epithima; Gr. Επιθημα, any thing put or placed upon another; from επιτιθημι, to put or place upon, (επι, and τιθεσθαι.)

Any thing (medicinal) applied to the outward part of the body; Cotgrave calls it, a liquid medicine, (so applied.)

Upon this reason epithems or cordial applications are justly applied unto the left breast

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 2.

E'PITHET, n. } Fr. Epithète; It. Epiteto,
E'PITHET, v. } Sp. Epitheto; Lat. Epithe-
EPITHE'TIC. } ton; Gr. Επιθετον, any thing imposed or put upon; from επιτιθ-εσθαι, imponere, to put upon, to place upon or in addition, to add, (επι, and τιθεσθαι, to put or place.)

A word imposed or added; an adjective ascribing or describing some quality, for the sake of emphasis or discrimination.

I am come newly from those ladies, who think themselves more lovely than before, and perhaps than they are, ever since I showed them your character of their beauties, in your letter from the Galley (Gravesend, never was a town better epitheted.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 560.

For every man is naturally a Narcissus, and each passion in us, no other but self love sweetened by milder epithets.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

He adds an epithete to Pelion (πυκνοσφυλλον) which very much swells the idea, by bringing up to the reader's imagination all the woods that grew upon it.—Spectator, No. 333.

The character of Bajazet, the son and successor of Amurath, is strongly expressed in his surname of Ilderim, or the lightning; and he might glory in an epithet which was drawn from the fiery energy of his soul, and the rapidity of his destructive march.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 64.

Some, Milton-mad, (an affectation,
Glean'd up from college education,)
Approve no verse, but that which flows
In epithetic measur'd prose. Lloyd. On Rhyme.

EPI'TOME. } It. and Sp. Epitome; Lat.
EPI'TOMIST. } Epitome; Gr. Επιτομη, from EPI'TOMIZE. } επιτεμν-ειν, to cut off, (επι, and EPI'TOMIZER. } τεμν-ειν, to cut.) To epitomize, is—

To cut off, to curtail; and thus, to abbreviate or abridge; to abstract.

The wrytynge of theim, and of other seemeth rather epitomes, than histories.—Golden Boke, Prol.

The common printed chronicle is indeed but an epitome or defloration made by Robert of Lorraine, Bishop of Hereford, under Henry I.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, Pref.

I had a mother, and she look'd upon me
As on a true epitome of her youth.

Massinger. Parliament of Love, Act iii. sc. 3.

Now if we may believe Trogus Pompeius (epitomiz'd by Justin, lib. i.) Egypt was a most flourishing and magnificent nation before Ninus was born.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 5. s. 4.

All those rare parts that in his brothers were
Epitomiz'd, at large in him appear.

Drayton. David & Goliah.

But I shall conclude with that of Baronius, and Spondanus his epitomizer.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vii. sc. 1.

When that epitomizer of Trogus had to the full described and set out King Ptolemies riot as a chiefe engine and instrument of his overthrow, he addes tympanum et tripudium, fiddling and dancing: the king was not a spectator only but a principall actor himself.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 487.

Thus much is more generally beleved, that both this Brennus, and another famous captain Britomarus, whom the epitomist Florus and others mention, were not Gauls but Britons.—Milton. History of England, b. i.

This sentence [Matt. vii. 12.] I read unto you, is very fitly placed towards the close of our Saviour's admirable sermon on the mount, as being, in great measure, the epitome and sum of what the divine preacher had there expressed more at large.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 9.

This may make the naturalist's fame very uncertain, not only because of want of judgment, that (as I newly said) is too often observable in compilers, whereby they frequently leave far better things than they take, but for the want of skill to understand the author they cite and epitomize, or candour to do him right.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 56.

From hence (as Servius remarks) Virgil took the hint of his Silenus the subject of whose song is so exact an epitome of the contents of the Metamorphosis of Ovid, that amongst the ancient titles of that eclogue, the name of Metamorphosis was one.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

It has been lately discovered, that this fable (the Merchant of Venice) is taken from a story in the Pecorone of Giovanni Fiorentino, a novelist, who wrote in 1378. The story has been published in English, and I have epitomized the translation.—Johnson. Gen. Observ. on Merchant of Venice.

It is true, the historian has confounded times in making Joseph contemporary with Moses; but this was a common mistake amongst the pagans. Justin, the epitomizer of Trogus Pompeius, calls Moses the son of Joseph.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. Notes.

E'POCH. } It. and Sp. Epoca; Lat. Epocha;
E'POCHA. } Gr. Εποχη, a holding in or retention, from Επεχειν, to hold in or retain, (επι, and εχειν, to have or hold.)

Epochas, in Chronology, are certain periods of time, from which calculation commences, and at which it terminates, and again commences; thus forming certain bounds or limits confining the calculation of time.

But in regard, in divers ages and nations, divers epochs of time were used, and several forms of years, here it is necessary that some common and known account should be observed, to which the diversity of the rest may most appositely be reduced.—Usher. Annals, Ep. to the Reader.

And to take the world in a lower epocha, what after-age could exceed the lust of the Sodomites, the idolatry and tyranny of the Ægyptians, the fickle levity of the Grecians?
South, vol. viii. Ser. 14.

The dreadful period, so frequently predicted, was now arrived. The ages of their independency were passed: and a new epoch succeeded.
Cogan. Theological Disquisitions, Dis. 2. c. 2. § 5.

E'PODE. Fr. Epode; Sp. and It. Epodo; Lat. Epodon; Gr. Επωδον, from επαειδ-ειν, supercanere, (επι, and αειδ-ειν, canere, to sing.) Gesner says, "Quæ post στροφην, et αντιστροφην, επωδον, dicebant;" and though usually thus applied to the third stanza of the Greek ode, yet employed otherwise by the Latins.

My Muse up, by commission; no, I bring
My owne true fire. Now my thought takes wing,
And now an epode to deep eares I sing.
B. Jonson. The Forrest, s. 10.

And Horace seems to have purged himself from those splenetic reflections in those odes and epodes, before he undertook the noble work of satires, which were properly so called.—Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

EPOPE'E. Gr. Επωποια, from Επος, a word or saying, and ποιειν, to make. Its general and etymological sense, as Mr. Twining observes, is, That of imitating or making by words.

The work of Tragedy is on the passions; and, in a dialogue, both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopee delights.—Dryden. Dedication to Æneis.

If we believe the representations of some writers, Poems equal in length to the most celebrated epopeas of Greece and Rome have been handed down, without the aid of letters, from the remotest antiquity to the present day.
Knox, Ess. 134.

EPOTA'TION. Lat. Epotare, (e, and potare,) to drink. Gr. Ποσις.
A drinking out.

When the sword and fire rages, tis but man warring against man; when drunkenness reignes, the Devill is at war with man, and the epotation of dumbe liquor damnes him.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 84.

EPULA'TION. Lat. Epulatio, from Epulari, to feast or banquet.

That he [Epicurus] was contented with bread and water, and when he would dine with Jove, and pretend unto epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of Cytheridian cheese.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

E'QUABLE. } Lat. Æquus, from the Gr.
EQUABI'LITY. } Εικος, similis, from Εικ-ειν, si-
E'QUABLY. } milem esse; which Lennep derives from Εκ-ειν, or Ικ-ειν, venire, accedere, to come to, then cedere, vel non repugnare.

Causing the same or similar sensations; having like, same, or similar appearances; even, regular, uniform; and thus, smooth, calm, steady; undisturbed, unruffled.

There is also moderation in tolleration of fortune of every sorte, which of Tulli is called equabilitie.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 20.

We therefore are not enquiring what the wise and glorious God might or could do in order to the equable reduction of the world, upon a supposition of an eternal duration; but we are upon a question of fact indeed, namely, what he hath done.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 227.

I come now to the second premised consideration and enquiry, viz. Whether there may not be found some extraordinary occurrences and correctives, that may reduce that otherwise natural and ordinary increase of mankind to an equability.—Id. Ib. p. 207.

First, for the celestial or heavenly bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions, the certainty of their periods and revolutions, the conveniency of their order and situations, argue them to be ordain'd and govern'd by wisdom and understanding.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

If I were to give my opinion upon such an exhausted subject, I should join to these other qualifications a certain equability or evenness of behaviour.—Spectator, No. 68.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.—Cheyne.

Referring the balance to the rest of the works, he saw, when he came to understand its action, that which rendered their motions equable.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

Bodies seem to act mutually upon each other, with a kind of equability in power, and not by the superior agency of an active, over a body which is totally passive.
Cogan. Ethical Questions, Q. 5.

E'QUAL, adj.
E'QUAL, n.
E'QUAL, v.
EQUA'LITY.
E'QUALLY.
E'QUALIZE.
EQUALIZA'TION.
E'QUALNESS.
EQUA'TION.

Written Egal by our older writers. Fr. Egal, esgal; It. Equale; Sp. Igual; Lat. Æqualis, from Æquus; Gr. Εικος, similis, similar or like. See EQUABLE.

Causing similar or same sensations; having the same or similar appearances; the same number, magnitude, weight; the same in motion, in space or time, distance or measure; even, level, proportionate, commensurate; without difference or distinction; and (met.) the same in moral qualities, in moral conduct; impartial, unmoved, unswayed or uninfluenced by partiality or prejudice; uniform; acting alike to all; the same or similar in circumstances or station in life, in rank, in wealth; in any circumstances or qualities of moral character or estimation.

She [Virginitee] is the preising of this world, and she is as thise martirs in egalitee; she hath in hire, that tonge may not telle, ne herte thinke.—Chaucer. Persones Tale.

And ayenward; all fortune is blisful to a man by the agreeability, or by the egality of hym that sufferith it.
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Ther n' is no man can demen, by my say,
If that it were departed equally.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7819.

In which fifth party thou shalt find tables of equacions of houses after ye latitude of Oxenforde, and tables of dignitees of planets, and other notefull thinges.—Id. Astrolabe.

He loked his equacions,
And eke the constellacions.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

But for an egalnes to be kept among you, that is to witte, that through your riches, wherof ye haue aboûdaûce, their pouertie may be relieued: and again that theyr fayth and godlines, wherin they passe you may recompence that, that perchaunce wanteth in you, whyles eche of you departeth with other, so that neither of you tacke anye thyng, but that there be an equalitie observed.—Udal. 2 Cor. c. 8.

And he that high does sit, and all things see
With equall eye, their merites to restore,
Behold what ye this day have done for mee;
And, what I cannot quite, requite with usuree!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

——— For thyself, thou art
A thing, that, equal with the Devil himself,
I do detest and scorn.
Massinger. The Duke of Milan, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— I know you labour,
The liberty of your father; at the least,
An equal hearing to acquit himself.
Massinger. Unnatural Combat, Act i. sc. 1

The raging Pagan, thus his people spake,
"What poore life cannot, liberall death doth bring,
And you (though subjects) may my equals make,
Loe, without treason you may match your king."
Stirling. Jonathan.

Whereby great Sidney and our Spenser might,
With those Po singers being equalled,
Enchant the world with such a sweet delight
That their eternal songs (for ever read)
May shew what great Eliza's reign hath bred.
Daniel. Tragedy of Cleopatra, Ded.

Sfor. And too, her goodness,
Her tenderness of me, her care to please me,
Her unsuspected chastity ne'er equall'd;
Her innocence, her honour.
Massinger. Duke of Milan, Act i. sc. 3.

Hubert. Heralds, from off our towres we might behold
From first to last, the on-set and retyre
Of both your armies, whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 2.

Suffrages in parliament are numbered, not weigh'd: nor can it be otherwise in those publicke councels, where nothing is so unequall, as the equality; for there, how odde soever men's braines, or wisdomes are, their power is alwayes even, and the same.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

But here, the equally respecting eye
Of pow'r looking alike on like deserts,
Blessing the good, made others good thereby;
More mighty by the multitude of hearts.
Daniel. Civil War, b. v.

Therefore, I will throwe downe these mountaines hie,
And make them leuell with the lowely plaine:
These tow'ring rocks, which reach vnto the skie,
I will thrust down into the deepest maine,
And as they were, them equalize againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

——— But yet let me lament
With teares as soueraigne as the blood of hearts
——— that our starres
Vnreconcileable, should diuide our equalness to this.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act v. sc. 1.

After so many toils and hazards, so much trouble and loss for the public good, they were not unwilling to put an end to their power, and to content themselves with an equal share with others, for the whole reward of their labours.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 17.

If the sin we are afraid of, in doing or not doing the action doth on both sides appear equal, there we are to determine ourselves to that side, where we have the least doubt of offending God.—Sharpe, vol. ii. Of a Doubting Conscience.

Thus when thy draughts, O Raphael, Time invades
And the bold figure from the canvass fades;
A rival hand recalls from every part
Some latent grace, and equals art with art.
Broome. To Mr. Pope, on his Works.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship driven by unsteady winds, sometimes very slow, and at others irregularly very swift, or if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not at all help us to measure time, any more than the seeming motion of a comet does.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14. s. 22.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame
It could not equalize the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart.
Waller. At Penshurst.

The finest Poem that we can boast, and which we equalise, and perhaps would willingly prefer to the Iliad, is void of those fetters, [rhyme.]
Orrery. Remarks, &c. on Dr. Swift, Let. 22.

He pursued his intentions with such equalness of mind, that he was never carried beyond the calmness of his natural temper, except through his zeal for the publick good, or where his friend was concerned.
Lloyd. Funeral Sermon on Dr. Wilkins.

Again the golden day resum'd its right,
And rul'd in just equation with the night.
Rowe. Lucan, b. ii.

In sober silence we can but admire
Beauty with temper, taste and sense combin'd,
The body only equall'd by the mind.
Dr. Warton. To Mr. Seward.

Indeed, both poverty and sickness reduce humanity to such a state, as serves to detect the miserable debility of our nature, and the perfect equality in wretchedness amongst all who partake of it.—Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 30.

What the grave triflers on this busy scene,
When they make use of this word, Reason, mean,
I know not; but, according to my plan,
'Tis Lord Chief Justice in the Court of Man,
Equality form'd to rule in age and youth,
The friend of Virtue, and the guide to Truth.
Churchill. The Apology.

It does not institute a magnificent auction of finance, where captivated provinces come to general ransom by bidding against each other, untill you knock down the hammer, and determine a proportion of payments beyond all the powers of algebra to equalize and settle.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

Taking five and five throughout the kingdom, they are equal: therefore, an errour with regard to the equalization of their wages, by those who employ five, as farmers do at the very least, cannot be considerable.—Id. On Scarcity.

For all his jocular narrations
Smell of his Algebra equations.
Cawthorn. Wit & Learning.

EQUANI'MITY. Fr. Equanimité; It. Equanimità; Sp. Equanimidad; Lat. Equanimitas, from Æquus, even, and animus, the mind.

Evenness of mind, uniformity, steadiness, immovableness of mind. Minshew well calls it, "A quiet moderation of mind."

He was skilled in more great things than one; and, as one said of Phidias, he could not only make excellent statues of ivory, but he could work in stone and brass: he shewed his equanimity in poverty, and his justice in riches.
Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

Where is that moderation of ours which St. Paul, in the verse before my text, requires us to make known unto all men; that equanimity and contentedness which we ought to express in every estate and condition in which God hath placed us.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

'Tis not restraint, or liberty,
That makes men prisoners or free;
But perturbations that possess
The mind, or equanimities. Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

This quality [good-nature] keeps the mind in equanimity, and never lets an offence unseasonably throw a man out of his character.—Tatler, No. 242.

After these gentlemen have borne all the odium of this publication, and all the indignation of the directors, with such unexampled equanimity, now that they are at length stimulated into feeling, are you to deny them their just relief!—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

EQUA'TOR. } Fr. Equateur; Sp. Equador; It. Equatore; Lat. Equator. See EQUAL.
EQUATO'RIAL.
EQUATO'RIALLY.

So called, because equally distant from the poles, and dividing the sphere or globe into two equal parts.

Here matter new to gaze the Devil met,
Undazl'd, farr and wide his eye commands,
For sight no obstacle found here, no shade,
But all sun-shine, as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iii.

Now on this line the needle exactly lyeth not, but diverts and varieth its points, that is, the north point on this side of the equator, the south on the other, sometimes unto the east, sometimes toward the west, and in some few places varieth not at all.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

But, 2. Our modern astronomers assign a much greater variation from a globous form, namely, that of a prolate spheroid, making the polar about 34 miles shorter than the equatorial diameter.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii. c. 1. Note 1.

Those that refulgent, or with rosy morn,
Or yellow evening, flame: those that, profuse
Drunk by equator-suns, severely shine.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

Thrice had the sun, to rule the varying year,
Across the equator roll'd his flaming sphere,
Since last the vessel spread her ample sail,
From Albion's coast obsequious to the gale.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

It is occasionally requisite, that the object-end of the instrument be moved up and down as well horizontally as equatorially.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

E'QUERY, or } Of Querry, Skinner says,
EQUE'RRY. } from the Fr. Escuyrie, escurie, the stable of the prince; perhaps, because les escuyers, armigeri, had the care of the horses of the prince. Dr. T. H. derives ab equis, (q.d.) equiria; he adds a third conjecture, (more specious than the others,) that it is so called a curando equos. The Low Lat. is Scura or scuria, perhaps from the Ger. Schauren or schuren, tegere, to cover or protect. See Du Cange.

"Fr. Escuyrie,—the stable of a prince or nobleman; also, a querry-ship; or the duties or offices belonging thereto; also, (in old authors,) a squire's place; or the dignity, title or estate of an esquire." (Cotgrave.)

I made the proof ofttimes upon Sir R. P., that is, (in the ear, Sir Robert Pye of the equerry
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 354.

EQUE'STRIAN. From the Lat. Equus, a horse.

Of or pertaining to a horse or horsemanship; riding on a horse, skilled in riding.

Equestrian is also applied to the rank of Equites in Rome.

I should be glad if a certain equestrian order of ladies, some of whom one meets in the evening at every outlet of the town, would take this subject into their serious consideration.—Spectator, No. 104.

Persons were admitted into the two higher ranks according to their fortunes; one that was worth 800 sestertia, was capable of being chose senator; one that had 400 might be taken into the equestrian order.
Kennet. Antiquities of Rome, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 1.

EQUI-A'NGLED. } Written by Boyle, Æquiangled. Fr. Equiangle; It. Equiangolo; Sp. Equiangulo.
EQUIA'NGULAR.

Having the angles equal.

For, whereas that consists of twelve equilateral and equiangled pentagons, almost all the planes that made up our granite were quadrilateral.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 534.

EQUICRU'RE. } Lat. Æquus, equal, and crus, the leg. It. Equicrure.
EQUICRU'RAL.

Having the legs equal, or of the same length.

Consider the increase of an equicrure triangle, which goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 8.

A solid rhombus being made by the conversion of two equicrural cones, as Archimedes hath defined; and these were the common trees about Babylon, and the East, whereof the ark was made, and Alexander found no trees so accommodable to build his navy.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

Does it not require some pains and skill to form the general idea of a triangle, (which is yet none of the most abstract, comprehensive, and difficult,) for it must be neither oblique, nor rectangle, neither equilateral, equicrural, nor scalenon, but all and none of these at once.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 7. s. 9.

EQUI-DI'STANT. } Fr. Equidistant; It. and Sp. Equidistante; from Lat. Æquus, equal, even, same, and distans, present part. of distare, to stand apart.
EQUIDI'STANCE.
EQUIDI'STANTLY.

Standing apart or asunder, separate or removed in the same degree in space or time; in any relationship.

For the concaue and conuexe superfices of the orbe of the sunne is concentrike, and equidistant to the earth.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 51

In all those descending degrees there is a kind of reverential inequality betwixt the lower and superiour, which abhors from all proportion of a match: whereas the collateral equidistance of cousin-german from the stock, whence both descend, hath in it no such appearance of inequality.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 5.

For into our Reason flow, and there do end
All that this natural world doth comprehend;
Quotidian things, and equidistant hence,
Shut in, for man, in one circumference.
Donne. Elegy on the Death of Prince Henry.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

Whereas any constant periodical appearance or alteration of ideas in seemingly equidistant spaces of duration, if constantly and universally observable, would have as well distinguished the intervals of time, as those that have been made use of.—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14. s. 19.

In building an arch, could more be done (than in the lower part of the face) in order to make the curve true, i. e. the parts equidistant from the middle, alike in figure and position.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

EQUI-FO'RMITY. Lat. Æquus, equal, and forma, the form, frame or fashion; from A. S. Fram-an, facere, to form or make.

Equality, evenness or sameness, in form or fashion, or manner; in degree.

The heavens admit not these sinister and dexter respects: there being in them no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity in motion continually succeeding each other.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

EQUI-LA'TERAL, adj. } Fr. Equilateral; It. Equilatere; Sp. Equilatero; Lat. Æquus, equal, and latus, the side.
EQUILA'TERAL, n.

Having the sides equal, or of the same length.
See the quotation from Locke, in v. EQUICRURE.

Opposite to this castle is erected the sepulcher of Bahaman's beloved queen, in the highway, as we passed, 'tis of four equilaterals raised above eight yards high.
Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 200.

EQUI-LI'BRATE. } Fr. Equilibrer; It. Equilibrare; Lat. Æquilibris, of equal weight; (æquus, equal, and libra, to weigh.) Equilibrium is strictly a Latin word. See CALIBRE.
EQUILIBRA'TION.
EQUILI'BRE.
EQUILI'BRIOUS.
EQUILI'BRIUM.
EQUI'LIBRIST.

To have equal weight, to weigh or poise equally; to be, to keep in equipoise, to balance.

As in a long steel wire, equilibrated or evenly ballanced in the ayr.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

This attraction have we tryed in straws and palcous bodies, in needles of iron, equilibrated.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 4.

According to the laws magnetical, the lower extreme of it will not be its northern (but its southern) pole, nimbly attracting the north end of an excited and equilibrated needle.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 391.

The structure of man's body is with that equilibration (notwithstanding divers prominences therein) the composure of his nerves and muscles for the due motion of his spirits, the structure of his feet are so singularly accommodated; that he maintains this erect posture, standing or walking, though his feet, the basis of the pillar of his body, be much narrower than the latitude of his body.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 64.

All I shall farther take notice of, shall be only the exquisite equilibration of all these opposite and antagonist muscles.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2.

By which equilibration her flight is made much more easie.
Grew. Cosmo-Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

The spirit of nature, may silently send forth whole gardens and orchards of most delectable fruits and flowers of an equilibrious ponderosity to the parts of the aire they grow in.
H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 9.

For we being finite and limited beings, cannot operate divers ways with equal vigour at once; and our rational and sensitive propensions are made in such a regular and equilibrious order, that proportionably as the one does increase in activity, the other always decays; and so accordingly as we abate in strength of our brutish, we shall improve in the vigour of our rational faculties.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 2.

The balance is turned, and wherever this happens, there is an end of the doubt or æquilibrium.
Sharp, vol. ii. A Doubting Conscience.

So that it is by the equilibre of the muscles, by the aid of a considerable and equipollent muscular force in constant exertion, that the head maintains its erect posture.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

When the equilibrist balances a rod upon his finger, not only the attention of his mind, but the observation of his eye, is constantly requisite.
Stewart. Of the Human Mind, vol. i. c. 2.

All the occupations of life are found to have their advantages and disadvantages admirably adapted to preserve the just equilibrium of happiness.—Knox. Essays, No. 53.

EQUI-NE'CESSARY. Lat. Æquus, equal, and necessarius, needful.

Equally needful.

The ancients make two several kinds
Of prowess in heroic minds,
The active and the passive val'ant,
Both which are pari libra gallant;
For both to give blows, and to carry,
In fights are equinecessary.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

E'QUINOX. } Fr. Equinoxe; It. Equinozio; Sp. Equinoccio; Lat. Æquinoctium, from Æquus, equal, and nox, the night.
EQUINO'CTIAL, adj.
EQUINO'CTIAL, n.

A period of the year so called, because then the night is equal to the day.

Equinoctial is used as equivalent to equator, (qv.)

By nature he knew eche ascentioun
Of the equinoctial in thilke toun.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,562.

This equinoctiall is cleped the midwale of the first meuinge, or els of the sunne.—Id. Of the Astrolabie, p. 263.

—— And do but see his vice,
'Tis to his vertue, a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other.—Shakes. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

It commeth thus to passe, that by the variable increment of the day-light, the longest day in Meroe doth comprehend 12 equinoctial houres, and 8 parts of one houre but in Arexandria 14 houres, in Italie 15, in Britaine 17.
Holland. Pinie, b ii. c. 75.

That the earth is in the middest of the whole world it appeareth by manifest and undoubted reasons, but most evidently, by the equal houres of the equinoctiall.
Id. Ib. c. 69.

But the great convolvulus or white flowred bindweed observes both motions of the sun, while the floure twists æquinoctionally from the left hand to the right, according to the daily revolution the stalk twineth ecliptically from the right to the left according to the annual conversion.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

The passage yet was good, the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

For here, expos'd to perpendicular rays,
In vain they covet shades, and Thracia's gales,
Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
The cordial grass perpetual motion keep,
Quick circulating. J. Philips. Cider, b ii

I cannot move with these precessions of the equinoxes, which are preparing for us the return of some very old, I am afraid no golden, æra, or the commencement of some new æra, that must be denominated from some new metal.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculas, in Alpine snow:
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline.
Hart. The Charitable Mason.

EQUIP, v. } Fr. Esquiper, (and with the common omission of the s.) équipper; from the Ger. Schiff, which signifies un navire, a ship, (Menage.) And this etymology is considered by Skinner himself not to be without probability, (verisimilitudine,) though he previously proposes the Lat. Ephippiare, i. e. equum ephippio instruere; to furnish a horse with trappings. The Low Lat. Eschipare, Du Cange calls, vox a re nautica desumpta. And Junius affirms it to be manifestly derived from the English, ship; and that thus eschipatus, is as much as to say, well provided and prepared (bene adornatus et instructus) as ships of war should be. Skinner, who died in 1667, (An. Æt. 45,) declares it to be a word introduced into English in his time. But the word written Esquippe, is in Barett's Alvearie, 1573; and (in v. Instruere) in Cooper's Thesaurus, 1573. "To esquippe or furnish ships with all abilements." And see Verstegan, c. 7, who treats the word as a useless novelty.

EQUIPAGE, v. }
EQUIPAGE, n. }
EQUIPMENT. }

The common usage is well explained by Cotgrave.

"Esquiper or equiper,—to equip, arm, attire, store with, provide of, necessary furniture; to prepare, make ready, set in array, enable, by full provision, for an action, service or exploit."

On them three dukes, as their attendants be,
Seven earls, twelve barons in their equipace,
And twenty bishops.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

O if my temples were distain'd with wine
And girt in garlands of wilde ivie twine;
How could I reare the Muse on stately stage,
And teach her tread aloft in buskin fine,
With queint bellona in her equipage.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. October.

When loe, (O Fate!) his work, not seeming fit
To walk in equipage with better wit,
Is kept from light.—Browne. Britannia's Past b i s. 2.

A Frenchman told me lately, that was at your audience, that he never saw so many complete gentlemen in his life, for the number, and in a neater equipage.
Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 21.

Shee forth issewed with a goodly traine
Of squires and ladies equipaged well,
And entertained them right fairely, as befell
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b ii. c. 9

This promise of so short a stay prevails:
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch.—Dryden. Ovid Met b x

The Parliament refusing to consent to this proposal, the States General gave orders for equipping a considerable fleet, consisting of about 100 ships of war.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol i. p 335.

Sir Hudibras his passing worth,
The manner how he sally'd forth,
His arms and equipage are shown,
His horse's virtues and his own. Hudibras, pt. i c. 1.

To me his secret thoughts he first declar'd,
Then, well equipp'd, a rapid bark prepar'd,
By Odorico the Biscayan's care,
On sea and land a master of the war.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xiii.

—— Well dress'd, well bred,
Well equipag'd, is ticket good enough
To pass us readily through every door.—Cowp. Task, b i.i.

We know, that our new brethren, whilst they every where shut up the churches, increased in Paris, at one time, at least four-fold, the opera-houses, the play houses, the publick shows of all kinds; and even in their state of indigence and distress, no expense was spared for their equipment and decoration.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

EQUI-PE'NDENCY. Lat. Æquus, equal, and pendens, pres. part. of pendere, to hang.
Equilibration, equipoise.

Wherefore, doubtless, the will of man in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand, or not to stand; to accept, or not accept the temptation.
South, vol. i. Ser. 2.

E'QUI-POISE, or, as written by Derham, Æquipoise. Poise, Fr. Peser; It. Pesare; Sp. Pesar; from Lat. Pendere, to hang.

Equal weight, equality, evenness or sameness of weight; equilibration; balance.

For in the first place, the distribution is so well made, the earth and waters so handsomely, so workman-like laid, everywhere all the world over, that there is a just æquipoise of the whole globe.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii c. 5.

I was weary of continual irresolution, and a perpetual equipoise of the mind: and ashamed of being the favourite of those who were scorned and shunned by the rest of mankind.—Rambler, No. 93.

EQUI-PO'LLENT, adj. }
EQUIPO'LLENTLY. }
EQUIPO'LLENCE. }
EQUIPO'LLENCY. }

Fr. Equipollent; It. and Sp. Equipollente. The Fr. have the verb Equipoller; Lat. Æquus, and pollens, pres. part. of pollere, to be strong; from the Gr. Πολυς, multus. Nam pollere dicitur, qui multum valet.

Equally strong or powerful; strong or powerful, or able in the same degree; having the same strength, force, power, or ability; equivalent.

Thou wil to kings be equipolent,
With great lords euen and peregal.
Lidgate. Balade of Good Counsaile.

Let him studie in equipolence,
And let lies and falsnes
If that he would deserue our graces.—Chaucer. R of the R

Onely superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firme as butchers by occupation: and votary resolution is made equipollent to custome, even in matter of blood.—Bacon. Ess Of Custome and Education

If you should ransacke the whole Greeke language, you shall not find a word to counteruaile Ineptus. Thus far Tullie. Yet Budæus would not seeme to acknowledge this barrennesse, but that the Greeke word ανεπιτηδειος is equipollent to ineptus.—Holinshed Irelande, c. 1.

These phænomena do much depend upon a mechanical æquipollence of pressure.—Boyle Works, vol iii. p 612.

This pressure of the atmosphere being continual, if the springiness of the aerial particles were not now great enough to resist that pressure, they must necessarily have been beforehand inflected or compressed by it, till the endeavours of the one and the other were reduced to an equipollency.
Id Th. vol iii p 606.

As God by mere word and will created things, when he spake, and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast, so did Jesus in like manner, by the efficacy of his command, or by actions equipollent thereto, without predisposing the subjacent matter, or using any natural instrument, accomplish his great and strange works, he rebuked the wind, and said to the sea, Peace, be still
Barrow, vol ii Ser. 30

And the more ancient Greeks, Athanasius, Basil, both the Gregories, Epiphanius, Cyrillus Alexandrinus, do (although seldom expressly in terms yet equipollently and according to sense) say the same.—Id. Ser 31.

So that it is by the equilibre of the muscles, by the aid of a considerable and equipollent muscular force in constant exertion, that the head maintains its erect posture
Paley. Natural Theology, c 9

EQUI-PO'NDERATE, v. }
EQUIPO'NDERATE, adj. }
EQUIPO'NDERANT. }
EQUIPO'NDIOUS. }

Lat. Æquus, and pondus, ponderis, a weight: from pendere, to weigh.

To weigh equally; to have even weight, the same weight; to balance; to equilibrate, to be in equipoise.

This is manifestible by an easier way, in long wires equiponderate with untwisted silk and soft wax.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c 2.

If the needle be not exactly equiponderant, that end which is thought too light, if touched, becometh even.—Id. Ib.

On this account the Scepticks affected an equiponderous neutrality as the only means to their ataraxia, and freedom from passionate disturbances.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 23.

Suppose in the two scales of a balance there was placed two equally capacious and equiponderant phials, whereof one is quite full and the other almost full; it is evident, that the full vessell will keep the scale it leaned upon depressed.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 663.

When the evidence on each side doth equiponderate, this doth not properly beget an assent, but rather a hesitation, or suspension of assent.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b i c 1

But whether my expectations are most fix'd on pardon or praise, I think it not necessary to discover, for having accurately weighed the reasons for arrogance and submission, I find them so nearly equiponderant, that my impatience to try the event of my first performance will not suffer me to attend any longer to the trepidations of the balance
Rambler, No. 1.

EQUI-TEMPORA'NEOUS. Lat. Æquus, and tempus, time; perhaps from Gr. Τεμν-ειν, secare, to cut. See CONTEMPORISE.

Of the same time; of the same duration, at the same moment, of time.

Till Galileo (for he is generally believed the discoverer) took notice of the vibrations with a mathematical eye, men knew not this property of swinging bodies, that the greater and smaller arches were, as to sense, equitemporaneous
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p 476

Suppose in a high church (the book exemplifies Notre Dame) the great candlestick that hangs from the top of the church being made to swing, a philosopher that has observed that the vibrations of a pendulum, though the arches it describes be unequal, are in the sense formerly declared equitemporaneous, &c.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 459.

E'QUITY. }
E'QUITABLE. }
E'QUITABLY. }

Fr. Equité; It. Equità; Sp. Equidad, Lat. Æquitas, from Lat. Æquus. See EQUAL, and EQUABLE.

Equity appears to mean, literally, likeness, sameness, evenness; and is applied to the administration or distribution of the laws, either of a particular state or community, or those of nature, alike to all; to even-handed justice; and thus is said, to level or smoothen, or mitigate the asperity or rigour of strict law (the summum jus) which is guided by general rules, and not prepared for exceptions. See the quotations from J. Taylor, and Blackstone.

So wise and ripe wordes hadde she,
And jugement of so grete equitee,
That she from heven sent was, as men wend,
Pepte to save, and every wrong to amend.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8315.

So that he kepte his libertee
To do justice and equitee,
Without lucre of suche richesse.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

They understande not the covenaunt of the lawe they cannot declare equitee and ordinaunce they cannot fynde out the darcke sentences.—Bible, 1551. Jesus Syrach, c 38

For to touch briefly some few things of the devine depth, which humane reason is able to attaine, whome thou thinkest most just and most observant of equity, seemeth otherwise in the eies of Providence which knoweth all.
Boetius Philosophical Comfort, b iv an. 1609.

Equity, although it signifies all that reasonableness by which the burden of laws is alleviated, yet here I mean it in the particular sense, that is, the easing of punishments, and the giving gentle sentences, not by remission of what is justly incurred, for that is clemency, but by declaring the dedicated person not to be involved in the curse of the law, or not so deeply, not to punish any man more than the law compels us; that is equity
Bp Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 6.

It is but just and equitable that they [the Parliament] should have the principall nomination and recommendation of them to the king rather than any others whomsoever.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt ii. p. 12.

The objects of mercy themselves will be present, and will with pleas're discover the blessed hands that relieved them; nor shall their testimony be wanting, when the judge of the world doth, as it were, point and appeal to them in the throng, as evidences of the equity of that sentence he is then about to pronounce: Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.
Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

If this passage be compared with the preceding letters and instructions, all equitable men may judge whether the king did not pass sentence against himself, and absolve the high court of justice.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 262.

The law of Moses did allow of retaliation in case of real injuries, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth; and so by an equitable construction of the law, it may extend to personal affronts.—Stillingfleet, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

From this method of interpreting laws, by the reason of them, arises what we call equity, which is thus defined by Grotius, "the correction of that wherein the law (by reason of its universality) is deficient."—Blackstone. Comm Intr.

——Behold my gage;
I wait for justice.
King. Justice shalt thou have—
Nor shall an equitable claim depend
On such precarious issue.—Smollet. Regicide, Act iv. sc 9.

Now, say the objectors, had the law concealed a future state from the Jews, it is plain they were not equitably dealt with, since they were to be judged in a future state.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. i. s. 4.

EQUI'VALENT, adj.
EQUI'VALENT, n.
EQUI'VALENCE, n.
EQUI'VALENCE, v.
EQUI'VALENCY.
EQUI'VALENTLY.

Fr. Equivalent; It. and Sp. Equivalente; (q.d.) æquè valens. Lat. Val-ere, from the Gr. Ουλ-ειν (the υ prefixed;) and ουλ-ειν, from the Ionic Ουλ-ος, for ὁλ-ος, integer, sanus, whole, sound.

Equally firm or strong, powerful, efficacious; equally valuable.

His termes of like force, and meaninge, which he calleth equivalent, must need importe thus mutche.
Jewell, A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 302.

But when he weyeth the fault, and recompence,
He dampneth this his dede and fyndeth playne
Atwene them two no whitt equivalence.—Wyatt, Ps. 51.

——No fair to thine
Equivalent or second, which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee of right declar'd
Sovran of creatures, universal dame.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Whether the sin of our first parents were the greatest of any since, whether the transgression of Eve seducing, did not exceed that of Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to the schoolmen.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 1.

But there are yet three ways more by which single acts do become habits by equivalency and moral value, and are here to be considered accordingly.
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 4. s. 3.

I have translated divers passages rendering the words lieve, sous, and many others of known signification in France, into their equivalent sense, that I may the better be understood by my English readers.—Guardian, No. 53.

For, in the first place, in recompence for the expence to which this (the continuance of this work) will put my readers: it is to be hoped they may receive from every paper so much instruction, as will be a very good equivalent.
Spectator, No. 445.

Of all our many necessities, none can be supplied without pains, wherein all men are obliged to bear a share; every man is to work for his food, for his apparel, for all his accommodations, either immediately and directly, or by commutation and equivalence.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

We do by this practice, not only expose ourselves to censure, but implicitly, and according to ready consequence, do press it upon ourselves, seeing we seldom, in kind or equivalently, are ourselves clear of that which we charge upon others.—Id. vol. i Ser. 20.

This inferior state of well-being requires, either that we should be totally exempt from pain, and all corporeal or mental sufferings; or that we continue in the possession of some good that is more than an equivalent, and is capable, in some way or other, of indemnifying us for all that we suffer, or may have suffered.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, Disc. 3. § 2.

You may think it dear of the postage, which may amount to four or five shillings. However, I fear you will not find an equivalence of amusement.
Dr. Goldsmith. To the Rev. H. Goldsmith.

E'QUIVOKE, v.
EQUI'VOCATE, v.
EQUI'VOCACY.
EQUI'VOCATING, n.
EQUI'VOCAL.
EQUI'VOCALLY.
EQUI'VOCALNESS.
EQUI'VOCANT.
EQUIVOCA'TION.
EQUI'VOCATOR.

Fr. Equivoquer; Sp. Equivocar; It. Equivocare, from æquè, and vocare, when by one word (uni voce) various things are signified; and thus the specific meaning becomes ambiguous.

To speak ambiguously; to use ambiguous language; to use or employ words of ambiguous or doubtful significance, that may be variously or diversely interpreted.

Equivoke, Bullokar and Cockeram both have, "when one word signifieth the same things."

Equivocal words are also equal words, words of equal meaning.

Equivocal generation, also called spontaneous; uncertain, unascertained.

Wherefore mokell folke saine, if a reasonable creature's soule, any thing feruently wilneth, affectuously he willneth; and thus may wil by terme of equivocus, in thre wates been vnderstand.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

Now wold these heretikes blynde vs with theyr equivocacion.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 266.

Thou hast no proper father of thine own,
But art a bastard got by th' town,
By equivoque generation.—Brome. Against Corrupted Sack.

——I know your equivocks,
You are growne the better fathers of 'hem o'late.
B. Jonson. The Devil is an Asse, Act iii. sc. 1.

Kin. As thou art a knaue and no knaue, what an equivocall companion is this!
Shakespeare. All's Well that End's Well, Act v. sc. 3.

But if this fear be instanc'd in a matter of religion, it will be apt to multiply eternal scruples, and they are equivocal effects of a good meaning, but are proper and univocal enemies to piety and a wise religion.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 1, s. 2.

Whatsoever pretends to be a service of God in an uncommanded instance, by being the specification of a general command, or the instance of a grace, must be naturally and univocally such, not equivocally and by pretension only.
Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Yea, and an answere by oracle later than these before cited, which verely was true, but no less ambiguous and equivocant, Aio te, Æacide, Romanos vincere posse, I say, thyself Æacides the Romans vanquish may.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 224.

For these Jesuits, they indeed make no vow of speaking truth, and yet even this equivocating and lying is a kind of unchastity against which they vow and promise.
State Trials. Henry Garnet, an. 1606.

So then our equivocation is not to maintain lying, but to defend the use of certain propositions; for a man may be asked of one who hath no authority to interrogate, or examine concerning something which belongeth not to his cognizance who asketh, as what a man thinketh, &c. So then no man may equivocate, when he ought to tell the truth, otherwise he may.—Id. Ib

My question is, where have you hope of reconciliation? except only in equivocation of name.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13. Selden's Illustrations.

Ham. How absolute the knaue is! we must speake by the carde, or equivocation will vndoe vs.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

Faith—here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against eyther scale, who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heauen: oh, come in equivocator.—Id. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 3.

The second ranke is of lyars, equivocators, as Apollo Pythius, and the like.—Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p. 44.

It is so evident, that all animals, yea and vegetables too, owe their production to parent animals and vegetables, that I have often admired at the sloth and prejudice, of the ancient philosophers in so easily taking upon trust the Aristotelian, or rather the Ægyptian doctrine of æquivocal generation.—Derham. Phys. Theol. b. iv. c. 15. Note.

These sorts of faith are in comparison to that we speak of but equivocally so called; it includes a firm resolution to perform carefully all the duties enjoyned to Christians, to undergo patiently all the crosses incident to Christianity.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

The equivocalness of the title gave a handle to those that came after to understand it of a form of faith, composed by Athanasius, just as the equivocal title of the Apostolical given to the Roman creed occasioned the mistake about its being made by the Apostles.
Waterland. Critical Hist. of the Athanasian Creed, c. 8.

"Then," said the Hind, "as you the matter state,
Not only Jesuits can equivocate;
For real, as you now the word expound,
From solid substance dwindles to a sound."
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Tresham a little before his death in the Tower subscribed his own hand, that he had not seen Garnett in sixteen years before, when it was evidently proved, and Garnett confessed they had been together the summer before, and all that Garnett had to say for him was, that he supposed he meant to equivocate.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

And hence we see that there is least use of distinctions where there is most knowledge, I mean in mathematicks where men have determined ideas with known names to them, and so there being no room for equivocations, there is no need of distinctions.—Locke. Hum. Underst § 30.

I know well enough how equivocal a test this kind of popular opinion forms of the merit that obtained it [public confidence.]—Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

As to the second, that Moses's ignorance made him incapable of founding a good religion, it receives all its strength from an equivocation in the term, good; and a misrepresentation of the nature of the Mosaic history.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. App.

ER, also written, Or, Our: the termination of nouns in Latin and English, and (er) of comparatives in English, seems to be the A. S. Ær,—the front; in time or space; the person so being; the prime person or agent (Lat. Her-us; Gr. Ηρ-ως); in comparison denoting precedence, priority, &c. See ARE, ERE, and EARL.

E'RA, or as more usually written, Æra. Lat. Æra, of uncertain etymology. Joseph Scaliger thinks that Æra was used for Number, (pro numero.) See Vossius. Perhaps the Goth. Air; A. S. Ær. See ARE, and ERE.

An Era is an indefinite series of years beginning from some known Epoch, with which last word it is often used synonimously.

I encline to this opinion, that from the evening ushering in the first day of the world, to that midnight which began the first day of the Christian æra, there was 4003 years, seventy dayes, and six temporarie houres; and that the true nativity of our Saviour was full four years before the beginning of the vulgar Christian æra, as is demonstratible by the time of Herod's death.
Usher. Annals. The Epistle to the Reader.

For learned men are not all agreed in the fixing of the true time of Christ's incarnation, some placing it two years, and some four years before the vulgar æra.
Prideaux. Connection, vol. i. Pref. p. ii.

Ne bloody rumours violate the ear,
Of cities sack'd and kingdoms desolate,
With plague or sword, with pestilence or war.
Ne rueful murder stain thy era-date.
Thompson. An Hymn to May.

E-RA'DIATE, v.
ERADIA'TION.

Lat. e, and radius, from the Gr. Ῥαβδος, virga, and thence transferred to other things which resemble longitudinem virgæ, (the length of the rod,) and among these, to the lines which the sun throws forth or emits. See IRRADIATE.

To throw forth, eject or emit, (sc.) like rays from the sun.

A kind of life eradiating and resulting both from intellect and Psyche.—More. Notes on Psychozoia.

He first supposeth some eradiation and emanation of spirit, or secret quality, or whatsoever, to be directed from our bodies to the blood dropped from it.
Hale. Remains, p. 288.

E-RA'DICATE, v.
ERADICA'TION.
ERA'DICATING, n.
ERA'DICATIVE, adj.
ERA'DICATIVE, n.

Lat. Eradicare, (e, and radix, radicis, the root.) To pluck up the root, to root out. The Lat. Radix, Vossius thinks, is from the Gr. Ῥαδις, a branch; nor is he deterred by the difference of usage: for as the upper part of the tree spreads itself in branches, so the lower disperses in fibres (quasi ramulis) through the earth.

To root up or out; to pluck or tear up by the roots; to destroy utterly; to exterminate.

Since I must now eradicate the flame,
Which, seeing you, love in my bosome plac'd,
And the desires, which thus long could last,
Kindled so well, and nourish'd in the same.
Cotton. Sonnet, out of Astrea.

The third affirmeth the roots of mandrakes do make a noise, or give a shreek upon eradication; which is indeed ridiculous and false, below confute.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

The first work, therefore, that a man must do, to make himself capable of the good of solitude, is, the very eradication of all lusts; for how is it possible for a man to enjoy himself, while his affections are tied to things without himself?—Cowley. Ess. Of Solitude.

Which case, because it seldom or never falls out to agree in all circumstances, with the case of any other sinful people, cannot lawfully prescribe to the eradicating of any other (though in our opinion never so great) enemies of God, until it appear as demonstrably to us, as it did to those Israelites, that it was the will of God they should be so dealt with.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 589.

Whereas no kind of institution will be sufficient to eradicate these natural notions out of the minds of men.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. I. c. 4.

It usually begins to work early, and does it without causing near so much straining as vulgar emetics; and yet makes copious evacuations, eradicative of the morbific matter.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 386.

Thus sometimes eradicatives are omitted, in the beginning requisite; as in violent motions of the matter; specially to the more noble parts: then, how absurd to rest in lenitives.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 88.

And it were highly to be wished, that legislative power would thus direct the law rather to reformation than severity. That it would seem convinced that the work of eradicating crimes is not by making punishments familiar, but formidable.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 27.

Hence an attempt to eradicate religious fears, may be destructive to a principle of action, which is not only natural in itself, but has proved highly beneficial. What is the proper inference? That it is the province of true philosophy to give these principles a right direction, and a due influence, and it will then rejoice that a total eradication has not been accomplished.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, Dis. 3.

ERA'SE, v. } Lat. Erad-ere, asum, to scrape
ERA'SURE. } out.

To scrape out, to scratch out; to rub out, to obliterate.

Erased, in Heraldry, signifies any bearing violently torn off, in contradistinction to couped, which means cleanly cut off.

Dragg'd out through straiter holes by th' ears,
Eras'd, or coup'd for perjurers.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

A king is ever surrounded by a crowd of infamous flatterers, who find their account by keeping him from the least light of reason, till all ideas of rectitude and justice are erased from his mind.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

The most degenerate and horrid practice among the ancients, of exposing infants, was universal; and had almost erased morality from the minds of the best instructed, and instinct from the breasts of the most tenderly affected.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

Habit, therefore, previously formed, would for some time preserve a respect for the records of the ancient church, when the pure religion was forsaken. And while this habit operated, fear would prevent any corruptions of them by wilful mutilation, changes, or erasures.
Horsley. Diss. on Prophecies of the Messiah.

ERE. } Goth. Air; A.S. Ær, prius, dudum,
ERST. } first, before. (See ER, and ARR.) A. S. Æriста, primus. Junius says, that ær was formerly applied to the morning; that is, the beginning or anterior part of the day; and was afterwards extended to any other precedent or antecedent time. See EARLY.

Ere is used prefixed, as ere-long, ere-now.

Erst is, Er-est. See EST.

The Kyng Egbrygt adde ybe kyng thre and thrytty ger,
That folc of Denemarch hyder com, as yt adde ydo er.
R. Gloucester, p. 259.

Ich seyh nevr palmē. with pyk ne with shrippe
Asken after hym er now. Piers Ploughman, p. 120.

Er it was day, as she was wont to do,
She was arisen, and all redy dight.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1043.

And therfore wold I maken you disport
As I said erst, and don you some comfort.
Id. The Prologue, v. 778.

Valerian gan fast unto hire swere,
That for no cas, no thing that mighte be,
He shulde never to non bewraien here;
And then at erst thus to him saide she.
Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,619.

In harte I waxt so wonder gaie
That I was neuer erst, er that daie
So iolife, nor so wel bego,
Ne mery in harte, as I was tho.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And the colour, whiche erste was pale
To beautee than was restored.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

That gappe haue I stopped already that he shall sticke still at a stake and reste his bones in the bushes ere euer he geat out there.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 528.

A great quarreller and fray maker, glad when he may be at defiance with one or other, he made such shiftes for money ere-now, that I maruaile how he hath hued till this day.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 95.

From his pavillion, where he sat in state,
Armd for the siege, and buckling on his shield,
Brave Henry sends his herald to the gate,
By trumpet's sound to summon them to yield,
And to accept his mercy, ere too late.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

——— Should we defer it,
I think ere-long, he will believe, and strongly
The Dauphin is not worthy of her.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act iii. sc. 2.

Then when I am thy captive talk of chaines,
Proud limitarie Cherub, but ere-then
Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

——— It cannot be
But that success attends him; if mishap,
Ere-this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers. Id. Ib. b. x.

And fabled, how the Serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide—
Encroaching Eve, perhaps, had first the rule,
Of High Olympus, thence by Saturn driv'n
And Ops, ere-yet Dictæan Jove was born.—Id. Ib.

For, since the red crosse knight he erst did weet
To been with Guyon knit in one consent,
The ill which earst to him, he now to Guyon meant.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Those thick and clammy vapours which erst-while ascended in such vast measures, and had filled the vault of heaven with smoak and darkness, must at length obey the laws of their nature and gravity, and so descend again in abundant showers, and mingle with the subsiding ashes, which will constitute a mudd vegetative and fertile.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

Now were the fields overspread with the bodies of slain men, and strewed thick with armour, ere-while so brave and glorious.—Holland. Livie, p. 344.

He pensive oft reviews the mighty dead,
That erst have trod this desolated ground;
Reflects how here unhappy Salisbury bled,
When faction arm'd the death-dispensing wound.
Langhorn. Written among the Ruins of Pontefract Castle.

I who ere-while have worn the chain
Of many a fair-one for a day,
Then flung the flowery band away,
Am now involv'd and fetter'd fast
In links that will for ever last.
Fawkes. Odes of Anacreon. The Dream, Ode 45.

ERE'CT, v. } Fr. Eriger; It. Ergere, erigere; Lat. Erigere, (e, and regere,) to rule or order.
ERE'CT, adj.
ERE'CTING, n.
ERE'CTION.
ERE'CTNESS.
ERE'CTOR.

To set upright, to rise or raise upright; to set up, to lift up, to raise or elevate.

And saw wel that the shadow of every tree
Was as in lengthe of the same quantitee
That was the body erect, that caused it,
And therfore by the shadow he toke his wit.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4429.

Now there is no building of pillars, no erecting of arches, no blasing of armes, that doth more set forth a man's name, then doth the encrease of children.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 46.

The trifoile, against raine, swelleth in the stalk; and so standeth more upright; for by wet, stalkes doe erect; and leaves bow downe.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 827.

Then, Fortune, thou art guilty of his deed,
That didst his state above his hopes erect;
And thou must bear the blame of his great sin,
That left'st him worse than when he did begin.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Whose first part may be true; if we take erectness strictly, and so as Galen hath defined it, for they onely, saith he, have an erect figure, whose spine and thigh bone are carried in right lines; and so indeed of any we yet know man onely is erect.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 1.

As for the end of this erection, to look up toward heaven; though confirmed by several testimonies, and the Greek etymologie of man, it is not so readily to be admitted.
Id. Ib.

This was in the yeare after the birth of our Saiiour 203, from the creation of the world 4170, and after the first erection of the Scotish kingdome 330.
Holinshed. Scotland, an. 203.

For birds, they generally carry their heads erectly like man, and have advantage in their upper eye-lid.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 1.

We see this in Roboam's young councellors, who were not only the mediate instruments of rendering the kingdome, but also in some relation, were the erectors of Jeroboam's Calves.—Mountayne. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 9. s. 2.

When eager for the course each nerve he strains,
Hangs on the bit, and tugs the stubborn reins,
At every shout erects his quivering ears,
And his broad breast upon the barrier bears.
Rowe. Lucan, b. 1.

Our Panther, though like these she changed her head,
Yet as the mistress of a monarch's bed,
Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The crosier wielded, and the mitre wore.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Whereas the other was to be diffused throughout the world, and to endure together with it; that is, to be, indeed, what we find it not long after its first erection styled, the Catholic Church.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 4.

——— Round her throne,
Erected in the bosom of the just,
Each Virtue, listed, forms her manly guard.
Young. The Complaint, Night 8.

By an unanimous vote of the court (of Directors of the East India Company) it was resolved, that a monument to his [Sir William Jones] memory should be ordered, for the purpose of being erected in Saint Paul's Cathedral, with a suitable inscription, and that a statue of Sir William Jones should be prepared at the expence of the Company, and sent to Bengal with directions for its being placed in a proper situation there.—Life of Sir W. Jones, by Lord Teignmouth.

The only measure that can be of any essential service, is the erection of several spacious parish churches, capable of receiving very large congregations, and affording decent accommodations for the lower and inferior, as well as the higher, orders of the people.—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 8. (Note.)

E'REMITE. } Lat. Eremita; Gr. Ερημιτης,
ERE'MITICAL. } from Ερημος, a desert.
E'REMITISH. } "Fr. Ermite; one (says
E'REMITAGE. } Cotgrave) that liveth in a desart." A Hermit.

And ermytes and monckes of other studes byeyde
Bede God, that the Brutons the maystrye moste bytyde.
R. Gloucester, p. 235.

In abit as an ermite, unholy of workes
That wente forthe in the world.—Piers Ploughman, p. 1.

An eremite in Italie, professing a marualious straight life, and eschewing the citie, dwelt in a deserte, where he made him selfe a caue, wrought by his owne hands with spade and shouell.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 152.

Thou Spirit who ledst this glorious eremite
Into the desert, his victorious field
Against the spiritual foe, and broughtst him thence
By proof the undoubted Son of God, inspire,
As thou art wont, my prompted song else mute.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

An old physician had in his custody a leaden box, which, as he affirmed, was found in the ruins of an old eremitage, as it was a repairing.—Skelton. Don Quixote, p. 136.

Saint Bertilin was a Britton of a noble birth; and led an eremiticall life in the woods near Stafford.
Fuller. Worthies. Staffordshire

So much, as doing good, is better than not doing evill, will I account Christian good fellowship better than an eremitish and melancholike solitariness.
Bp. Hall. Meditations & Vows, Cent. 1.

More blest the life of godly eremite,
Such as on lonely Athos may be seen,
Watching at eve upon the giant height.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 2. s. 27.

Here with a few companions he revived or augmented the primitive austerity of the Benedictine order, intermixed with its rule some portion of the eremitical life, and laid the foundation of the congregation called, from its principal monastery, Camaldulensis or Camaldolese.
Eustace. Classical Tour through Italy, vol. iii. c. 11.

E'RIACH. } The examples explain this
E'RIC. } word.

As, for example, in the case of murder, the Brehon, that is their judge, will compound between the murderer and the friends of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child, or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriach.—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

The Irish, who never had any connections with the German nations, adopted the same practice till very lately; and the price of a man's head was called among them his eric; as we learn from Sir John Davis.
Hume. Hist. of England, vol. i. p. 220. App. 1.

E'RMINE, v. } Fr. Ermine, upon which Sir
E'RMINE, n. } Philip Sidney bestows the ex-
E'RMELINE. } pressive epithet of Hatespot
See EMERLIN.

Kay, Kyng of Aunges, a thousend knygtes nome
Of noble men, yclothed in ermyne echone.
R. Gloucester, p. 1[illegible]

Two mantels, vnto hem were brought
Fret with pearle, and rich stones wrought
Of cloth of gold, and violet crimsin
Full richly furred with ermin.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

The men of Rutland, to them marching nigh,
In their rich ensign bear an ermin ram.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

On the first day of which parlement, the lord deputie, representing hir maiesties person, was conducted and attended in most honorable manner vnto Christes Church, and from thense vnto the parlement house where he sat vnder the cloth of estate, being apparelled in the princelie robes of crimson veluet doubled or lined with ermin.
Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1568.

And on his shield enueloped seuenfold
He bore a crowned little ermilin,
That deckt the azure field with her faire pouldred skin.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Fair yokes of ermilines, whose colours pass
The whitest snows on aged Grampius' face,
More swift than Venus' birds this chariot guided
To the astonish'd bank.—Drummond. Sonnets, pt. i. s. 13.

Should a monkey wear a crown,
Must I tremble at his frown?
Could I not through all his ermine,
Spy the strutting, chattering vermin.
Swift. To a Lady, (1726.)

Self-flattering sex! your hearts believe in vain
That Love shall blind, when once he fires the swain;
Or hope a lover by your faults to win,
As spots on ermine beautify the skin.
Collins. Oriental Eclogues, Ecl. i.

Fur gown, gold chain, or regal robe,
Which rules, in ermin'd state the globe.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

For, brandishing the rod, she doth begin
To loose the brogues, the stripling's late delight!
And down they drop; appears the dainty skin,
Fair as the furry coat of whitest ermilin.
Shenstone. The School-mistress.

ERO'DE, v. } Lat. Erodere; e, and rod-ere,
ERO'SION. } to gnaw. "Fr. Eroder, — to gnaw off or about; to eat into."

It hath been antiently received, that the sea hare [air] hath an antipathy with the lungs, (if it commeth neer the body,) and erodeth them.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 983.

This affects ulcers of ill condition, where the membranes and tendons are eroded.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 1.

If that erosion be with jagged and callous lips, it is at least virulent.—Id. Ib.

The people here [Santa Cruz] believe it [Euphorbia Canariensis] to be so caustic as to erode the skin.
Cooke. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

EROGA'TION. Lat. Erogare, atum, (rog-are, from opey-ew, to stretch, to reach after, and thus, to seek.) See ARROGATE, and DEROGATE.

To seek, (sc.) money for the public expenses; erogare legem, to enact a law, (sc.) for the advancement of such money; and then, generally—

To grant money; to bestow, to give or grant.

For to the acquirynge of science belongeth understandyng and memorye, which, as a treasory, hath power to retayne, and also to erogate, and dystribute, when opportunitie happeneth.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 22.

Touching the wealth of England, it never appeared so much by publick erogations and taxes, which the long parliament raised: insomuch, that it may be said the last king was beaten by his own image more than any thing else.
Howell, b. iv. Let. 47.

EROTICAL. Gr. Ερωτικος, (from eρως, love,) that can or may love.

And so doth Jason Pratensis, c. 19, De Morb. Cerebri, (who writes copiously of this *erotical*l love) place and reckon it amongst the affections of the braine.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 442.

ERR, v.
E'RRABLENESS.
E'RRANT.
E'RRANTRY.
ERRA'TICK.
ERRA'TICAL.
ERRA'TICALLY.
ERRO'NEOUS.
ERRO'NEOUSLY.
ERRO'NEOUSNESS.
E'RROUR.
E'RROURFUL.

Fr. Errer; Sp. Errar; It. Errare; Lat. Errare; from the Gr. Ερρ-ειν, ire, to go; and hence errâre, to go forward, to go forth; (see ER;) to go forth, (sc.) without direct course, to no known or fixed end or object; and thus—

To go, or cause to go out of a regular or direct way; to stray or straggle, to go astray; to rove, to ramble, to wander, to mistake, to mislead, to transgress.

Errant, is, wandering, rambling, roving about; travelling about; itinerant, vagrant; and thus, shameless, profligate, wicked, incorrigible, as a vagrant. See ARRANT.

The pape of ther errours had fulle grete pite,
He sent to ther socoure tuo legates ouer the se.
R. Brunne, p. 211.

But for I am a lewed man, paraunter I myghte
Passen par aduenture, and in some poynt erren.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

What semeth to you, if thir weren to a man an hundrid scheep and oon of hem hath errid, wher he schal not leue ninty and nyne in desert, and schal go to seche that that erride.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 18.

Jhesus answeride and saide to hem, Ye erren, not knowynge the Scripturis ne the vertue of God.—Id. Ib. c. 22.

Right so betwix a titeles tiraunt
And an outlawe, or else a theefe erraunt,
The same, I say, ther is no difference.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,173.

And there he saw, with ful auisement
The erratike sterres, herkening armony
With sownes ful of heuines melody.—Id. Troilus, b. v.

Trewly al were it but to shend erronious opinions, I may it no lenger suffer.—Id. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

Youre conseil as in this cas ne shulde not (as to speke proprely) be called a conseilling, but a motion, or a meving of folie, in which conseil ye han erred in many a sondry wise.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

O wery gost, that errest to and fro,
Why nilt thou flen out of the wofullest
Body, that euer might on ground go?—Id. Troilus, b. iii.

Enuie, which is loueles,
And pride, which is laweles,
With such tempestes made hym erre.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Where lawe failleth, errour groweth,
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.—Id. Ib. Prol.

But surely they are in good case, for it is ynough for them to saye, thus it is, and neade neuer to shew any cause or reason why they so say, for they are the churche and cannot erre: so that yf they teache contrary thinges, yet al is good ynough.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 67.

Now his felowes can say, and taught that errand traitour Dudley, Duke of Northumbetland, upon the scaffolde, hoping on pardo of life, to declare upon his unlearned learning, and cobred conscyence, that the truthe hath bene banished, and England diuided from the Catholike faithe and churche, these xvi. years.
Bp. Gardner. True Obedience. Translator to the Reader.

God I take to record I neuer (to my knowledge) taught any erronious doctrine, but onely these things which the Scripture leade me vnto, and that in my sermons I neuer mayntayned any errour, neither moued, nor gaue occasiō of any insurrection.—The Life of Doctour Barnes.

Before all the worlde the exacte sentence of God shal be opened, whiche shall neyther erroniously nor partially pronounce, as men are wont to doe, but as a moste vprighte iudge, and one that knoweth all thinge.—Udal. Rom. c. 2.

They can scarse suffer priuiledges, that is to say, licence to spoile our citizens, giuen them by our forefathers, and brought in by errorfull custome to be taken from them.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 990. A Protestation, &c.

Then blame me not if I haue err'd in count
Of gods, of nymphs, of riuers yet vnread.
For though their numbers do much more surmount,
Yet all those same were there which erst I did recount.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

The causes of error are, 1st. ignorance, either of right or fact. For no other division of ignorance can concern the relation of an erring conscience
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3. Rule 1.

——— And at his warning,
Whether in sea or fire, in earth or ayre,
Th' extravagant and erring spirit hyes
To his confine. Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

Sometimes he [the Devil] tempts by covetousnesse, drunkennesse, pleasure, pride, &c. errs, dejects, saves, kils, protects, and rides some men, as they do their horses.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 56.

It is therefore a safe advice (considering the errableness of our judgments, when extended to foreign and remote subjects) to contain them, as much as may be, within those terms where they may be exercised with the most certaintie, which is, in our own interiour state: and to point them to that mark whither they may carry level (as it were) and so much the surer, that is, to the universal justice and equitie of God.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 4.

As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and diuerte his graine
Tortiue and errant from his course of growth.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

Now she deuis'd amongst the warlike route
Of errant knights, to seeke her errant knight;
And then againe resolv'd to hunt him out
Amongst loose ladies, lapped in delight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

Our champion takes the alarm, and catches at his sword to assault the lady, contrary to all the rules of knight errantry.—Glanvill. Witchcraft, p. 128.

And therefore come not forth in generations erratical, [in some ed. erratically] or different from each other.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6

Y' are now transcrib'd, and publicke view
Pursuing finds the copy true,
Without erratas new crept in
Fully compleat and genuine.—Cartwright. To Mr. W. B

An erroneous conscience commands us to do what we ought to omit; or to omit what we ought to do, or to do it otherwise than we should.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3. Rule 1

Yea, this sincerity of life though severed from true profession, did seem such a jewel in the eyes of some of the ancient fathers, that their opinion was, and so have they in their writings (erroneously doubtless) yet have they testified it, that God hath in store for such men not only this mitigating mercy of which but now I spoke, but even saving grace so far forth as to make them possessors of his kingdom.
Hales. Rem. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

Vntill that Brutus antiently deriu'd
From royall stock of old Assarac's line,
Driuen by fatall errour, heere arriu'd,
And them of their vniust possessions depriued.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Errours of themselves are infirmities of the understanding, and not enormities of the will for no man is willing to be deceived: so that they ought not to be the objects of our hatred, but our pity.—Glanvill, Ser. 2.

I know it is doubted, whether a bare error in judgment can condemn: but since truths absolutely necessary to salvation are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will: and so the case is put out of doubt.
South, vol. i. Ser. 3

If you miscarry, you are lost so far
(For there's no erring twice in love and war)
You'll ne'er recover, but must always wear
Those chains you'll find it difficult to bear.
Pomfret. Love Triumphant over Reason

A generous disdain and reflection, upon how little he deserv'd from so excellent a father, reformed the young man, and made Edward from an errant rake become a fine gentleman.—Tatler, No. 9.

What more probable uses, then, to perform the office of so many suns? that is, to enlighten and warm so many systems of planets; after the manner as our sun doth the *erratick*s, encompassing it. And that this is the use and office of the fixt stars is probable.—Derham. Astro-Theology, b. ii. c. 2.

High o'er the main two rocks exalt their brow,
The boiling billows thundering roll below;
Through the vast waves the dreadful wonders move,
Hence nam'd erratick by the Gods above.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

When a man hath true notions of his duty, or of what is lawful or unlawful, we say that he hath a right conscience: but we do not say he hath a good conscience upon that account. And so when a man is misinformed as to the goodness or badness of an action, that we call an erroneous conscience: but it doth not therefore follow, that it is always an evil conscience.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

The very suppressing and hardning themselves against the thought of their true end, is in order to their present peace and quiet, which they do erroneously substitute in the room of their chief end.—Wilkins. Nat. Religion, b. ii. c. 1.

I have given you so plain an account of the popish doctrine in this matter [satisfaction and purgatory] and have so plainly confuted it from the Scripture, that I hope the most ordinary capacity may understand it, and be satisfied of the erroneousness of it.—Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 8.

Knowledge being to be had only of visible certain truth, error is not a fault of our knowledge, but a mistake of our judgment, giving assent to that which is not true.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20

——— From his airy couch
He stoop'd sublime, and touching with his hand
My dazzling forehead, "Raise thy sight," he cry'd,
"And let thy sense convince thy erring tongue."
Akenside. The Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii

And preaches like an errant Fury,
Gainst all the show folks about Drury,
Says actors are all hellish imps,
All managers the Devil's pimps.
Lloyd. To Garrick, (1761.)

The season of the year is now come, in which the theatres are shut, and the card tables forsaken; the regions of luxury are for awhile unpeopled, and pleasure leads out her votaries to groves and gardens, to still scenes and erratick gratifications.—Rambler, No. 124.

Lo! while our isle with one loud Pæan rings,
Equal, though silent, homage Isis brings;
Isis, whose erring on the modest side
Th' unkind and ignorant mistake for pride.
Harte. To the Prince of Orange.

Hence too we learn with what proportion'd force
The moon impels, erroneous in her course,
The refluent main.—Fawkes. Eulogy on Sir I. Newton.

O blest proficiency! surpassing all
That men erroneously their glory call,
The recompense that arts or arms can yield,
The bar, the senate, or the tented field.
Cowper. Retirement.

Now, hid beneath the flowery turf, they pass;
Ingulph'd, now sport along the velvet grass,
With many an errour slowly-lingering stray,
And murmuring in their course reluctant roll away.
Fawkes. Braham Park.

ERRAND. (Sometimes written Arrand, qv.) A. S. Ærend-ian, to bear or carry tidings, to deliver a message, to declare or bring news.

Ærend,—tidings, news, a message, an embassy. Godes ærend-gast; an angel, a spiritual messenger or embassador, one going on God's errand. See Somner.

Tho me tolde him here erande.—R. Gloucester, p. 147.

Now, sir king, quath Pandulf, thou sedest vs ar this
The priuete of thin herte, & ich the segge iwis
The priuete of oure, and wat oure erinde is.—Id. p. 501.

The messager doth na more, bote hus mouth telleth.
Hus lettere and us erande sheweth and is anon delyvered.
Piers Ploughman, p. 217

If thou thine honour mightest saue
Or any erand mightest make
Thider, for thy loue's sake
Ful faine thou woldest, but for dredo
Thou goest not, leest that men take hede.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And who (amongst all the rest of his seven sonnes) shall be pickt out for this service, but his youngest sonne David, whose former and almost worne-out acquaintance in court, and employment under Saul seemed to fit him best for this errand.—Bp. Hall. Cont. David & Goliah.

For remembring that he took no money with him when he came from his house, and that Cicero his brother also had very little for himself, he thought it best that Cicero should hold on his journey, whilest he himself made an errand home to fetch such things as he lacked, and so to make haste again to overtake his brother.
North. Plutarch, p. 729.

He would understand men's true errand as soon as they had opened their mouths, and began their story in appearance to another purpose.
Locke. Memoirs of Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury.

At once, in bright procession spied,
The female world was at my side,
All, by inquiry, as I found,
On one important errand bound.
Brooke. Fables. Temple of Hymen.

ERRHI'NE. Fr. Errhine; Gr. Ἔρρινα, from ἐν, and ῥὶν, the nose.

The examples explain the application of the word.

Likewise Lysimachia stancheth bloud either in drinke, liniment, or errhine put up into the nose.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 12.

And we see sage or betony bruised, sneezing-powder, and other powders or liquors (which the physitians call errhines) put into the nose, draw flegme, and water from the head.
Bacon. Naturall History, s. 38.

ERU'CTATE. } Fr. Eructation; Sp. Eructar,
ERUCTA'TION. } eructacion; It. Eruttare, eruttazione; Lat. Eructatio, from eructare; Gr. Ἐρευγεῖν, to throw out, to force out.

To throw up, (sc. wind;) to belch.

They would make us believe in Syracusa, now Messina, that Ætna in times past hath eructated such huge boggets of fire, that the sparks of them have burnt houses in Malta, above fifty miles off, transported thither by a direct strong wind.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 27.

But, after all, cabbage ('tis confess'd) is greatly accused for lying undigested in the stomach, and provoking eructations; which makes me wonder at the veneration we read the ancients had for them, calling them divine, and swearing per brassicam.—Evelyn. Discourse of Sallets.

Though he should sign a hundred protests in a session, and daily eructate his invectives against the most respectable men, we will not be misled.—Knox, Ess. 9.

Never let him read with an indigestion, nor after vomiting, nor with sour eructations.
Sir W. Jones. Economicks and Private Morals.

E'RUDITE, adj. } Fr. Erudition; It. Erudito,
ERUDI'TION. } eruditione; Sp. Erudito, erudicion; Lat. Eruditio, from erudire, (e, and rudis, from raudus, which is from the Gr. Ῥαβδος, virga, sc. impolita,) extra rudditatem ponere,—to free from roughness, (Vossius.)

Polished or well wrought; and, (met.) well instructed, well taught, deeply learned.

The kinges highnes as a most erudite price and a most faithfull kinge in hys moste famouse boke amõge many other great authorities & reasons, preced him, [Luther] sore with yᵗ that the gloriouse apostle Saynct Paule calleth it a great sacrament himselfe.—Sir. T. More. Workes, p. 645.

Fame be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice fam'd beyond, beyond all erudition.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 3.

We have not all of us need of the skill in hunting, of military science, of the art of navigation, nor of the mechaniall handicrafts of artizans; but we all stand in need of learning and erudition.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 652.

But sure there is a middle way to be followed; the management of a young lady's person is not to be overlooked, but the erudition of her mind is much more to be regarded.
Spectator, No. 66.

"'Twere well," says one, sage, erudite, profound,
Terribly arch'd, and aquiline his nose,
And overbuilt with most impending brows,
"'Twere well, could you permit the world to live
As the world pleases: what's the world to you?"
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

He was not long satisfied with his Institution of a Christian man; he ordered a new book to be composed, called the Erudition of a Christian man.
Hume. History of England, c. 32.

ERU'GINOUS. Lat. Æruginosus, from ærugo, the rust of brass, (æs, æris.)

Fr. Erugineux, which Cotgrave says is, "of the colour of verdigrease; rusty, cankred or corrupted."

Now artificial copperose, and such as we commonly use, is a rough and acrimonious kind of salt drawn out of ferreous and aruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

ERU'PTION. } Fr. Eruption; It. Eruzione;
ERU'PTIVE. } Sp. Erupcion; Lat. Eruptio, from erumpere, eruptum, to break or burst forth, (e, and rumpere, to burst.)

A breaking or bursting out or forth; a bursting or rushing forth; a sallying forth; shouting or exclaiming.

Miserable losses and continual had the English by their frequent eruptions, from this time to the Norman Conquest.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

Hor. In what particular thought to work I know not:
But in the grosse and scope of my opinion
This boades some strange eruption to our State.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act I. sc. 1.

For certain it is, that to his often mentioned secretary, Dr. Mason, whom he [the Duke of Buckingham] laid in a pallet near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 227.

All which is perverted in this eruptive generation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 16.

So when the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
And swelling sinews echoing blows repeat;
From the volcanos gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 1.

The confusion of things, the eruptions of barbarians, the straits of emperours, the contentions of princes, &c. did all turn to account for him; and in confusion of things he did snatch what he could to himself.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

'Tis listening fear and dumb amazement all:
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south, eruptive through the cloud;
And following slower, in explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.
Thomson. Summer.

Anon, with black eruption from its jaws
A night of smoke, thick driving, wave on wave,
In stormy flow, and cloud involving cloud,
Rolls surging, extinguishing the day.
Mallet. The Excursion, c. 1.

It is in the nature of these eruptive diseases in the state to sink in by fits, and re appear.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

ES, our genitive and plural termination, may be the article As, in Ger. Es, equivalent in meaning to—taken.

E'SBAIED. Fr. Esbahir,—Abashed. See BASE and BAW. Chaucer writes, abaved.

Wherewith [the Letter of Parmenio] he [Alexander] bevnge nothynge esbaied, helde in his handes the letter, and receyuyng the medycyne that Philippe gaue hym, at oone tyme delyuered the letter open to Philyp, and dranke also the medycyne.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 18.

ESCALA'DE. From scala, a ladder, so called from the separations between step and step; from A. S. Scyl-an, to divide, to separate.

"Fr. Escalade, a scalado, a shaling; the taking or surprising of a place by shaling," (Cotgrave.)

Fr. Eschelle, a ladder. Brunne uses eschele, generally, for a division of an army.

The third eschele fulle harde was bisted.
R. Brunne, p. 190.

And for the escaladaes, they had so bad successe, as the rebels were driuen from the walles with the losse of two hundred men.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 181.

ESCA'LOP. "I believe (says Skinner) from the A. S. Scala, a shell:" and shell is from the A. S. Scyl-an, to divide, to separate. The scallop is particularly so called, because the edges of the shell are unequal and jagged.

With such ornament and decoration as best becomes them; as to Nymphs, Tritons, Sea-Gods, escalop-shells, &c.
Evelyn. An Account of Architects.

How can we imagine that any laws of motion can determine the figure of the leaves, that they should be divided into so many jags or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. 1.

ESCA'PE, v. }
ESCA'PE, n. }
ESCA'PER. }
ESCA'PING, n. } Menage (Orig. Della Lingua. Ital.) considers the It. Scapare and Scampare to be the same words, and derives them from the Lat. Campus, q.d. ex campo exire. And Kilian (in v. Schampen, abire) says, Gall. Eschapper; It. Scampare; Sp. Escapar; Ang. Escape. See SCAPE.

To go away, (sc.) out of the reach of danger, out of difficulty, out of sight, out of notice. And as the—

"Fr. Eschapper,—to flie, evade, avoid; shift away; to scape, come or pass through, safely; to free himself, or get rid from; to slip, creep or winde out of," (Cotgrave.)

Escaper,—occurs in the margin, 2 Kings ix. 15.

His praier did him bryng out of his hard cas,
Thanked God & him so well for him had schaped,
That of his anguys grim so lightly was escaped.
R. Brunne, p. 201.

He suld not escape, thorgh bisshop granted fre,
Of non bot of the pape myght he assoyled be.—Id. p. 122.

But swiche a rain down from the welken shedde
That slow the fire, and made to him escape.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,650.

And though your grene youthe floure as yet,
In creepeth age alway as still as stone,
And deth manaseth every age, and smit
In each estat, for ther escapeth non.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7999.

But fro this perille netheles
With his wisedome Kynge Ulysses
Escapeth, and it ouerpasseth. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

However urg'd, the servants of the queen
Assaulted his, as he from council went;
Where his own person eagerly pursu'd
Hardly (by boat) escap'd the multitude.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

Yet not escaped from the dew reward
Of his bad deedes, which daily he increast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Bon. Hee is fled, he is fled, and dares not sit it out.
Bri. What has he made an escape, which way? follow, neighbour Haggise.—B. Jonson. Barthol. Faire, Act iv. sc. 6.

Which my father's servants had so well concealed, at the first breaking out of the war, in a private part of my house, that they escaped the search of the enemy, who had plundered all they could find, broken all the windows, taken away the leads, and pulled up the boards in most parts of the house.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 186.

No sooner was the king's escape taken notice of by the guards, but Col. Whalley hastened to the parliament with the letter which the king had left upon his table, shewing the reasons of his withdrawing, and his resolution not to desert the interest of the army.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 191.

The greater the evil is, the more reason is there to venture the loss of a less good, or the suffering of a less evil for the escaping of it.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 2.

But soon the victor must his conquest mourn:
See! great Alphonso swift to vengeance turn,
When not a wretch escapes the general doom
To bear the fatal tidings back to Rome.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. iii.

E'SCHAR. Gr. Εσχαρα; Fr. Eschare; a skar or hard scab upon a hurt, sore, wound; also, the crust which ariseth upon an actual or potential cautery, (Cotgrave,) from A. S. Scir-an, to shear, to separate. See Scar.

The ashes of certain locusts without wings, called by the Greeks Tryxalides, cause the thick roufes and escarres that grow about the brims of ulcers to fall off.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxx. c. 13.

At length nature seem'd to make a separation between the cancerated and sound breast, such as you often see where a caustic hath been applied, the eschar divides between the living and the dead.—Hoyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 647.

ESCHE'AT, v.
ESCHE'AT, s.
ESCHE'ATAGE.
ESCHE'ATOR.

Fr. Eschet, which Cotgrave properly calls, a thing fallen to; from escheoir, to fall; and cheoir is from the Lat. Cadere, to fall. In Legibus Neapolitanis et Siculis, Excadentia dicitur. (See Spelman, Gloss. Archæologicum.) See the quotations from Fuller and Blackstone; and also To Cheat.

To fall to, (sc.) to the lord or other superior power.

Lewlyn & Dauid haf born grete honour,
And Snowdon com to grith, lik castelle and toure
To the kyng is eschele. R. Brunne, p. 244.

Thorge goure lawe ich leyve. ich lese mevne eschytes.

Piers Ploukman, p. 72.

Now is steward for his achates, now is eschetour for his wronge, now is losel for his songe.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

With that the kynge right in his place
Anon foorthe in that freshe hete
An erledome, whiche then of eschete
Was late falle into his honde,
Unto this knight, with rent and londe,
Hath youe, and with his chartre seased.—Gower. C. A. b. i.

But surely my guise is not to laye the faultes of the noughtye, to the charge of my whole companye, vppon shyryffes and call them rauenous, nor to rayle vppon escheatours and call theym extorcionours.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 868.

But being now prevented so by persecucion, that he cannot bestow them in that other good wale that he wold, yet while he parteth fro them, because he wil not parte fro the faith, thoughe the Duel's escheatour violently take them from him, yet willinglie geueth he them to God

Id. Ib. p. 1227.

So this, breath'd on by no full influence,
Hath hung o'er since unminded in suspence,
As doubtfull whether 't should escheated be
To ruine, or redeem'd to majesty.

Carteright. On Christ-Church Buildings.

And therefore composing and framing himselfe on purpose to counterfeit a noddie and a verie innocent, as suffering himselfe and all that he had to fall into the king's hands as an escheat, [prædæ,] he refused not to be misnamed Brutus, a name appropriate to unreasonable creatures.

Holland. Livie, p. 39.

For the name escheator cometh from the French word escheoir, which signifieth to happen, or fall out: and he by his place is to search into any profit accrewing to the crown by casualty, by the condemnation of malefactors, persons dying without an heir, or leaving him in minority, &c.

Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

And when the order of the Knights Templars was dissolved, it was then judged in favour of the lord by escheat.

Burnet. Reformation, vol. i. b. iii.

In those times were established the ridiculous rights of escheatage and shipwrecks.

Montesquieu. The Spirit of the Laws, b. xxi. c. 13.

Escheat, we may remember, was one of the fruits and consequences of feodal tenure, the word itself is originally French or Norman, in which language it signifies chance or accident; and with us it denotes an obstruction of the course of descent, and a consequent determination of the tenure by some unforeseen contingency.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 15.

ESCHE'CKED, i. e. Checked or chechered, (qv.)

Diuerse also were slain on the Earle of Richmond's part at this last encounter, and among other an English knight, that bare armes, eschecked siluer and gules.

Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1340.

ESCHE'W. Fr. Eschever; Dut. Schouwen, schuwen; Ger. Scheuen; Sw. Sky; and perhaps the A. S. Scun-ian, to shun. Menage (in v. Echever) derives from D'excavere.

To shun, to avoid, to fly from.

Hald nat of harlotes, huyre nat here tales
Nameliche atte mete, suche men eschuyre.

Piers Ploukman, p. 130.

But eschewe thou unhooli and veyne spechis, for whi tho profited mych to unfaithfulnesse.—Wiclif. 2 Tym. c. 2.

Now shul ye understonde, that al be it so that non erthly man may eschewe al venial sinnes, yet may he refreine him, by the brenning love that he hath to our Lord Jesu Crist, and by prayer and confession, and other good werkes, so that it shal but litel grieve.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

For thy my sonne if thou wolt liue
In vertue, thou must vice eschewe.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

A tale thou shalt vnderstond,
How that a knight shall armes sewe
And for the while his ease eschewe.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

Whylis the kynge was in his feastinge (the hande of God wryteth his destruccion) let them lerne therefore to eschew excesse dronkenes and blasphemies in banketinge and festing.—Joye. The Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

These curious doubts which good men doe eschew,
Make many atheists, and doe better few.

Sterling. Doomes-day. The Ninth Houre.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heauen giue thee ioy, what cannot be eschew'd must be embraced.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

Many little neglects I [King Charles] will not take the pains to set down: as her eschewing to be in my company, when I have any thing to speak to her [the Queen], I must manage her servants first, else I am sure to be denied.

Ludlow. Memoirs. Letters & Papers, vol. iii. p. 250.

I suppose there are but few of you but know some such among your acquaintance, and none but may be very serviceable both to God and them, by putting them in mind, as ye have occasion, that they must not only eschew evil but do good in the world. That it is not enough for them to avoid what God hath forbidden, but they must do also what he hath commanded, as ever they expect and hope for his love and favour.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 83.

ESCORT, v.
E'SCORT, n.

"Fr. Escorte; a guide, convoy, safe conduct; a direction or safeguard for the way," (Cotgrave.) The word does not appear to be of any long standing in English.

Fr. Escorte; It. Scorta, formed from scorgere, and this from excorrigere, that is, dirigere, to guide or direct, (Menage.)

To day shut out, still onward press,
And watch the seasons of access;
In private haunt, in public meet,
Salute, escort him through the street.

Francis. Horace. Satires, b. i.

Having contrived, by making forced stages while the troops of my escort marched at the ordinary rate, to make a stay of five days at Benares, I was thereby furnished with the means of acquiring some knowledge of the state of the province, which I am anxious to communicate to you.

Burke. Works, vol. ii. Letter from W. Hastings.

ESCOT. Fr. Escotter; every one, says Cotgrave, to pay his shot. His shot, is his cast; that which (the money which) he is to cast or throw down. "How are they escotted?" how is their scot or share of the reckoning paid? i. e. how are they paid for or supported? See Scot.

Ham. What are thy children? Who maintains 'em?
How are they escotted?—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

ESCROW. A scrowl, (qv.) as it is explained in the example.

A delivery may be either absolute, that is to the party or grantee himself; or to a third person, to hold till some conditions be performed on the part of the grantee: in which last case it is not delivered as a deed, but as an escrow; that is, as a scrowl or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed till the conditions be performed; and then it is a deed to all intents and purposes.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 20.

ESCRY'. To detect or discover. See Descry, and Ascry.

At the same time the Spanish fleete was escried by an English pinasse, captaine whereof was M. Thomas Fleming, after they had bene aduertised of the Spaniards' expedition by their scoutes and espials.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. i. p. 596.

The very next day, being the 20th of July, about high noon, was the Spanish fleete escried by the English, which with the south-west wind came sailing along, and passed by Plimmouth.—Id. Ib.

ESCU'AGE. Fr. Escu, scutum; "Qui silicet clypeos in bello gestare obligantur; those who were bound to carry shields in war," (Skinner.)

The pecuniary satisfaction of which Blackstone speaks, was a compensation for actual service; money paid in lieu of shields or shield-bearers; i. e. of soldiers.

The cheefe cause that mooued the lords to this conspiracie, rose by reason the king demanded escuage of them that refused to go with him into Poictow.

Hollinshed. King John, an. 1215.

The next was a duty reserved anciently out of every knight's fee: which, at first, was constantly paid as a quit-rent, but being very small, came, in time, to be neglected by the kings, that contented themselves with the military attendance of the knights in their wars: and with levying sometimes a greater duty, upon great or urgent occasions, under the name of escuage, which was burthensome and odious, till the proportions and occasions came to be ascertained.—Sir W. Temple. Introd. to the History of England.

This pecuniary satisfaction at last came to be levied by assessments, at so much for every knight's fee; and therefore this kind of tenure was called scutagium in Latin, or servitium scuti; scutum being then a well known denomination for money: and, in like manner, it was called in our northern French, escuage; being indeed a pecuniary, instead of a military service.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 5.

E'SCULENT, adj.
E'SCULENT, n.

Lat. Esculentus, that may be eaten; from esca, food, and esca from edere, es-um, to eat.

Any thing eatable, or that can or may be eaten.

Thou never hadst in thy house, to stay men's stomachs,
A piece of Suffolk cheese or gammon of bacon,
Or any esculent, as the learned call it.

Massinger. A New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act iv. sc. 2.

Of hearbs and plants some are good to eat raw, others only after they are boyled or have passed the fire, but a number of hearbs are not esculent at all.

Bacon. Naturall History, § 630.

So generally those knowledges relish best, that have an infusion somewhat more esculent of flesh in them: such as are civile history, morality, policy, about the which men's affections, praises, fortunes, doe turne, and are conversant.

Id. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. x. c. 1.

His various esculents, from glowing beds
Give the fair promise of delicious feasts.

Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

Take therefore all kinds of medicinal herbs and esculent grain for food, and together with the seven holy men, your respective wives, and pairs of all animals, enter the ark without fear.—Sir W. Jones. Chron. of the Hindus.

ESCU'TCHEON.
ESCU'TCHEONED.

Scutcheon, from the Lat. Scutum, a shield. "Fr. Escusson, a small target or shield."

"Escussonner, — to defend or cover with a scutcheon or shield," (Cotgrave.)

But this preferment of one before another does not consist in giving secular advantages before the other, temporal honours and precedences in processions, in escutcheons and atchievments, but in doing the duty of that which is incumbent, and making the other minister to that which is more necessary.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

This folly and profusion so far provoked the people, that they threw dirt in the night on his [Richard Cromwell] escutcheon that was placed over the great gate of Somerset House.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 155.

For what, gay friend, is this escutcheon'd world,
Which hangs out death in one eternal night;
A night, that glooms us in the noon-tide ray,
And wraps our thoughts, at banquets, in the shroud.

Young. Complaint, Night 2.

Hence without blushing (say whate'er we can)
We more regard th' escutcheon than the man;
Yet, true to nature and her instincts, prize
The hound or spaniel as his talent lies.

Cawthorn. Nobility. A Moral Essay, (1752.)

The addition of the escocheon of Edward the Confessor to his own, (Surrey's) although used by the family of Norfolk for many years, and justified by the authority of the heralds, was a sufficient foundation for an impeachment of high treason.—Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iii.

ESLOʹIN. Fr. Esloigner, to remove. See ELOIN.

As appeare in an old report where one was committed for esloigning a ward into Wales.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 7. Illustr.

ESMAʹIE. "Fr. Esmayer, s'esmayer, to be sad, pensive, astonied, careful; to take thought," (Cotgrave.) See DISMAY.

But Jason wolde not hym esmaie
And saide: of euery worldes eure
Fortune stant in auenture
Paraunter wele, paraunter wo. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

EʹSOTERY. ESOTEʹRICK. ESOTEʹRICALLY. } Lat. Esotericus, from Εσωθεν, inward, within. See Exoterick, and the quotation there from Search.

The first example explains the usage.

The philosophy of the Pythagoreans, like that of the other sects, was divided into the exoteric and esoteric; the open, taught to all; and the secret, taught to a select number.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. Note (BB.)

The first observation I shall make on this long passage is, that the same subject, namely, the nature of superior beings, was handled in a two fold manner; exoterically; and then the discourse was of the national Gods: esoterically; and then it was of the first cause of all things. 2. That the exoteric teaching admitted fable and falsehood, fabulosa vel ficta: the esoteric only what the teacher believed to be true, nihil fabulosum penitus.—Id. Ib. b. iii. s. 2.

ESPAʹLIER. "Fr. Espalier,—an hedgerow of sundry fruit-trees set close together, their boughs interlaced one within another, and held in with stakes, rales, or pales," (Cotgrave.) And see Menage.

From yon old walnut-tree a shower shall fall;
And grapes long-lingring on my only wall
And figs from standard and espalier join
Pope. Horace, Sat. 2.

Here, shelter'd from the north his ripening fruits
Display their sweet temptations from the wall,
Or from the gay espalier. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

ESPEʹCIAL. ESPEʹCIALLY. ESPEʹCIALNESS. } Fr. Espèce, a kind or sort. Especiel; par especial, especially, particularly, peculiarly. Lat. Specialis, from species. See SPECIAL.

Particular, peculiar, principal or chief, distinguished.

And then shuln ye kepe this for a general reule. First ye shuln clepe to youre conseil a few of youre frendes that ben especial.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

But now wold I fain that ye wold condescend in especial, and telle me how liketh you or what seemeth you by oure conseillours that we han chosen in oure present nede.
Id. Ib.

There was together wyth others, Dumnorix the Heduan, of whom we haue spoken before, him in especialiye Cesar determined to haue with him, bicause he knew him to be a man desyrous of alteration, and desyrous of souereinty, of great courage, and of great authority, amonge the Gaules.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 111.

But I being somewhat acquainted with the world, haue found out another sort of men, whom of all others I would be loth should reade any of my doinges, especially such things as either touched Christ, or any good doctrine.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, Prol. to the Reader.

For plaine it is, that the state allowed and gave rings only to certain especiall lieutenants when they were to go in embassage to forraine nations.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 1.

Lat. But wondrous strange, that any difference,
Especially of such a deadly nature,
Should e'er divide so eminent a friendship.
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act v. sc. 1.

Your precious diamond in especialness.
Lee. Blasse of Brightest Beautie, a Sermon, (1614,) p. 25.

And therefore that which Saint Paul thought of so great importance, as to give especial orders to Timothy, to press upon the Ephesian citizens, will always be very fit to be seriously recommended to you in this place; and more especially at this time, since it is the proper work of the day.
Sharp. Works, vol. i. p. 90.

Abraham, the father of the faithful, and especial friend of God, was called out of his country, and from his kindred, to wander in a strange land, and lodge in tents, without any fixed habitation.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

In the character of Destroyer also we may look upon this Indian Deity as corresponding with the Stygian Jove or Pluto; especially since Cali, or Time in the feminine gender, is a name of his consort, who will appear hereafter to be Proserpine.—Sir W. Jones. Gods of Greece, Italy, & India.

EʹSPERANCE. "Fr. Espérance,—hope, trust, confidence, affiance," (Cotgrave.) From Espérer, to hope; Lat. Sper-are.

O jeste, vnto thy very foes
for whether may haue more,
(If Fortune frowne and grefes grow on) esperance to his store!—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

——— And heere I draw a sword,
Whose worthy temper I intend to staine
With the best blood that I can meete withall,
In the aduenture of this perilous day:
Now Esperance, Percy, and set on
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 2.

When Henry Hotspur, so with his high deeds inflam'd,
Doth second him again, and through such dangers press,
That Douglas's valiant deeds he made to seem the less,
As still the people cried, "A Percy esperance."
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

ESPIʹRITUAL, i. e. spiritual, (qv.)

So faire it was, that trusteth well
It semed a place espirituell.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

ESPOʹUSE, v. ESPOʹUSAL, n. ESPOʹUSAL, adj. ESPOʹUSER. } Fr. Espouser; It. Sposare; Lat. Spondere, sponsum; which Vossius says, ex eo est, quia sponderent in σπονδη, quo libatio, vel libamen, item fœdus notatur. Nam in fœdere libabant, quod σπενδειν, Græcis; to make libations, (sc.) by way of pledge, treaty, or engagement.

Fr. Espouser,—to wed, to marry; also, to defend, embrace, undertake, entertain as his own; take wholly upon him, (Cotgrave.)

And eke vpon hir lorde she thought,
Of that he so vntruely wrought,
And had his espousaile broke,
She maketh a uowe it shall be wroke.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And in ye moneth of January next ensuynge, and ix. daye of the same kynge, Phylip spoused his second wyfe Blaunche, sometyme the doughter of the Quene of Navarn, lately deseased, which was suster vnto the Erle of Foyx; which espousayles were secretly done in the manour of Robt. Erle of Bray.—Fabyan. Philippi, an. 340.

We love our friends, because they are our image, and we love our God, because we are his. So then, the beloved opinion being thus wedded to the intellect; the case of our espoused self becomes our own.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 13.

In the interim the earl was commanded not to deliver the aforesaid proxy of the prince for the disposorios or espousal, until Christmas.—Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 27.

After she was layd, there came in Maximilian's ambassadour with letters of procuration, and in the presence of sundry noble personages, men and women, put his legge (strip't naked to the knee) betweene the espousall sheets.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 80.

Thereupon, hoping that a parliament would espouse his quarrel, and furnish him with money for the carrying on of his design, he summoned one to meet at Westminster, on the 3d of April 1640.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 7.

A due expression of asperity against the enemies of God, the king and the publick peace, is not the reviling mentioned or intended in the text, the scene of which is properly private revenge, not a zealous espousal of the publick injuries.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

In Rome had you espous'd the vanquish'd cause,
Inflam'd her senate and upheld her laws,
Your manly scenes had liberty restor'd,
And given the just success to Cato's sword.
Philips. To Mr. Addison, on Cato.

The espousers of that unauthorized and detestable scheme have been weak enough to assert, that there is a knowledge in the elect, peculiar to those chosen vessels.
Allen. Ser. p. 11. July 19, 1761.

Great, gracious master, whose unbounded sway,
Pelt thro' ten thousand worlds, those worlds obey;
Wilt thou for once thy awfull glories shade,
And deign t' espouse the creature thou hast made.
Langhorne. The Duchess of Mazarine.

ESPYʹ, v. ESPYʹ, n. ESPIʹAL. ESPIʹER. } (Anciently also written Aspy, qv.) Fr. Espier; It. Spiare; Sp. Espiar; Dut. Spien, speuren, spieden; Ger. Spaeher, spueren, spuehren; A. S. Spyrian, which Somner interprets, vestigare, investigare, indagare, exquirere, scrutari, explorare; to search out by the track or trace, to inquire, and make diligent search.

To look out, to observe or behold, to see; to seek or search after, to watch, to detect, discover.

And thei aspieden and senten aspieris that fayneden hem just.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 20.

But whan thou hast for hire, and thee, and me,
Ygeten us these kneding tubbes thre,
Than shalt thou hang hem in the roofe ful hie,
That no man of our perveyance espie.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3566

The mother of the Soudan, well of vices,
Espied hath hire sones pleine entente,
How he wol lete his olde sacrifices.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4744.

Thou spake right now of thilke traitour deth,
That in this contree all our frendes sleth:
Have here my trouth as thou art his espie;
Tell wher he is, or thou shalt it abie.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,689.

Wherfore, Melibeus, this is oure sentence; we conseille you aboven alle thing, that right anon thou do thy diligence in keeping of thy propre persone, in swiche a wise that thou ne want non espie, ne watche, thy body for to save.
Id. Tale of Melibeus.

He had a sompnour redy to his hond,
A slier boy was non in Englelond;
For subtilte he had his espiaille.
Id. The Frere's Tale, v. 6905.

For espyall and mystrowynges
Thei did than such thynges
That euery man might other know.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

He had knowlege by his espialles, that the Frēche army intended to land in the Isle of Wight, wherefore he repaired to that cost, to se his realme defended.
Hall. Hen VIII. an. 37.

Likewise the huntesman, in hunting the foxe, will sone espie, when he seeth a hole, whether it be the foxe borough or not.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 37.

But still when him at hand she did espy,
She turnd, and semblaunce of faire fight did make;
But when he stayd, to fight againe she did her take.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

Which well I proue, as shall appeare by triall,
To be this maides with whom I fastned hand,
Knowne by good markes and perfect good espial:
Therefore it ought be rendred her without denial.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 4.

When the Romans were come first by great journies to revenge the losse of their countrimen, and to recover the colonie, their espials and vaunt-courriours whome they had sent out dispersed along the high waies, brought word, that the legions of the Samnites followed.
Holland. Livie, p. 329.

At length two monsters of unequal size,
Hard by the shore, a fisherman espies,
Two mighty whales! which swelling seas had tost
And left them prisoners on the rocky coast.
Waller. The Battle of the Summer Islands, c. 2.

Soon was the fatal Saracen espied,
Known by his foreign arms and scaly hide;
Where weak old age, and those unnerv'd with fear,
To catch each rumour lent a trembling ear.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xvi.

Secure, unnoted, Conrad's prow pass'd by,
And anchor'd where his ambush meant to lie;
Screen'd from espial by the jutting cape,
That rears on high its rude, fantastic shape.
Byron. The Corsair, c. i.

ESQUIʹRE. Fr. Escuyer; It. Scudiero; Sp. Escudero; Lat. Scutiger or scutifer, from the Lat. Scutum, a shield. See the quotation from Holinshed.

Which Alexāder not only graunted, but willed a weapō to be deliuered to hys hāds, as other esquiers vsed.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 172.

After his esquire or armour-bearer that stucke close to his side was wounded, himselfe covered with a rouse of shields couched close together, escaped this great danger and departed.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 253.

Esquire (which we call commonly Squire) is a French word, and so much in Latine as scutiger vel armiger, and such are all those that bear armes, or armoires, testimonies of their race from whence they be descended. They were at the first costerels or bearers of the armes of barons or knights, and thereby being instructed in martiall knowledge, had that name for a dignity given to distinguish them from common souldiers, called Gregarii milites, when they were together in the field.—Holinshed. Desc. of England, b. ii. c. 5.

But his wife and his children are dear to him [the incumbent] and have an equal right, by all the laws of God and man, to be fed and clothed with those of the esquire or farmer, who litigates his claim.—Knox, Ess. 10.

ESSAʹY, v. EʹSSAY, n. EʹSSAYER. EʹSSAYIST. } See ASSAY. Fr. Essayer; Sp. Ensayar; It. Assaggiare; all (as Skinner thinks) from the Lat. Sapere. Menage, from ad, and sapor. But the A. S. Sage is testis, and saga, testimonium. "The Gemot sohton lease saga;" the Council sought false witness. "Othre sage;" other witnesses, (Matt. xxvi. 59 and 65.) The German

Sager is also testimonium dicere, to declare testimony, to give evidence. The A. S. adjective sag-ol is veridicus, one who gives a verdict (veredictum) or true saying. And thus the word is traced to the A. S. Secgan, asecgan, to say.

And to say, assay, or essay, is, consequentially,—

To prove, to take proof, to make trial, to try; and further, to make trial or experiment, to attempt.

Then to the stream, when neither friends, nor force,
Nor speed, nor art avail, he shapes his course;
Thinks not their rage so desperate to essay
An element more merciless than they.
Denham. Cooper's Hill.

He also, by his fingers, directed the standers-by to fetch him a great hollow stone for a font, which sundry of his father's servants essayed in vain, as much above their strength, till the two priests (his designed godfathers) did goe and fetch it easily at his appointment
Fuller. Worthies. Buckinghamshire.

To write just treatises, requireth leisure in the writer, and leisure in the reader, and therefore are not so fit, neither in regard of your highness's princely affairs, nor in regard of my continual service, which is the cause that hath made me choose to write certain brief notes set down rather significantly than curiously, which I have called Essays. The word is late, but the thing is ancient; for Seneca's epistles to Lucilius, if you mark them well, are but Essays, that is, dispersed meditations, though conveyed in the form of epistles.—Bacon. To Prince Henry.

Such are all the essayists, even their master Montaigne.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Is there any equity or the least colour of reason in this; for a man to take an essay of the nature of any species of things from such particular instances, as in their kinds are monstrous?—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c 4.

[Saith Tully] the essay (specimen) of any kind is rather to be taken from the best and most usual, than from the worst and most depraved part of it.—Id. Ib.

Tully was the first who observed that friendship improves happiness and abates misery, by the doubling of our joy and dividing of our grief; a thought in which he hath been followed by all the essayers upon friendship that have written since his time.—Spectator, No. 68.

Yet such a tongue alike in vain essays
To blot with censure or exalt with praise.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxviii,

Thus the fond swain his Doric oat essay'd,
Manhood's prime honours rising on his cheek:
Trembling he strove to court the tuneful maid
With stripling arts.
Mason. A Monody to the Memory of Mr. Pope.

All the priests, all the loyalists, all the first essayists and novices of revolution in 1789, that could be found, were promiscuously put to death.
Burke. Preface to M. Brissot's Address.

"If then," said the gentleman, mustering up all his courage, "if I am not to have admittance as an essayist, I hope I shall not be repulsed as an historian; the last volume of my history met with applause."—Goldsmith. A Reverie.

E'SSENCE, v.
E'SSENCE, n.
ESSE'NTIAL, n.
ESSE'NTIAL, adj.
ESSE'NTIALLY.
ESSENTIA'LITY.
ESSE'NTIATE, v.
ESSE'NTIATING, n.

Fr. n. Essence; It. Essentia or essenza; Sp. Essencia; Lat. Essentia, corrupted from Existentia, (see EXIST,) standing out, (sc.) from the even, level or smooth surface; and thus causing a (new or fresh) sensation. And thus essence in its general application is equivalent to (see TO BE) the English word—

Being; and it is also applied to certain supposed causes, qualities or states of being. The word becomes very puzzling in the hands of metaphysicians. (See Locke, b. iii. c. 3, and seq.;) and see the quotations from him. It is in popular language applied to—

The smell, scent, odour, perfume; the principal, constituent, concentered qualities.

And yet minde I not that euerie merit should hereby be vnderstanded, but onelye that whiche is recompensed by essentiall rewarde (as they call it) in heauen.
Fisher. On Prayer.

What wonder though the soul of man
(A sparke of heaven that shines below)
Doth labour by all meanes it can,
Like to itselfe, itself to show!
The heavenly essence, heaven would know.
Stirling. Choruses in the Tragedy of Crœsus, chor. 1.

How much more those essentiall parts of his,
His truth, his loue, his wisedome, and his bliss,
His grace, his doome, his mercy, and his might,
By which he lends vs of himselfe a sight.
Spenser. Hymne to Heauenly Beautie.

—— He hath atchieu'd a maid
That paragons description, and wilde fame,
One that excels the quirkes of blazoning pens,
And in the essentiall vesture of creation,
Do's tyre the ingenluer.—Shakes. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1

What fear we then? what doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? which to the highth enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential, happier far
Then miserable to have eternal being.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Thrones, dominations, princedoms, vertues, powers,
Essential powers, nor by his reign obscur'd,
But more illustrious made. Id. Ib. b. v.

It can imply to us nothing but this, that our whole faith is laid up in the Scriptures; and this faith is perfected, as to the essentiality of it, in the death and resurrection of Christ, as being the whole œconomy of our pardon and justification.—Bp. Taylor. Liss. from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 4.

And the reason of this is not only that the substantialness and essentiality of a promise relates to the actual execution of it, but farther, likewise, because often it falls out that the person promising may have honestly and faithfully intended it, and promised it, and yet in the issue prove unable to perform, as we see among men it often falls out; and then in that case and respect the promise doth in reality fall short of its eventual truth.
Goodwin. Justifying Faith, pt. i. b. i.

For howsoe'er disgraced she [Wisdom] doth seem
Yet she her own is able to reward,
And none are so essentially high
As those that on her bounty do rely.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 8.

Carl. 'Tis an axiome in naturall philosophy, what comes nearest the nature of that it feeds, converts quicker to nourishment, and doth sooner essentiate.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 5.

If it were granted, that if it were simply necessary to the essentiating of a church, to be able to demonstrate in all times, both the visible number of professours of the truth, as also a visible succession of pastours, we are able to demonstrate both these, for our defence, to be as unquestionable in our church as in the church of Rome.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 701.

Essence may be taken for the very being of any thing, whereby it is, what it is. And thus, the real, internal, but generally in substances, unknown constitution of things, wherein their discoverable qualities depend, may be called their essence. This is the proper original signification of the word, as is evident from the formation of it; essentia in its primary notation signifying properly being.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3. s. 15.

Painted for sight, and essenc'd for the smell,
Like frigates fraught with spice and cochineel,
Sail in the ladies: how each pirate eyes
So weak a vessel, and so rich a prize.
Pope. Satires of Donne, Sat. 4.

They do not deny that we have all the essentials of true churches, true doctrine, true sacraments, and an implicit covenant between pastors and people.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

The king principally insisted on that article concerning bishops, whom he accounted to be by divine right, or rather essentially necessary to the support of arbitrary power.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 228.

For what can be more ridiculous, than to imagine that matter is as essentially conscious, as it is extended?
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 10.

We prosecuted the experiment so long without seeing any effect wrought upon the essence-bottles, that we began to despair of seeing them rise.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 59.

For these as for essentials we engage
In wars and massacres with holy rage;
Brothers by brothers' impious hands are slain,
Mistaken zeal, how savage is thy reign!
Jenyns. On the Immortality of the Soul.

If the human race then be, as we may confidently assume, of one natural species, they must all have proceeded from one pair; and if perfect justice be, as it is most indubitably, an essential attribute of God, that pair must have been gifted with sufficient wisdom and strength to be virtuous, and, as far as their nature admitted, happy, but intrusted with freedom of will to be vicious, and consequently degraded.—Sir W. Jones. Origin of Families and Nations.

The literature of Asia will not, perhaps, be essentially useful to the greater part of mankind, who have neither leisure, nor inclination to cultivate so extensive a branch of learning.—Id. Pref. to a Gram. of the Persian Language.

ESSOIN. Fr. Essoine or Eroine, (from the Lat. Exonerare, to relieve from a burden.)

"Fr. Exoiner,—to excuse one from appearing in court or going to the wars, by oath, that he is impotent, sick, or otherwise necessarily imployed," (Cotgrave.)

Withouten any essoyne, vengeance salle falle the not lite,
Forsakes thou God's gyft, thou dos hun grete despite.
R. Brunne, p. 104

He gaf a thousand mark, withouten essoyne.—Id. p. 136.

But yet for strengthe of matrimonie
He might make non essonie,
That he ne mote algates plie
To go to bed of companie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Ranging into their right and proper ray,
Errours, demurs, essoigns, and traverses;
The heads of hydra, springing out of death,
That gives this monster, malice, still new breath
Daniel. To Sir Thomas Egerton.

But, with rejoinders or replies,
Long bills and answers stuff'd with lies,
Demur, imparlence, and essoigne
The parties ne'er could issue join.
Swift. Cadenus & Vanessa.

And thereon the Court sits to take essoigns or excuses for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ; wherefore this is usually called the essoign day of the term.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c 18.

EST. The termination of our superlative adj. and second pers. sing. of the verb:—Es-ed, es'd, est.

ESTA'BLISH, v.
ESTA'BLISHER.
ESTA'BLISHMENT.

Fr. Establir; It. Stabilire; Sp. Establecer; Lat. Stabilire, to make steadfast, stabilis, from stare, to stand.

To make steadfast or able to stand; strong to stand; to cause to stand firmly, or to hold fast and firmly together; to set up firmly; to confirm, to fix, to settle.

For as, sayth Solomon; whoso that had the science to know the peins that ben established and ordeined for sinne, he wold forsake sinne.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

I not no prelate may done so
But it the Pope be, and no mo
That made thilke establishing
Now is not this a propre thing?—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Now because they shall not of temeraryous presumpeyon reiecte this olde father, I shall establyshe his wordes by S. Austen.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 35.

And this was chefely to occupy their ydell heades, whyles they were practysinge and bryngynge to passe other matters for the full establyshmente of Antychristes reygne.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

And thus of that charge of scepticism, with which he begins as the occasion of his writing; having premised which, he endeavours to lay the sure foundations of science, and to establish certainty in knowledge.—Glanvill, Ess. 2.

Some allow them as the first founders and establishers of them; which crime toucheth none but their popes, and councels; the people are cleere and free from this.
Hooker. A Learned Discourse of Justification, &c.

There he with Belge did awhile remaine,
Making great feast and ioyous merriment;
Vntill he had her settled in her raine,
With safe assurance and establishment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

I have beene always wont to commend and admire the humility of those great and profound wits, whom depth of knowledge hath not led to by-paths in judgment, but (walking in the beaten path of the church) have bent all their forces to the establishment of received truths.
Bp. Hall. Meditations & Vowes, Cent. 2.

Oh, let us all close with the standing public methods which God hath established in the church for the bringing us to virtue and eternal happiness; and not be hankering after new and fanciful ways of our own chusing.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 6.

That also at last God being the author and establisher of nature, and the continual sustainer of it by his free providence, it is not likely that he will suffer the laws and course thereof to be much violated, except upon occasions very considerable, and for very good purposes.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

It was therefore most agreeable to the infinite wisdom of God for providing for a constant establishment of the faith of his church in all ages, neither to permit the Gospels to be written till the churches were planted, nor to be put off to another generation.—Stillingfleet, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

If such the operations of his power,
Which at all seasons and in ev'ry place
(Rul'd by establish'd laws and current nature)
Arrest th' attention! Who? O who shall tell
His acts miraculous.
Smart. On the Power of the Supreme Being.

The authority, therefore, of a church-establishment is founded in its utility; and whenever, upon this principle, we deliberate concerning the form, propriety, or comparative excellency of different establishments, the single view under which we ought to consider any of them, is that of a "scheme of instruction;" the single end we ought to propose to them is, "the preservation and communication of religious knowledge."—Paley. Political Philosophy, vol. ii. c. 10.

ESTA'TE, v.
ESTA'TE, n.
ESTA'TELY.

Fr. n. Estat; It. Stato; Sp. Estado, from the Lat. Status, past part. of Stare, to stand. Estate or State (qv.) is applied to—

All the categorical circumstances under which any thing stands, or exists, or by which it may be affected; more especially to the rank or condition, the possessions or property; also, to the general establishment of Government.

To estate (not a common verb) is to fix in a particular estate or condition; to settle an estate or property; to condition.

Thanked be Fortune, and hire false whele,
That non estat ensureth to be wele.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 928.

And while she was dwelling in that cite
She kept her estate, and of yong and old
Ful wel beloued, and wel men of her told
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

It peined hire to contrefeten chere
Of court, and ben estatelich of manere,
And to ben holden digne of reverence
Id. The Prologue, v. 140.

So manly was this Julius of herte,
And so wel loved estatly honestee,
That though his dedly woundes sore smerte,
His mantel over his hippes caste he.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,630.

And said: O mightie God of rest,
Thou do vengeance of this debate,
My sister and all her estate
Thou wost. Gower. Con A. b. v.

And when he perceaued that he must needs dye, he [Alexander] called for his noble estates (whiche had bene brought vp with hym of chyldren) and parted his kyngdom amonge them, whyle he was yet alyue.
Bible, 1551. The Machabees, b. i. c. 1.

It is our faith that must raise our thoughts to a due estimation of our greatness, and must show us how highly we are descended, how royally we are allied, how gloriously estated.—Bp. Hall. Holy Raptures, &c.

This puppy, being left well estated, comes to Florence, that the world may take notice, how impossible it is for experience to alter the course of nature.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii. sc. 1.

Till on a day, as through that wood he rode,
He chanc't to come where those two ladies late,
Acmilia and Amoret abode,
Both in full sad and sorrowfull estate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

We are not only not obliged to part with the propriety of our estate, and to live in common, as the first persecuted Christians did, but we should be highly indiscreet, not to say injurious, both to ourselves and the public, if we did.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 4.

What glorious motives urge our authors on,
Thus to undo, and thus to be undone!
One loses his estate, and down he sits,
To show (in vain) he still retains his wits.
Young. To Mr. Pope, Ep. 1.

ESTE'EM, v.
ESTE'EM, n.
ESTE'EMABLE.
ESTE'EMER.
ESTE'EMING, n.
E'STIMABLE, adj.
E'STIMABLE, n.
E'STIMATE, v.
E'STIMATE, n.
ESTIMA'TION.
E'STIMATIVE.

Fr. Estimer; It. Estimare; Sp. Estimar; Lat. Estimare; from Τιμαω; and Τιμ-αω, from Τι-ω, to fix a price or value.

To fix or set a price or value upon; to prize, to value; to think or deem, to repute or consider, valuable; to hold dear; worthy, of consequence, of importance.

Lady (qd. I) sometime yet if a man be in disease, the estimacion of the enuious people, ne looketh nothing to the desertes of men, ne to the merites of their doinges, but onely to the auenture of fortune, and thereafter they yeuen their sentence.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b i.

If he halowe hys feide immediatly frome that yere of Iubely, it shall be worth accordinge as it is estemed.
Bible. 1551. Leuiticus, c. 27.

What an hinderaunce is it, to haue a good garment hurt, any iewell appaired, or any esteemed thing to be decayed?
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

For I say (thorowe the grace that vnto me geuen is) to euerie man amonge you, that no man esteme of hymselfe more then it becometh him to esteme, but that he discretlye iudge of himselfe, accordynge as God hath dealt to euerye man the measure of fayth.—Bible, 1551. Romaynes, c. 20.

Thou shouldest (gentle reader) esteme his censure and auctoritye to bee of the more weightie credence, in as much as the matter was not rashlie, and at al aduentures, but wyth iudgemente (as thou seest) and with wisdom examined and discussed.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience. A Preface of Dr. Boner.

Loke how much mony the men do receiue wyth their wyues in name of their dowrie, they make an estimate of their own goods and lay so muche in valew therevnto.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 158.

Ther went such a report and estimatiō of thys warre among other barbarous people, that from such natiōs as inhabited beyond the Rhine were sent ambassadors vnto Cesar, profering to geue him hostages and do whatsoeuer he shuld commaund them.—Id. Ib. fol. 64.

They magnifye it, prayse it, and haue it in moste hyghe estimacion, yea, they haue it in muche more pryce than any thynge that is of God.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

But such, me seeme, should be satisfide with the use of those days, seeing all things accounted by their shows, and nothing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and pleasing to commune sence.—Spenser. To Sir Walter Raleigh.

Nay, let a man look into the government of the Bishop of Rome, as by name, into the government of Pius Quinctus, or Sextus Quinctus in our times, who were both at their entrance estimed but as pedanticall friars.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. i. c. 2. s. 3.

Which is the reason that to hold a place
In council, which was once esteem'd an honour,
And a reward for virtue, hath quite lost
Lustre and reputation, and is made
A mercenary purchase.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act i. sc. 3.

If we would be prevalent and esteemable, we ought with all our care to preserve that interest, which never can, but by our own neglect, be lost.—Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 55.

A pound of man's flesh taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefes, or goates.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 3.

Their wisdom, which to present pow'r consents,
Live dogs before dead lions estimates.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

He reformed not the senate, mustered not the men of war, nor took any view or estimate of the people's goods, although Luctatius Catulus was his colleague and fellow censor, as gentle a person as any of that time that lived in Rome.
North. Plutarch, p. 472.

Or as a wrongfull title, or foul crime
Made lawfull by a statute for the time,
With reu'rend estimation blindes our eies
And is called just, in spite of all the wise.
Beaumont. Against Abused Loue.

The estimative faculty, which is indeed no other than the last operation or composition of the phantasie before mentioned, whereby it concludes that this is a sensible good or a sensible evil, that it is attainable or feasible, or not attainable; that though it be good, yet sometimes it is not safe to be attempted by reason of the impendence of a greater sensible evil.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 46.

Phantasie, or imagination, which some call estimative, or cogitative, (confirmed saith Fernelius by frequent meditation,) is an inner sense which doth more fully examine the species perceived by common sense, of things present or absent, and keeps them longer, recalling them to mind againe, or making new of his owne.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 23.

And every one who will act rationally, not miscalling good evil, and evil good, must proportion his esteem of things, according to the real value of them.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b ii. c. 6.

The Queen of Sheba, among presents unto Solomon, brought some plants of the balsam tree, as one of the peculiar estimables of her country.—Brown. Miscellaneous, p. 50.

The measure of punishments being to be estimated as well by the length of their duration, as the intenseness of their degrees, 'tis fit we take a view also of your scheme in this part.—Locke. A third Letter of Toleration, c. 5.

He that walketh uprightly is secure as to his honour and credit, he is sure not to come off disgracefully, either at home in his own apprehensions, or abroad in the estimations of men.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Yet if other learned men, that are competent estimators, and are accustomed to bring much patience and attention to the discernment of difficult and important truths, profess themselves satisfied with them, the probations may yet be cogent, notwithstanding the difficulty to have their strength apprehended.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 175.

By love, I mean an esteeming of him [God] and a seeking after him as our only happiness.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 12.

It is remarkable, that Homer does not paint him [Paris] and Helen (as some other poets would have done) like monsters, odious to Gods and men, but allows their characters such estimable qualifications [in some ed. esteemable qualities] as could consist, and in truth generally do, with tender frailties.—Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vi. N.

Thus may we entertain an esteem for persons of merit, although they are at a remote distance from our intimacy; we esteem the character of a person merely from the report of his good qualities.—Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2.

Esteem is the value we place upon some degree of worth. It is higher than simple approbation, which is a decision of judgment. Esteem is the commencement of affection.
Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. Class 2.

It is enough that your lordship sees I have my eye upon some, the more estimable, nay the most accomplished characters, that have been formed among ourselves; and that even so envied a thing, as a fine gentleman, has been fashioned on this side the water.—Hurd, Dial. 8.

In a comparative estimate of genius, according to its kinds and degrees, I should not hesitate to place Erasmus in the same class with Lucian.—Knox, Ess. 132.

No, dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
Just estimation priz'd above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

E'STIVAL. } From Lat. Æstus, from æstus,
ESTIVA'TION. } heat. Cockeram writes, æstivate, to summer in a place; and æstival, of or belonging to summer.

Besides vernal, æstival, and autumnal, made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands.
Brown. Miscellaneous, p. 92.

On the under story, toward the garden, let it be turned into a grotto, or place of shade, or estivation.
Bacon. Ess. Of Building.

ESTO'PPED. I. e. stopped, (qv.) or stayed. For the legal application, see the quotation from Blackstone.

Perceauyng that all succours were clerely estopped and propulsed from them, and so brought into vtter despaire of aide or comforte: after longe consultacion had emongest them, [they] determined to rendre thé selues and their citie, to the sayde kyng.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 5.

And therefore a man shall alwaye be estopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove any thing in contradiction to what he has once so solemnly and deliberately avowed.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

E'STOVERS. From the Fr. Estoffer, as Blackstone says, after Spelman. "Fr. Estoffer; to stuff, to furnish or store with all necessaries," (Cotgrave.) See STUFF. Besides the legal application contained in the quotation from Blackstone, it is sometimes used for the alimony given to a wife divorced a mensâ et toro.

Common of estovers, or estoviers, that is, necessaries, (from estoffer, to furnish,) is a liberty of taking necessary wood, for the use or furniture of a house or farm, from off another's estate.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 3.

ESTRA'NGE, v.
ESTRA'NGE, adj.
ESTRA'NGEDNESS.
ESTRA'NGEMENT.
ESTRA'NGER.

Fr. Estranger; It. Straniare, stranare, from the Lat. Extraneus, (q.d.) extraneare, (Skinner.) Extraneus, an outlander, a foreigner.

To alienate, to keep foreign, away, apart or aloof from; to separate or divide; to shun or avoid; to withdraw or withhold from.

And hauinge with them souldyars estraungers, whiche Pisauthnes and the Arcadians had sent them, they accorded with thé that were in the castell.—Nicolls. Thucid. fol. 78.

But this distresse one vantage doth unfold,
Though out of time, when it can help no more,
They heare the truth, and all their faults are told,
Which had been still estrang'd from them before.
Sterling. Doomes-day. Tenth Hourr.

Ken. Will you not dance? How came you thus estranged?
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

Sir, as we like of your preaching, so we dislike not our libertie. You tell vs of manie gugawes and estrange dreames.
Holinshed. Discovery of Ireland, c. 4.

Though they differed in many notions, yet these differences did nothing but serve the pleasure of conversation, and exercise of reasoning: they begot no estrangements or distasts, no noise or trouble abroad.—Glanvill, Ess. 7.

Thus, if excommunication be incurred, ipso facto, he that is guilty of the fact deserving it, and is fallen into the sentence, is bound to submit to those estrangements and separations, those alienations of society and avoidings which he finds from the duty of others.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

So shall my truth to latest times be read,
And none shall ask if guiltily I fled,
Or thy command estrang'd me from thy bed.
Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

All sorts of men, by my successful arts,
Abhorring kings, estrange their altered hearts
From David's rule; and 'tis their general cry,
Religion, commonwealth, and liberty
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel

Hence, instead of a suspicious estrangedness, a servile dread, or an hostile disaffection towards God, there will spring up an humble confidence, a kindly reverence, a hearty love toward him.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

He has nothing else to take up his thoughts, and nothing to entertain his desires with; which, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

Dumb as a senator, and as a priest
A piece of mere church furniture at best;
To live estrang'd from God his total scope,
And his end sure, without one glimpse of hope.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

For Moses, to prevent any such estrangement, which some other parts of his institution, if abused, might occasion, was careful to acquaint the chosen family with the history of the human race, and of their descent from one man and woman.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. v. s. 1.

ESTRA'Y, v. } A.S. Strægan, to stray.
ESTRA'Y, n. } To stray or wander.
See the quotation from Blackstone.

This nymph one day, surcharg'd with love and grief,
Which commonly (the more the pity) dwell
As inmates both together, walking forth
With other maids to fish upon the shore;
Estrays apart, and leaves her company,
To entertain herself with her own thoughts.
Daniel. Hymen's Triumph.

Estrays are such valuable animals as are found wandering in any manor or lordship, and no man knoweth the owner of them, in which case the law gives them to the king, as the general owner and lord paramount of the soil, in recompence for the damage which they may have done therein, and they now most commonly belong to the lord of the manor, by special grant from the crown.—Blackstone. Com. b. i. c. 8.

E'STRE. From "Fr. v. Estre, to be; Fr. n. Estre, a substance or subsistence; an essence, being, state," (Cotgrave.) "Of your ester;" de tuo esse, de substantiâ vel statu tuo, (Skinner.)

Of estres, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "the inward parts of a building;" and see Cotgrave, "Les estres d'une maison."

Whan he was turned, and went out of that affray,
For a bisshop he sent at morn whan it was day,
Sir Ode of Wynchestere, so that bisshop hight,
He told him of alle the estere, that him motte that nyght.
R. Brunne, p. 94.

All peinted was the wall, in length and brede,
Like to the estres of the grisly place,
That highte the gret temple of Mars in Trace.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1973.

——— And she stert up also
And knew the estres bet than did this John,
And by the wall she toke a staf anon.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4293.

But of one thynge I would praie,
What shall I tell vnto Syluestre
Of your name or of your ester? Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

ESTRE'AT, v. } From the Fr. Extraict;
ESTRE'AT, n. } Lat. Extractum, drawn out; past part. of the verb extrahere, to draw out.

For the legal application, see the quotation from Blackstone.

Towarde this vice, of which we trete,
There ben yet twelf of thilk estrete.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

What are they but estreats of those originals
Whereof th' Almighty word engroue the portrature
Vpon the books of heau'n for euermore t' endure.
Lisle. Du Bartas, fol. 158.

The said commissioners are to make their estreats as accustomed of peace, and shall take the ensuing oath.
Milton. On the Articles of Peace.

For if (as divines tell us) the poor be God's receivers, they seem to have a title, as well by justice as by charity, to the amerciaments that are estreated upon trespasses against their lord.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 24.

If the condition of such recognizance be broken, by any breach of the peace in the one case, or any misbehaviour in the other, the recognizance becomes forfeited or absolute; and being estreated or extracted, (taken out from the other records, and sent up to the Exchequer,) the party and his sureties, having become the King's absolute debtors, are sued for the several sums in which they are respectively bound.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 18.

E'STRICH, or E'STRIDGE. } i. e. the Ostrich, (qv.)

Ha! how is this? your estridge plumes, that but Even now, like quills of porcupines, seem'd to threaten
The stars, drop at the rumour of a shower,
And, like to captive colours, sweep the earth!
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act ii. sc. 3.

Tortoises and the estrich hatch their eggs with their looks only; and some have designs which a dissembling face, or an acted gesture can produce.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 24.

Prince Edward all in gold, as he great Jove had been,
The Mountfords all in plumes, like estridges were seen.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

Fer. All furnisht, all in armes,
All plum'd like estridges.—Shakes. Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

E'STUATE. } The Lat. Æstus, Vossius
ESTUA'TION. } says, est commotio vel in igni,
E'STUARY. } vel in aquâ, vel in animo; a
E'STURE. } commotion either in fire, or in water, or in the mind. Æstuarium, qua mare tum accedit, tum recedit, ut ait, Festus; where the sea approaches and retires. And from Æstus, is æstuare, which is said sometimes of those things, quæ verè calent; which really heat,—sometimes of the sea, and sometimes of the passions.

To wax hot, to scald or cast up hot vapours, (Minshew.) To boil, to rise and fall; to agitate, to be in a state of commotion or agitation.

And thus he often doth with the worst and vilest of men, whose lusts, though they estuate and boil within, are like the raging sea, raging and rouling in their hearts, yet God sets bounds to their proud wayes, and saith to them as he does to the great sea, hitherto shall ye proceed, and no farther.—Hopkins. Practical Exposition.

[This] did quiet me thus far, that these vapours were not gone up into the head, howsoever they might glow and estuate in the body.—Bacon. A Speech about Undertakers.

And therefore rivers and lakes who want these fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into æstuations, and therefore some seas flow higher than others according to the plenty of these spirits, in their submarine constitutions.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

We must seek to fix our mindes upon that incomprehensible course of God's providence, which changeth all things without any mutation in itself: and the nearer we come to this confixure unto that stability, the less obnoxious we shall be to the estuations of joys and fears, or the anxiety of wonder in all contingencies.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 16 s. 5.

From hence we double the Boulnesse, and come to an estuarie, whither three notable riuers doo resort, and this is named the Soluele mouth.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 14.

——— For the seas retaine
Not onely their outragious esture there;
But fierce assistents, of particular feare,
And supernaturall mischiefe, they expire:
And those are whirlewinds of deuouring fire
Whisking about still.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

So, for ought I know, there may be in these vast internal parts of the earth, whose thin crust only has been here and there dug into by men, considerable masses of matter, that may have periodical revolutions, or accensions, or exstations, [estuations] or fermentations.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 98.

Whether it be observed, that over the estuary, or in some other neighbouring part of the place, where the mineral water springs, there arise any visible mineral fumes or smoak, (which, when they do appear, are wont to do it early in the morning, or late in the evening,) and if such fumes ascend, how plentiful they are, of what colour, and of what smell?—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 799.

ESU'RIENT. Lat. Esuriens, pres. part. of Esurire, to desire to eat:—greedy.

Sure it is that he [Philip Nye] was a most dangerous and seditious person, a politic pulpit driver of independency, an insatiable esurient after riches, and what not, to raise a family, and to heap up wealth.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

ETCH, v. } Probably from the A.S. Ecge;
E'TCHER. } Ger. Ecge, an edge or point; be-
E'TCHING, n. } cause it is done with the point of a needle. See HATCH.

Vischer, viz. Cornelius (for there is another who has published divers landskips) hath most rarely etched a certain Dutch kitchen, where there is an old man taking tobacco, whilst his wife is frying of pan-cakes: also a fiddler, accompanied with boyes and girles painted by Ostade; but above all, admirable is the descent, or Christus Mortuus, after Tintoret, both graved and etch'd, as indeed I should have said of the rest.—Evelyn. Sculpturæ.

Giovanni Maggi was an excellent painter and etcher, as he has sufficiently discovered in his rare perspectives, landskips, and his Roma in the larger Cartoon; likewise in the nine priviled'd and stationary churches; with the three Magi, who offer presents to our Saviour, in allusion to his name.—Id. Ib.

Some plates were sent abroad about the year 1530, eaten with aqua fortis after Parmesano; and etching with corrosive waters began by some to be attempted with laudable success.—Evelyn. Sculpturæ.

I have very seldom seen lovelier cuts made by the help of the best tempered and best handled gravers, than I have seen made on plates etched, some by a French and others by an English artificer.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 459.

The letters will be more or less deeply engraven (or rather etched) according to the time the sublimate is suffered to lie on.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 317.

He that first invented printing or etching, had an idea of it in his mind before it ever existed.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 22. s. 9.

Another instance, of the same import with the foregoing ones, may be afforded us by the art of etching, whereby copper and silver plates may be enriched with figures, which may seem to have been made by the tool of some excellent graver.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 459.

The author whom I hint at shall be nameless, but his countenance is communicated to the publick in several views and aspects drawn by the most eminent painters, and forwarded by engravers, artists by way of mezzo tinto, etchers, and the like.—Guardian, No. 1.

Prince Rupert was also an encourager of useful arts and manufactures, he himself was the inventor of etching.
Hume. History of England, c. 71.

ETE'RNE. } Fr. Eternel; It. Eternale;
ETE'RNAL, adj. } Sp. Eternal; Fr. Eternizer;
ETE'RNAL, n. } It. Eternizare; Sp. Eternizar;
ETE'RNALIST. } Lat. Eternus, (q.d.) ceviternus, from ævum; Gr. Αἰών, i. e. aiei ων, semper existens, ever being, everlasting, (qv.)
ETERNA'LITY. } See the quotations from
ETE'RNALIZE. } Milton, Tillotson, and Clarke,
ETE'RNALLY. } for the full force of the adj.
ETE'RNIFY, v. } eternal, and noun eternity. The noun eternal is ETE'RNITY. } emphatically applied to—
ETE'RNIZE. }

The Creator of all things.

To eternize is (with less force) to confer or endow with length or duration of time; with lasting fame; to perpetuate, to immortalize.

The Eternall King reigning in three, two, and one,
Which all seeth, all knoweth, and all doth avise,
With hundred fould shall reward everichone,
Which here in their life this wretched world doth despise.
Abbot Malvern, in R. Gloucester, p. 584.

Eterne God, that thurgh thy perveance
Ledest this world by certain governance,
In idel, as men sain, ye nothing make.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,177.

The cõmon judgemẽt of al creatures reasonable, then is yt God is eterne. Let vs consider then what is eternity, for certes that shal shewẽ vs togider, the divine nature, and the divine science. Eternity then is perfit possession, and altogether of life interminable.—Id. Boecius, b. v.

It is the common judgment of all that live by reason, that God is everlasting, and therefore let us consider what eternity is. For this will declare unto us both the divine nature and knowledge. Eternitie is a perfect possession altogether of an endless life.—Translation by J. T. 1609.

Thou comfort of us wretches, do me endite
Thy maiden's death, that wan thurgh hire merite
The eternal lif, and over the fend victorie.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,502.

To broken been the statutes hie in heauen
That creat were eternally tendure.
Id. Balade of the Village.

The high Almighty perueiance,
In whose eterne remembrance
From first was euery thing present,
He hath his prophecie sent
(In suche a wise as thou shalt here)
To Daniel of this matere. Gower. Con. A. Prol.

As I sayde vnto you: my shepe heare my voyce, and I knowe them, and they folow me, and I geue vnto them eternal lyfe, and they shall neuer perishe, neither shal any man plucke them out of my hande.—Bible, 1551. John, c. 10.

For thus he speaketh unto Moses, I am that I am; signifying an eternalitee, and a nature that cannot chaunge.
Udal. John, c. 9.

The great goodness of God geuyng them knowledge of the meane of saluacion, and of that Mediatour, by whose deth they and theyr offspring shuld be redeemed agayne to blysse, dyd in the fayth of the sayd Mediatour, remytte and forgeue theim the eternalitie of the payne dew unto theyr offence.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 1292.

Why do we not spede vs hastely to come vnto that reste of eternitie whiche may be obteyned by oure litel and shorte labours here rather than folow ye voluptuous pleasures of this worlde, whereby we shall come in to euerlastynge defatigacyons and werynesse in hell.
Fisher. On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

Therefore Dauyd consideryng in him selfe how greuously he had offended Almighty God, and that man may bease and suffer hys punyshment, maketh his prayer that he vouchsafe neyther to punyshe hym eternally by the paynes of hel, neyther correcte him by the paynes of purgatory, but to be meke and mercifull to hym

Fisher. On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 6.

There his name who love and prize,
Stable stay shall eternize Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 69.

Mac. O, full of scorpions is my minde, dear wife:
Thou knowst that Banquo and his Fleans liues.
Lady. But in them, nature's coppies not eterne

Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 2.

He there does now enjoy eternal rest
And happy ease, which thou dost want and craue
And farther from it daily wanderest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

A kingdom they portend thee, but what kingdom,
Real or allegoric, I discern not,
Nor when, eternal sure, as without end,
Without beginning —Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

And so with his burnt ashes, and the trophy of the scrowl, Don Quixote's valour is eternalized.

Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 3.

The house of endlesse paine is built thereby,
In which ten thousand sorts of punishment
The cursed creatures doe eternally torment.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

For in the temple, by and by with vs,
These couples shall eternally be knit.

Shakes. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iv. sc. 1.

True Fame, the trumpeter of heau'n that doth desire inflame
To glorious deeds, and by her power eternizes the name.

Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 559.

A poor light gain, to recompense their toil,
That thought to get eternity the while!

Daniel. Musophilus.

Not so, quoth I, let baser things deuise
To die in dust, but you shall liue by fame:
My verse your vertues rare shall eternize,
And in the heauens write your glorious name.

Spenser, son. 75.

Saint Alban's battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 3.

The eternal, supreme cause, has such a perfect, independent, and unchangeable comprehension of all things; that in every point or instant of his eternal duration, all things past, present, and to come, must be not indeed themselves present at once, (for that is a manifest contradiction;) but they must be as entirely known and represented to him in one single thought or view, and all things present and future to be absolutely under his power and direction; as if there was really no succession at all, and as if all things had been, (not that they really are,) actually present at once.

Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 4.

For how can we desire to be better assured, that our bodies shall not for ever sleep in the grave, but shall at last be reunited to our souls, and both soul and body live eternally in unspeakable bliss and happiness: I say, how can we have greater assurance of this, than by what was on this day brought to pass in our Saviour!—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 12.

I would ask eternalists what mark is there that they could expect or desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this?—Burnet. Theory of the Earth.

Eternity is a duration without bounds or limits: Now there are two limits of duration, beginning and ending; that which has always been, is without beginning; that which always shall be, is without ending.

Tillotson, vol. ii. Ser. 102.

To say that Immensity does not signify boundless space, and that eternity does not signify duration or time without beginning and end, is (I think) affirming that words have no meaning.—Leibnitz & Clarke. Dr. Clarke's Fifth Reply.

Though poets immortality may give,
And Troy does still in Homer's numbers live;
How dare I touch thy praise, thou glorious frame,
Which must be deathless as thy raiser's name:
But that I wanting fame am sure of thine
To eternize this humble song of mine.

Otway. Windsor Castle.

Lorenzo! since eternal is at hand,
To swallow time's ambitions; as the vast
Leviathan, the bubbles vain, that ride
High on the foaming billow; what avail
High titles, high descent, attainments high,
If unattain'd our highest!—Young. Complaint, Night 7.

To the ancient philosophers, creation from nothing appeared an unintelligible idea. They maintained the eternal existence of matter, which they supposed to be modelled by the sovereign mind of the universe into the form which the earth now exhibits.—Blair, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

No possible change can alter his mode of existence, or dissolve his being; therefore no law of his nature can prevent his being eternally as he is.

Cogan. Theological Disquisitions, Dis. 1. c. 1.

Notwithstanding the most extended concatenation that may exist in the series of productions, effects succeeding to their causes through incalculable ages, yet the mind must ultimately repose itself in a first cause; who, being uncaused, must exist from eternity

Cogan. Theological Disquisitions, Dis. 1. c. 1.

Nor would th' enamour'd Muse neglect to pay
To Stanhope's worth the tributary lay;
Did not his virtues eternis'd remain
The boasted theme of Pope's immortal strain

Smollet. Repro f. A Satire.

ETE'SIAN. Gr. Ετησιος, yearly, annual, from Ετος, the year, Venti anniversarii; "Fr. Etesies; the easterly winds which commonly blow in the Dog-daies," (Cotgrave.)

Another opinion there is, more embraced than the rest, That whiles the forerunning winds blow and the Etesian blasts together, holding on continually for the space of forty-five dayes, they force backe his [the Nile] streame, and by reason that his swift course is thus restrained, he swelleth, and his waves overflow.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 211.

So may th' auspicious Queen of Love
And the twin stars, the seed of Jove,
And he who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
And gentle breezes fill thy sails
Supplying soft Etesian gales.—Dryden. Hor. b. i. Ode 3.

ETH. A.S. Ath, the termination of the third pers. sing.; is a lisping pronunciation of Es, (qv.)

ETHE. i. e. easy, (qv. and also Eath.)

Wild the bicom Cristen, fulle eth I were to drawe,
Bot I dar not for tham alle one to leue our lawe.

R. Brunne, p. 194.

Leue thou in oure louerd God, that al the world wrought
Holy heuen eth on hey holliche he fourmede
And la Almyghti hymself, ouer alle his workes.

Piers Ploughman. Crede.

But if thou couthest sette in rewle
The two, the three were ethe to rewle.

Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Thus ēded this honorable man, [Hastings] a good knight and a gentle, of gret auctherite with his prince, of liuing some what dessolute, plaine and open to his enemy, and secret to his friend, eth to begile, as he that of good hart and corage forstudied no perilles.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 55.

E'THER. Lat. Æther; Gr. Αιθηρ; Fr. Ethére, Aristotle derives from αιει θεειν, quod semper currat et ETHE'REAL. ETHE'REOUS. moveatur, because it is ever in motion. Others, απο του αιθειν, urere, quod igneus sit et incensus; because it is fiery and of flame. Others, again, απο του θερειν, hoc est ab calfaciendo; from its heat. Beeman is not content with any of these, and resorts to the Hebrew.

Olympus, fair'st of hills, that heaven art said to be,
I [Malvern] envy not thy state, nor less myself do make;
Nor to possess thy name, mine own would I forsake.
Nor would I, as thou dost, ambitiously aspire
To thrust thy forked top into th' ethereal fire.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 7.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould whereon we stand,
This continent of spacious heav'n, adorn'd
With plant, fruit, flower ambrosial, gemms of gold,
Whose eye so superficially surveyes
These things, as not to mind from whence they grow.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The mind employ'd in search of secret things,
To find out motions, cause, and hidden springs,
Through all th' ethereal regions mounts on high,
Views all the spheres, and ranges all the sky.

Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

——— Ever learn
Quick ether's motion: oft the scene is turn'd;
Now the blue vault, and now the murky cloud,
Hail, rain, or radiance. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

O what a confluence of ethereal fires,
From urns unnumbered down the steep of heaven,
Streams to a point, and centers in my sight!

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

E'THICK, adj. E'THICK, s. E'THICAL. E'THICALLY. Gr. Ηθικος, from ηθος, mores; which Lennep conceives to have its origin in εω, sum, versor. For the modern application of the word, see the first quotation from Cogan.

T. Ca. buzz'd me at the ear, that though Ben had barrel'd up a great deal of knowledge yet it seems he had not read the ethicks, which, among other precepts of morality, forbid self-commendation.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 13.

He [St. Paul] thereby has furnished us with so rich a variety of moral and spiritual precepts, concerning special matters subordinate to the general laws of piety and virtue; that out of them might well be compiled a body of ethicks, or system of precepts de officiis, in truth and in completeness far excelling those which any philosophy hath been able to devise or deliver.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

From ethical or theological composures, to take out lessons, that may improve the mind, is a thing much inferiour to the being able to do the like out of the book of nature, where most matters, that are not physical, if they seem not to be purposely veiled, are at least but darkly hinted.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 340.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christianly of the faults of the tongue.—Government of the Tongue.

Ye sacred tomes, be my unerring guide,
Dove-hearted saints, and prophets eagle-ey'd!
I scorn the moral fop, and ethic sage,
But drink in truth from your illumin'd page.

Thompson. Written on the Holy Bible.

Ethicks extend to the investigation of those principles by which moral men are governed, they explore the nature and excellence of virtue, the nature of moral obligation, on what it is founded, and what are the proper motives of practice; morality in the more common acceptation, though not exclusively, relates to the practical and obligatory part of ethicks. Ethicks principally regard the theory of morals.

Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, Introd.

In a treatise on morals, we expect that the author should particularly enlarge upon the rules, or duties, and motives of practice, and by an ethical treatise, we expect a more extensive investigation of whatever relates to the state and nature of man as a moral agent, and a more minute examination of the principles themselves, on which moral precepts are enforced.—Id. Ib.

E'THNICK, adj. E'THNICK, s. E'THNICAL. E'THNICISM. Gr. Εθνικος, from εθνος, a nation or people. Applied to nations— Not of the Jewish or Christian faith.

The ethnicke authours stirre the hearers, being well applied to the purpose.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 193.

Back, Flamen, with thy superstitious fumes
And cense not here; thy ignorance presumes
Too much, in acting any ethnick rite
In this translated temple

B. Jonson. Part of the King's Entertainment.

Shortlie after it so came to passe that Penda, King of Mercia, (that cruell ethnike tyrant) made sore warres vpon Egricus.—Holinshed. England, an. 652.

Yea, such was the detestation of this effeminate, unnaturall, odious practice of men's putting on women's apparell, even among the ethnickes, that the Lycians when they chanced to mourne, did usually put on the woman's garment, that the very deformity and infamy of that array might move them the sooner to cast off their foolish sorrow.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act. ii. sc. 2.

Ethnicke would understand justice itself to have failed, as it is a virtue abstract, and may be considered without a person.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 6. s. 4.

Lest I might seem to have no measure in raking up this ethnical dunghill, I will now leave the theology of the original of demons.—Mede. Apostasy of the Lat. Times, p. 19.

Be advised, therefore, (till you understand the case better) to forbear to take of the lamp of nature in the night of ethnicism; but know, that the light of the law of God, and right reason, and common practice, give sufficient allowance to that which your misprision cavills at.

Bp. Hall. Humble Remons. to the Parliament.

Most strange is that which they write of certaine Brasilians within the land, which either hauing seen the religious rites of the Portugals, or instructed therein by some fugitiues or apostatas, had set vp a new sect of Christian ethnicisme, or mungrell-Christianity.

Purchas. His Pilgrimage, b. ix. c. 5. s. 3.

"What means," quoth he, "this Devil's procession
With men of orthodox profession!
'Tis ethnique and idolatrous,
From heathenism deriv'd to us."—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

ETIQUE'TTE. Fr. Etiquette; Sp. Etiqueta. Bourdelot and Huet derive from Gr. Στιχος, order; thus, στιχος, stichus, stichettus, stichetta, etiquette. And this etymology, Menage says, is natural enough! But the interpretation of Cotgrave leads plainly to the true etymology. It is—

A ticket; delivered not only, as Cotgrave says, for the benefit or advantage of him that receives it, but also entitling to place, to rank; and thus applied to the ceremonious observance of rank or place; to ceremony.

He cannot drink five bottles, bilk the score,
Then kid a constable, and drink five more;
But he can draw a pattern, make a tart,
And has the ladies' etiquette by heart.

Cowper. Progress of Error.

It [simplicity] is guilty of ludicrous offences against the laws of custom, or the etiquettes of fashion, although by its reasoning wrong, according to prevailing ideas, it frequently evinces just and accurate conceptions of what is right.

Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, c. 1. Disc. 2.

E'TTEN. Dr. Leyden says, "Ettyn, a giant; A.S. Eten. Hence Red-ettyn, the red-giant; forte a A.S. Etan, to eat; hence an Anthropophagus," (Gloss. to Complaint of Scotland;) and Benson, Etan, edere, eten, comestus, gigas. Somner says, perhaps from Oetus.

Wife. Faith, husband, and Ralph says true, for they say the King of Portugal cannot sit at his meat, but the giants and the ettins will come and snatch it from him.

Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act. 1. sc. 1.

ETYMO'LOGY.
ETYMO'LOGER.
ETYMO'LOGIST.
ETYMO'LOGIZE, v.
ETYMOLO'GICAL.
E'TYMON.

Fr. Etymologie; It. and Sp. Ethimo, etimologia; Lat. Etymon, etymologia; Gr. Ετυμολογια, (ετυμος, and λογος,) sermo de etymis, that is, oratio, quâ nominis ratio exponitur; a discourse in which the reason or cause of the noun or name is explained; or, in the words of Cicero, "quâ de causâ quæque (verba) essent ita nominata, quam etymologiam appellabant."

Gr. Ετυμος, from ετος, verus, and hence etymologia, sive de verâ vocum origine. T. H. in Lennep. (Tiberius Hemsterhuysius.)

The true origin of words, of the meaning of words.

The first part of this name we haue found,
Let vs ethimologise the secound.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

Ransake yet we would if we might
Of this worlde the true ortographie
The verie discent of ethimologie. Id. Ib.

But how aptlie and trulie the same [chance and clere] may stand to make the etymon of chancellor, I leave to others to consider.—Holinshed. Scotland, an. 1578.

The author of the Parallel of the Ancient Architecture with the Modern, (which many years since I made English) had at the end of his treatise, began to explain a few of the hard words, technical terms belonging to the art, the etymologies whereof he thought necessary to interpret.

Evelyn. Architecture.

Laws there must be; and "lex a ligando," saith the etymologer; it is called a law from binding.

Dr. Griffith. Fear of God and the King, (1660.) p. 82.

The superstitious man is afraid of the gods, (said the etymologist) δεδιεναι τους θεους ωσπερ τους τυραννους, fearing of God as if he were a tyrant, and an unreasonable exacter of duty upon unequal terms, and disproportionable, impossible degrees, and unreasonable, and great and little instances.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I have been long of opinion, as may be seen by my book, that if we knew the original of all the words we met with, we should thereby be very much help'd to know the ideas they were first apply'd to and made to stand for; and therefore I must beg your lordship to excuse this conceit of mine, this etymological observation especially, since it hath nothing in it against the truth, nor against your lordship's idea of substance.—Locke. To the Bishop of Worcester.

For the Teutonick etymologies, I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborne to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment.

Johnson. Preface to the English Dictionary.

The explanation and etymology of those words (in, out, on, of, and at,) require a degree of knowledge in all the antient northern languages, and a skill in the application of that knowledge, which I am very far from assuming; and, though I am almost persuaded by some of my own conjectures concerning them, I am not willing, by an apparently forced and far-fetched derivation, to justify your imputation of etymological legerdemain.—Tooke. Div. of Purl. vol. i. c. 9.

In exhibiting the descent of our language, our etymologists seem to have been too lavish of their learning, having traced almost every word through various tongues, only to show what was shown sufficiently by the first derivation.

Johnson. Plan of an English Dictionary.

EVA'CUATE, v.
EVACUA'TION.
EVA'CUATOR.

Fr. Evacuer; Sp. Evacuar; It. Evacuare; Lat. Evacuare, (e, and vacuus,) to empty out.

To empty out; to throw out or draw out, (sc.) till empty; to leave empty, and thus, to leave or quit; to void, to avoid or make void, or of no force or effect.

Also unctions with oyles and oyntementes, called Diaphoretice, which, by exaporation, do shortely evacuate the fulnesse.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7.

The parte of evacuation by lettinge of bloude, is incision or cuttynge the vayne, wherby the bloud, whiche is cause of syckenes or griefe to the whole body, or any particular part therof, doth most aptly passe.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7.

For thou seest, O blessed Jesu, that there is now such an hell of the spirits of errour broken loose into the world, as if they meant to evacuate this part of the mysterie of godliness.

Bp. Hall. The Great Mistery of Godliness, s. 14.

The white [elebore] doth evacuat the offencive humours which cause diseases.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 4.

The best way therefore is, by sobriety and regular diet to keep the body always in that moderate measure of evacuation and repletion, that it may be able by proportionable temperature, to maintain itself without any outward help

Id Plutarch, p. 512.

Take heed, be not too busy in imitating any farther in a dangerous expression, or in excusing the great evacuators of the law.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 175.

If the prophesies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know or distinguish, when a prophesie is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever: which would utterly evacuate the use of them.—South, vol. i. ser. 6.

But whilst they were in debate concerning the articles, they understood that Prince Rupert and others of the king's party, were marched out of the town in pursuance of them: and that the garrison would be entirely evacuated before they could signify their pleasure to the army.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 14.

Where the humour is strong and predominant, there the prescription must be rugged, and the evacuation violent.

South, vol. ix. ser. 5.

The King Harfager, and the traitor Tosti, who had join'd him, were slain in the battle: and the Norwegians were forced to evacuate the country.

Burke. Abridgement of English History, b. ii. c. 6.

A country so exhausted of its coin, and harassed by three revolutions, rapidly succeeding each other, was rather an object that stood in need of every kind of refreshment and recruit, than one, which could subsist under new evacuations.—Id Reply of a Com on the Affairs of India.

EVA'DE, v.
EVA'SION.
EVA'SIVE.

Fr. Evader; Lat. Evad-ere; to go out, (e, and vad-ere; Gr. Βαδ-ειν, to go.)

To go out or away, to get away, to step aside or away, to escape, to elude.

I say that this their evasion is nothyng worth, neyther yet cã I imagine any way wherby they may haue any apparẽce of escape.—Frith. Workes, p. 59.

Hymselfe hath here deuised an evasion by meane of a distinccion made by Melancthon, in which distinccion, as in a miste, he weneth to walke awaye.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 693.

But he (as louing his owne pride, and purposes)
Evades them, with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff with epithetes of warre.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

——— I am out now
Six hundred in the cash, yet if on a sudden
I should be call'd to account, I have a trick
How to evade it, and make up the sum

Massinger. The City Madam.

——— How may I auoyde
(Although my will distaste what it elected)
The wife I chose, there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firme by honour.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 1.

But, as well them, as those light women aforesaid, he banished all, that none ever after should by such delusion of the law seek evasion.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 104.

He is likewise to teach him the art of finding flaws, loopholes, and evasions, in the most solemn compacts, and particularly a great Rabbinical secret, revived of late years by the fraternity of Jesuits, namely, that contradictory interpretations of the same article may both of them be true and valid.—Spectator, No. 305.

A thoughtless fly or two, at most,
Is all the conquest thou canst boast:
For bees of sense thy arts evade,
We see so plain the nets are laid.—E. More. Spider & Bee.

But had they even wanted so plausible an evasion, yet their prejudices would not have suffered them to be nice in a case where the whole of their religion lay at stake.

Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple.

Although moral obligation, as referring to the grand standard of virtuous conduct, may be the same; yet the rougher vices of oaths and intoxication are appropriated by men: while the evasive ones of artifice, &c. are deemed less opprobrious in the female.—Cogan. The Passions, pt. ii. c. 2.

EVAGA'TION. Evaguer, evagation; Lat. Evagari, atum, (e, and vagari, which Vossius thinks is from ve, that is, valdè, and agi, i. e. ferri, to be driven or carried forcibly along.) As the—

"Fr. Evagation,—a wandering, roving, straying abroad," (Cotgrave.)

Thence about by Redgrave I shall make a circle hither again, taking perchance both universities in my line homewards. You married men are deprived of these evagations.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 759.

To bridle the evagation of the sound, when arrived so far, but withal not to make a confusion thereof, by any disagreeable repercussions, we may take notice of a very curious provision in those little protuberances, called the tragus and antitragus of the outward ear, of a commodious form and texture, and conveniently lodged for this use.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3

If the law of attraction had not been what it is, (or at least, if the prevailing law had transgressed the limits above assigned,) every evagation would have been fatal; the planet once drawn, as drawn it necessarily must have been, out of its course, would have wandered in endless error.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

EVANE'SCENT.
EVANE'SCENCE.

Lat. Evanescens, pres. part. of evanescere, to wane, to decrease, to fall away or decay. For Vanus, Vossius proposes three etymologies of his own, and the same number from other writers. It is probably (as Tooke asserts) from the A. S. Wan-ian, to wane.

Waning, decreasing, falling away or decaying; disappearing; from the sensations or perceptions; and thus, insensible or imperceptible.

Nor to this evanescent speck of earth
Poorly confin'd; the radiant tracks on high
Are her [Philosophy] exalted range, intent to gaze
Creation through, and from that full complex,
Of never-ending wonders, to conceive
Of the sole Being right, who spoke the word,
And Nature mov'd complete.—Thomson. Summer

The image of misery was, perhaps, originally suggested to some Poet by the conduct of his Patron, by the daily contemplation of splendour, which he never must partake, by fruitless attempts to catch at interdicted happiness, and by the sudden evanescence of his reward, when he thought his labours almost at an end.—Rambler, No. 163.

If a life be delayed till interest and envy are at an end, we may hope for impartiality, but must expect little intelligence; for the incidents which give excellence to biography, are of a volatile and evanescent kind, such as soon escape the memory, and are rarely transmitted by tradition.

Id. No. 60.

EVA'NGEL, s.
EVA'NGELY.
EVANGE'LICAL.
EVANGE'LICALLY.
EVANGE'LICK.
EVA'NGELISM.
EVA'NGELIST.
EVA'NGELISTARY.
EVA'NGELIZE.

Fr. Evangile; It. and Sp. Evangelio; Lat. Evangelium; Gr. Ευαγγελιον, (from ευ, bene, and αγγελειν, nunciare, to tell or announce,) the Gospel, in A. S. God-spell, (good, and spell, a speech, a story;) especially applied to—

The history of the birth or nativity, the life, death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven of Jesus Christ.

[Sente Peter] Pope was at Rome first, Cristendom to lere,
And sende Sent Mark the evangelist into Egypt for to preche
The Gospel that he hadde ymad, and Cristendom to teche.

R. Gloucester, p. 67.

For clergie seeth that he seih, in the seynt evangelie.

Piers Ploughman, p. 194.

And as the evangelist wytnesseth whan we maken festes
We sholde nat clypie knyghtes thʳto, ne no kyne ryche.

Id. p. 206.

But we usen not this power, but we suffren alle thingis that we ghyuen no lettyng to the evangelie of Crist.

Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 9.

I wondre, that so soone ghe ben thus moued fro him that clepide ghou unto the grace of Crist into a nothir euangelie.

Id. Galathies, c. 1.

And he ghaf summe apostlis, summe profetis, othere euangelistis, othere scheppardis and techeris to the ful endyng of seyntis into the werk of mynysterie into edificacioun of Cristis bodi.—Id. Effesies, c. 4.

And Y am sent to thee to speke and to euangelize to thee these thingis, and le thou schalt be doumse.—Id. Luke, c. 1.

The lawe and prophetes til to Jon, fro that tyme the rewme of God is euangelized.—Id. Ib. c. 16.

Right so withouten any gile
Surmounteth this noble evangile
The worde of any euangelist.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

VOL. I.

This is to say, that ther is no wight that hath soveraine bountee, save God alone, as he himself recordeth in his evangelies.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And therfore sayth Seint John the evangelist; they shul folow deth, and they shul not finde him, and they shul destre to die, and deth shal flee from hem.

Id. The Persones Tale.

If thou canst brynge with thee to the euangelyke salutacyon, thy father, thy mother, thy bretheren, and thy sisters, dooe it.—Udal. Marke, c. 9.

In the tother parte (as it were with an euangelik sermone) he calleth them all and vs to the knowledge of Cryste

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 2.

The euaungeliste reherseth what Christ said, and did simplye and truely, whiche story we must so place in vnderstandyng, as we tryfle not the mysterie, at stayng and stoppyng of lettres and syllables.

Bp Gardner. Explication of Transubstantiation, fol. 96.

When the evangell most toil'd souls to winne,
Even then there was a falling from the faith.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The Second Houre.

The righteousness evangelical must be like Christ's seamless coat, all of a piece from the top to the bottom; it must invest the whole soul.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

And thus was this land saved from infidelity; as the remain of the old world was from water, by an ark, through the apostolical and miraculous evangelism of St. Bartholomew.—Bacon. New Atlantis.

Blest mother of the church, be in the list,
Reckoned from hence the she evangelist,
Nor can the style be profanation, when
The needle may convert more than the pen.

Cartwright. To the Lady Paulet.

Then with those twelve some happy men did haunt,
(Heaven's messengers, evangelizing peace)
As he who watered after Paul did plant,
And circumcis'd to please the Hebrew race.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The Ninth Houre.

The work of Christ's ministers is evangelization; that is, a proclamation of Christ, and a preparation for his second coming; as the evangelization of John Baptist was a preparation to his first coming.

Hobbs. Of a Christian Commonwealth, c. 42.

I shall bear you my faith and fidelitie of life and lim, and worldlie honour against all men, faithfullie I shall knowlege and shall doo you service due vnto you of the kingdome of Scotland aforesaid, as God me so helpe, and these holie evangelies.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 22.

'Tis plain by v. 30 here, and the application therein of these words, Gen. ii. 23, to Christ and the Church, that the Apostles understood several passages in the Old Testament, in reference to Christ and the Gospel, which evangelical or spiritual sense was not understood, till, by the assistance of the Spirit of God, the Apostles so explained and revealed it.

Locke. Ephesians, c. 6. (Note 32, w.)

It must be somewhat peculiar to the evangelic institution, somewhat that distinguishes the Christian scheme of duty from all others, which gave rise to this decision of the apostle; and that plainly is, the sublimity and rigour of those precepts of mortification and self-denial, by which Christians are obliged to walk.

Atterbury, Ser. vol. ii. Pref. p. liii.

It appears, that acts of saving grace are evangelically good, and well-pleasing to God.

Bp. Barlow. Remains, p. 432.

But the vnmaker complains there are too many of them; he thinks the Gospel, the good news of salvation, tedious from the mouth of our Saviour and his apostles; he is of opinion, that before the Epistles were writ, and without believing precisely what he thinks fit to cull out of them, there could be no Christians: and if we had nothing but the four Evangelists, we could not be sav'd.

Locke. Second Vind. of the Reasonableness of Christianity.

O fie; 'tis evangelical and pure:
Observe each face, how sober and demure!
Ecstasy sets her stamp on ev'ry mien;
Chins fall'n, and not an eye-ball to be seen.

Cowper. The Progress of Error.

The chosen seed, on cultur'd ground, are they
Who humbly tread the evangelic way.

Hart. Christ's Parable of the Sower.

The same spirit diffused itself to the apostles, evangelists, and disciples, who maintained, throughout the whole course of their ministry, a certain vigour and vivacity of mind, which no calamity could depress.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

The criticks complain that the evangelistaries and lectionaries have often transfused their readings into the other manuscripts.—Person. To Travis, p. 230.

Thus did our heavenly instructor most exactly fulfil the predictions of the prophets, and his own declarations, that he would evangelize to the poor.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

After the resurrection of their divine Master, the apostles, being delegated to evangelize, or teach the doctrines of Christ's mission, his death, resurrection, forgiveness of sins, and a future judgment, they were also furnished with similar credentials.—Cogan. Excellences of Christianity, pt. iii. c. 4.

EVA'NID. Fr. Evanide; Lat. Evanidus. See EVANESCENT.

Waned or faint, fallen away, decayed.

For the decoction of simples which bear the visible colours of bodyes decocted, are dead and evanid, without the commixion of alum, argol, and the like.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and ancient truths; as between the sun and an unconnected evanid meteor.—Glanvill. Van. of Dogmat. c. 19.

There is indeed taken notice of, a difference betwixt these apparent colours, and those that are wont to be esteemed genuine, as to the duration, which has induced some learned men to call the former rather evanid than fantastical.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 691.

How evanid is it, therefore, when applied to a prophet under the impulse of inspiration, and speaking in the most scanty of all languages.—Warburton. Div. Leg. b. iv. s. 6.

E-VA'NISH, v. See EVANESCENT

To wane, to disappear from the sensations or perceptions; to escape or get out of view.

Thus whilst for kindnesse both began to weepe,
My happinesse evanish'd with the sleepe.

Stirling. Aurora, son. 51.

——— Kindling o'er the view, the Muse
The naval pride of those bright days reviews;
Sees Gama's sails, that first to India bore,
In awful hope, evanish from the shore.

Mickle. Almada Hill.

EVA'PORATE, v. EVAPORA'TION. EVA'PORABLE. } Fr. Evaporer; Lat. Evaporatio; (e, and vaporare, atum, to emit a steam, to reek.) Vapor, Vossius thinks, is from the Gr. Καπος, a steam or smoke, an exhalation.

To emit a steam or smoke, an exhalation, a breath; to reek; to dissipate or disperse in steam or smoke; to vanish into air.

The same philosopher, [Democritus] whan he was a hundred yeres olde and nyne, prolonged his lyfe certayne dayes with the evaporation of honye, as Arestoxenus writeth.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

As for rosin and gum, they are mingled with the rest, to incorporate the drugs and spices, and to keepe in the sweet odour thereof, which otherwise would evaporate and soone be lost.—Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 1.

So in pestilent fevers, the intention is to expel the infection by sweat and evaporation.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 968.

Thus ancient wit in modern numbers taught,
Wanting the warmth with which its author wrote,
Is a dead image, and a senseless draught.
While we transfuse, the nimble spirit flies,
Escapes unseen, evaporates, and dies.

Granville. To Dryden, on his Translations.

The substances which emit these streams, being such as newly belonged to animals, and were, for the most part, transpired through the pores of their feet, must be in likelihood a far more evaporable and dissipable kind of bodies, than minerals or adust vegetables.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 675.

In the seven last months of the year 1688, the evaporations amounted to 22 inches 5 lines; but the rain only to 11 inches 6¼ lines: in 1689, the evaporations 32 inches 10⅓ lines; but the rain 18 inches 1 line: in 1690, the evaporations 30 inches 11 lines; the rain 21 inches ⅔ of a line.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. i. c. 5. Note (7.)

To make this bountiful communication, they adjourned from the church in the Old Jewry to the London Tavern; where the same Dr. Price, in whom the fumes of his oracular tripod were not entirely evaporated, moved and carried the resolution, or address of congratulation, transmitted by Lord Stanhope to the National Assembly of France.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

As I shall soon cease to write Adventurers, I could not forbear lately to consider what has been the consequence of my labours; and whether I am to reckon the hours laid out in these compositions as applied to a good and laudable purpose, or suffered to fume away in useless evaporations.

Adventurer, No. 137.

EU'CHARIST. EUCHARI'STICALL. EU'CHARISTIZE, v. } Fr. Euchariste; It. Eucaristia; Sp. Eucharistia; Lat. Eucharistia; Gr. Ευχαριστια, from Ευχαριστ-ειν, to give thanks, (ευ, bene, and χαρις, gratia.)

A giving of thanks; especially applied to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, taken "with a thankful remembrance of his death."

He [Gregory VII.] transubstanciated the eucharisticall bread, condemned the mariage of prestes, and cõmaunded moukes to abstain from flesh.—Bale. English Vot. pt. ii.

Of all the blessings that ever dropt down from heaven upon man, that of his Redemption may be called the blessing paramount; and of all those comforts, and exercises of devotion which attend that blessing, the eucharist, or holy sacrament, may claim the prime place.

Howell, b. iii. Let. 4.

The eucharistick bread being neither hypostatically united with the Divinity, nor being the medium through which any such supernatural tendency of the Divine Presence appears to us, adoration directed toward it cannot fail of being palpable idolatry.—More. Antidote against Idolatry, c. 2.

That in this sacred supper there is a sacrifice (in that sense wherein the Fathers spoke) none of us ever doubted: but that is then either Latreuticall (as Bellarmine distinguishes it not ill) or eucharisticall: that is here (as Chrysostome speakes) a remembrance of a sacrifice, that is, as Augustine interprets it, a memoriall of Christ's passion celebrated in the church.

Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, s. 19.

He, we see, is depressed before advanced, crucified before enthroned, and led through the vale of tears, to the region of eucharist and hallelujahs.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 1.

The Ethnick devotion, consisting (as it were totally) in the praise of their Gods, and acknowledgment of their benefits; the Jewish more than half in eucharistical oblations, and in solemn commemoration of providential favours

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 9.

For example, Justin Martyr speaks of the elements being eucharistized, or blessed by the prayer of the word that came from him.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii p 99.

Justin Martyr, more than once, calls the consecrated elements by the name of eucharistized food, which looks as if he thought that thanksgiving was the consecration.

Id. Ib p. 95.

I have certainly given long and great attention to the subject; and am not without hope that I shall afford some information to those who, for want of leisure, or opportunity, or inclination, have hitherto little considered or understood the nature and efficacy of the eucharist.

Annot. On the Nature, &c. of the Lord's Supper, Pref.

"Except ye eat of this bread, and drink of this wine, ye have no life in you." Words too strong and too alarming to be lightly passed over by those who are sincere in their profession of Christianity; and yet words of comfort to those who understand them of the eucharistical bread and wine.

Id. Ib.

EU'CHOLOGY. Gr. Ευχολογιον, (ευχη, prayer, and λογ-ος, speech, discourse,) a little book, in which prayers are contained; a Book of Prayer.

A prayer taken out of the euchologion of the Greek church, to be said by or in behalf of people in their danger or near their death.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 4. s. 7.

He did not frame an entirely new prayer, in words of his own conception, but took out of the ancient euchologies, or prayer-books of the Jews, what was good and laudable in them.—Bp. Bull. Works, vol. ii. p. 856.

EU'CTICAL. Gr. Ευκτικος, from Ευχ-εσθαι, to pray.

Precatory.

Hence was the origin of sacrifices, as they are distinguished into expiatory, euctical, and eucharistical.

Law. Theory of Religion, p. 326.

E'VEN. EVE. E'VENING, adj. E'VENING, n. } A. S. Æfen; Dut. Avend, Ger. Abend; which Wachter derives from Ger. Aben, Dut. Aven, deficere; (A. S. Ebb-an, to ebb.) Quid enim (he asks) est Vesper, nisi dies deficiens? the failing day, or fall of the day. In Dut. Avenden; Ger. Abenden, vesperascere. Benson and Lye seem to consider it to be the same word as æfen, even, æqualis.

The fall of the day. It is also applied to the watches or vigils, the wakes kept or observed in the evening preceding certain festivals.

"Brut," he saide, "passe northe al the lond of France
West, toward thilke stude as the sonne draweth agen eue."

R. Gloucester, p. 14.

He let caste thys traytor in the euengate late
At feneatre in Temese. Id. p. 312.

In chyrche he was devout y nou, vor hym ne scolde non day abyde,
That he ne hurde masse and matyns, and euesen, and eche tyde. Id. p. 369.

At Brunesburgh on Humber thei gan tham assaile,
From morn vnto euen lastell that batalle.

R Brunne, p. 31.

The noyse was vnride, it lasted all day,
Fro morn tille euentide, ther of had many affray.

Id. p. 174.

And the south-west wynd on Sat. day at eve
Was pertliche (particularly?) for prude. and for no poynt elles. Piers Ploughman, p. 81.

Wher see we hem on Sonedays. the servyse to huyre
As matyns by the morwe. tyl masse bygynne
Othr Sonedays at eve songe. Id. p. 159.

But whanne the evenyng was come ther cam a ryche man of Armathi, Joseph bi name, and he was a disciple of Jhesus.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 27.

Whē the euen was come, there came a ryche man of Aramathia, named Joseph, which man also was Jesus's disciple.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thei leiden hondes on hem and puttiden hem into warde into the morewe, for it was then euen-tide.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 4.

And they layde handes on them, and put them in holde vntyll the nexte day: for it was now euen-tide.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And so ferforth she gan our lay declare,
That she the constable, or that it were eve
Converted, and on Crist made him beleve.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4993.

Weping and wailing, care and other sorwe
I have ynough, on euen and on morowe,
Quod the marchant, and so have other mo,
That wedden ben.—Id. The Marchantes Prol. v. 1890.

Paraventure the altitude of A, in the euening is xcii. degrees of height, than will the second altitude or the dawnyng be xxi. that is to sain, lesse than xcii. that was his first altitude at euen.—Id. Of the Astrolabe.

If euen-song and morwe song accord,
Let see now who shall telle the first tale.
Id. The Prologue, v. 832.

And this was gladly in the euen-tide
Or wonder erly, lest men it espide.—Id. Legend of Thisbe.

Yet it is as bright as the day to all that know ye truth, how that our fastyng of theyr euens, and kepyng their holy dayes going bare foote, &c.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 398.

And [God] deuyded the light frō the darkenes, and called the light ye day and the darknes the nyght: and so of the euening and mornyng was made the first day.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 1.

Thus the yonge kyng entred into Reynes, the Saturday at euensongtyme, ryght well accompanyed with nobles, and mynstralles, and specially he had mo than xxx. trumpettes before him.—Berners. Froissart Cronycle, vol. I. c. 369.

Also the daie before Christmasse eeue, there chanced a great wind with thunder and rain, in such extreme wise, that manie buildings were shaken and overthrowen.
Holinshed. England. Hen. III. an. 1237.

Now came still evening on, and twilight gray
Had in her sober liverie all things clad;
Silence accompanied; for beast and bird,
They to thir grassie couch, these to thir nest,
Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b iv.

Near to his evening region was the sun,
When Hurgonil with his lamented load,
And faithful Tybalt their sad march begun
To fair Verona, where the court abood
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 1.

And by her side there ran her page, that hight
Vesper, and whom we the evening-starre intend,
That with his torche, still twinkling like twylight,
He lightened all the way where she should wend,
And ioy to weary wand'ring trauilers did lend.
Spenser. Of Mutabilitie, c. 6. s. 9.

To man, that was in th' evening made,
Stars gave the first delight;
Admiring in the gloomy shade,
Those little drops of light.
Waller. An Apology for having loved before.

This was their song: "Why, happy bridegroom, why,
Ere yet the stars are kindled in the sky,
Ere twilight shades, or evening dews are shed,
Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed?"
Dryden. Theocritus, b. xviii.

Ev'n now she shades thy evening-walk with bays,
(No hireling she, no prostitute to praise.)
Pope. Epistle to Robert Earl of Oxford and Mortimer.

——— Perhaps she owes
Her sunshine and her rain, her blooming spring,
And plenteous harvest, to the pray'r he makes,
When, Isaac like, the solitary saint
Walks forth to meditate at even-tide,
And think on her, who thinks not for herself.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

E'VEN, v. E'VEN, adj. E'VEN, adv. E'VENLY. E'VENNESS.

Goth. Ibn; A. S. Efen; Dut. Effen; Ger. Eben; Dut. Effenen, evenen; Ger. Ebenen, to smoothen, to plane, to level.

To plane, to level, to bring to an equal or uniform surface, without asperities or roughness, without inclination or leaning; to equalize.

Even, the adj. is used (met.) equal, impartial, calm, steady; also, opposed to odd.

An Eme-Christian (qv.) or Even-Christian,—is a fellow-christian; an equal-christian.

Even, the ad. is,—equally; even-so; equally so, just so, exactly so, in a like or similar manner or degree. It is generally used with a strong ellipsis, as in Cowley, "We must one even in that difference be," i. e. we must be one in that difference, even as, i. e. equally as, subaud., in other respects.

So euene hot that lond ya, that men durre selde
Here orf (cattle) in howse a wynter bryngе out of the felde.
R. Gloucester, p. 43.

The barons portioned lond euen tham bituene,
Harald tille his parte suld haf alle the north-ende,
And alle the south-side tille Harknout suld wende.
R. Brunne, p. 51.

And with the Kyng Steuen thei held parlement,
That Henry and he euen acorded or thei went.—Id. p. 126.

The date was euenlik, a thousand thre hundred and tuo.
Id. p. 318.

——— It sais of tham this sawe,
That thei dred no thing God, no gemed [cared for] euenhed of lawe. Id. p. 65.

——— I consent thertille,
If thou has that manere, to do euenhede and skille.
Id. p. 193.

Hevene haveth evene numore. and helle is withoute numbre. Piers Ploughman, p. 405.

And he that eete of that seede sholde be euene trywe.
Id. p. 381.

Ac he so is hurt in the hand. evene in the myddes,
He may receyve ryght nouht. Id. p. 329.

Therfore the Jewis soughten more to sle him, for not oonli he brak the Saboth, but he seyde, that God was his fadir, and made him euene to God.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 4.

And I gesside it nedeful to sende to ghou Epaphrodite my brothir and euene worchere and myn euene knyght.
Id. Philipensis, c. 2.

It is ful faire a man to bere him even,
For al day meten men at unset steven. [no set time.]
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1525.

Euenhead of reward must been done by right.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. iii.

Joy and wo they shal depart
And take euenly ech his part.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

But the soueraine good (quod she) that is euenlike purposed to the good and to the badde.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

In kirtels and in copes riche
Thei were clothed all aliche,
Departed euen of white and blewe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

For he right in semblable cass
Of Belus, whiche his fader was,
From Nembroth in the right line,
Lete made of gold and stones fine
A precious image riche
After his fader euenliche.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Musike with tunes, dilates the eare:
And makes vs thinke it heauven:
Arithmetike by nomber can make
Reckonings to be euen.—Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol. 2.

And yet for all that, howe euen a mind did shee beare, how humble opinion she had of herselfe also.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. i. c. 10.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The Gods will diet me with. Prythee, away.
There's more to be considered; but wee'l euen
All that good time will giue vs.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 4.

Two Brutes more brave her ruines would maintaine,
Yet were their aimes and ends in th' end not euen,
Whose glory was their God, and Rome their Heaven.
Sterling. Doomes-day. The Sixth Houre.

In thy immortal part,
Man, as well as I, thou art:
But something 'tis that differs thee and me;
And we must one even in that difference be.
Cowley. Platonic Love.

Who shall doubt, Donne, where I a poet be,
When I dare send my epigrams to thee?
That so alone canst judge, so alone make:
And in thy censures evenly dost take
As free simplicity to disavow,
As thou hast best authority t' allow.
B. Jonson. To Dr. Donne.

A good man may be over joy'd, or too much pleas'd with his recreation, or too passionate at the death of a child, or in a sudden anger go beyond the evenness of a wise Christian, and yet be a good man still and a friend of God, his son and his servant, but then these things happen in despite of all his care and observation.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 3. s. 5.

And the more pity the great folke should have countenance in this world to droune or hang themselues, more than their euen-Christian.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

Who so is out of hope to attain to another's vertue, will seek to come at euen-hand, by depressing another's fortune.
Bacon. Ess. Of Enuie.

——— This even-handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poyson'd challice
To our owne lips.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 7.

——— Her hedges euen-pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly overgrowne with hayre,
Put forth disorder'd twigs.—Id Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

If a man do sincerely endeavour to mortify or forsake his known, open sins, tho he does not leave them at once, and for altogether, yet if he gains ground of them and commits them seldomer and seldomer; even such a man may be said to have entered into the state of repentance.
Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Whence in effect the more or less we love others, answerably the more or less we love ourselves, so that charity and self-love become coincident, and doth run together evenly in one channel.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 25.

In fig. ii. I have represented the appearance of the moon's edge on this last Nov. 4, 1714, soon after the quadrature, for the explication of what is said concerning the evenness of the surface of the lunar spots.
Derham. Astro Theology. A Prel. Discourse.

Do what we can, bodily distempers will too much disorder our minds and discompose our thoughts. We can neither think freely, nor judge impartially, nor behave ourselves with that evenness of temper which we might do at another time.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The moderate movements of his soul admit
Distinct ideas, and matur'd debate,
An eye impartial, and an even scale;
Whence judgment sound, and unrepenting choice.
Young. Complaint, Night 8.

But when the ray passes without such opposition through the glass or liquor, when the glass or liquor are quite transparent, the light is sometimes softened in the passage, which makes it more agreeable even as light; and the liquor reflecting all the rays of its proper colour evenly, it hath such an effect on the eye, as smooth opaque bodies have on the eye and touch.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

EVE'NT, v. Fr. Esventer; Lat. Ventus, the wind. See VENT.

To give vent, issue, or egress; "to puff, blow, breathe, give or yield wind," (Cotgrave.)

Oh that thou saw'st my heart, or did but know
The place from whence that scalding sigh evented.
B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act v. sc. 3.

——— Phœbus throws
His beams abroad, though he in clouds be closed,
Still glancing by them till he find opposed
A loose and rorid vapour that is fit
T' event his searching beams.
Marlow & Chapman. Hero & Leander, Sestiad 3.

EVE'NT, v. EVE'NT, n. EVE'NTFUL. EVE'NTUAL. EVE'NTUALLY.

Fr. Evènement; It. Evento; Lat. Evenire, eventum, to come out or forth.

That which has come out or forth; that has issued from, an issue; that has fallen, or sprung from, an accident or result; that has followed from, a consequence.

There are diuers things which are praised and dispraised, as deedes doen by worthy men and policies euented by great warriors.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 11.

But he that is of Reason's skill bereft,
And wants the staffe of Wisdome him to stay,
Is like a ship in midst of tempest left,
Without helme or pilot her to sway,
Full sad and dreadfull is that ship's event:
So is the man that wants intendiment.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

And now I must expect to hear, that this is very severe, uncomfortable doctrine: and if one that shall eventually be shut out, may do all this, what shall become of the generality of religious men that never do so much? And if all this be short, what will be available? Who then shall be saved?—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

——— Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventfull historie
Is second childishnesse, and meere obliuion.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

Such kind of things or events, whether good or evil, as will certainly come to pass, may fall under computation, and be estimated as to their several degrees, as well as things present.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 2.

And liberty being too high a blessing to be divestible of that nature by circumstances; I (that seldom deplore him, who by losing his mistress recovers himself,) think, that Hermione has but (not) intentionally, nor eventually disobliged you.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 248.

But not the voice of Bradamant I hear,
Whose sweetness stole upon my raptur'd ear,
Not such the thanks that Bradamant would pay
To him she loves, on this eventful day.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxv.

The man of faith thro' Gerar doom'd to stray,
A nation waiting his eventful way,
His fortune's fair companion at his side
The world his promise, Providence his guide.
Langhorn. The Origin of the Veil.

Creating a new paper currency, founded on an eventual sale of the church lands.—Burke.

By this fortunate principle [novelty] we are eventually roused from that lethargic state in which customs and habits, whether national or personal, would have for ever detained us.—Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 1.

EVE/NTERATE. Fr. Eventrer; from Lat. Venter, the belly.

To take out the belly, the bowels or entrails; to debowel.

In the valley of Anania about Trent, in a bear which the hunters eventerated or opened, I beheld the young ones with all their parts distinct; and not without shape, as many conceive.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6.

EVE/NTILATE, v. Lat. Eventilare, atum, (e, and ventus, wind,) to EVENTILA'TION. eventilate; which Cockeram explains, to winnow, to blow wind; as in Digby,—to sift.

I cannot forbear to touch another circumstance which might seem at first to be a miracle of Nature, beyond the causes which I have alledg'd, but having well eventilated it we shall find that it depends upon the same principles
Digby. The Sympathetick Powder

Now for the nature of this heat, it is not a destructive violent heat, as that of fire, but a generative gentle heat, joined with moisture, nor needs it air for eventilation.
Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 35.

(It is an opinion of some moderns) that it (vital flame) requires constant eventilation, through the trachea and pores of the body for the discharge of a fuliginous and excrementitious vapour.—Bp. Berkeley. Siris, s. 205.

E/VER. A. S. Æfre, semper, (Af-ere.) By usage equivalent to—

At all or any time or times, whether a point of time or the duration or continuance of time. Also, (generally) any.

Ever is much used in composition.

For particular usages of Everlasting, see the quotations from J. Taylor, and Barrow.

A batayle ther was while in the contre of Rome,
The meste that euer was, as me hath herd y lome.
R. Gloucester, p. 9.

Thys holy man Seyn Athelwold bulde there vaste,
And a nayre abbey ther bygan, that euereft ath ylaste
Id. p. 281.

That Londone he ys now ycleped, and worth euermo.
Id. p. 44.

——— We bere the and thyne euermore truage.—Id. p. 47.

Two dukes and two bisshopes for euer toke ther leue
The kyng was alle affraied, ther dede gan him greue.
R. Brunne, p. 16.

A werreour that were wys, desceyt auld euer drede.
Wele more on the nyght, than opon the day,
In mirke withouten sight wille enmys mak affray.
Id. p. 176.

And sone after thi daies the reame salle men se
Gouerned thorgh aliens kynde, and euermore.—Id. p. 37.

So that non go to Galys, bote it be fore euere.
Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 70.

Our bodies again to risen right as we been here
And the luf euerlastynge freres wyln for her pryde.
Id. Crede.

Nay quath Conscience clerkes wyten the sothe
That mede ys euermore a meyntenour of gyle.
Id. Vision, p. 52.

And it was don, whanne thei walkiden in the weye: a man seide to hym, I schal sue thee whider euer thou go.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 9.

No man sigh euere God, no but the oon biguton Sone, that is in the bosum of the Fader, he hath teeld out.
Wiclif. Jon, c. 1.

But now ghe delyuered fro synne and maad seruauntis to God han ghoure fruyt unto holinesse and the ende everlastynge lyf; for the wages of synne is deeth, the grace of God is euerlastynge lyf in Crist Jesu oure Lord.
Id. Romaynes, c. 7.

But now are ye delyuered from synne, and made ye servantes of God, and haue youre frute that ye shoulde be sanctifyed, and the ende euerlastynge life. For the rewarde of sinne is death, but eternal lyfe is the gyfte of God thorowe Jesus Christ oure Lorde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For evermore ye schulen have pore men with you, and whanne ye wolen ye moun do wel to hem, but ye shulen not evermore have me.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 14.

I loved never by no discretion,
But ever folwid min appetit.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6205.

The joye of God, he sayth, is perdurable, that is to sayn, everlasting.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

And in a tour, in anguish and in wo,
Dwellen this Palamon and eke Arcite,
For evermo, ther may no gold hem quite.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1009.

Remembre wel, and beare it in your minde
Al your felawes and ye must come in hiewe
Euerlyche able, your maters for to sewe.
Id. The Assemblie of Ladies.

——— And thus for suche a cooke
I maie go fastinge euermo.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And forto loken euermore,
It hath and shall ben euermore,
That of knighthode the prowesse
Is grounded vpon hardinesse
Of nym that dare well vndertake.—Id. Ib. b iv.

Whereupon they that were ever apte for the warres, and redy to do all thinges, beganne to bee ioyfull that wyth the losse of their baggage, they had preserued their discipyne accustomed in the warres.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 152.

Clar. ——— Aptly have you styl'd it
A providence, for ever in chaste loves
Such majesty hath power.
Ford. The Fancies, Chaste and Noble, Act v. sc. 2.

Whereas they say that God called it an everlasting covenant: it is certain that even amongst the Jews, the word everlasting did not always signifie infinitely, but to a certain definite period. For the law relating to the land of their possession, in which God promised them an everlasting inheritance; as their possession of the land is everlasting, so is the covenant, and they expired together.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2. Rule 1.

Ham. Oh that this too, too solid flesh, would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew:
Or that the everlasting had not fixt
His cannon 'gainst selfe slaughter. O God, O God!
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2

But since now safe ye seised have the shore,
And well arrived are, (high God be blest!)
Let vs deuise of ease and euerlasting rest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12

But it will everlastingly rebound
Unto the glory and benignity
Of Britain's mighty monarch, that thou wert
By him advanced for thy great desert.
Daniel. On the Earl of Devonshire

Nothing could make me sooner to confess
That this world had an everlastingness.
Donne. Of the Progress of the Soul.

The conscience, the character of a God stampt in it, and the apprehension of eternity, do all prove it a shoot of everlastingness.—Feltham, Resolve 64.

So, Prudentius,—Eternal worms, and unextinguished flames, and immortal punishment is prepared for the ever-never dying souls of wicked men.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 3.

First, I shall readily grant, that the words for ever and ever-lasting, do not always in Scripture signify an endless duration, and that this is sufficiently proved by the instances alledged to this purpose. But then, secondly, it cannot be denied on the other hand, that those words are often in Scripture used in a larger sense, and so necessarily to signifie an interminable and endless duration.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 35.

Everlastingness, that may reach to us and our posterity to all generations.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 13.

EVE/RSE, v. Fr. Evertir, eversion; Lat.
EVE/RSION. Evertere, eversus, to turn out.
EVE/RT, v. To overturn, to overthrow.

[The third hypothesis] is that of Mr. Hobbs, that memory is nothing else but the knowledge of decaying sense, which is made by the reaction of one body against another; or, as he expresses it in his Humane Nature, a missing of parts in an object. The foundation of this principle is totally evers'd by the most ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings, Dr. H. More, in his book of Immortality.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 4.

Supposing overturnings of their own errour to be the eversion of their well established governments.
Bp. Taylor. Cases of Conscience.

I shall say nothing so consonant unto reason, which (by the conceit of a strange reason) he will not seek to evert; yea, and take a pride too in it.
Fotherby. Atheomania, (1628.) p. 5.

E/VERY. Anciently written everich, ever-each; ever, and the old English ich or ig, now pronounced i or y.

Thys man come the verthe day byuore the kynge there,
And he gef hem large gyftys, euere as hii wurthe were.
R. Gloucester, p. 192.

Vor the Deneys come agen, and in euerych ende
Hym worrede her & ther, that he nuste wuder wende.
Id. p. 294.

For my god heo louede me, & now he habbeth euerydel,
He nul not geue me of myn owne mid god herte a mel.
Id. p. 35.

An quoynte tour hii lete make euerydel of tre
Vp four weoies also strong as hii mygte be.—Id. p. 408.

A message tille him nam vnto Normundie,
Teld William eueridele of Malcolme robberie.
R. Brunne, p. 78.

Bifor tham euerilkone he told Kyng Richerie,
Ded is Kyng William. Id. p. 149.

Quickliche cam a catchepol, and craked a two here legges
And here armes after, of everich of tho theoves.
Piers Ploughman, p. 343

And Jhesus ghede aboute al Galilee techinge in the synagogis of hem and preachynge the Gospel of the kyngdome, and heelynge every langour, and ech sickenesse, among the peple.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

He wolde thresh, and therto dike and delve,
For Christes sake, for every poure wight,
Withouten hire, if it lay in his might.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 515.

The mother was an elfe by aventure
Ycome, by charmes or by sorcerie,
And everich man hatith hire compagnie.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5176.

Gret chere doth this noble senatour
Toking Alla, and he to him also;
Everich of hem doth other gret honour.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5402.

Now ben these listes made, and Theseus
That at his grete cost arraied thus
The temples, and the theatre everydel,
Whan it was don, him liked wonder wel.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2093.

Hir frendes wisten all wele,
That it was falshede euerydele.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

So that I wol nothing forbere,
That I the vices one and one
Ne shall the shewe euerychone. Id. Ib. b i.

Therein the merry birdes of every sorte
Chaunted alowd their chearefull harmonee,
And made emongst themselues a sweete consort,
That quick'ned the dull spright with musicall comfort.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5

But above all, an every-day care for the drying up of the great fountain of leprosie in the heart
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 506.

And the whole drifte of his discourse is this, that Christ being both God and man, by the nature and substance of his Godhed is everywhere; but by the nature and substance of his manhoode, and truth of his body, is onely in one place and not in more.—Jewell. Defence, p. 88.

Every thing is endowed with such a natural principle, whereby it is necessarily inclined to promote its own preservation and well being.—Wilkins. Natural Religion.

So that he [Jesus] himself was obliged to proceed with much caution in opening the extent of his commission, and Saint Paul everywhere speaks of the design to save the Gentiles as the profoundest mystery, as that which had been kept secret since the world began.
Hurd. Works, vol. vii. Ser. 3.

E/VES. See EAVES.

EUGH. The Yew-tree, (qv.)
EU'OHEN.

Long he them bore above the subiect plaine,
So farre as eughen bow a shaft may send,
Till stragging strong did him at last constraine
To let them downe before his flightes end.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

She said; and from her quiver chose with speed
The winged shaft predestin'd for the deed:
Then to the stubborn eugh her strength apply'd:
Till the far distant horns approach'd on either side.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

EVI'CT, v.
EVI'CTION.
EVI'NCE, v.
EVI'NCIBLE.
EVI'NCEMENT.

Fr. Evincer; Lat. Evincere, evictum, (e, and vincere, to conquer,) which Vossius thinks may be formed from vic-av, by a transposition of the two first letters and prefixing v. Literally, evince is,—

To overpower, to overthrow; and also, met. (sc.) in argument, and thus to prove, to shew; and evict is also to prove (upon trial) to be guilty, to adjudge or sentence to be guilty; to adjudge to be forfeited; and hence, to expel from possession.

O Saviour, distance was no hinderance to thy work; why should the demoniack be brought to thee? was it that this deliverance might be the better evicted, and that the beholders might see it was not for nothing that the disciples were opposed with so refractory a spirit?
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Stubborne Devill Ejected.

There are two cautions to be added to make the rule perfect. 1. That if the disciple relying upon his master's authority, more than his own ability to judge, ask the doctor, whether upon his knowledge and faith that argument does evict the question; it, &c.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2.

Now, for the eviction of this, these two mediums are to be taken.—Id. Of the Real Presence, § 11.

If out of simplicity, or gross ignorance, a man shall take upon him to maintain a contradiction to a point of faith, being ready to relent upon better light, he may not be thus branded: eviction and contumacy must improve his error to be heretical.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. c. 5.

It is no more disparagement to our reasons, that they cannot evince those sacred articles by their own unaided force, than it is a disgrace unto them that they cannot know that there are such things as colours, without the help of our eyes; or that there are sounds, without the faculty of hearing.—Glanvill, Ess. 5.

Give me but a little leave, and you shall see by what testimonies, confessions, arguments, I will evince it, that most men are mad.—Burton. Democritus to the Reader.

They are in themselves highly reasonable and useful to their ends, and evincible by true reason to be such.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 62.

Now if these ways of secret conveyance may be made out to be really practicable, yea if it be evincible, that they are as much as possibly so, it will be a warrantable presumption of the verity of the former instance.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 21.

That horrid proneness of man's will to all vice, that inundation of lewdness with which such an unresisted facility, or rather such an uncontrouled predominance has spread itself over the whole world, is a sad, but full eviction of this fatal truth.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

Thus said the dame, and smiling thus pursu'd:
I see, tradition then is disallow'd,
When not evinc'd by Scripture to be true;
And Scripture, as interpreted by you.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

I answer, that to my present purpose it is not needful, in this place, to make use of arguments, to evince the world to be finite, both in duration and extention; but it being at least as conceivable as the contrary, I have certainly the liberty to suppose it, as well as any one hath to suppose the contrary.—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14.

The evincement thereof may give rise to many trials, that may enrich the history of cold.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 499.

And give me leave to tell you, that it is no weak evincement of my passion for, and concern in, your happiness, that I can refrain envying you, whilst every packet almost brings me the newes of the great things you do and are undertaking; whilst unhappy I am condemned to lead an useless life in a country, where I can scarce get time to think of chemistry, much less opportunities to improve it.
Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 54.

From dearth to plenty, and from death to life,
Is Nature's progress when she lectures man
In heav'nly truth; evincing, as she makes
The grand transition, that there lives and works
A soul in all things, and that soul is God.
Cowper. The Task, b. vi.

E'VIDENT, adj.
E'VIDENCE, n.
E'VIDENCE, v.
EVIDE'NTIAL.
EVIDE'NTIALLY.
E'VIDENTLY.

Lat. Evidens, (e, and videns, from videre, to see; Gr. Εἰδ-ειν.) To evidence;—To show clearly, to make clear, to the sight; to make manifest, to discover clearly; to make plainly certain; to ascertain, to prove.

Evidence, the noun, is sometimes applied to the person who gives evidence, who bears witness or testimony.

These aren euydences, quath Hunger, for hem that wolle nat swynken.—Piers Ploughman, p. 142.

Lytel Lowis my son I perceive well by certaine evidences thyne ablite to learne sciences, touching nóbres and proporcions.—Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie.

And then all the darkenesse of his misknowing, shall seeme more euidēlie to the sight of his vnderstanding, then the sunne ne semeth to the sight without forth.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Thus with your high reverence,
Me thinketh that this evidence,
So as this point, is sufficant. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

& for that ylke white cerne was an euydent token of her martirdome, therfore alle men and women haiden greet deuocion in her wordus; and in alle her doyngus.
Account of St. Wenefride. See R. Brunne, p. cxcviii.

And in this wise, the Greekes despeired
Dempt plainly by tokens euident
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

With that Nichomacus, Metron, and Cebaltinus weare broughte forth, euery one of them geuing in euidence that they had spoken afore, yet appeared it not by anye man's tale that Philotas was priuie to that conspiracye.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 101.

Nothinge wyl be hidden from him that asketh wt mekenesse, seketh in faith, and in prayer desyreth the glory of the Lord. Euident wyll those secrete mysteryes be vnto hym whyche are preuylye hydde vnto other vndre darke ambages and parables.—Bale. Image, Pref.

Yet be ye so blinde, that ye vnderstande not your owne case, nor your neighbor's miserie, nor the ruine of the whole common welth, which doth euidently folowe, your so fowle and detestable sedition.—Sir J. Cheeke. Hurt of Sedition.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparail'd,
So cleare, so shining, and so euident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 6.

Down on my bed my loathsome self I cast,
The bed that likewise gives in evidence
Against my soul, and tells I was unchaste,
Tells I was wanton, tells I follow'd sense.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

God will judge the world in righteousness, viz. with impartial equity. To evidence this, let us consider the Judge in the three great qualifications of his wisdom, justice, and power.—Glanvill, Ser. 8.

And now most euidently in your replie, yea this very answer of yours to this article, verifyeth the same to haue place in you, whiche in this 20th article is ascribed to the Anabaptists.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 47.

I call that physical certainty, which doth depend upon the evidence of sense, which is the first and highest kind of evidence, of which human nature is capable.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 1.

Indeed, now after his death, his resurrection was also commonly required to be believed as a necessary article, and sometimes solely insisted on it being a mark and undoubted evidence of his being the Messiah, and necessary now to be believed by those who would receive him as the Messiah.—Locke. The Reasonableness of Christianity.

The effect of this divine assistance, evidenced itself in a very visible and remarkable manner in the primitive times, by the sudden, wonderful, and total reformation of far greater numbers of wicked men, than ever were brought to repentance by the teaching and exhortations of all the philosophers in the world.—Clarke. On the Evidences, p. 331.

If it might be allowed me, I would fain distinguish all miracles into providential and evidential ones; those should be evidential ones, which God enables men to work in order to gain belief, and which they know beforehand they shall work: these are such miracles as Moses and our Saviour wrought, and other prophets, and such as we have all along been speaking of.—Bp. Fleetwood. On Miracles, p. 229.

For even the Angels stoop down and pry into the mysteries of God, and particularly that of the incarnation, as it is in 1 Pet. i. 12. Therefore they do not fully and evidentially know them, for these are the postures not of those who know already, but of those that endeavour to know.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 11.

But Sir Henry Vane so truly stated the matter of fact relating to the treaty, and so evidently discovered the design and deceit of the King's answer, that he made it clear to us, that by it the justice of our cause was not asserted, nor our rights secured for the future.—Ludlow. Mem. vol. i. p. 232.

No idea, therefore, can be undistinguishable from another, from which it ought to be different, unless you would have it different from itself; for from all other it is evidently different.—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 29. s. 5.

Evidence signifies that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue either on the one side or on the other.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 23.

E'VIL, n.
E'VIL, adj.
E'VILLY.
E'VILNESS.

Ger. Übel; Dut. Evel; A.S. Yfel, ỳfel; Goth. Ubils. Various Greek etymologies have been suggested for this word; all most unsatisfactory. Wachter thinks it possible that the Ger. Bal, cruciatus, may be the root of übel, and then the Goth. Bail-yan, torquere, to twist, to wring, (past part. wrong,) will evidently be the origin of the Goth. Ubils; supplying an etymology similar in the cause of the application of the word to that which Tooke has given for wrong. We have still the Goth. Bail-yan, subsisting in the English word bale, (qv.) And evil may be, as bale has been, explained—

Torture, writhing, wretchedness, misery, (wickedness;) that which causes (injury,) mischief, calamity, ruin, destruction.

A. S. "Ac alyse us of yfle," (Wiclif,) "But delyvere us from yvel."

Evil is much used prefixed.

Thurghe euelle roncelle was slayne fulle snelle, [quick.]
The Duke of Gloucestre, the Erle of Arundelle.
R. Gloucester, p. 593.

Of him in holy kirke men said euelle sawe
His stepmoder Juwet he weddid agayne the lawe.
R. Brunne, p. 20.

——— Wherfor the clergy
Gaf a grete cursyng on whilk of tham so brak,
Bigan a wikked thing, that euelle bituex tham spak.
Id. p. 147.

A good man bryngith forth gode thingis of good tresoure, and an yuel man bryngith forth yuel thingis of yuel tresoure.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 12.

A good man out of ys good treasure of hys hert, bryngeth forth good thinges. And an euyll man oute of hys euell treasure bryngeth forth euell thynges.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Now, Dame, quod he, let all passe oute of mind:
Come down, my life, and if I have missaid,
God helpe me so, as I am evil apaid.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,266.

And right so as by richesses ther comen many goodes, right so by poverte come ther many harmes and evilles: for gret poverte constreineth a man to do many evils.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

Or els if it be longe on you,
The soth shal be preued nowe,
To stoppe with your euyll worde. Gower. Con. A. b. v

Indeed, then said the Prince, the evill donne
Dies not, when breath the body first doth leave,
But from the grandsire to the nephewe's sonne,
And all his seede the curse doth often cleave,
Till vengeaunce utterly the guilt bereave
So straitly God doth judge.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

All keepe the broad high way, and take delight
With many rather for to goe astray,
And be partakers of their euill plight,
Then with a fewe to walke the rightest way;
O foolish men! why haste ye to your owne decay?
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 10.

Read therefore who it is which this hath wrought,
And for what cause; the truth discouer plaine,
For neuer wight so evill did or thought,
But would some rightfull cause pretend, though rightly nought. Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 12.

Is yon despis'd and ruinous man, my Lord,
Full of decay and falling? Oh monument,
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3

The apostle hath taught how wee should feast not in the leuen of euilnesse, but in the sweet dough of puritie and truth.—Lisle. Du Bartas, pt. ii. Serm. on Easter-day.

The moral goodness and congruity, or evilness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral and natural actions, which falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, s. i. c. 2.

But the unbelieving Jewes stirred up the Gentiles and made their mindes evil affected against their brethern.
Bible. Acts xiv. 2.

Qu. No, be assur'd, you shall not finde me (daughter)
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Euill-ey'd vnto you.—Shakesp. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 2.

That which hath in it a fitness to promote this end (its own preservation and well-being) is called good. And on the contrary, that which is apt to hinder it is called evil.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i.

6 July 1660. His Majestie [Charles II.] began first to touch for the Evil, according to the custome thus: His Majesty sitting under his state in ye Banquetting House, the Chirurgeons cause the sick to be brought or led up to the throne, where they kneeling, ye King strokes their faces or cheekes with both his hands at once.

Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 323.

Whosoever pursues evil designs, and is a slave to base affections, must necessarily intangle himself in infinite labyrinths through the course of his life.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Thus, after having clambered, with great labour from one step of argumentation to another, instead of rising into the light of knowledge, we are devolved back into dark ignorance: and all our effort ends in belief, that for the evils of life there is some good reason, and in confession, that the reason cannot be found.

Johnson. Review of a Free Enquiry, &c.

Edward the Confessor was the first that touched for the King's Evil: the opinion for his sanctity procured belief to this cure among the people: his successors regarded it as a part of their state and grandeur to uphold the same opinion.

Hume. History of England, c. 3.

If it be not a rule without exception, it is one with but few exceptions, that whoever is much and generally and long evil spoken of, hath been faulty.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

EVI'NCE. See EVICT.

E'VIRATE, v. } Lat. Evirare, to unman, (e, and vir, a man.)
E'VIRATE, adj. } To unman, to emasculate.
EVIRA'TION. } See TO EMASCULATE.

Not to speak of Origen and some others that have voluntarily evirated themselves.

Bp. Hall. Of Christian Moderation, s. 4.

In this conflict there dyed of our part also men of no small account, among whom was Valerianus, the principal of all the guard in ordinarie, and a certain esquier or targuetier, borne a verie evirate eunuch, but such an expert and approved warriour, that he might be compared either with old Sicinius or Sergius.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 321.

For which he saith, the Lacedæmonians, also, were stirred up and provoked against them, because they had saved the children of Greeks from eviration.—Id. Plutarch, p. 1004.

EVI'SCERATE, v. Fr. Eviscerer; Lat. Eviscerare, (e, and viscera, the bowels.)
To debowel, to draw or take out the bowels.

And then my silly weake patient, takes all these elogiums to himselfe; if hee be a scholler so commended for his much reading, excellent style, method, &c., he will exulcerate himself like a spider, study to death.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 135.

Thus, my noble lord, have I eviscerated myself, and stretched all my sinews.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 60.

EVI'TE, v. } Fr. Eviter; Lat. Evitare, (e, and vitare, to shun.)
E'VITATE, v. } "Fr. Eviter,—to avoid, eschew, E'VITABLE. } shun, shrink from."
EVITA'TION. }

In an old writer quoted by Drake, is found the (not common) verb to evite: "When they would evite and eschew the wonderful blasts of the wind, they plunged into water with great shouts and cries, lamentable to hear." See Dr. Drake's Shakespeare and his Times, vol. i. p. 380.

Since therein she doth evitate and shun
A thousand irreligious cursed hours
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

Which consideration for all that did not hinder St. Paul from throwing corne into the sea, when care of saving men's lives made it necessary, to lose that which else had beene better saued. Neither was this to doe euill, to the end that good might come of it. For of two such euils, being not both evitable, the choice of the less is not euill.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 9.

What can be more profitable to man, then by an easie charge, and a delightful entertainment, to make himself wise by the imitation of heroick vertues, or by the evitation of detested vices.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 38.

The continual use of the air is so absolutely necessary to our life; the good or bad temperature of it is so important to our health, and the scarce evitable presence and powerful pressure of it, has so great an interest in many of the phænomena we meet with here below, and even in divers, where its agency is not suspected; that among mere bodies there are perhaps few subjects, that more deserve our curiosity.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 611.

EVITE'RNAL. } i. e. eternal, eternally.
EVITE'RNALLY. }

What is the heaven itself, but (as Gerson compares it well) as a great clock regularly moving in an equall sway of all the orbs, without difference of poyse, without variation of minutes, in a constant state of eviternall evenness, both of being and motion.—Bp. Hall. Christ. Moderation, b. i. § 1.

If you cannot conceive, wonder: the Son of God hath wedded unto himselfe our humanity, without all possibility of divorce; the body hangs on the crosse, the soule is yeelded, the Godhead is externally united to them both; acknowledges, sustaines them both.

Bp. Hall. The Passion Sermon, an. 1609.

EU'LOGY. } Fr. Eulogie, Eloge; It. Elogio, eulogia; Sp. Elogio; Lat.
EULO'GIUM. } Eulogia; Gr. Ευλογια, from ευ,
EU'LOGIZE, v. } well, and λογ-ος, speech. Cockeram interprets it, blessing; as the Greek noun is used in the New Testament, (see Parkhurst;) and the verb, Ευλογειν, to bless, and Ευλογητος, blessed. See ELOGY.

A speaking well of, in favour, praise, or commendation of; and thus, praise, commendation.

Eulogist is not at all an uncommon word.

Now change your praises into pittious cries,
And eulogies turne into elegies.

Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

Salust could say of Cato, that he had rather be, than appear good: but indeed this eulogium rose no higher than (as I just now hinted) to an inoffensiveness, rather than an active virtue.—Tatler, No. 138.

Take away this love, and the whole earth is but a desert; and though there were nothing more worthy eulogies than virginity, it is yet but the result of love, since those that shall people Paradise, and fill heaven with saints are such as have been subject to this passion, and were the products of it.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 292.

So I, designing other themes, and call'd
T' adorn the Sofa with eulogium due,
To tell its slumbers, and to paint its dreams,
Have rambled wide. Cowper. Task, b. iii.

Yet gnats have had, and frogs and mice long since,
Their eulogy, those sang the Mantuan Bard
And these the Grecian in ennobling strains
And in thy numbers, Philips, shines for aye
The solitary shilling. Id. Ib.

The eminent theologian, Bishop Horsley, with a liberality that did him honour, as his politics were known to be at variance with the author's, publicly eulogized this treatise in the charges delivered to his clergy, recommending it to their particular perusal, and he made it the occasion of soliciting the friendship of the writer, which continued till the Bishop's death.—Knox. On the Lord's Supper, Pref. p. 8.

EU'NUCH, s. } Fr. Eunuque; Sp. and It.
EU'NUCH, v. } Eunuco; Lat. Eunuchus; Gr.
EU'NUCHATE, v. } Ευνουχος, which Vossius con-
EU'NUCHISM. } siders to be nomen officii; and to come from ευνη, cubile, a bed or couch; and εχειν, curare, to take care of, to guard: because to them the care of wives and daughters was commonly intrusted.

Dart not your balls of wild-fire here, go throw
Those flakes upon the eunuch's colder snow,
Till he in active blood do boile as high
And he that made him so in jealousie.

Beaumont. The Glance.

Therefore it were not only a fruitless attempt, but impossible act, to eunuchate or castrate themselves.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

That camphor eunuchates or begets in men an impotence to venery, observation will hardly confirm.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

Positions widely licentious, and such as leave no place for a gracious eunuchisme.—Bp. Hall. Chris. Moderation, s. 6.

Our present writers indeed, for the most part, seem to lay the whole stress on their endeavours upon the harmony of words; but then, like eunuchs, they sacrifice their manhood for a voice, and reduce our poetry to be like echo, nothing but sound.—Lansdown. The Argument to Peleus & Thetis.

They eunuch all their priests; from whence 'tis shewn
That they deserve no children of their own.

Creech. Lucretius.

From the domestic service of the palace, and the administration of the private revenue, Narses the eunuch was suddenly exalted to the head of an army; and the spirit of an hero, who afterwards equalled the merit and glory of Belisarius, served only to perplex the operations of the Gothic war.—Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 41.

EVO'KE, v. } Lat. Evoc-are, to call out, (e, EVOCA'TION. } and vocare, to call.) Cockeram has both the verb and noun.
To call out, or call forth; to summon forth.

Would Truth dispense we could be content with Plato that Knowledge were but a remembrance; that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation, and new impressions but the colourishing of old stampe which stood pale in the soul before.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, Pref. ad init.

Jonson evokes Fancy out of her cave of cloud, those cells of the mind, as it were, in which during her intervals of rest, and when unemployed, Fancy lies hid; and bids her, like a magician, create this stream of forms

Hurd. On the Marks of Imitation.

It was actually one of the pretended feats of these fantastick Philosophers, to evoke the Queen of the Fairies in the solitude of a gloomy grove, who, preceded by a sudden rustling of the leaves, appeared in robes of transcendent lustre.—Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iii. p. 496.

EVOLA'TION. Lat. Evolare, atum, to fly out, (e, and vol-are, to fly.)
A flying out, or forth, or away.

Upon the wings of this faith is the soul ready to mount up toward that heaven which is open to receive it, and in that act of evolation puts itself into the hands of those blessed Angels, who are ready to carry it up to the throne of glory

Bp. Hall. The Christian, s. 13.

EVO'LVE, v. } Lat. Evolvere, utum, to roll
EVOLU'TION. } out, (e, and volvere, to roll, which Tooke thinks is from the A. S. Wealow-ian, circumferri.) See CONVOLVE.
To roll out, to unfold, to develope.

This little active principle, as the body increaseth and dilateth, evolveth, diffuseth and expandeth, if not his substantial existence, yet his energy and virtue, to the utmost confines of his little province and every particle and atom thereof.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 33.

They lye more torpid and inactive, and inevident, unless they are awakened and exercised, like a spark involved in ashes: and being either suppressed or neglected they seem little better than dead, but being diligently attended, inspected, and exercised, they expand and evolve themselves into more distinction and evidence of themselves

Id. Ib. p. 63

It must have potentially at least the whole systeme of human nature, or at least that ideal principle or configuration thereof, in the evolution whereof the complement and formation of the humane nature must consist

Id. Ib. p. 249

As intuition quick, he snatch'd the truth,
Yet with progressive patience, step by step,
Self diffident, or to the slower kind,
He through the maze of falsehood trac'd it on,
Till, at the last, evolv'd, it full appear'd,
And ev'n the loser own'd the just decree.

Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

This notion of the end of Poetry, if kept steadily in view will unfold to us all the misteries of the Poetic art. There needs but to evolve the Philosopher's idea, and to apply it as occasion serves.—Hurd. On the Idea of Universal Poetry

The wise, as flowers, which spread at noon
And all their charms expose,
When evening damps and shades descend,
Their evolutions close.—Young. Resignation, pt. i.

I am too old, too stiff in my inveterate partialities, to be ready at all the fashionable evolutions of opinion.

Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

E-VO'MIT, v. } Lat. Evomere, to throw
EVOMITA'TION, or } forth, (e, and vom-ere; Gr.
EVOMI'TION. } Εμ-ειν.)
To throw forth, emit or eject.

These hath he not yet all, as vnsauerye morsels evomited for Christ, diffinynge rather wyth Aristotle than with Paule in hys dayly disputations.—Bale. Image, pt. ii. Pref.

To [this] he was to apply close for a certain space, and by a fugitive faculty peculiar to the ears of that animal, receive immediate benefit, either by eructation, or expiration, or evomitation, [in some ed. evomition.]

Swift. Tale of a Tub, s. 4.

EU'PATHY. Gr. Ευπαθεια, (ευ, and παθος, passion, feeling.) See the examples.

And yet verily they themselves againe do terme those loves, those promptitudes of the will, and wary circumspections by the name of eupathies, i. e. good affections, and not of apathies, that is to say, impossibilities, wherein they use the words aright and as they ought. For then it is truly called eupathie, i. e. a good affection, when reason doth not utterly abolish the passion, but guideth and ordereth the same well in such as be discreet and temperate.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 62.

In Laertius we read recorded for a Stoick sentiment, that as the vitious man had his pathe, or perturbations: so, opposed to these, had the virtuous his eupatheiai, his eupathies, or well-feelings, translated by Cicero constantiæ. The three chief of these were Will, defined rational desire; Caution, defined rational aversion: and Joy, defined rational exultation. To these three principal eupathies belonged many subordinate species.

Harris. Three Treatises. Note on Treat. 3.

EU'PHONY. } Fr. Euphonie; It. and Sp.
EU'PHONICAL. } Eufonia; Lat. Euphonia; Gr. Ευφωνια, ευ, and φωνη, voice, sound. As we say in English, Euphoniæ gratia, for good sound's sake, (Minshew.)

Our English hath what is comely and euphonical in each of these, without any of their [other European languages] inconveniences.—Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 14.

The principal feature of Ischia is the mountain anciently named Epopæus, now for euphony softened into Epomeo.
Eustace. Tour through Italy, c. 1.

EU'PHRASY. Fr. Euphrasie; Gr. Ευ-φρασια, from ευ, and φραιν-ειν, to gladden.

A plant so called, because it clears or sharpens the sight; eyebright.

——— But to nobler sights
Michael from Adam's eyes the filme remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promised clearer sight
Had bred; then purg'd with euphrasie and rue
The visual nerve, for he had much to see.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Yet euphrasy may not be left unsung,
That gives dim eyes to wander leagues around.
Shenstone. The Schoolmistress.

If she, whom I implore, Urania, deign
With euphrasy to purge away the mists
Which, humid, dim the mirrour of the mind.
Thompson. Sickness, b. ii.

EU'RIPIZE. A word formed from Euripus, (now the channel of Negropont,) a strait between Lubœa and Bœotia, which, Pliny says, "hath seven tides to and fro in a day and a night," (b. ii. c. 97.)

By this may Aristotle be interpreted, when in his Problems he seems to borrow a metaphor from Euripus: while in the five and twentieth section he enquireth, why in the upper parts of houses the ayr doth euripize, that is, is whirled hither and thither.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 13.

EU'RYTHMY. Gr. Ευρυθμια, ευ, and ῥυθμος, proportion of numbers.

From these three ideas then it is, that same eurythmie [in some ed. Eurythmy] majestic, and Venusta species ædificii does result, which creates that agreeable harmony between the several dimentions, so as nothing seems disproportionate, too long for this, or too broad for that, but corresponds in a just and regular symmetry and consent of the parts with the whole.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

EU'TAXIE. Gr. Ευταξια, ευ, well, good, and ταξις, order. See ATAXY.

Neither is there any ataxie to be feared in bringing in this distinction betwixt pastors and flock; it is an eutaxie rather, and such as without which nothing could ensue but confusion.—Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, pt. iii. s. 1.

EUTHANA'SIA. Gr. Ευθανασια, ευ, well, and θανατος, death.

A good, an easy death.

But let me prescribe and commend to thee, my son, the true spirituall meanes of thine happy euthanasia, which can be no other than this faithfull disposition of the labouring soul, that can truly say, I know whom I have believed.
Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead.

A recovery in my case, and at my age, is impossible: the kindest wish of my friends is euthanasia.
Pope. Letter from Dr. Arbuthnot.

Absolute monarchy, therefore, is the easiest death, the true Euthanasia of the British Constitution.
Hume. Ess. On the British Government.

EVU'LSION. Fr. Evulsion; Lat. Evulsio, from evellere, evulsus, to tear up, (e, and vellere, to tear.)

A tearing or plucking up.

Mechanicks make use hereof in forcipal organs, and instruments of incision; wherein who can but magnifie the power of decussation, inservient to contrary ends, solution and consolidation, union and division, illustrable from Aristotle in the old Nucifragium or Nut-cracker, and the instruments of evulsion, compression or incision.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

EWE. A. S. Eowe, ovis fœmina; Dut. Ouwe; Sp. Oveja. All from the Lat. Ovis, (Junius and Skinner.) But see YEAN.

To purge their springs, and sanctify their grounds,
The simple shepherds learned I the mean,
And sov'reign simples to their use I found
Their teeming ewes, to help when they did yean.
Drayton, Ecl. 9.

He said; and rising, chose the victim ewe,
With silver fleece, which his attendants slew.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

——— But he whose aim
Ambitious should aspire to mend the breed,
In fruitful autumn stocks the bleating field
With buxom ewes. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

EWER. The Fr. Ewier, from eau, which Wachter derives from the A. S. Ea, water, is applied to a gutter or channel for water. Ewer, in English is—

A vessel to hold water.

Gre. First, as you know my house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basins and ewers to laue her dainty hands.
Shakespeare. Taming the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

When he came into the bath he saw the basons and ewres, the boxes, and viols for perfumes, all of clear gold, excellently wrought.—North. Plutarch, p. 567.

His girdle, his leathern mantle, his staff, his sacrificial cord, and his ewer, he must throw into the water, when they are worn out or broken, and receive others hallowed by mystical texts.—Sir W. Jones. The Laws of Menu, c. 2.

EXACERBA'TION. Fr. Exacerber, exacerbation; Lat. Exacerbare, (ex, and acerbus, from acer; Gr. Ακις, acies.) Acerbus is applied to that sharpness which we call bitterness.

Increase, or increased state, of bitterness, soreness, agony.

Likewise the patient himself may strive, by little and little, to overcome the symptome, in the exacerbation, and so, by time, turn suffering into nature.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 61.

S. Paul express'd that sense in a sharper strain of passion, and indignation, than Tullie could do against Antonie, when on the same exacerbation he brake out into that stout piece of eloquence, Quid putem? contemptumne me? non video quid sit in moribus aut vitâ mea, quod despicere possit Antonius.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 541.

This duty is not more difficult in any state than in diseases intensely painful, which may indeed suffer such exacerbations as seem to strain the powers of life to their utmost stretch, and leave very little of the attention vacant to precept or reproof.—Rambler, No. 32.

EXA'CT, v.
EXA'CT, adj.
EXA'CTER, or EXA'CTOR.
EXA'CTION.
EXA'CTING, n.
EXA'CTITUDE.
EXA'CTLY.
EXA'CTNESS.
EXA'CTRESS.

Fr. Exacter; Lat. Exigere, exactum, to drive out; (ex, and agere, to drive.)

To drive or force out of or from; to enforce, to extort, or wring from; and, as Cotgrave says, "to take the utmost of, deal extremely with, take violently from."

Fr. Exacteur, he calls, "a severe corrector;" and in this consequential usage,—

Exact, the adj. is,—severely correct, strictly accurate, punctually careful.

And he againe restored his coûtrey vnto him, exacting nothing of his, but that of his three sonnes he should send twoe wyth him to serue his warres.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 220.

The common people vppon a wilfulnesse outragiously and importunately exacted to haue all dettes clerely released, and the landes of the rich men parted among them.
Golding. Justine, fol. 81.

Yea, there was nothing appertayninge either to God or man, wherin he [Josephe] semed not to have had exact knowledge.—Id. Ib. fol. 137.

As concerninge the mischaunce of Cotta and Sabinus, he learned the treuth more exactly by hys prisoners.
Id. Cæsar, fol. 141.

And when he [Sophocles] had rehearsed before them his tragedie called Oedipus Colonæus, whiche he had written at the very time of his accusation, maruellous exactlye & cunningly, did aske the judges in his owne behalfe, whether they thought any sottishe or dotinge man coulde doo the like peace of woorke.—Jewell. Defence, p. 78.

And daily such exactions did exact,
As were against the order of the State;
Presuming those great sums he did impose,
About his private uses to dispose.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

And when desert shall seem t' exact reward,
It breeds a loathing in the heart of grace,
That must work free out of her own regard
And have no dues t' upbraid her to her face.
Daniel. Passion of a Distressed Man. Pars altera.

But lend it rather to thine enemie,
Who if he breake, thou maist with better face
Exact the penalties.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 3.

But to satisfy you in present, I keep myself to the course of our ordinary stories, by reason of difficulty in finding an exact truth in all.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

In setting down the pitch that an unregenerate man may attain to, and yet be damned, some of our preaching writers are wont duly to conclude with this peremptory doctrine, That a meer moral man, though never so severe a censor of his own ways, never so rigid an exactor of all the precepts of nature and morality in himself; yet of this man there is less hope, either that he shall be converted or saved, than the most debauched ruffian under heaven.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 623.

Hereby the land was filled with bitter cursings (though in secret) by those that wish such vnreasonable exactors neuer to see good end of the vse of that monie.
Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1229.

Nor was it such, as it could lay on me
Any exaction of respect so strong,
As t' enforce m' obeyrance beyond thee,
Or make my conscience differ from my tongue.
Daniel. On the Death of the Earl of Devonshire.

When he had put vnto death diuers of his nobles, to the end he might haue their lands and goods as forfeited by attendor, he oppressed the people by continuall exactions also each day more than other.
Holinshed. History of Scotland, an. 1002.

But that, which we especially require in him [the Poet] is an exactnesse of studie, and multiplicity of reading, which maketh a full man, not alone enabling him to know the history, or argument of a poeme, and to report: but so to master the matter, and stile, as to shew he knowes how to handle, place, or dispose of either, with elegancie, when need shall bee.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

His Majesty expresseth therein that he was never better serv'd nor with more exactness of fidelity and justice by any, therefore he intends to set a special mark of his favour upon him, when his health will serve him to come to court.
Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 23.

That were a heavie and hard taske to satisfie expectation, who is so severe an exactresse of duties: ever a tyrannous mistresse, and most times a pressing enemie.
B. Jonson. Neptune's Triumph.

'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race:
And were he less, yet years of service past
From grateful souls exact reward at last.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

The Parliament, for divers reasons, thought it not convenient to comply with the King's propositions; and, in answer to the Scotts, demanded of them an exact account of what was due to them, requiring them to withdraw their garrisons from such places as they possessed in England.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 151.

It enjoyns the clearest, and openest, and the sincerest dealing both in words, and actions; and is the rigidest exactor of truth, in all our behaviour, of any other doctrine, or institution whatsoever.—South, vol. i. Ser. 12.

The service of sin is perfect slavery; and he who will pay obedience to the commands of it shall find it an unreasonable task-master, and an unmeasurable exactor.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 1.

He may teach his diocess, who ceases to be able to preach to it: for he may do it by appointing teachers, and by a vigilant exacting from them the care and the instruction of their respective flocks.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 5.

It will draw to itself the disposal of all places, the exaction of goods.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

To which purpose I consider, that in the life to come, when we shall questionless glorify God exactliest, we shall have little either need or use of faith, prayer, liberality, patience, and resembling graces: but our worship will chiefly consist in elevated notions, and a prostrate veneration of God's omnipotence, wisdom, goodness and other perfections.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 33.

Only in other sciences great care is to be taken that they establish those intermediate principles with as much caution, exactness, and indifferency, as mathematicians use in the settling any of their great theorems.
Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 20.

The generous spark extinct revive,
Teach me to love and to forgive,
Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are, to feel, and know myself a man.
Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

Turn around thy searching eyes
Thro' all the bright varieties;
And, with exactest care,
Select from all the shining crowd,
Some lasting joy, some sov'reign good
And fix thy wishes there.
Blackmore. The Wish Satisfied.

His own exactions, and the Persian's boons,
O'erload his treasure. Glover. Athenaid, b. xv.

For let it be remembered, that, whilst a man's handwriting is the same, an exactitude of order is preserved, whether he write well or ill.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

Instead of the present mode, which is troublesome to the officer, and unprofitable to the publick, I propose to substitute something more effectual than rigour, which is the worst exactor in the world.—Burke. Economical Reform.

Let him be ever so careful in the choice of a substitute, can he be perfectly sure that nothing necessary will be omitted, and that not only all the stated offices of the church, but all the various, and no less important, private duties of the pastoral care, will be performed with the same exactness and punctuality as if he himself had been present.

Porteus. Charge to the Diocese of London.

EXA'CUATE, v. Lat. Exacuere, acutum, (ex, and acuere, to sharpen, from acer, Gr. Ακις, acies;)

To sharpen, to give a sharp, keen, or cutting edge to.

And sense of such an injury receiv'd
Should so exacuate and whet your choller,
As you should count your scife an host of men,
Compar'd to him.

B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act III. sc. 3.

EXA'GGERATE, v. / EXAGGERA'TION. / EXA'GGERATORY. } Fr. Exaggérer; It. Esaggerare; Sp. Exagerar; Lat. Exaggerare, (ex, and agger-are; ad, and gerere, to bear to, and thus make a heap,) to heap up, to accumulate.

Cotgrave says, "To lay on load; and add heap unto heap, or heap one on another;" to aggravate, augment or amplify; to increase or enlarge.

In praising or dispraising, wee must exaggerate those places towardes the ende, which make men wonder at the straungeness of any thing.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 117.

If he wil rather take Chrysostome's meaninge, it appeareth, his purpose was, to rebuke the negligence of the people, for that of so populous a cittie, thei came to the holy communion in so smal companies: whiche companies, he in a vehemencie of speache by an exaggeration in respecte of the whole, calleth nobody.—Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 88.

The appearance therefore of the dry land was by the excavation of certain sinus and tracts of the earth, and exaggerating or lifting up other parts of the terrestrial matter; and by this means the water subsided into those caverns and valleys prepared for its reception.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 299.

Whether this excavation of the terrestrial body, or elevation of other parts thereof, whereby the water subsided, were immediately by the immediate power of God; or whether he did it by the instrumentality of the water, working room for itself in the more soft and penetrable part of the earth, and exaggerating and raising islands and continents in other parts by such exaggeration.—Id. Ib.

With this, all comfortless and hoarse, home they went, where they told their friends, neighbours, and acquaintances, what had happened in the search for the ass, the one exaggerating the other's cunning in braying.

Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 24.

And, if the diligence of wicked persons be so much to be blamed, as that it is only an emphasis and exaggeration of their wickedness, I see not how their courage can avoid the same censure.—Cowley. On the Government of Cromwell.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes.—Spectator, No. 399.

Others there are, that use to represent that they swear not but when they are angry; and then (for all our clamours and exaggerations) they mean no harm at all.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 11.

But, as I said before, a case,
So far remov'd by time and place,
Is seldom faithfully related,
Or, in most points, exaggerated

Cambridge. A Dialogue. Dick & Ned.

I think it a duty in that case, not to inflame the public mind against the obnoxious person, by any exaggeration of his faults.—Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

"Dear Princess," said Rasselas, "you fall into the common errours of exaggeratory declamation, by producing, in a familiar disquisition, examples of national calamities, and scenes of extensive misery, which are found in books rather than in the world, and which, as they are horrid, are ordained to be rare."—Rasselas, c. 28

EXA'GITATE, v. Fr. Exagiter; Lat. Exagitare, (ex, and agitare, from ag-ere, to drive,) to drive about.

To shake or toss about, to discuss, to harass, to trouble, to vex, or cause to be troublesome or vexatious.

This their defect and imperfection I had rather lament in such case than exagitate.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 11.

Therein Hippocrates condemneth it as too much exagitating.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 9.

EXA'LT, v. / EXALTA'TION. / EXA'LTEDNESS. / EXA'LTER. } Fr. Exalter; It. Esaltare, Sp. Exaltar; Lat. Exaltare, to rise or raise on high; (ex, and altus, high.)

To raise on high, to lift up or extol: to heighten, to elevate.

And for hir divers disposition
Ech falleth in others exaltation.
As thus, God wote, Mercury is desolat
In Pisces, wher Venus is exaltat,
And Venus falleth wher Mercury is reised.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6286.

The philosophre telleth so,
And seth: that of impressions,
Through diuers exaltacions
Upon the cause and the matere,
Men sene diuerse forme appere
Of fire. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

O noble sisters, cryed Pyrocles, now you be gone, who were the only exalters of all womenkind, what is left in that sex, but babling and business?—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Then, noble friend, the next way to control
These worldly crosses, is to arm thy soul
With constant patience, and with thoughts as high
As these be low, and poor, winged to fly
To that exalted stand, wh ther yet they
Are got with pain, that sit out of the way
Of this ignoble age.—Drayton. To Mr W. Brown.

But those robes of light and glory, which we shall be cloath'd withall at the resurrection of the just, and those heavenly bodies which the Gospel hath then assur'd unto us, they are not subject to any of these mischiefs and inconveniencies, but are fit and accommodate instruments for the soul, in its highest exaltations.

Bp. Rust. Serm. at the Funeral of Bp. Taylor.

That the angels and saints should, upon the account of the exaltedness of their natures, see and hear from thence what is done or said from one side of the earth to the other, is extremely incredible.

More. Antidote against Idolatry, c. 2.

But thou, Lord, art my shield, my glory,
Thee through my story
Th' exalter of my head I count.—Milton, Ps. iii. 9.

Still, as you rise, the state exalted too
Finds no distemper while 'tis chang'd by you:
Chang'd like the world's great scene, when without noise
The rising sun night's vulgar lights destroys.

Waller. To my Lord Protector.

Then in some close-pent room it (fire) crept along,
And, smouldering as it went, in silence fed;
Till th' infant monster, with devouring strong,
Walk'd boldly upright with exalted head.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Thus it is ordinary with them to praise faintly the good qualities of those below them, and say it is very extraordinary in such a man as he is, or the like, when they are forced to acknowledge the value of him whose lowness upbraids their exaltation.—Spectator, No. 468.

But who is he, whose brows exalted bear,
A wrath impatient, and a fierce air?
Awake to all that injur'd worth can feel,
On his own Rome he turns th' avenging steel.

Collins. Epistle to Sir T. Hanmer.

A certain elevation, becoming the majesty of insulted virtue, is united with a lively sense of the depravity and meanness of the offender; and a contrast is instantaneously formed between exaltedness of character and the state of degradation into which he has fallen.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. Class 2.

EXA'MINE, v. / EXA'MEN. / EXA'MINANT. / EXA'MINATE. / EXAMINA'TION. / EXAMINA'TOR. / EXA'MINER. } Fr. Examiner; It. Esaminare; Sp. Examinar; Lat. Examinare. The Lat. Examen, a swarm of bees, (apes from apere, i. e. nectere,) or bees clustered together, fast together, Vossius derives from the Gr. Εξαμενα, the past part. of the verb Εξαπτ-ειν, to bind or fasten together. Examen is also applied, and for the same reason, (i. e. because it is the bond or ligamen,) to the filum, quo trutina regitur: siquidem filum istoc ligamen trutinæ est.

An objection to this etymology is, that the Gr. did not themselves so apply the past part. Εξαμενα. May it not then be Exagimen, exagmen, examen, from ex-igere, to drive out: bees, driven out, from a nest or hive too full; a beam driven or forced from its upright by a preponderant quantity? The application of examine (from either source) is—

To weigh, to balance; to try or prove the weight: and then, generally, to search or inquire into; to question.

Examened tham and cast ilk amountment.

R. Brunne, p. 248.

And he mai not undirstond, for it is examyned goostli.

Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 2.

Neither can he perceaue them, because he is spiritually examined.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And afterwarde, then shullen ye take conseil in yourself, and examine wel your owen thoughtes, of swiche thinges as you thinketh that ben best for your profit.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Now wol I teche you how ye shuln examine your conseil after the doctrine of Tullius. In examining thau of your conseillours, ye shuln consider many thinges.—Id. Ib.

And eche of hem his reason hadde,
And thus with tales he hem ladde
With good examinacion,
Tyll he knewe the condicion,
What men thei were bothe two.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

If we wyll examyne the autorytees of St. Austin and Beda before alleged, we shall espye that besyde the probacion of this foresayde proposicyon, they open the mysterie of al our matter to them that haue eyes to see.

A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 4.

Cesar at the sute of the Heduanes was the wyllynger to beare wyth them, and accepted their excuse, for as muche as he thought that the sommer tyme was rather to be employed aboute the warre that was at hand, then about examination of matters.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 148.

Here lo they wanted oure bisshop's doctrine, there they wanted, lo) a lytle of the examiner of the hunting of the foxes highe diuinitie, for after his doctrine thei might haue kneled downe to Nebuchadnezar's golden image

Joys. Expos. of Daniel, c. 3.

These noble tryers, justly then
Examining the cause,
With reuerent note of her, who heard
And spoke to euery clause,
Did, after diuers daies so spent,
Adiudge, by verdict trew,
Her guiltie of most trayterous
Conspiracies, not fewe.

Warner. Albion's England, b. x. c. 56

Those arts were conveyed down along to them from one hand to another, and the successours still took them up from those that preceded without a philosophical scrutiny or examen.—Glanvill. Witchcraft, p. 84.

Following the wars under Anthony, the course of his life would not permit a punctual examen in all.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 8.

Said Rigge told him this examinant, That there would be a rising of divers godly people in arms, for preservation of religion, about the time the Queen came to town; and that they intended to seize the King's person about Camberwell, in his passage to see the Queen mother at Greenwich.

State Trials. Examination of George Phillips, an. 1662.

After many inquisitions therefore by torments holden one after another, and some examinats through excessive and dolorous tortures killed, there were not found so much as any presumptions of those crimes which were layed against them.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 303.

In the examination, that freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very saucily, had almost all the words and amongst other things, he asked in scorne one of the examinates, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus, "I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been an Emperor, what would you have done?" he answered, "I would have stood behind his chair and held my peace."

Bacon. Apophthegms.

Although it be urged by divers, yet is it methinks an inference somewhat Rabbinical; and not of power to persuade a serious examinator.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

These and all other inferiour magistrates to be chosen as the literati in China, or by those exact suffrages of the Venetians, and such again not be eligible, or capable of magistracies, honours, offices, except they be sufficiently qualified for learning, manners, and that by the strict approbation of deputed examinators.

Burton. Democritus, To the Reader, p. 64.

In the delivery whereof I have been careful, as an examiner and relater, to set down nothing but her bare and free report; which is the historical part; the critical now remaineth, for after the examination of circumstances, there is a liberty of judgment.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 549.

But surely nothing that is self-evident, can be the proper subject of examination, or tryal: all examination being to make something clearer and better known, by being examined, than it was before, which in things self-evident, clear, and unquestionable, can have no place.

South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

In his examen of this experiment our author makes me infer from the phænomena he repeats, that not only the air, but the water also has a spring.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 171.

None indeed can so contentedly brook reproach, or blame, as he that by intimate acquaintance with his own heart doth know the censure passed on him to be in effect mild and favourable; as finding himself a witness of more faults, than any adversary can accuse him of; as being a stricter examiner, and severer judge of himself than the most envious eye, or disaffected mind can be.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

But read their works, examine fait,
Show me invention, fancy there.
Taste I allow; but is the flow
Of genius in them? surely, no.
'Tis labour from the classic brain.
Lloyd. A Dialogue between the Author & his Friend.

Shall I with Bavius then my voice exalt,
And challenge all mankind to find one fault?
With huge examens overwhelm my page,
And darken reason with dogmatic rage?
Young. To Mr. Pope, Ep. 2.

The proper office of examination, enquiry, and ratiocination, is, strictly speaking, confined to the production of a just discernment and an accurate discrimination.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise. On the Passions, pt. ii. Introd.

The rigid examiners of Christ's pretensions (a favourite word of such persons, and used by Bishop Hoadley, on the sacrament,) seldom take into consideration what the Scriptures dwell upon, the love of God, the love of Christ, and the return of love which is due from man to his Maker, Preserver, and Redeemer.
Knox. Considerations on the Lord's Supper, s. 21.

EXA'MPLE, v.
EXA'MPLE, n.
EXA'MPLELESS.
EXE'MPLAR, n.
EXE'MPLAR, adj.
EXE'MPLARY.
EXE'MPLARILY.
EXA'MPLARINESS.
EXEMPLA'RITY.
EXE'MPLIFY, v.
EXEMPLIFICA'TION.
EXE'MPLIFIER.

Fr. Exemple; It. Esempio; Sp. Exemplo: also formerly written Ensample. (qv.) Vossius suggests ab eximendo, from taking out, (sc.) as a specimen or sample; or from ex, and amplum. Scheidius, from the Gr. Εξ, and ὁμαλος, similis, (sc.) one from others like it.

Cotgrave well explains the noun: "A sample, pattern or precedent to follow, a copy or counterpane of a writing; one thing alledged to prove or inforce another that resembles it."

To exemplify,—to produce, give, or set such pattern, &c.

The nine crowned be very exemplaire,
Of all honour longing to chiualry,
And those certaine be called the nine worthy.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

For thei be to the worldes eie
The myrrour of exemplarie.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

And Dauid gaue Solomon hys sonne ye paterne of the porch, &c. and the exemple of all that was in hys minde, both in the courtes of the house of the Lorde and of the treasure houses rounde aboute.—Bible, 1551. Chron. c 28.

They (the prynters) desyred hym, for default of a better learned, diligently to ouerloke and peruse the hole copy, and in case he should fynd any notable default that needed correction, to amende the same according to the true exemplars, which thing according to his talent he had gladly done.
Toourner. Ded. to the N. Test. of our Sauyor Jesu Christ, 1539.

This epistle he wrote from Athenes by Tichicus a ministre after the Grekes writinges: and our Latine argumentes saye also, that Onesimus bare him cumpanye: howbeit there is no certayne auctour in the commune exemplares.
Udal. 1 Thess. Pref.

For the more exemplification of the same, he sent the Lorde de Roche with letters of credece to signifie to the Emperor's Maiestie that to the same articles he the Frenche King promised in the worde of a king as prince faythfull, to observe and kepe for him and his realme and subiects.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 22.

Lidian. You are the pattern of fair friendship,
Exampled for your love, and imitated,
The temple of true hearts.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Progress, Act ii. sc. 1.

Brag. I will haue that subiect newly writ ore, that I may example my digression by some mighty president.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act i. sc. 2.

By their examples, each brave English blood
Upon the Frenchmen for their ensigns run,
Thick there as trees within a well-grown wood,
Where great atchievements instantly were done,
Against them toughly whilst that nation stood.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

We are naturally apt to be carried with examples: it is one of the greatest improvements of wisdom to know whom, in what, and how far we may imitate; the best have their weaknesses: there is no copy without a blur: Be ye followers of me, saith the chosen vessel; but how? Even as I am of Christ; it is safe following him that cannot erre.
Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts, 71.

——— They that durst so strike
At so examplesse and unblam'd a life,
As, that of the renown'd Germanicus,
Will not sit downe, with that exploit alone;
Hee threatens many, that hath injur'd one.
B Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii. sc. 4.

It doth give me not only an undeniable evidence, but an exemplar in analogy and explication, that the coalition of the goodly frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concourse of particles of matter, not the single effect of matter and motion.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 26.

And in such cases when the wells are dry, let us take in water from a cistern, and propound to ourselves some exemplar saint, the necessities of whose life hath determin'd his piety to the like occurrences.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar. Exhortation.

We are not of opinion, therefore, as some are, that nature in working hath before her certayne exemplarie [in some ed. exemplary] draughtes or patternes, which subsisting in the bosome of the Highest, and being thence discouered she fixeth her eye vpon them, as trauellers by sea vpon the pole starre of the world, and that according therevnto shee guideth her hand to worke by imitation.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 3.

My father's disorder appeared to be a dropsy, an indisposition the most unsuspected, being a person so exemplarily temperate.—Evelyn. Memoirs, an. 1640.

The sensible rhetorick of the dead, to exemplarity of good life, first admitted the bones of pious men and martyrs within church walls.—Brown. Urn Burial, c. 3.

Yet indeed it is true that it [the denial of Christian sepulture] ought not at all to be inflicted upon any direct account of justice, but upon collateral considerations, as for terror and exemplarity.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conse. b. iv. c. 1.

So that besides the dishonour which he susteined by the repulse, in lieu of lucre he suffered losse, and therefore this lesson by exemplification would be learned and practised that
Res bene quisque gerens lucra fit inde ferens.
Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1316.

There were ambassadors sent to Athens, Sp. Posthumius Albus, M. Manlius, and P. Sulpitius Camerinus; who were commanded to exemplifie and copie out, the famous and worthie lawes of Solon.—Holland. Livius, p. 109.

On war intent, to that he bends his cares,
And for the field of battle now prepares;
He copies from his master Sylla well,
And would the dire example far excell.—Rowe. Lucan, b i.

If he really intends to ruin and murther his prince, (as Cromwell, an experienced artist in that perfidious and bloody faculty, once did,) he must weep and call upon God, use all the oaths and imprecations, all the sanctified perjuries, to perswade him, that he resolves nothing but his safety, honour, and establishment, as the same grand exemplar of hypocrisy did before.—South, vol. i. Ser. 9.

This illustrious character [Plato] has its proper influence on all below it; the other virtuous personages, are in their degree, as worthy, and as exemplary as the principal.
Guardian, No. 140.

Hence, likewise, he could, with more advantage, describe an exact copy of righteousness for us to transcribe, shewing us exemplarily how as men we should behave ourselves.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

And, indeed, it is a saying equally ancient and true, that none should know (things better and) better things than princes, for their virtues and their vices participate the eminence and authority of their condition; and by an influential exemplariness, fashion and sway their subjects.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 311.

In truth, if there were not several good men among us, that by the exemplarity of their lives, and their charity, do stand in the gap between the reigning sins of the times, and the judgments of God that threaten us from them; it would be a melancholy thing to think what could become of us.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 4.

This is a scheme of Christian religion that some men have laid down to themselves: and if it be a true one, then what becomes of the exemplarity of Christ's life? what becomes of our obligations to walk as he walketh? Why, verily, it all falls to the ground.—Id. vol. v. Disc. 5.

The observation, that old people remember best those things which entered into their thoughts when their memories were in their full strength and vigour, is very remarkably exemplified in this good lady and myself, when we are in conversation.—Guardian, No. 5.

Flesh and blood will not reveal unto us, nor can any man with clear confidence say, that Jesus (the author, master, and exemplifyer of these doctrines) is the Lord, (the Messias, the infallible Prophet, the universal Lawgiver, the son of the living God,) but by the Holy Ghost.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 65.

It [the delight that a man takes from another's sin] is properly a love of vice, as such, a delighting in sin for its own sake, and is a direct imitation, or rather an exemplification of the malice of the Devil.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

But if Christ is both the way, and the truth, and the life, why do all our schemes of life and plans of conduct deviate so from this great exemplar.—Knox. Antipolemus.

And you, whose exemplary steps began
Our glorious emigration, you shall see
Your lords, your sons, in triumph to your homes
Return. Glover. The Athenaid, b. v.

A moral precept, conveyed in words, is only an account of truth in its effects; a moral picture is truth exemplified; and which is most likely to gain upon the affections, it may not be difficult to determine.—Langhorne. On Collins's Odes.

It is to be remarked, that many words written alike are differently pronounced, as flow and brow, which may be thus registered flow, woe; brow, now: or of which the exemplification may be generally given by a distich.
Johnson. The Plan of an English Dictionary.

EXA'NGUIOUS. See EXSANGUIOUS.

EXA'NIMATE, adj. The verb exanimate, and the noun exanimation are in the Vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar. The verb is also in Minshew: "To exanimate or astonish; It. Esanimare; Lat. Exanimare." The adjective is—
Lifeless, spiritless.

On th' other side, they saw that perilous rocke
Threat'ning itself on them to ruinate,
On whose sharp cliffs the ribs of vessels broke,
And shiuered ships, which had been wrecked late,
Yet stuck, with carcasses exanimate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

All night he tosses, nor the balmy power
In any posture finds; till the grey morn
Lifts her pale lustre on the paler wretch
Exanimate by love. Thomson. Spring.

EXANTLA'TE, v.
EXANTLA'TION.

Lat. Exantlare, which (Vossius) signifies exhaurire sentinam, and generally exhaurire, to draw out. Gr. Εξαντλειν, εκ, and αντλ-ειν, to draw, from αντλος, sentina.

To draw out; to empty, to evacuate; and consequentially, to exhaust or wear out.

For questionless in knowledge there is no slender difficulty, and truth which wise men say doth lye in a well, is not recoverable but by exantlation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 5.

By time those seeds were wearied or exantlated, or unable to act their parts upon the stage of the universe any longer.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 497.

But when I speak of noble menstruums, I mean not such as work like the generality of corrosives, and the like acid or saline liquors, which work but upon few kinds of bodies, and soon coagulate, or exantlate themselves by working, and thereby become unfit for future operations.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 150.

[These] I do not doubt to lay open by untwisting or unwinding, and either to draw up by exantlation, or display by incision.—Swift. Tale of a Tub, Introd.

EXA'RCH.
EXA'RCHATE.

"Fr. Exarche,—a vice-emperour or lieutenant of the empire. Exarcat,—the chief place of dignity under the emperor; the lieutenancy of the empire," (Cotgrave.) Gr. Εξαρχος, εκ, and αρχη, the first or chief. See the examples from Gibbon.

Pipinus anaunced vnto the state, gaue the Pope the exarchate, or princehood of Reuenna, in parte of recompense of his good will.—Jewell. Defence, p. 405.

After the recovery of Italy and Africa by the arms of Justinian, the importance and danger of those remote provinces required the presence of a supreme magistrate; he was indifferently styled the exarch or the patrician.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 49.

The ample measure of the exarchate might comprise all the provinces of Italy which had obeyed the emperor and his vice regent; but its strict and proper limits were included in the territories of Ravenna, Bologna, and Ferrara.—Id. Ib.

EXA'SPER, v.
EXA'SPERATE, v.
EXA'SPERATE, adj.
EXASPERA'TION.

Fr. Exaspérer; It. Esasperare; Sp. Exasperar; Lat. Exasperare, (ex, and asper; Gr. Ασπορος, without seed, unproductive of seed; and thus, sterile, barren; and applied to that which is harsh, rough, rugged; to that which is sharp, biting, bitter. See ASPER.) And the verb to exasperate, is—

To make or cause to be harsh or rough, sharp or bitter; to embitter; and thus, to anger, to aggravate, to provoke, to irritate, to vex to incense, to enrage, to infuriate.

A lyon is a cruell beast yf he be exaspered, and gentle yf the man fal downe naked before him, and except it be in great honger he hurteth not siche humble prostrated preyes.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

Yet doth my country's zeal so nearly touch,
That here my Muse it doth exasperate:
Although unwilling that my pen should give
Stain to that sex, by whom her fame doth live.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Fab. Shee did shew favour to the youth in your sight onely to exasperate you, to awaken your dormouse valour.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 2.

——— And this report
Hath so exasperate their king, that hee
Prepares for some attempt at warre.
Id. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 6.

Ther. No? Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skeine of sleyd silke —Id. Troil. & Cres. Act v. sc. 1.

Indeed (as I conjecture) not to exasperate the case of my Lord of Southampton, though he might therewith a little peradventure have mollified his own.—Reliq. Wotton. p. 181.

By this means, matters grew more exasperate between the two kings of England and France, for that in the warre of Flanders, the auxiliarie forces of French and English were much blouded one against another.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p 79.

The prophet goes away untouched; neither the furious purposes of Ahaziah, nor the exasperations of a Jezebel can hurt the prophet, whom God hath intended to a fiery chariot.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Ahaziah Sick.

Their proud and disdainful hearts, which were petrifyed with love and pride of this world, were impregnable to the reception of so mean a benefactor, and were now enough exasperated with benefits to conspire his death.
Spectator, No. 356.

Perhaps, take it at the worst, it was a word extorted from him by the exasperation of his spirits, and, before he was aware, borne upon the wings of passion, and so quickly out of his reach, and not to be recalled.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

Did hate to vice exasperate thy style,
No—Bufo match'd the vilest of the vile.
Brattle. On a supposed Monument to Churchill.

EXAU'CTORATE, v. or EXAU'THORATE. EXAUCTORA'TION. EXAU'THORIZE. } Fr. Exauthorer; Lat. Exauctorare, (ex, and auctor,) to deprive of authority.

To dispossess, to deprive, of authority; to dismiss or degrade, or discharge from authority, power or place.

Within the same yeare the king made an acte, that men of the church commytting offences notable, should be exauctorised or dysgraded by the bishop of the dyocese, a lustyce beyng present, and so delyuered to secular kepyng tyll he suffered accordyng to his demerites.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Sometimes [the Pope and his Archbishop] animating the subject by censorious exauthorising the prince, then assisting and moving forward his proneness, to faithless abrogation, by pretence of an interceding universal authority.
Selden on Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 17.

God is also the supreme Judge, and can punish and exauthorate whom he please; and substitute others in their room.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

When I consider that the first bishop that was exauctorated was a prince too, Prince and Bishop of Geneva, methinks it was an ill omen, that the cause of the prince and the bishop should be in conjunction ever after.
Id. Episcopacy Asserted, Pref.

The people of the church would have no reason to complain that the fountains of our Saviour were stopp'd from them, nor the rulers of the church, that the misteriousness of Scripture were abused by the petulancy of the people to consequents harsh, impious, and unreasonable in despight of government, in exauctoration of the power of superiours, or for the commencement of schisms and heresies.
Id. Apologie for Set Forms of Liturgy, Pref.

EXAU'GURATE, v. EXAUGURA'TION. } Lat. Exaugurare, (ex, and augurare, see AUGUR.)

To desecrate, to unhallow.

And to the end, that the floore and plot of ground freed and exempted from all other kind of religions, must wholly be dedicated to Jupiter and his temple, there to be built; he determined to exaugurate and to unhallow certain churches and chappels.—Holland. Livie, p. 38.

When as the birds by signes out of the augur's learning, admitted and allowed the exauguration and unhallowing all other cels and chappels besides, only in that of Terminus, they gave no token to confirme the unhallowing thereof: which was taken for an ominous presage.—Id. Ib.

EXCA'LFACTORY. Lat. Calefieri to be or become hot. Cotgrave has Excalfactif; which he renders "Excalfactive, heating, chafing, warming."

The Greeks have gone so neare, that they have scraped the very filth from the walls of their publicke halls and places of wrestling, and such like exercises: and the same (say they) hath a speciall excalfactorie vertue, whereby it discusseth and resolveth the biles and impostume called pani.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

EXCANTA'TION. A word used by Gayton, as equivalent to—

Disenchantment, a deliverance from enchantment, from the influence or power of charms or spells.

The don—enchanted in his cage, out of which there was no possibility of getting out, but by the power of a higher excantation.—Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, p. 277.

EXCA'RNATE, v. From the Lat. Ex, and caro, carnis, flesh. See CARNALIZE.

To dispossess or deprive of, to divest from, flesh.

The mate [of the chirurgeon] shall practise anatomy and manual operations; make skeletons of the sundry rare animals, which he shall have the opportunity to cut up; excarnate bowels; artificially dry the muscles, &c.
Sir W. Petty. Advice to Hartlib, (1648). p. 14.

He [Dr. Gleason] hath likewise given us certain notes for the more easy distinguishing of the vena cava, porta, and vasa felica in excarnating the liver.—Wood. Fasti, vol. i.

EXCAVATE, v. EXCAVA'TION. } Lat. Excavare, to hollow out, (ex, and cavus, hollow. Cavus a chao dictum, a vast gap or opening. See CAVE.)

To hollow out, to dig out a cavity, hole or hollow.

Striges, which (not to insist upon what the learned Vossius and other critics have contended) are those excavated channels, by our workmen called flutings and grooves.
Evelyn. On Architecture.

The appearance therefore of the dry land was by the excavation of certain sinus and tracts of the earth, and exaggerating and lifting up other parts of the terrestrial matters, and by this means the water subsided into those caverns and vallies prepared for its reception.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 299.

Faber himself put a thousand of them (cups turned of Ivory by Oswaldus Norlinger of Suevia) into an excavated pepper corn.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death,
Fill'd the deep caves and numerous vaults beneath,
Which formed with art, and wrought with endless toil,
Ran through the faithless excavated soil.
Blackmore. The Creation, b. vi.

Or up the mountain draws his spotted length,
Or where a winding excavation leads
Through rocks abrupt and wild.—Glover. Leonidas, b. vii.

A grotto is not often the wish or the pleasure of an Englishman, who has more frequent need to solicit than exclude the sun; but Pope's excavation was requisite as an entrance to his garden, and, as some men try to be proud of their defects, he extracted an ornament from an inconvenience, and vanity produced a grotto where necessity enforced a passage.
Johnson. Life of Pope.

EXCE'ED, v. EXCE'EDER. EXCE'EDING, adj. EXCE'EDING, ad. EXCE'EDING, n. EXCE'EDINGLY. EXCE'EDINGNESS. EXCE'SS. EXCE'SSIVE. EXCE'SSIVELY. EXCE'SSIVENESS. } Fr. Excéder; Lat. Exced-ere, essum, to go out from, to go beyond.

To go or pass beyond, (sc.) due or allotted bounds or measure; to pass beyond measure, or moderation, or temperance; to be superfluous or extreme; to pass on, to reach an extremity; to surpass. And—

Excess, the noun, is applied to immoderate and intemperate conduct, or to riotousness, prodigality, profusion.

So it exceed the bounds of measure
That man's mind with all his wits fiue
Is nothing able, that pain for to discriue.
Chaucer. Lamentation of Marie Magdaleine.

A kynge after the reule is holde
To modifie, and to adresse
His yeftes vpon such largesse
That he measure naught excede. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

For he had not so great admiracyon of any king that had reigned in those parts as of him [Cirus] and Semiramis: whose magnanimitie of minde, and fame of her actes seemed to him to exceede all the rest.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 192.

Therefore, O ye children of Israell, turne agayne, like as ye haue exceaded in your gounge backe.
Bible, 1551. Of Esay, c. 31.

For oure exceedynge tribulacyon which is momentary and lyght, prepareth an exceadynge and an eternall waight of glory vnto vs, whil we loke not on the thynges whych are sene, but on the thynges which are not sene
Id. 2 Cor. c 4

But rejoyce, in as much as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings: that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.
Id. Modern Version. 1 Pet. iv. 13

And God behelde al that he had made, and loo, they were exceading good: and so of the euenynge and mornynge was made the first day.—Id. 1551. Gen. c. 2.

He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I fear the Lorde God of heauen whyche made bothe the sea and drye lande. Then were the men exceedyngly afrayed, and said vnto him: why dydest thou so.—Id. Jonas, c. 1.

And it seemeth to them a straunge thynge that ye runne not also with thē vnto the same excesse of ryot, and therfore speake they euyll of you.—Id. 1 Pet. c. 4.

His frendes caused it to be noised that his excessive dronkennesse was the cause of his disease.
Golding. Justine, fol. 64.

Moreouer the beastes which the Galles do most delight in and whyche they pay for excessively, the Germanes occupy not, if they be brought to thē out of any other country
Id. Cæsar, fol. 85

The Egiptians alledging that in the fyrst beginning of thinges some countreyes dyd so bourne through the feruente heate of the sonne, and other some so fryse through the excessiuenesse of the cold, that not onely they were not able to engender men, but also not able to receive and kepe men, that came out of other countreyes, before the garmentes were inuented to defende the bodye from heate or colde, or that the faultes of the places were eased with remedies founde out by cunninge and practise.—Id. Justine, fol. 8.

Never saw she creature so astonished as Zelmane, exceeding sorry for Pamela, but exceedingly exceeding that exceedingness in feare for Philoclea.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

The nation of the Hunnes, little or nothing knowne by the ancient records, seated along the Frozen Sea, beyond the marishes of Mæotis, exceedeth in fulnesse and crueltie beyond all measure.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 399.

And so they have done in the church of Rome. but that abuse doth not evacuate the commission: not in the exceeders and transgressors, much lesse in them that exceed not.—Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, c. 30.

He used to treat strangers at his table with good chear, and seemingly kept pace with them in eating morsell for morsell, whilst he had a secret contrivance wherein he conveyed his exceedings above his monasticall pittance.
Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire

Next did Sir Triamond vnto their sight
The face of his deare Canacee vnheale;
Whose beauties beame eftsoones did shine so bright,
That das'd the eyes of all, as with exceeding light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

They are grown exceeding circumspect, and wary.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii.

Semblably in the dayes of Marcus the emperour, a raging rabble of sundrie and different nations banding themselves together, after exceeding great frights and horrible warres, after many a citie won, sacked, and rased downe to the ground, had like to have left but small parcels of them untouched and whole.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 409.

But when approaching neare he plainely found
It was his owne true groome, the gentle squire,
He therat wext exceedingly astound,
And him did oft embrace, and oft admire,
Ne could, with seeing, satiate his great desire
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

And kingdoms ever suffer this distress,
Where one, or many, guide the infant king;
Which one or many (tasting this excess
Of greatness and command) can never bring
Their thoughts again t' obey or to be less.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

His [Gluttony] belly was vpblowne with luxury,
And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyne:
And like a crane his neck was long and fine,
With which he swallowed vp excessive feast,
For want wherof poore people oft did pine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive greefe the enemie to the liuing.
Shakes. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc 1.

Perhaps it exceeds the power of human understanding to decide where mechanism ends, and where the liberty of indifference (the only notion of liberty that comes up to the purpose) may be supposed to commence.
Law. Theory of Religion, pt. i. (Note a.)

Who all that while was thought exceeding wise,
Only for taking pains and telling lies.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Tho' the comprehension of our understandings comes exceeding short of the vast extent of things, yet we shall have cause enough to magnify the bountiful author of our being, for that portion and degree of knowledge he has bestowed on us, so far above all the rest of the inhabitants of this our mansion.—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 2. s. 5.

From a thousand snares and treacherous allurements, from innumerable rocks and dangerous surprises, from exceedingly many needless incumbrances and vexatious toils of fruitless endeavour, she [wisdom] redeems and secures us.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Thou pleasing torture of my breast,
Sure thou wert fram'd to plague my rest;
Since both the ill and good you do, alike my peace destroy;
That kills me with excess of grief, this with excess of joy.
Walsh. Jealousy.

Bounteous, but almost bountsous to a vice:
Had she given more, it had profusion been,
And turn'd th' excess of goodness into sin.
Dryden. Eleonora.

And it is remarkable that such mosses as grow upon walls, the roofs of houses and other high places, have seeds so excessively small, that when shaken out of their vessels they appear like vapor or smoke, so that they may either ascend of themselves, or by an easy impulse of the wind be raised up to the tops of houses, walls, or rocks.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Whom levity or spleen could ne'er entice
To purchase chat, or laughter at the price
Of decency. Nor let it faith exceed,
That nature forms a rustic taste so nice,
Ah! had they been of court or city breed,
Such delicacy were right marvellous indeed.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

For, indeed, she was exceedingly engaged in penning an elegy on the lapdog, who had died of a looseness; and had intended to finish her address to the duchess on the hardships of the labouring poor.—Knox. Winter Evenings, E. 55.

All catch the frenzy downward from her grace,
Whose flambeaux flash against the morning skies,
And gild our chamber ceilings as they pass
To her, who, frugal only that her thrift
May feed excesses she can ill afford,
Is hackney'd home unlackey'd.—Cowper. Task, b ii.

Excessive lenity and indulgence are ultimately excessive rigour.—Knox, Ess. 141.

EXCE'L, v.
E'XCELLENT.
E'XCELLENCE.
E'XCELLENCY.
E'XCELLENTLY.

Fr. Exceller; Lat. Excellere, (ex, and cellere; Gr. Κελλ-ειν, movere, currere, to move, to run: applied to high or lofty motion, (sc.) superbire.)

To surmount, (sc.) in worth or value, in great or good qualities; to rise above, to be eminent, to surpass, to outgo, to outstrip.

Excellence and excellency are applied as titles of honour to certain persons in high official situations.

But sue ghe the bettre goostli ghiftis, and ghit I schew to ghou a more excellent weie.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 12

Couet after the beste gyftes. And yet shew I vnto you a more excellente waye.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Faire was this in excellent beautee
Aboven every wight that man may see:
For nature hath with soveraine diligence
Yformed hire in so gret excellence.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 11,944.

The golde betoketh excellence,
That men shulde doone hym reuerence,
As to her liege souerayne.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The same thyng also is a cause why the Heluetians hauing daily conflict with the Germanes eyther in their owne defence, or by way of inuasion, do in prowesse excell the reste of the Galles.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 1.

I sawe that wisdom excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse.—Bible, 1551. Ecclesiastes, c 2.

O ye mē, it is not the greate kynge, it is not the multitude of men, nether is it wyne that excelleth.—Id. Esdras, c. 4.

Johan Wycleaue in England, and John Husse in Boheme, men of excellet lyfe and learning, with diuers other more, replyed earnestlye against their transsubstanciacions and other sorcerie.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

Moreouer what nacyon on the erth is lyke thy people Israel whiche God went and redemed to be his owne people, and to make thē a name of excellencie and terriblenesse.
Bible, 1551. 1 Chron. c. 17.

Synge unto the Lorde, for he hath done excellentlye, and that is knowen thorowe oute the worlde.
Psalles, 1527. Lewis. English Translations of the Bible.

But in the end being put to repulse by our horsmen they hyd thēselves in the woods, where they hadde gotten a plot excellently wel fortified both by nature and mann's hande.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 114.

Her name was hight Detraction, and her dwelling
Was neare to Envy, euen her neighbour next;
A wicked hag, and Envy selfe excelling
In mischief. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

Of all God's works, which do this world adorn,
There is no one more faire and excellent,
Then is man's body both for powre and form,
Whiles it is kept in sober government.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

Said Guyon, See the mind of beastly man,
That hath so soone forgot the excellence
Of his creation, when he life began,
That now he chooseth with vile difference
To be a beast, and lacke intelligence.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 11.

If now thy beauty be of such esteem,
Which all of so rare excellency deem;
What would it be, and prized at what rate
Were it adorned with a kingly state!
Drayton. Edw. IV. to Mrs. Shore.

Where learned More and Gardiner I met,
Men in those times immatchable for wit,
Abe that were the dullest spirit to whet,
And did my humour excellently fit.
Id. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

The notion that they have of the Deity is very obscure; yet by the figures which they make representing this God, they manifestly show that they do believe him to excel in sight, strength, courage, and wisdom, Justice, &c.
Dampier Voyage, 1688.

Would it be any derogation from their excellence and authority, or any excuse for our not labouring to understand these laws, that all men did not reason right about them?
Law. Theory of Religion, pt. i. Note.

As the son of Noah he had a right superior to any of being considered as a king and a priest: and from the excellency of his behaviour to his father and mankind, he was properly styled the King of Righteousness, and from his disposition, as well as from the name of this city, the King of Salem, or of peace.—Sharpe. Disc. on Psalm xxix. 9.

Your excellencies having been the protectors of the author of these Memoirs during the many years of his exile, are justly entitled to whatever acknowledgment can be made for those noble favours which you extended so seasonably and so constantly to him and his fellow-sufferers.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i Ep. Ded.

To mark the matchless workings of the Power
That shuts within its seed the future flower,
Bids these in elegance of form excel,
In colour these, and those delight the smell.
Cowper. Retirement.

Some minds are temper'd happily, and mix'd
With such ingredients of good sense, and taste
Of what is excellent in man, they thirst
With such a zeal to be what they approve,
That no restraints can circumscribe them more
Than they themselves by choice, for Wisdom's sake.
Id. Task, b iii.

O, may my verse deserv'd applause obtain
Of him, for whom I try the daring strain,
By Memmius, him, whom thou profusely kind
Adorn'st with every excellence refined.
Beattie. Lucretius, b. i.

Would they but speak as well as write,
Both excellencies would unite,
The outward action being taught,
To show the strength of inward thought.
Byrom. Advice to the Rev. Messrs. H. & H. to preach slow

He [Erasmus] has written so excellently, that all the learned, except a few envious contemporaries, from his own time to ours, have uniformly considered him as a prodigy.
Knox. Essays, No. 132.

EXCE'PT, v.
EXCE'PT, prep.
EXCE'PTER.
EXCE'PTION.
EXCE'PTIONABLE.
EXCE'PTIONER.
EXCE'PTIOUS.
EXCE'PTIOUSNESS.
EXCE'PTIVE.
EXCE'PTLESS.

Fr. Exceptor, It. Eccettuare; Sp. Exceptuar, exceptar; Lat. Excipere, to take out, (ex, and capere, to take.)

To take out, to put, to shut out; to exclude, (sc.) through dislike or disapproval; and thus, to dislike, to oppose, to object to.

Except, the preposition,—without, unless; i. e. taken out or away; put away, dismissed.

Hit were ageyn kynde quath he and alle kynne reisonne
That eny creature sholde conne al excepte Chryst one.
Piers Ploughman, p 275.

But first, if I should make mencion
Of his person, and plainly him discriue
He was in sooth, without exception
To speake of manhood, one the best on liue.
Chaucer. Of the Blacke Knight.

In the primitiue church, families were baptized, children, and all, for we reade not that they were excepted, and some doubt, and that the greatest clerks, whether children haue faith or no.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 82.

Wherfore he commaunded the baggage and stuffe of the whole to be brought together in one place excepting only such thinges as were very necessary.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 151.

There is no exception or pretence of preuilege, which high or low, rich or poore, may or ought to vsurpe vnto them selues.—Calvine. Foure Godlie Sermons, Ser. 1.

For as we thinke it not vnlawful to make open confession before many, so wee thinke it not vnlawful, abuses alwayes excepted, to make the like confession in priuate either before a fewe, or before one alone.—Jewel. Defence, p. 154.

Not one man tells a lye of all the yeare,
Except the almanack or the chronicler.
Bp. Hall, b. vi. Sat. 1.

In conclusion, they judged P. Scipio, the sonne of that Cn. who was killed in Spaine, a very young man and as yet not of full age to be a questor, the very best man without exception in the whole citie.—Holland. Livie, p. 719.

Thus much (readers) in favour of the softer-spirited Christian, for other exceptioners there was no thought taken.
Milton. Animad. upon Remonstrants' Defence.

For Renaldo, quoth Don Quixote, I dare boldly say, he was broad faced, his complexion high, quick and full ey'd, very exceptious, and extremely choleric, a lover of thieves and debaucht company.—Shelton. Don Quixote, b. ii. c. 1.

Let me behold thy face; surely, this man
Was borne of woman.
Forgiue my generall and exceptlesse rashnesse
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

The only ground for this was, that one of the rebels, excepted in the indemnity that was proclaimed some time before, being taken, and, it being evident that his brain was turned, it was debated in council, whether he should be proceeded against or not.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1667.

In the beginning of this chapter we find St Paul brought to his trial before Felix the Roman governor, wherein (if we only except the unfitness of the judge) all other things concurred, which could make such an action considerable, viz the greatness of the cause, the quality of the persons, and the skill which was shewed in the management of it.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

They also settled a pay for such of the subjects of the three kingdoms as would come and serve under our princes, but few came except from Ireland, of these some regiments were formed.—Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

The first part of it was an exception to the authority of the court, as being not only founded on no law, but contrary to the express words of the act of parliament that put down the high commission.—Id. Ib. an. 1686.

The only piece of pleasantry in Paradise Lost, is where the Evil Spirits are described as rallying the Angels upon the success of their new invented artillery. This passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem, as being nothing else but a string of puns, and these too very indifferent ones.—Spectator, No. 279.

Perhaps the man did it by an innocent carelessness, not sufficiently alarmed by an experience of the baseness, and falseness, and the exceptiousness of men, to set a greater caution or guard upon his behaviour.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

It [admonition] becomes unsavory and odious, and both in show and effect resembles a froward, malicious exceptiousness.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Exceptive propositions will make such complex syllogisms, as, None but physicians came to the consultation, the nurse is no physician; therefore the nurse came not to the consultation.—Watts. Logick, pt. iii. c. 3.

Though you tel me not who objected against your writing occasional meditations, because you have named me, who encourage you to write more of them, I dare venture to lay my credit with you, that you yourself do think your celebrater as competent a judge, in such cases, as your exceptionsmaker.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi p. 525.

The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions.—Burnet. Theory of the Earth.

Strength in his heart, dominion in his nod,
And, thunderbolts excepted, quite a God!
So sings he, charm'd with his own mind and form,
The song magnificent, the theme a worm.—Cowp. Truth.

Is it incredible, or can it seem
A dream to any, except those that dream,
That Man should love his Maker, and that fire,
Warming his heart, should at his lips transpire.
Id. Conversation.

And if it chance, as sometimes chance it will,
That, though school-bred, the boy be virtuous still;
Such rare exceptions, shining in the dark,
Prove, rather than impeach, the just remark.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

EXCE'RN, v. Lat. Excernere, (ex, and cernere, κριν-ειν, to separate, to disjoin.)
To separate, to sift; to strain out.

The body of a living creature assimilates that which is good, for it excerneth what is unprofitable: a piece of sponge even when it is raised above the surface of the water, sucks in water, expells ayre; and the like.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 3.

The covetous man, of the first kind, is like a greedy ostrich, which devours any metal, but it is with an intent to feed upon it, and in effect it makes a shift to digest and excern it.—Cowley. Ess. Of Avarice.

Certain it is, that the humours excerned by sweat and urine are near akin, if not the same.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

EXCE'RP, v. } Lat. Ex-cerp-ere, tum, to EXCE'RPTION. } pluck out, (ex, and carpere, to EXCE'RPTOR. } pluck.) Adam, in v. Excerpta, uses the noun excerpts.
To pick out, to cull, to choose, to select, to extract.

In your reading excerp, and note in your books such things as you like.—Hale. Remains, p. 288.

And if so, then amber may properly enough be called by the same name, as it is in the Persian author, whence the papers I sent were excerpted.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 558.

Times have consumed his works, saving some few excerptions.—Raleigh.

I have not been surreptitious of whole pages together out of the doctor's printed volumes, and appropriated them to myself without any mark, or asterism, as he has done. I am no such excerptor.—Barnard. Life of Heylin, p. 12.

EX-CHANGE, v. } Fr. Changer; It. Cangiare. See CHANGE.
EXCHA'NGE, s. }
EXCHA'NGER. } To give and receive one thing for, in return for, another.
Chaucer uses Exchange (as change is now used) as equivalent to, variety.

To marchaunde with monye. and maken here eschaunge.
Piers Ploughman, p. 101.

These women all of rightwisenesse
Of choise and free election
Most love eschaunge and doublenesse.
Chaucer. Balade of Women—their doublenesse.

For thilke time (I vnderstonde)
The lumbarde made non eschange
The bishopriches for to change.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Ne shee the laws of Nature onely brake,
But eke of justice, and of policie;
And wrong of right, and bad of good did make,
And death for life exchanged foolishlie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 6.

Then would he be a broker, and draw in
Both wares and money, by exchange to win.
Id. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

About the third daie of August, the first exchange was made of the new monie of pence and farthings.
Holinshed. Edw. I. an. 1279.

Thou oughtest therefore to haue put my money to the exchangers, and then at my comming should I haue receiued mine owne with vantage.—Bible, 1583. Matthew, xxv. 27.

For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what whall a man give in exchange for his soul?—Matthew, xvi. 26.

Whereupon, having commanded the guard to fire upon them, I charged the enemy with as many of my party as were willing to follow me, exchanging several shot with them.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 122.

The Lord Arundel endeavouring to make good his promise of procuring my exchange for his two sons, earnestly solicited the king to it.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 94.

The ordinary course of exchange being an indication of the ordinary state of debt and credit between two places, must likewise be an indication of the ordinary course of their exports and imports, as these necessarily regulate that state.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 3.

EXCHE'AT. } i. e. Escheat, (qv.)
EXCHE'ATOR. }

Good record appeareth, that the bishop there had yearelie three or foure tunne at the least giuen him nomine decimæ, beside whatsoeuer ouer-summe of the liquor did accrue to him by leases and other excheats whereof also I haue seene mention.—Holinshed. Desc. of Britaine, c. 18.

The earles and dukes appointed their speciall officers; as sheriffe, admirall, receyvor, &c. escheator, feodary, auditor, &c.—Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 79.

EXCHE'QUER, s. } See CHECK. To exchequer, is to issue pro-
EXCHE'QUER, v. } cess against any one in the Court of Exchequer. The noun is generally applied—
To any treasury, literally or metaphorically.

To Berwik cam the kynge eschekere,
Sir Hugh of Cressyngham he was chancelere,
Walter of Admundesham he was tresorere.
R. Brunne, p. 280.

——— (Thou hast) drawn a line
Of masculine expression, which had good
Old Orpheus seen, or all the ancient brood
Our superstitious fools admire and hold
Their lead more precious than thy burnish'd gold,
Thou hadst been their exchequer, and no more
They each in other's dung had search'd for ore.
Carew. On the Death of Dr. Donne.

It is wonderful to consider, how a command, or call to be liberal, either upon a civil or religious account, all of a sudden, impoverishes the rich, breaks the merchant, shuts up every private man's exchequer, and makes those men in a minute have nothing at all to give, who, at the very same instant, want nothing to spend.—South, vol. i. Ser. 10.

They [the French] had, in imitation of exchequer-bills here in England, given out mint-bills to a great value; some said two hundred millions of livres.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1707.

And the house hath appointed a committee to receive any such informations, who are to sit in the exchequer chamber upon Tuesday next in the afternoon, and ☞ from time to time.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 285.

School helps I want, to climb on high,
Where all the ancient treasures lie,
And there unseen commit a theft
On wealth in Greek exchequers left.—Green. The Spleen.

EXCI'SE, v. } Dut. Accijns. Excise and EXCI'SE, s. } Assize, says Skinner, are per-
EXCI'SABLE. } haps from Accensus and Ex-
EXCI'SEMAN. } census, or from Assessus, (see ASSIZE,) because such a tax is imposed by the judgment and votes (Assisæ seu concessus) of an Assize, or sitting of men deputed for that purpose; or, he adds, as the Dut. Tailour, (q.d.) quid excisum, (sc.) from the property of those subjected to it. The latter etymon receives confirmation from the application of the Sp. Sisa, viz. to the tax; and also to the lessening of any thing by subtracting some small part, or by cutting measures less. See the quotations from Bp. Taylor, and Clarendon.

In the levying and imposing tribute, by the voice of most men, those things usually are excepted which are spent in our personal necessities. Whatsoever is for negotiation may pay, but not what is to be eaten and drunk. This tribute, nevertheless, is paid in Spain, for it is that which they call Alcavala; and in Portugal, where it is called Sisa. I suppose it is the same with the Excise in England and the Low Countries.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2. R. 9.

The two houses at Westminster, who called themselves, and they are often called in this discourse, the Parliament, had at this time by an ordinance, that is by an order of both houses, laid an imposition, which they called an excise, upon wine, beer, ale, and many other commodities, to be paid in the manner very punctually and methodically set down by them, for the carrying on the war. This was the first time, that ever the name of payment of excise was heard of, or practised in England; laid on by those who pretended to be the most jealous of any exaction upon the people.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 453.

Why turnpikes rise, and now no cit nor clown
Can gratis see the country, or the town:
Shortly no lad shall chuck or lady vole,
But some excising courtier will have toll.
Pope. Sat. of Donne, Sat. 4.

Hardly any private business was done all that time, except an order given to the excise-office for satisfying an old debt pretended by Colonel John Birch, one of their members, a nimble gentleman, and one who used to neglect no opportunity of providing for himself.—Ludlow. Mem. vol. ii. p. 59.

By custom safe, the Poet's numbers flow,
Free as the light and air some years ago.
No Statesman e'er will find it worth his paine
To tax our labours, and excise our braine.
Churchill. Epistle to Robert Lloyd.

Th' excise is fatten'd with the rich result
Of all this riot, and ten thousand casks,
For ever-dribling out their base contents,
Touched by the Midas finger of the State,
Bleed gold for Ministers to sport away.
Cowper. The Task, b. iv.

The tricking tradesman, and the merchant bold,
Whom fear of poverty compels to fly
Through seas, excisemen, rocks, oaths, perjury,
Start at each other's crimes with pious fright,
Yet think themselves for ever in the right.
Hamilton. Horace, b. i. Ep. 18.

The most material are the general licences which the law requires to be taken out by all dealers in excisable goods.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

EXCI'TE, v. } Fr. Exciter; It. Eccitare; Sp. Excitar; Lat.
EXCI'TABLE. } Excitare, (ex, and citare,
EXCI'TATE. } idem quod movere, (Festus;) perhaps from the Gr.
EXCITA'TION. } Κι-ειν, to go, to move.)
EXCI'TATIVE } To move, to stir, to
EXCI'TEMENT. } raise, to rouse, to animate, to inspirit.
EXCI'TING, s. }

——— And excited othere
Throw my word and al my wit. hure yvel workes to shewe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 68.

And whanne he wolde go to Achaie britheren excituden and wroten to the disciplis that thei schulden resseyue hym.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 18.

And whan he, thurgh his madnesse and folie
Hath lost his owen good thurgh Jupartie
Than he exciteth other folk therto
To lese hir good as he himself hath do.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,212.

Oft the lothe thing is doen, by excitacion of other maares opinion.—Id. Test. of Love, b. i.

And foundeth howe he might excite
The iudges through his eloquence,
Fro dethe to torne the sentence
And set her hertes to pitee.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

What shal he doe to such fathers, that excite & moove their children vnto lechery, pleasure, and vngratious actes eyther with wordes or els with deeds.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. ii. c. 11.

The people of that secte [Pythagorici] or of that vsage were accustomed euery morny nge whan they shoulde ryse frome their beddes to here the sounde of an harpe, wherby their spyrites myght be more quicke and ready to receiue their studies, thinking nothyng more profytable than it vnto the free & noble exciting of their mindes.
Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 38.

But of all wisedome be thou precedent,
O soueraigne Queene, whose praise I would endite,
Endite I would as dutie doth excite.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

I say conveniently placed, that is, in regard of the object, that it be not too ponderous, or any way affixed, in regard of the agent, that it be not foul or sullied, but wiped, rubbed and excitated.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

But their iterated clamations to excitate their dying or dead friends, or revoke them into life again was a vanity of affection.—Id. Urn Burial, c. 4.

As the Spartans used it, it served still for an excitation to valour, and honourable actions: but then they were so carefull of the manner of it, as they fined Terpander, and nailed his harp to the post, for being too inventive, in adding a string more than usual.—Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 88.

When I view the fairness and equality of his temper and carriage, I can in truth descry in his own name, no original excitement of such distaste, which commonly ariseth, not so much from high fortune, as from high looks.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 553.

Its humble method nothing has of fierce,
But hates the rattling of a lofty verse;
There native beauty pleases and excites,
And never with harsh sounds the ear affrights.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 2.

His heart was most soft and sensible, his actions were most quick and exciteable by their due objects.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

The balance of power is kept up amongst them in general, as well as in most of the separate constitutions, by a due mixture of liberty, the grand preservative of public spirit, and best excitement to each private virtue.
Law. Theory of Religion, pt. iii.

The subject yields many practical remarks; and the warmest, and strongest excitations to piety.
Id. Ib. Letter from Dr. Taylor.

Admonitory of duty, and excitative of devotion.
Barrow. Exposition on the Creed.

Hope is the grand exciter of industry.—Decay of Piety.

No lovely Helens now with fatal charms
Excite th' avenging Chiefs of Greece to arms;
No fair Penelopes enchant the eye,
For whom contending Kings were proud to die.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 1.

It should be allowed, as is indeed true, that the alternate excitation of hope and fear is attended with considerable delight in consequence of the exercise it affords to the animal spirits and the imagination.—Knox. Winter Evenings, E.45.

Just before the battle of Trebia, the General, encouraging his followers, by all the usual excitements to do their duty, concludes with a promise of the most magnificent spoils, as the reward for their valour.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. c. 2.

EXCI'ZE, v. } Lat. Excidere, to cut out,
EXCI'SION. } (ex, and cædere, to cut.) Excision—

A cutting out or off; extirpation, destruction.

O poore and myserable citie, what sondry tourmētes, excisions, subuertions, depopulations, and other euyll aduentures hath hapned vnto the, sens thou were byrefte of that noble courte of Saplence.—Sir T. Elyot. Govern. b. iii. c. 22.

This is the case here described, and cannot be drawn to any thing else but its parallel, that is, a malicious renouncing charity, or holy life, as these men did the faith, to both which they had made their solemn vows in baptism; but this can no way be drawn to the condemnation and final excision of such persons, who after baptism fall into any great sin, of which they are willing to repent.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 9. s. 4.

The copy of [the book] was taken from the author [John Birkenhead] by those who said they could not rob, because all was theirs; so excis'd what they liked not.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

In the next place, as to that extermination and excision of the Canaanites, which carries so horrible an appearance of severity, we may find it qualifiable, if we consider, that for the nature of the trespasses which procured it, they were insufferably heinous and abominable.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 37.

The history of the various and strange vicissitudes they underwent, from their first erection into a people down to their final excision, is punctually registered and transmitted to us.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 7.

EXCLA'IM, v. } Fr. Exclamer; Sp. Exclamar; It. Eschiamare; Lat. Exclamare, to call out, (ex, and clamare, to call.)
EXCLA'IM, n.
EXCLA'IMER.
EXCLAMA'TION.
EXCLA'MATORY.

To call out, to cry out, to raise an outcry; to shout aloud.

They ran streight to harneys, and clustring togeather about the place where the murder was done, made an exclamacion, that except Polidamus and the other doers of that deede were delluered to their handes, they woulde ouerthrowe the wall, and make sacrifice to their dead captain with the blood of the offenders.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 176.

Outcrying is when with voyce we make an exclamation. O Lord, O God, O worlde, O life, O maners of men!

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 208.

I will exclaim to the world on thee, and beg justice of the Duke himself; villain! I will.

Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act iii. sc. 1.

Host. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 3.

He set this gentleman to doe me shame,
Intending by exclaimes to raise the court.

The Costly Whore, (1633.) B. 2.

Yet marking them by whom so many fell
Huge exclamations burst abruptly out.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The Tenth Houre.

In his charges to the clergy, he [Bp. Burnet] exclaimed against the pluralities, as a sacrilegious robbery of the revenues of the church.—Burnet. Own Time. Life of the Author.

I must have leave to tell this exclaimer, in my turn, that if that were his real aim, his manner of proceeding is very strange, wonderful, and unaccountable.

Atterbury. Ser. vol. ii. Pref.

It is said, that Monsieur Torcy, when he signed this instrument, broke into this exclamation; Would Colbert have signed such a treaty for France? On which a minister present was pleased to say, Colbert himself would have been proud to have saved France in these circumstances on such terms.—Tatler, No. 20.

Let us therefore pass for a third way, by which God delivers over a sinner to error and circumvention. Which point I shall conclude with those exclamatory words of St. Paul, so full of wonder and astonishment, in Rom. xi. 33. How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!—South, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

I could see Vice in robes array'd,
Could see the games of Folly play'd
Successfully in Fortune's school,
Without exclaiming rogue or fool.—Churchill. Ghost, b. iv.

——— These holy groves
Permit no exclamation 'gainst Heav'n's will
To violate their echoes: Patience here,
Her meek hands folded on her modest breast
In mute submission lifts th' adoring eye,
Ev'n to the storm that wrecks her.—Mason. Caractacus.

EXCLU'DE, v. } Fr. Exclure; Sp. Excluir; It. Escludere; Lat. Excludere, to shut out, (ex, and claudere, to be, or cause to be, so near as to touch; to keep close or confined, to shut in.)
EXCLU'SION.
EXCLU'SIONIST.
EXCLU'SIVE.
EXCLU'SIVELY.

To shut out, to block or bar out, to debar; to thrust out, eject, expel, or emit; to prevent or hinder admission.

Who shal me gide? who shal me now conuey,
Sith I fro Diomede, and noble Troilus
Am clene excluded, as abiect odious?

Chaucer. The Testament of Creseide.

Wherfore our faithe stayed vpon God and vpon his promises to be herd and forgeuen for Christis sake, whom the father willed to be offred vp a sacrifice for our sinnes, excludeth al maner a doute, and al that may let or fight agenst this merciable forgeuenes.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

I thynke that euery wise man after he hath read this boke, will not saie that I am the principal auctour of this worke, nor yet to iudge me so ignoraunt to exclude me cleane from it, for so high sentences are not founde at this present time, nor to so high a style thei of time past neuer atteined.

Golden Boke, Prol.

This man is so cunning in his Inclusiues & exclusiues, that he dyscerneth nothing betwene copulatives and disiunctiues.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 943.

Some there be who not unaptly say, That we ought no lesse but rather more, to void out of young men that presumption and foolish opinion which they have of their own selves, then to rid and exclude the wind and aire out of leather bagge or bladders wherewith they are puft and blown up, if we meane to infuse and put any good thing in them.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 44.

O, put it in the publick voice,
To make a free, and worthy choice:
Excluding such as would invade
The commonwealth. B. Jonson. Catiline, Act ii.

The staire were then let down, whether to dare
The fiend by easie ascent or aggravate
His sad exclusion from the dores of bliss.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

There may, I confess, from this narrow time of gestation ensue a minority or smalness in the exclusion.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6.

Whatever pure thou in thy body enjoy'st
(And pure thou wert created) we enjoy
In eminence, and obstacle find none
Of membrane, joynt, or limb, exclusive barrs.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

To this I reply, that, when water is taken exclusively to the spirit, it is very true, that it is not water that cleanses the soul, and the cleansing of the body cannot save us; but whoever urges the necessity of baptism, urges it but as a necessary sacrament or instrument to convey or consign the spirit.—Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, s. 18.

I ought to thank you in particular for the affection which you have testified to me, in the affair of the succession, which excludes at the same time all the Catholic heirs, who have always caused so many disorders in England

The Life of Burnet. Letter from Sophia, Electress.

I was forced to trust to my sword for the keeping down of the enemy, being alone in the chamber, and all relief excluded from me, except such as came in by one of my windows that looked into the court of the castle.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 77.

In the mean time, to improve the present opportunity, they prevail with the King to pass an Act for the exclusion of the Bishops out of the House of Lords.

Id. Ib. vol. i p. 14.

His strength as yet in David's friendship lies,
And what can David's self without supplies?
Who with exclusive Bills must now dispense,
Debar the heir, or starve in his defence.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

A bill was brought in for the total exclusion of the duke from the crown of England and Ireland.

Hume. History of England, c. 67. an. 1679.

The exclusionists had a fair prospect of success, and their plan being clearly the best, they were justified in pursuing it.—Fox. History of the early part of James II. c. 1.

Various persons may concur in the same measure on various grounds. They may be various, without being contrary to, or exclusive to each other.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

War, or the chace, are exclusively their province, and when engaged in these, the men endure much greater fatigues and hardships than those allotted to their partners.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 2.

EXCO'CT, v. } Lat. Excoquere, to boil out,
EXCO'CTION. } (ex, and coquere, to boil.)

To boil out, to force out by boiling, to boil thoroughly.

Salt and sugar, which are excocted by heat, are dissolved by cold and moisture.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 843.

For in the excoctions and depurations of metals it is a familiar error, that to advance excoction, they augment the heats of the furnace or the quantity of the infection.

Id. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. v. c. 2.

EX-CO'GITATE, v. } Fr. Excogiter; Lat. Excogitare, (ex, and cogitare,) a cogendo dictum. The mind, says Varro, collects (cogit) many things together, from which it may select. See To COGITATE.
EXCOGITA'TION. }

"Fr. Excogiter,—seriously to think, earnestly to consider, intentively to study of; also, to invent by serious thinking, devise after an exact consideration, find out with earnest study," (Cotgrave.)

In his incomparable warres and busynes almost incredible, he [Cæsar] dydde excogitate most excellēt pollycies and deuyses, to vāquish or subdewe his ennemyes.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governor, b. i. c. 23.

Wherfore to consyderation pertayneth excogitation and auysement, to prouydence, prouysion and execution.—Id. Ib.

And why should men excogitate strange arts,
To show their tyranny, as those who strive
To feed on mischiefs.

Stirling. Chorus Fourth, in the Alexandrian Tragedy.

Whether design was the production of chance or excogitation, we determine not, certain it is that practice and experience was its nurse and perficient.

Evelyn. Sculpture, c. 5.

[These] seem to have been excogitated only to shun the necessity of admitting a vacuum.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 135.

It was this passion which gave birth to writing, and brought literary composition to an art; whereby the public was made a sharer in those important truths which particulars had with so much toil excogitated for its use and entertainment.—Warburton. Ded. (1738) to Free-Thinkers.

EXCO'MMENGE, v. To excommunicate. Fr. Excommange,—an excommunication.

They inhanced the slaughter of the fraternitie so heinous-lie, and concealed their owne prankes so couertlie, as the Pope excommenged the towne, the towne accursed the friars.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

EXCOMMU'NICATE, v. } Fr. Excommunier; It. Scomunicare; Mid. Lat. Excommunicare, (ex, and communicare, to share with, or impart to others.) See Du Cange, in v.
EXCOMMU'NICATE, n.
EXCOMMU'NICATE, adj.
EXCOMMUNICA'TION.
EXCOMMU'NICATOR.
EXCOMMU'NICABLE.
EXCOMMU'NE, v.
EXCOMMU'NION.

To expel, exclude, prohibit or interdict, from communion; i. e. from sharing or participating; from communion or fellowship (with the faithful.)

He that was ones excommunycated, muste haue his discharge of the spirituall court, and not of the kynge.

Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

For if thou take of the excommunicate thynges, so shall you make the hoste of Israel excommunycate and shall trouble it.—Bible, 1551. Joshua, c. 6.

Who knoweth not howe that if his hotte thunderboltes of excommunication could any thing harme vs, we had therewith ben beaten to powder long since.

Bale. The Pageant of Popes, fol. 197.

Yea although they bee impious idolaters, wicked heretickes, persons excommunicable, yea, and cast out for notorious improbitie.—Bp. Hall. Apolog. Advert. to the Reader.

It is clear, that the goatish kings which reigned in Spain were not hereditary, but elective, yea, censurable, excommunicable, and desposable by them for their male-administrations.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, &c. pt. v. p. 57.

Thus for a while continued the realm without divine sacraments or exercises, excepted only confession, extreme unction, and baptism, the king being also excommunicated, and burials allowed only in highways and ditches without ecclesiastic ceremony.

Selden. Illust. of Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

Athanasius, Bishop at that time of Alexandria, bearing himselfe too high above his profession, and one who went about to enquire into matters that to him belonged not (as the daily bruit and rumor went of him) the congregation (or the Synode, as they tearme it) of the same place, excommunicated and remooved from the sacramentall dignitie, which he held and celebrated.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 42.

Now that this sedition of Cylon was utterly appeased in Athens, for that the excommunicates were banished the countrey, and the city fell again into their old troubles and dissensions about the government of the commonweal.
North. Plutarch, p. 71.

But how little there is of proper jurisdiction in excommunication we can demonstrate but by too good an argument. For suppose Julian robbing of a church, striking the bishop, disgracing the religion, doing any thing for which he is ipso facto excommunicate; tell him of the penalty he incurs, cite him before the bishop, denounce it in the church; what have you done to him that shall compel him to do his duty?
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

Pan. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more?
If thou stand excommunicate, and curst.
Shakespeare. King John, Act iii. sc. 1.

But afterwards in the way homeward, they began to thinke more and more of it, and to grow melancholie; thinking it a great indignitie, that like polluted and prophaned persons, they should be driven from the games, on festival holidaies, discarded (as a man would say) and excommunicate out of the companie both of God and man.
Holland. Livie, p 69.

He caused all the infringers of it to be horribly excommunicated by all the bishops of England, in his owne presence, and of all his barons; and himselfe was one of the excommunicators.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloy. &c pt. i. p. 19.

Poets indeed were excommuned Plato's commonwealth.
Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, p. 21.

After this perform'd with what patience and attendance is possible, and no relenting on his part, having done the utmost of their care, in the name of God and of the church they dissolve their fellowship with him, and holding forth the dreadful sponge of excommunion, pronounce him wiped out the list of God's inheritance, and in the custody of Satan till he repent.
Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

If a toy comes into the Pope's head, or, upon some pique or jealousie, he falls into the censures of the Church, and excommunicates a Prince: what a case is this poor Prince in, as to all those subjects that think themselves bound to obey the Pope!—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

The whole force of excommunication consists only in this, that the resolution of the society in that respect being declared, the union that was between the body and some member comes thereby to be dissolved, and that relation ceasing, the participation of some certain things, which the society communicated to its members, and unto which no man has any civil right, comes also to cease.
Locke. A Letter concerning Toleration.

The Ecclesiastical Courts possessed the power of pronouncing excommunication, and that sentence, besides the spiritual consequences supposed to follow from it, was attended with immediate effects of the most important nature. The person excommunicated was shunned by every one as profane and impious; and his whole estate, during his life-time, and all his movables, for ever were forfeited to the crown.—Hume. Hist. of England, c. 17.

The old Canons of the Church are very strict in requiring a general attendance on this holy rite. They declare all persons who come to church and join in the prayers, and yet turn their backs on the Eucharist, excommunicate.
Knox. Considerations on the Lord's Supper.

EXCO'RIATE, v. EXCORIA'TION. EXCO'RIABLE. } Fr. Excorier; Sp. Escoriar; It. Escoriare, eximere corium, to pull off the hide or skin, (Minshew.)

To flay; to pluck or strip off the skin.

Thus works the hand of nature:—observable in such a natural net as the scaly covering of fishes, of mullets, carps, tenches, &c. even in such as are excoriable, and consist of smaller scales, as, soles and flounders.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

I [Wolsey] haue a fluxe with a continuall feauer, the nature whereof is, that if there be no alteration of the same within 8 daies, either must ensue excoriation of the entrailes, or frensie, or else present death.—Stowe. Hen. VIII.

For it healeth weeping eies that have run with water a long time, and the excoriations or frettings of the eye-lids.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 3.

The heat of the Island Squauena, Gregory used to call infernal; for, saye he, it excoriates the skin, melts hard Indian wax in a cabinet, and scares your shoes like a red hot iron.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 694.

Sometimes I was covered with emollients by which it was expected that all the scars would be filled, and my cheeks plumped up to their former smoothness: and sometimes I was punished with artificial excoriations, in hopes of gaining new graces with a new skin.—Rambler, No. 133.

EXCO'RTICATE, v. From Lat. Ex, and cortex, the bark.

To strip off the bark.

8. Moss is to be rubb'd and scrap'd off with some fit instrument of wood, which may not excorticate the tree, or with a piece of hair-cloth after a sobbing rain.
Evelyn. Discourse on Forest Trees, c. 26.

E'XCREMENT. EXCREME'NTAL. EXCREMENTI'TIOUS. EXCREME'NTIVE. EXCREME'NTIZE. EXCREME'NTOUS. EXCRE'TE, v. EXCRE'TION. EXCRE'TORY, n. EXCRE'TORY, adj. } Fr. Excrement; It. Escremento; Sp. Excremento; Lat. Excrementum, from excern-ere, excretum, to separate, (ex, and cernere;) Gr. Κριν-ειν, to separate, to disjoin; because (says Minshew) it is separated from the nutriment by concoction, and cast out through certain passages which nature has provided. It is also applied to other things separated or distinct from the substance of the main body, as—

The nails, corns, the hair.

Wood, in his life of Sir Charles Sedley, (Athenæ Oxon.) uses the verb excrementize.

Bread hauing moch branne, fylleth the beely with excrementes and nourysheth lytell or nothynge. but shortly descendeth from the stomake.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

And after him the fatall Welland went,
That if old sawes proue true (which God forbid)
Shall drowne all Holland with his excrement.
And shall see Stamford, though now homely hid,
Then shine in learning more than ever did
Cambridge or Oxford, England's goodly beames
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

But whether those little dusty particles, upon the lower side of the leaves, be seeds and seminal parts; or rather, as it is commonly conceived, excremental separations; we have not been able to determine by any germination or univocal production from them.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

It may, indeed, be thought a modesty in nature, to cover those excrementive parts, which, left uncover'd, perhaps might offer offence.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 52.

The third original of insects is from the living body of another animal, whose excrementitious parts do naturally breed insects, as lice, fleas, wormes.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, c. 3. c. 4.

But you will say that hair is but an excrementitious thing, and makes not to this purpose.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 31.

So when the oxe corrupteth into bees, or the horse into hornets, they come not forth in the image of their originals. So the corrupt and excrementous humours in man are animated into lice.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

He thinks he is made of better clay than the common lump, it is others happinesse to serve him; he magnifies every act that falls from him, as that proud Nebuchadnezzar, Is not this great Babal that I haue built? Yea, his own very excretions are sweet and fragrant, whiles the perfumes of others are rank and ill-scented.—Bp. Hall. Full of Pride.

Nor do they [toads] contain those urinary parts which are found in other animals, to avoid that serous excretion: for though not only birds, but oviparous quadrupeds and serpents have kidneys and ureters, and some fishes also bladders, yet for the moist and dry excretion they have one vent and common place of exclusion.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 13.

Upon this [head] grows the hair, which though it be esteemed an excrement, is of great use to cherish and keep warm the brain, and so to quench the force of any stroke that might otherwise endanger the skull.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Another opinion there is touching respiration, which makes the genuine use of it to be ventilation not of the heart, but of the blood, in its passage through the lungs, in which passage it is disburthened of those excrementitious steams proceeding, for the most part, from the superfluous serosities of the blood (we may add) and of the chyle too.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 103.

But surely there is a great and constant heat required there for the separation of the urine from the blood; the constant separation and excretion whereof is necessary for the preservation of life.—Ray. The Creation, pt. ii. p. 339.

Also another thing considerable is that the excretory ducts of the mucilaginous glands have some length in their passage from the glands to their mouths.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 8. Note (f.)

These glandules are respectively furnished with an artery, a vein, a nerve, and usually also an excretory vessel suitable to its size and uses.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 733.

More excremental maggots breed
In poets' topsy-turvy head,
Born like a momentary fly,
To flutter, buzz about, and die.
Lloyd. To William Hogarth, Esq

The gland, the pap, the nature and quality of the excreted substance, the manner of obtaining it from its lodgement in the body, the application of it when obtained, form, collectively, an evidence of intention which it is not easy to understand.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 13.

The young snail comes out of its egg with its shell upon its back: and the gradual enlargement which the shell receives, is derived from the slime excreted by the animal's skin. Now the aptness of this excretion to the purpose, its property of hardening into a shell, and the action, whatever it be, of the animal, whereby it avails itself of its gift, and of the constitution of its glands, (to say nothing of the work being commenced before the animal is born,) are things which can, with no probability, be referred to any other cause than to express design; and that, not on the part of the animal alone, in which design, though it might build the house, could not have supplied the material.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

EXCRE'SCENT. EXCRE'SCENCE. EXCRE'SCENCY. } Fr. Excrescence; It. Escrescenza; Sp. Excrecencia; Lat. Excrescentia. from Excrescere, to grow out, (ex, and crescere, to grow.)

A growing out; that which grows out; generally applied to that which grows out uselessly or superfluously.

And shall we lose a limb for an excrescence, or an ointment; an essential of religion for that which is but accessary, and extrinsick, charity for an opinion!—Glanvill, Ser. 2.

As touching those excrescences in manner of mushromes, which be named Fungi, they are by nature more dull and slow.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxii. c. 23.

The same is observably effected in the Julus Catkins, or pendulous excrescencies of several trees, of walnuts, alders, and hazels, which, hanging all the winter and maintaining their net-work close, by the expansion thereof are they early foretellers of the spring.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all our vices have created arts;
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the time to come
Pope. Essay on Man, Epistle 2.

Mountains have been look'd upon by some as warts and superfluous excrescences, of no use or benefit, nay, rather as signs and proofs, that the present earth is nothing else but a heap of rubbish and ruins.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Had we been born with a large wen upon our faces, or a Bavarian poke under our chins, or a great bunch upon our backs like camels, or any the like superfluous excrescence.
Id. ib.

But these were the imperfections of his nature, or rather the excrescences of his ruling virtues, an uncommon frankness of mind, and sensibility of heart.
Hurd. The Life of Warburton.

EXCRU'CIATE, v. EXCRUCIA'TION. } Fr. Excrucier; Lat. Excruciare, (ex, and cruciare, to affix to a cross, qv.)

To inflict severe or excessive pains, as if transfixed upon a cross; to torture, to torment, to afflict with agony.

Whilst they feel hell, being damned in their hate:
Their thoughts, like devils, them excruciate.
Drayton. Of Worldly Crosses.

He [Socrates] wittingly did marry her, [Xantippe] to exercise his patience, that by the practise of enduring her shrewish heats he might be able to brook all companies, the brawls, the scorns, the sophisms, and the petulancies of rude and unskilfull men, the frettings, the thwartings, and the excruciations of life, and so go out a more perfect and exact philosopher.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 57.

Ministers and medical practitioners are often witnesses to scenes as wretched as this, where, to poverty, cold, nakedness, and death, are added the languors of lingering and loathsome diseases, and the torments of excruciating pain.
Knox, Ess. 143.

Thus it [fear] has been known to relieve excruciating fits of the gout.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 3.

EXCU'LPATE, v. EXCULPA'TION. EXCU'LPATORY. } Fr. Desculper; Sp. Disculpar; It. Scolpare, Lat. Ex, and culpare, which Vossius derives from the Heb. Chalaph, to pass over or beyond, to transgress; culpa, properly, being a transgression of the laws, and the bounds of virtue. See CULPABLE.

To free or excuse from blame, censure or condemnation.

In Scotland the law allows of an exculpation, by which the prisoner is suffered before his trial to prove the thing to be impossible.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1684.

To this first and unique canto he author prefixed a something in which he exculpated himself from being the author of the heroic epistle.—Mason. Epistle to Dr. Shebbeare, Note.

So that if I chose to make a defence of myself, on the little principles of a culprit, pleading in his exculpation, I might not only secure my acquittal, but make merit with the opposers of the bill.

Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

He [Pope] wrote an exculpatory letter to the Duke [of Chandos] which was answered with great magnanimity, as by a man who accepted his excuse without believing his professions.—Johnson. Life of Pope

EXCU'RSION. EXCU'RSIVE. EXCU'RSIVELY. EXCU'RSIVENESS. } Fr. Excursion; Sp. Excursion; Lat. Excursio, from Excurrere, to run out, (ex, and currere.) Harvey uses the verb to excur.

A running out, rambling or roving, or wandering about; a digression, a departure, (sc.) from bounds or method.

A pious, zealous, most religious sonne,
Who on the enemy excursion made,
And spite of danger strongly did invade,
Their vittailes convoy.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

For when the Romane legions were abroad, they would leave the field, and take to their cities: when they perceived the legions were removed and gone, they would make excursions and waste the country.—Holland. Livies, p. 77.

And if to that we add the increment caused by the sweep of the moon, or the excursion of her orb beyond the Magnus Orbis, we shall have a space yet broader 280 thousand miles.

Derham. Astro-Theology, b. i. c. 3.

The committee of both kingdoms ordered my regiment to lie at Odium, to prevent the excursions of the garrison at Basing-house.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 125.

My sole delight, as through the falling glooms
Pensive I stray, or with the rising dawn
On Fancy's eagle-wing excursive soar.—Thomson. Summer.

Of rest was Noah's dove bereft,
When with impatient wing she left
That safe retreat, the ark,
Giving her vain excursions o'er,
The disappointed bird once more
Explor'd the sacred bark.—Cotton. The Fire-side.

What though far off, from some dark cell espied,
His glimmering mazes cheer the excursive sight,
Yet turn, ye wanderers, turn your steps aside,
Nor trust the guidance of that faithless light.

Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands.

The flesh of animals which feed excursively, is allowed to have a higher flavour than that of those who are cooped up.

Boswell. Life of Johnson.

EXCU'SE, v. EXCU'SER, n. EXCU'SABLE. EXCU'SABLY. EXCU'SABLENESS. EXCU'SATORY. EXCUSA'TION. EXCU'SER. EXCU'SELESS. EXCU'SEMENT. EXCU'SING, n. } Fr. Excuser; It. Scusare, escusare; Sp. Escusar; Lat. Excusare; causâ, seu crimine, liberare, exuere, to free from or acquit of blame or accusation. (Martinius.)

To free or clear, or exempt from blame or accusation; to exculpate, to acquit, to release or discharge from penalty, bond or obligation; to discharge, to disengage, to remit.

For thy ich praye gow Peers paraunter yf ge meteth
Treuthe telleth to hym. that ich be excused.

Piers Ploughman, p. 126.

Ich drede me and he deye. hit worth for dedlich synne
Acounted byfore Crist. bote conscience excuse hym.

Id. p. 159.

And alle bigunnen togider to excuse hem, the fyrst seyde: I haue a toun, and I haue nede to go out and see it, Y preie thee haue me excused.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 14.

And they all at once beganne to excuse. The first sayd vnto him, I haue bought a farme, and I must nedes go and see it, I pray thee haue me excused.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

If I hadde not come and hadde not spoken to hem thei schulden not haue synne, but now thei han noon excusacioun of her synne.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 15.

Than cometh also of ire attry anger, whan a man is sharpely amonested in his shrift to leave his sinne, than wol he be angry, and answere hokerly and angerly, to defend or excusen his sinne by unsteadfastness in the fleshe.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

——— Ye be not excusable,
A faithfull harte euer is acceptable.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

For certis ther availeth non essoine, ne non excusacion.

Id. The Persones Tale.

He maketh his excusacion
And feigneth cause of pure drede.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But there ayene the counsaile saide
That thei be nought excused so,
For he is one and thei be two.
And two have more witte than one,
So thilke excusement was none. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Then they having no lawe, are a lawe vnto themselves, whych shewe the dede of the lawe wrytten in their heartes: whyle theyr conscyence beareth wytnesse vnto them and also their thoughtes, accusynge one another or excusynge.

Bible, 1551. Rom. c. 2.

For them am I bounde to beleue, and am damned wythout excuse yf I beleue them not.

A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 9.

If thou doubt any thing of Scripture, or bee ignorant in it, aske of him that is cõmendable of liuing, and for his age excusable, nor hath any euill name, and that may say, I haue disposed thee to one man to yeeld a chast virgin vnto Christ.—Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. iii. c. 6.

He had nat ben ther past a moneth but that the King of Englande sent to hym, that incontynent without delay, all excusacions layd aparte, he should passe the sea, and come into Englande to speke with him.

Bernes. Froissart. Chronycle, vol. i. c. 271.

And leste thou shouldest thinke, it were onely a marginal errour, brought in by some ouersight of the printer, as he vseth sometimes to excuse, and to slufte the mater, he hath thus laide it wide open in his owne texte.

Jewell. Defence, p. 101.

At which his vaine excuse they all gan smile,
As scorning his vnmanly cowardise.
And Florimell him foully gan reuile,
That for her sake refus'd to enterprize
The battell, offred in so knightly wise.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octauia, not onely that,
That were excusable, that and thousands more
Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd
New warres 'gainst Pompey.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 4.

Prefaces, and passages, and excusations, and other speeches of reference to the person, are great wastes of time; and though they seem to proceed of modesty, they are bravery.—Bacon. Ess. Of Dispatch.

But if a man seriously waigh the matter, these things rather redound to the imputation of physitians, than their excusation: who would not for these prejudices cast away hope; but encrease their paine and diligence.

Id. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

You are likely to come so excuseless to your torments, so unpitied and so scorned, so without all honour in your sufferings.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 524.

If they say that he did sin in doing this; they must at the same time acknowledge, that a man's persuasion that a thing is a duty, will not excuse him from guilt in practising it; if really and indeed it be against God's law.

Sharp, vol. ii. A Discourse of Conscience.

These sort of speeches, issuing from just and honest indignation, are sometimes excusable, sometimes commendable; especially when they come from persons eminent in authority, of notable integrity, endued with special measures of divine grace, of wisedom, of goodness.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Notwithstanding all that may be said concerning the innocence or excuseableness of some men's mistakes about these matters [idolatry and schism]; yet nevertheless, it infinitely concerns every person to have a care how he engaged either in the one or the other.

Sharp, vol. ii. A Discourse of Conscience.

He made excusatory answers.

A. Wood. Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1557.

And that which aggravates these men's prophaneness, and leaves them excuseless in it, is that there are few of these fools (for so the wise man calls them) that make a mock of sin; that have said in their hearts, that there is no God, or that the Scripture is not his word, their disrespect to the Scripture springing from their vanity, not their incredulity.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 303.

The Gentiles, by the light of nature, had the means of obtaining so much knowledge of God, that is, of what was expedient for them to know, and not too difficult to attain, as to render them excuseless, if they did not pay him a high veneration and gratitude.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 765

In vain would his excusers endeavour to palliate his enormities, by imputing them to madness.—Swift.

And there are few actions so ill (unless they are of a very deep and black tincture indeed) but will admit of some extenuation, at least from those common topics of human frailty, such as are ignorance or inadvertency, passion or surprize, company or solicitation; with many other such things, which may go a great way towards an excusing of the agent, though they cannot absolutely justify the action.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

This brought on the sending an excusator in the name of the king and kingdom, to show that the king was not bound to appear upon the citation; nor yet to send a proctor to appear in his name.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, b. ii.

While we obey only from fear of him, we are unwilling and backward, imagine difficulties, contrive excuses, and think it a point gained if we can persuade ourselves, that this or that needs not to be done.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 15.

Homicide in self-defence, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray, is also excusable, rather than justifiable, by the English law.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14.

If even then we refuse it [restitution] unless the cause be that we excusably mistake the nature of the case, we preserve no ground for hope.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 12.

EXCU'SS, v. EXCU'SSION. } Lat. Excutere, excussum, to shake off; (ex, and quatere, to shake.)

To shake off; and thus, according to the legal usage in Ayliffe, to dispossess, to seize.

Excussion, in Bacon, is — a shaking, sifting, searching, inquiring, and thus equivalent to Discussion.

If I shoulde after the like dealing take in hand your popish portues and with like diligence excusse euery popish martyr, and saint there canonised: think you, Maister Cope, &c.

Foxe. Martyrs, p. 533. Defence of the Ld. Cobham.

And if the church of this island, in the days of her forced servitude to the Roman See, maintained this liberty and derived it to posterity, how much more free shall it be for us to renue and injoy it after the just excussion of that servile yoke.—Bp. Hall. Hon. of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 3.

Aphorismes, except they should be altogether ridiculous, cannot be made but out of the pyth and heart of sciences: for illustration and excussion are cut off, variety of example is cut off.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 2.

The person of a man ought not, by the civil law, to be taken for a debt, unless his goods and estate have been first excussed.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

They could not totally excuss the notions of a Deity out of their minds.—Stillingfleet. Orig. Sac. i. 1.

E'XECRATE, v. EXECRA'TION. EXECRA'TORY. E'XECRABLE. E'XECRABLY. } Fr. Exécrer; Sp. Execrar; It. Esecrare; Lat. Execrari, (ex, and sacrare, q. sacrum facere, to make or cause to be holy or sacred.) See CONSECRATE, and DESECRATE.

To pray or utter vows for the withholding or withdrawing sacred or holy, or divine protection; to pray for or imprecate divine wrath; to curse, to abominate, to have or hold accursed, in utter detestation or abomination.

If they did (say I) hell were too good both for them, and for hym that so earnestly defendeth theyr execrable myschefes.—Bale. Apology, fol. 110.

If the tyranny of the pope and of all his ministres be to them sharpe and cruell, thei must cõsider, that the Jewes also of that time suffered heavy and bitter bondage, and yet thei are commaunded in the vulgare speche of the countrey to execrate the idolatrie of the Chaldeas.

Calvine. Foure Godlie Sermons, Ser. 1

So wretched is this execrable war,
This civil sword—wherein though all we see
Be foul, and all things miserable are,
Yet most distressfull is the victory.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii

Give sentence on this execrable wretch
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act v. sc. 3

And are not stage-players, play poets, actors, play-hunters, and those places where they are tolerated, as execrably vitious, as sinful, as odious now to God as ever?

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 19.

——— At last
Her drowned voyce got up above her woes
And with such black and bitter execrations,
(As might affright the Gods, and force the Sunne
Runne backward to the east, nay make the old
Deformed Chaos rise againe, t' oerwhelme
Them, us, and all the world) she fills the ayre.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v

He that conceals or smooths a villain in the execrable practices of a publick mischief, he is truly a reviler and a slanderer; for he reviles his conscience, and slanders his religion.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

Such a person deserved to bear the guilt of a fact so execrably base, was worthy to be employed therein, and ready enough to undergo it.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

All those who were the instruments and abettors of his affliction, how do we loath and abhor them? how do we detest their names, and execrate their memories.

Id. vol. i. Ser. 23

I mean the Epicureans, who though in other respects they were persons of many excellent and sublime speculations, yet because of their gross error in this kind, they have been in ages looked upon with a kind of execration and abhorrency not only amongst the vulgar, but likewise amongst the learneder sort of philosophers.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 9.

This notice of the ceremony is very agreeable to the execratory which is now used by them; wherein they profoundly curse the Christians.

L. Addison. State of the Jews, p. 179.

As blindly we our solemn leaders follow,
And good, and bad, and execrable swallow.

Armstrong. Taste.

The object of a battle was no longer empty glory, but sordid lucre, or something still more execrably flagitious.

Knox. Antipolemus.

They gaze upon the links that hold them fast,
With eyes of anguish, execrate their lot,
Then shake them in despair and dance again.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

E'XECUTE, v.
EXE'CUTER, or EXE'CUTOR.
EXE'CUTERSHIP, or EXE'CUTORSHIP.
EXECU'TION.
EXECU'TIONER.
EXE'CUTIVE.
EXE'CUTIVELY.
EXE'CUTORY.
EXE'CUTRESS.
EXECUTRIX.

Fr. Exécuter; It. Eseguire; Sp. Executar; Lat. Exequi, executus, to follow out, (ex, and sequi, to follow.)

To follow out, (sc.) to the end; to the fulfilment or completion; to the act, effect or full performance; and thus, to act or effect, to use, to perform, fulfil or complete: to perform, (sc.) the sentence or adjudication of the law; and thus, to kill or put to death; to slay.

Now redyliche quath Repentaunce, and by the rode ich leyve
Shal never executor wel by sette the sulver that thow hym levest. Piers Ploughman, p. 100.

And so hit fareth by muche folke, that to freres hem shryveth,
As assissoure and executours. Id. p. 406.

The Destinee, ministre general,
That executeth in the world over al
That purveiance that God hath seen before.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1666.

A maner sergeant was this prive man,
The which he faithful often founden had
In thinges gret, and eke swiche folk wel can
Don execution on thinges bad.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8398.

This every lewed vicar and parson
Can say, how ire engendreth homiside;
Ire is in soth executor of pride.

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7567.

But O fortune, executrice of wierdes.—Id. Troilus, b. iii.

But the other partie was so stronge,
That for the lawe of no statute
There maie no right be execute.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The dome in execution
Was put anone withoute faile.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

And thus was the kingdom peaceably and ordrely ministred (justice, equite, and iugement trewly executed for that lytle tyme) that the churche of God might be the easilier reformed.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

He saw that he being a king, had vsed the detestable office of an executioner in reuenging wth wicked slaughter the libertie of woordes, whyche might haue been imputed vnto wine.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 212.

Besides that if they knew yt there were no purgatory, then should many the more feare God and do wel themselues and not trust to their executours for fear of damnation.

Frith. Workes, p. 24.

With courage on he goes; doth execute
With counsel; and returns with victory.

Daniel. On the Death of the Earl of Devonshire.

And when I haue the bloudy Hector found
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your armes.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 7.

Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy unus'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee.
Which, us'd, lives thy executor to be. Id. son. 4

——— Their executors, the knauish crowes,
Flye o're them all impatient for their houre.

Id. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 2.

As for fishing for testaments and executorships, (as Tacitus saith of Seneca, Testamenta, &c. orbos tanquam indagine capi,) it is yet worse.—Bacon. Ess. Of Riches.

They got into their hand
The writ of execution, that
Her heading did perport
The which was executed soone,
And in a solemne sort.

Warner. Albion's England, b. x. c. 56.

Bas. ——— Rip my bosom up:
I'll stand in execution with a constancy:
This is insufferable.—Ford. Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 2.

So rev'rend now and strong in age appeare,
As if maintain'd by more than human breath;
So grave, as if the councellers they were,
Not executioners of tyrant Death.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 3.

As the more refined and efficacious matter, which we by way of analogy call spirits, are the executive instruments of the actus imperati of our will, so these true and essential spirits are ordinarily the immediate instruments of the imperate acts of divine providence.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 37.

A will indeed! A crabbed woman's will,
Wherein the devil is an overseer,
And proud Dame Eleanor sole executrex.

Tragedy of King John, (1611.)

And the Church of Rome, which takes upon her to be sole executrix, or at least, overseer of it, tells them, that the legacy will do them no good; and keeps it from them, by telling them it is not necessary.

Bp. Taylor. Dis. from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. s. 8.

[The King] had proceeded to their execution, had not the Parliament, by a message sent to Judge Heath, and delivered to him on the bench, threatened a retaliation, by executing two for one, in case they went on, which put a stop to that design.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 33.

Would it not redound to the discredit of an earthly prince, to permit, that the attendants on his person, the officers of his court, the executers of his edicts should have the least injury offered them, should fare scantly or coarsely, should appear in a sordid garb?—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 12.

The high court of justice appointed a committee to inspect the parts about Whitehall for a convenient place for the execution of the King; who having made their report, it was agreed, that a scaffold should be erected to that purpose near the Banqueting house, and order given to cover it with black.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 344.

The next day [30 Jan. 1648,] about eight in the morning, the King attended by a guard, was brought from St. James's, through the Park, to Whitehall; where, having drunk a glass or two of red wine, and staid about two hours in a private room, he was conducted to the scaffold out of a window of the Banqueting house; and having made a speech, and taken off his George, he kneeled down at the block, and the executioner performed his office.—Id. Ib.

Others laboured to have the supreme authority to consist of an assembly chosen by the people, and a council of state chosen by that assembly to be vested with the executive power, and accountable to that which should next succeed, at which time the power of the said council should determine.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 206.

Nor should we forget, that also upon this account we do owe great love and thanks to God the Holy Ghost, who did originally conspire in the wonderful project of our redemption, did executively by miraculous operation conduct our Saviour into his fleshly tabernacle, and did by unmeasurable communications of divine virtue assist his humanity through all the course of his life.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

——— Vain man,
Whose restless thoughts still form the plan
Of guilt, which, wither'd to the root,
Thy lifeless nerves can't execute.

Churchill. The Duellist, b. i.

Is any one so foolish to succeed,
On envy's altar he is doom'd to bleed?
Hogarth, a guilty pleasure in his eyes,
The place of executioner supplies.

Id. Epistle to William Hogarth.

Where the legislative and executive authority are in distinct hands, the former will take care not to entrust the latter with so large a power, as may tend to the subversion of its own independence, and therewith of the liberty of the subject.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

(A contract) may be executory, as if they agree to change [sc. horses] next week; here the right only vests, and their reciprocal property in each other's horse is not in possession, but in action.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 30.

By this operation, two systems of administration were to be formed; one which should be in the real secret and confidence; the other merely ostensible to perform the official and executory duties of government.

Burke. On the Present Discontents.

A female at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen may be executrix; and at twenty-one may dispose of herself and her lands.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 17.

EXEGE'TICAL. } Gr. Εξηγητικος, from
EXEGE'TICALLY. } εξηγεισθαι, (εξ, and ηγεισθαι, ducere, existimare,) to lead or guide, to act as guide or director; to adjudge, expound or explain, (sc.) what is right and lawful.

Adjudicatory, directory, explanatory.

If these words which are called the words of consecration be exegetical and enunciative of the change that is made by prayers, and other mystical words; it cannot be possibly inferred from these words that there is any other change made then what refers to the whole mystery and action.

Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, s. 4.

But if one be exegetical and explicative of the other, and by water and the spirit is meant onely the purification of the spirit, then where is the necessity of baptism of men?

Id. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 2.

They that would have kai, and, not exegetical here, but used only to join under the title of faithful in Christ Jesus, the converts in Asia, I shall desire besides Col. i. 2, to read also 1 Cor. ii. 1, and thereby judge in what sense they are to understand, and to be faithful in Christ Jesus here.

Locke. On Ephesians, i. 15. s. 1.

This is not added exegetically, or by way of exposition

Bp. Bull. Works, vol. i. p. 200.

EXE'MPLAR. See EXAMPLE.

EXE'MPT, v.
EXE'MPT, adj.
EXE'MPTION.
EXE'MPTING, n.
EXEMPTI'TIOUS.

Fr. Exempter; It. Esentare; Sp. Exentar; Lat. Eximere, exemptum, to take out; (ex, and emere, which anciently signified tollere, to take up.)

To except or take out, from or away; and thus, (met.) to free from, release, acquit or discharge, (sc.) a general rule or law.

Who in an oration so cõforted & encouraged al the people for the time, yt he bothe exempted al fear out of their harts, and made them to conceiue good hope & expectation of himself.—Golding. Justine, fol. 50.

——— And till our ears
Reach that celestial musique, which thine now
So cheerfully receive, we must allow
No comfort to our griefes, from which to be
Exempted, is in death to follow thee.

Habington. Castara, pt. ii. Elegy 6

Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royall bloud of France

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 1.

Why should we now their shady curtains draw,
Who by a wise retirement hence are freed,
And gon to lands exempt from Nature's law,
Where love no more can mourn, nor valour bleed?

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 4.

Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doth evil! every soule; here is no exemption by greatnesse, no buying off with bribes, no blearing of the eyes with pretences, no shrouding ourselves in the night of secrecy.

Bp. Hall. Deceit of Appearance. A Sermon.

How material it is to the exempting and freeing of a man from all griefe and sorrow to meditate before hand, and to be able to looke open-eyed full against fortune, and not to make those apprehensions and imaginations in himself soft and effeminate.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 132.

If motion were loose or exemptitious from matter, I could be convinced that it had extension of its own.—More.

So that (her person and her state
Exempted from the common fate)
In all our civil fury she
Stood like a sacred temple free.

Waller. Epitaph on the Lady Sedley

To be exempt from the passions with which others are tormented, is the only pleasing solitude.—Spectator, No 4.

As no man is exempt from some defects, or can live free from some misdemeanours: so by this practice [slander] every man may be rendred very odious and infamous.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 16.

For he [the king's commissioner] gave the royal assent to an act, that gave the undertakers, either of the East India or West India trade, all possible privileges, with exemption of twenty-one years from all impositions.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1695.

For truth it is, since Adam's fall,
His sons must labour, one and all
No man's exempted by his purse,
Kings are included in the curse. Collen, Fab. 5.

I have not measur'd such a tract of land,
Have not, untir'd, beheld the setting sun,
Nor through the shade of midnight urg'd my steps
To animate the Grecians, that myself
Might be exempt from warlike toil, or death.

Glover. Leonidas, b. i.

They, whom God favours most are by no means exempt from sufferings: but he not only will always make religious persons full amends hereafter, but ordinarily grant them deliverance and consolation here.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

Can authors then exemption draw
From Nature's, or the common law?
They err alike with all mankind,
Yet not the same indulgence find. Lloyd. The Poet.

EXE'NTERATE, v. } Fr. Exenterer; Lat.
EXENTERA'TION. } Exenterare; Gr. Εξεντερίζ-ειν, eviscerare, to debowel, or disembowel, (ἐξ, and ἔντερα, viscera, the bowels.

To disembowel, to draw out the entrails or bowels.

Pino commends a ram's lunge applied hot to the forepart of the head, or a young lamb divided in the back, exenterated, &c.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 390.

In the midst of which was a faire table, and thereon those wretches were set in what posture he pleased, so to trie his arme, arte, and blade in this beastly carving of humane bodies sometimes also setting them for markes to his peece or arrowes; sometimes exenterating women, to open and curiously to search the closest cabinets of nature.
Purchas. His Pilgrimage, b. v. c. 15 s. 3.

Bellonius hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming they (cameleons) feed on flies, caterpillars, beetles, and other insects: but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 21.

EXE'QUIES. } More correctly written Exequies, &c. Fr. Exeques; It.
EXE'QUIAL. } Esequie; Sp. Exequias; Lat.
EXE'QUIOUS. } Exsequiæ. Exsequi est sequi pompam funebrem ad sepulturam; to follow the funeral pomp to burial. And thus applied to—

The funeral procession; the funeral rites or solemnities.

For whome, Phrahartes made a royal herce, and dyd exequies after the manner of Prynces
Golding. Justine, fol. 148.

Talb. But yet before we go, let's not forget
The noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen VI. Act iii. sc. 2.

Ye sov'reign cities of this awful isle,
In cypress wreaths, and your most sad attire,
Prepare yourselves to build the funeral pile,
Lay your pale hands to this exequious fire.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

But soon the doubtful oracle is clear'd
As the sad exequies in sight appear'd.
Lewis Of the Thebaid of Statius.

Thetis herself to all our peers proclaims
Heroic prizes and exequial games;
The gods assented; and around thee lay
Rich spoils and gifts, that blazed against the day.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

Games and lustrations must avert thy doom,
And rites exequial grace his honour'd tomb.
Cambridge The Scribleriad, b. iv.

EXE'RCE, v. } Fr. Exercer; It. Esercere,
EXE'RCENT. } esercitare; Sp. Exercitar;
E'XERCISE, v. } Lat. Exercere, ex, and arcere;
E'XERCISE, s. } Gr. Αρκ-ειν, which (Lennep)
EXERCI'SEABLE. } properly denotes—vel aliis
E'XERCISER. } septo et munimento esse vel
EXERCITA'TION. } mihi; to be an enclosure or fence, or a fortress to others or to myself. And thus the Lat. Exercitus, qui sub disciplinâ certâ arcetur, i. e. continetur: because it is kept in or confined under a fixed discipline.

To keep in practice; in use, in regular and habitual employment; to inure to; to train up in; to practise.

Exercise, as voluntary employment, is opposed to involuntary labour; actual work.

But of parfite men is sad mete [solidus cibus] of hem that for custom han wittis exercisid to discrecioun of good and of yuel.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 5.

But stronge meate belongeth to theim that are perfecte, whyche thorowe custome haue theyr wytnes exercised, to judge both good and euyll also.—Bible, an. 1551. Ib.

For bodili exercitacioun is profitable to litel thing, but pitee is profitable to alle thingis that hat. a biheeste of lyf that now is and that is to come.—Wiclif. 1 Tym. c. 4.

For bodely exercyse profyteth lyttel: but godlynes is good vnto al thinges, as a thig which hath promisee to ye life yt is now, and of the life to come.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Philos. Certes all thing that exerceth or corigeth, it profiteth.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

And suffreth us, as for our exercise,
With sharpe scourges of adversitie
Ful often to be bete in sondry wise.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9032.

Wherof, if I shall more seye
Upon the nature of this vice,
Of custome and of exercise,
The man's grace, howe it fordooth,
A tale, whiche was whilom sooth,
Of fooles, that so dronken were,
I shall reherce vnto thyne ere.—Gower. Con A b. vi.

O' stay thy hand: for yonder is no game
For thy fierce arrowes, them to exercise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

——— Things thus order'd
Touching the Gods, 'tis lawful to descend
To human cares, and exercise that power
Heaven has conferred upon me.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act i. sc. 1.

So did she all, that might his constant hart
Withdraw from thought of warlike enterprise,
And drowne in dissolute delights apart,
Where noyse of armes, or view of martiall gise,
Might not reuiue desire of knightly exercise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

——— This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty: fasting, and prayer,
Much castigation, exercise devout.
For heere's a yong and sweating Diuell heere
That commonly rebels.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 4.

Her [scepticism] this man, otherwise eminent, in his paradoxical exercitations against the Aristotelians, hath dared to expose, not veiled as before, and wandring like a queen in the dark, but boldfac'd, and painted, to the multitude and market-place.—White. Exclusion of Scepticks, p. 1.

Bowling is good against the weakness of the reines; shooteing against the obstruction of the longes; walking and upright deport of the body, against the crudities of the stomack, and for other diseases other exercitations.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ix. c. 2.

God never granteth any power or authority, but he appointeth also who shall be the lawfull exercisers and executors of the same.—Fulke against Allen, p. 488. (1586.)

Picture no more maintain'd the doubtful strife,
With Nature's scenes, nor gave the canvass life;
Nor Sculpture exercis'd her skill beneath
Her forming hand, to make the marble breathe.
Fenton. Epistle to Mr. Southerne.

Having abundantly proved in our last exercise, that the frame of the present world could neither be made nor preserved without the power of God; we shall now consider the structure and motions of our own system, if any characters of divine wisdom and goodness may be discoverable by us.
Bentley, Ser. 8.

The question being put, Whether the House of Commons should take advice of the House of Lords in the exercise of the legislative power? it was carried in the negative, and thereupon resolved, "that the House of Peers was useless and dangerous, and ought to be abolished;" and an act was soon passed to that effect.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol i. p 246.

In the excellent exercitations. De Ovo, of the great promoter of anatomical knowledge, Dr. Harvey.
Boyle. Works, vol ii p 27

But we learn from Scripture further, that his Providence extends, even in the minutest instances, to each of us in particular; and that not the smallest thing comes to pass, but by his appointment, or wise permission; that his continual superintendency may be ever exercised towards us for our good.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 32.

In the healthful exercise of the field, I hunted with a battalion, instead of a pack, and at that time I was ready, at any hour of the day or night, to fly from quarters to London, from London to quarters, on the slightest call of private or regimental business.—Gibbon. Memoirs of his own Life.

It is natural to see such powers with a jealous eye; and when stretched in the exercise they alarm and disgust those over whom they are exercisable.
Hargrave. Juridical Arguments, p. 10. (1797.)

His health, thank heaven, is still pretty well; nor is he in the least unfit, as was reported, for any kind of royal exercitation.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 5.

EXE'RT, v. } More properly Exert. Lat.
EXE'RTION. } Exserere, to push or thrust forth, (sc.) from the surface; (ex, and serere, to knit or join.)

To push or thrust out or forth; to put forth, (sc.) with effort, with energy; to labour or endeavour strenuously.

And for a man's informing another's mind with a thought which he had not conceived, it is not a production of any substance, but only an occasioning him to exert an operation of his mind which he did not before.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 3.

The several exertions of the several organs relating to their several functions, the things that impede or advance the vital or sensible operations of a man, &c.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 21.

Though it [the soul] accommodates itself to the eye for seeing, to the ear for hearing; and accommodate not itself to the finger in those exertings of those senses of seeing or hearing, yet it equally accommodates itself to those remote and small organs as perfectly in relation to feeling, and to those motions that are suitable to them.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p 31.

Resistless, through the war, Camilla rode,
In danger unappall'd, and pleas'd with blood:
One side was bare for her exerted breast;
One shoulder with her painted quiver prest.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

Sometimes thou shalt with fervent vows implore
A moderate wind; the orchat loves to wave
With winter winds, before the gems exert
Their feeble heads. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Justice is that which is practised by God himself, and to be practised in its perfection by none but him. Omniscience and ommipotence are requisite for the full exertion of it.
Guardian, No. 99

——— Provok'd, at last, he strove
To show the little minstrel of the grove
His utmost powers, determined once to try
How art exerting, might with nature vie.—Philips, Past. 5.

Discourse on subjects of little or no importance is as necessary, at times, for the relaxation of our minds, as exercise without business for the refreshment of our bodies. It is a proper exertion of that cheerfulness, which God hath plainly designed us to shew, on small occasions, as well as great.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 10.

EXE'SION. Lat. Exedere, exesus, to eat out; (ex, and edere, to eat.)

Who though he [Theophrastus] denieth the exesion or forcing through the belly [of vipers] conceiveth nevertheless that upon a full and plentifull impletion there may perhaps succeed a disruption of the matrix, as it happeneth sometimes in the long and slender fish Acus.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 16.

EXESTUA'TION. Lat. Exæstuare, to boil out or over, (ex, and æstuare, to boil.)

Accordingly physicians and chymists are wont to give it in fevers, to allay the inward exæstuations of the blood and humours.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 364.

EXFO'LIATE, v. } Fr. Exfoliation, exfoliatif; Lat. Ex, and folium, EXFOLIA'TION. } a leaf; Low Lat. Exfoliare, folia decerpere. The word is confined to EXFO'LIATIVE, s. } surgical works.

To scale off in thin, superficial portions.

While the bone was exfoliating, we deterg'd and cicatriz'd the lips, disposing them to incarn with the flesh rising from the exfoliated edges of the bone.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 9.

He intended to shoot through his cloak at Sharp as he was mounting up, but the bullet struck in the Bishop of Orkney's arm, and shattered it so, though he lived some years after, that they were forced to open it every year for an exfoliation.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1699.

Dress the bone with the milder exfoliatives, and keep the ulcer open, till the burnt bone is cast off.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 7.

EXHA'LE, v. } Fr. Exhaler; It. Esalare;
EXHA'LABLE. } Sp. Exhalar; Lat. Exhalare,
EXHA'LANT. } to breathe out, (ex, and halare, to breathe.)
EXHALA'TION. }

To breathe out, to throw forth, to draw forth a fume, reek or vapour, to evaporate; generally, to throw or draw forth.

And moue in that obedient orbe againe,
Where you did giue a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigie of feare, and a portent
Of broached mischeefe, to the unborn times
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 1.

——— Thrice great Achilles spake
And thrice (in heat of all the charge) the Trojans started backe.
Twelve men, of greatest strength in Troy, left with their lives exhal'd,
Their chariots and their darts to death, with his three summons said.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Thus was the first day ev'n and morn:
Nor past uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld:
Birth-day of heav'n and earth.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

The exhalations whizzing in the ayre
Give so much light that I may read by them.
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act ii. sc. 1.

The sun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompence
In humid exhalations, and at even
Sups with the ocean. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Is there not as much reason that the vapours which are exhaled out of the earth should be carried down to the sea, as that those raised out of the sea be brought up upon the dry land.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

They do not appear to emit any at all, if they be examined after the same manner with other exhalable bodies
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 286.

If it be demanded, what becomes of the overplus of exhalations that descend not in rain? I answer; they are partly tumbled down and spent by the winds, and partly descend in dews, which amount to a greater quantity than is commonly imagined.—Derham. Physico-Theol. b. i. c. 5. (Note.)

For it taints and pollutes every prayer; it turns an oblation into an affront, and the odours of a sacrifice into the exhalations of a carcass.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

Her pillow swells not deep with down;
For her no balms their sweets exhale:
Her limbs are on the pale turf thrown,
Press'd by her lovely cheek as pale.
Langhorn. Owen of Carron.

Such as the circulation of the blood through every part of it; its lymphatics, exhalements, absorbents, its excretions, and integuments.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

Heav'ns, what a flood of empyreal day
My aching eyes involves: a temple soars,
Rising like exhalations, on a mount,
And, wide, its adamantine valves expands.
Thompson. On Mr. Pope's Works.

EXHA'LE. To hale or haul, draw or drag out; in the language of ancient Pistol.

The grave doth gape and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale. Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act ii. sc. 1.

Cri. I am conscious of it, sir. Nay, I beseech you, gentlemen, doe not exhale me thus; remember, 'tis but for sweet meats.—B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 3.

EXHA'UST, v. EXHAU'ST, adj. EXHAU'STIBLE. EXHAU'STION. EXHAU'STLESS. EXHAU'STMENT. } Lat. Exhaurire, exhaustum, to draw out; (ex, and haurire, to draw; Gr. Αρυειν.)

To draw out or forth, to empty, to drain; to draw or drain off, (sc.) the sap of life or strength, the spirits; and thus, to wear out, to fatigue.

The greatest loues do nourysbe most fast, for as moch as the fyre hathe not exhausted the moisture of them.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Heaven's indignation seizing on all things,
The greatest waters languish in their way;
The little brooks exhausted in their springs,
For poverty cannot their tribute pay.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Third Houre.

——— Spare not the babe
Whose dimpled smiles from fooles exhaust their mercy.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Rom. Look, look, you slaves! your thankless cruelty,
And savage manners of unkind Dijon,
Exhaust these floods, and not his father's death.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— For the wealth
Of the Canaries was exhaust, the health
Of his good majestye to celebrate.
Habington. Castara, pt. ii. To Sir J. P. Knight.

Though great exhaustions cannot be cured with sudden remedies, no more in a kingdom than in a natural body, yet your lordship hath well allay'd those blustering clamours wherewith at your beginnings your house was in a manner dayly besieged.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 334.

[May 7, 1662.] A man thrusting in his arme (into Boyle's vacuum) upon exhaustion of y^e aire, had his flesh immediately swelled so as the bloud was neare bursting the veines: he drawing it oute we found it speckled.—Evelyn. Memoirs.

This bishoprick [is] already very meanly endowed in regard of the continual charge, and exhaustments of the place.
Cabbala. Dr. Williams, to the Duke.

There is no man that thinks warmly and for a long time upon a thing, but mightily exhausts his spirits, and leaves himself after such intension very flat and languid.
Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

When we on fruitful nature's care reflect
And her exhaustless energy respect.
Blackmore. The Creation.

He [Meninski] complains in his preface, that his patrimony was exhausted by the great expence of employing and supporting a number of writers and printers, and of raising a new press for the Oriental characters.
Sir Wm. Jones. Persian Grammar, Pref.

Besides, though employed with profusion, and even with prodigality, yet its sum total was definite and easily exhaustible, particularly when every research was made to discover, and every method used to obtain it
Eustace. Classical Tour through Italy, c. 12.

Neither is the damage to publick credit of very great consequence, when compared with that which results to publick morals, and to the safety of the constitution, from the exhaustless mine of corruption opened by the precedent, and to be wrought by the principle, of the late payment of the debts of the civil list.
Burke. On the Cause of the Present Discontents.

EXHERIDA'TION. Lat. Ex, and hæres, an heir. Fr. Exhéréder,—to disherit or disinherit; to deprive of the rights of inheritance. See DISINHERIT.

I shall first demand whether sons may not lawfully and reasonably fear punishment from their parents, in case they shall deserve it, even the greatest punishment, exheredation, and casting out of the family, upon their continuing disobedient and refractory to their father's commands.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 144.

EXHI'BIT, v. EXHI'BIT, n. EXHI'BITER. EXHIBI'TION. EXHIBI'TIONER. EXHI'BITIVE. EXHI'BITIVELY. EXHI'BITORY. } Fr. Exhiber; It. Esibire; Sp. Exhibir; Lat. Exhibere, to hold forth, (ex, and habere, to have or hold.)

To hold forth; to offer, to propose, to show, to present; to bring or put forth.

But in this sacrament, we be made participaunt, of his Godhode, by his humanite exhibite vnto vs for fode.
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 54.

Saint Hierome speketh here very pithely, vsyng the worde (represent) which signifieth a true, real exhibicio.
Id. Ib. fol. 48.

So, all in both will make a God of thee.
To whom they will exhibit sacrifice
Of richest love and praise.—John Davis to Mr. W. Browne.

B. Cast. He seemes indifferent:
Or rather swaying more vpon our part,
Then cherishing th' exhibiters against vs.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 1.

Now because all the life and glory of the spirituall stands in Christ the Messias, the prophet looks through the type of the materiall, at him which shall beautifie, yea glorifie, the spirituall, of whose exhibition the prophet speakes, Adhuc modicum, yet a little while, and I will shake the heavens.
Bp. Hall. Sermon at the Earle of Exceter's in S. Johns.

Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place, and exhibition,
With such accommodation and besort
As levels with her breeding.—Shakes. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

Go to, behave yourself distinctly, and with good morality; or, I protest, I'll take away your exhibition.
B. Jonson. Silent Woman, Act iii. sc. 2.

Thou art a younger brother, and hast nothing but thy exhibition: which I protest shall be bare indeed, if thou forsake not these unprofitable by-courses, and that timely too.—Id. Poetaster, Act i. sc. 2.

They acquaint us with the ancient exhibition of a gracious promise, remind us of the faithfull performance thereof hitherto, and assure us of its certain accomplishment for the future.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 12.

Yet severe impositions and heavy taxes were laid on them; a fifth part for repairs, a tenth at least for an exhibitioner.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, b. iii. an. 1536.

But as the rock was a symbol of the one true Christ, so is the sacramental bread a symbol exhibitive of the one true body of Christ, viz. the natural or personal body, given and received in the Eucharist.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 234.

For as the word Christ, which is the predicate in one proposition, ["that rock was Christ"] is to be literally understood, and the trope lies in the verb was, put for signify, or exhibitively signifies; so the word body, which is the predicate in the other proposition, ["this is my body,"] is to be literally interpreted of the natural or personal body of Christ, and the trope lies in the verb is, put for represents, or exhibitively signifies.—Id. Ib. p. 233.

Instead of the shadows and figures of the Mosaic law, which veiled, and, in a great measure, concealed, what they exhibited; it presents us with the undisguised truth and very substance, sets before our eyes that great atonement to the justice of heaven, which other victims were appointed to presignify, and opens the whole treasure of divine bounty.
Secker, vol. i. Ser. 21.

In an exhibitory bill, or schedule, of expences for their removal this year, as it seems, mention is made of carrying the clock from the college-hall to Garsington-house.
Warton. Life of T. Pope, p. 379.

EXHI'LARATE, v. EXHILARA'TION. } Fr. Exhilarer; Lat. Exhilarare, to cheer, to gladden, (ex, and hilaris; Gr. Ἱλαρ-ος, from Ἱλασθαι, to be propitious, favourable to the wishes, and thus, to gladden.)

To cheer, to gladden, to enliven.

Though men are deprived of stage-playes, of all other unlawfull pleasures whatsoever; yet they have choice enough of sundry lawfull recreations, and earthly solaces with which to exhilerate their mindes and senses.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. sc. 2.

And therefore exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be much lighter motion.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 721.

——— Then at hand
The lemon uncorrupt with voyage long,
To vinous spirits added (heavenly drink)
They with pneumatic engine ceaseless draw,
Intent on laughter; a continual tide
Flows from th' exhilarating fount.—J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

At least methinks that faith greatly should exhilarate us, which applieth those verities (so worthy of all acceptation) wherein God doth open his arms wide to embrace us, proposing most kind invitations and favourable overtures of mercy upon the fairest terms possible.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

Here (in the revolution in Poland) moralists and divines might indeed relax in their temperance to exhilarate their humanity.—Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs

The truth is, that this remedy, like strong drink to a nervous body, enlivens for awhile by an unnatural exhilaration, warms by a false fire, which burns without fuel, and, by consuming the stamina, increases the debility it was intended to remove.—Anon, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

Every species of torpor is subdued; an exhilaration succeeds, indicating itself by emotions, which not only manifest the influence of the passion to spectators, but solicit their participation.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

EXHO'RT, v. EXHO'RT, n. EXHORTA'TION. EXHO'RTER. EXHO'RTATIVE. EXHO'RTATORY. } Fr. Exhorter; It. Esortare; Sp. Exortar; Lat. Exhortari, to encourage, (ex, and hortari.) The ancient Romans, Vossius says, wrote it Horior; and Horior he conceives to be from Gr. Ὀρυν-ειν, incitare, to invite, to encourage.

To encourage, to hearten, to animate, to excite, admonish, advise, persuade.

Til I come take tent to redyng, to exhortacioun, and techyng.—Wiclif. 1 Timothy, c. 4.

Tyll I come, gene attendaunce to reding, to exhortacioun, and to doctrine.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Now worthie women in this balade shorte
Made for your worship and instruction
Of charitie I monish and exhorte.
Chaucer. The Complaints of Creseide.

His chere, his port, was eft so benigne
That through his stering and exhortacioun
With him they went.—Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

The contents of y^e letter were, that he was come foorth wt hys legions, and would be shortlye wyth him, exhorting him to perseuer in hys accustomed valiantnes.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 138.

Our exhortacyon was not to brynge you to errours, nor yet to vnclennes, neyther was it with gyle; but as we wer alowed of God, that the Gospell should be committed vnto vs.—Bible, 1551. Thess. c. 2.

The which writing many bee agrieued withall: when euery one taketh the matter, as said by himselfe, and will not heare mee, as an exhorter and counseller: but loatheth me as an accuser and rebuker of his doing
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, Pref.

Fabius seeing the enemies no way to recule and give ground, commaunded M. Flavius and M. Valerius, two colonels, with whom he had set forward and advanced into the forefront, to go to the horsemen, and to exhort them, if ever they remembred and called to mind, that the commonwealth had beene helped by the valour of the gentlemen on horseback, they should that day endeavour to make invincible and eternall, all glorie of that degree and order of Cavallerie.—Holland. Livie, p. 360.

Come, good Lorenzo, fare ye well awhile,
I'le end my exhortation after dinner.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 1.

And he wrote vnto those Scots letters exhortatorie, requiring them most instantlie to an vnitie of Catholike orders as might be agreeable with the church of Christ, spred and dispersed through the world.—Holinshed. England, an. 610.

By the [heart] here, which we are exhorted to keep, we are to understand the inward thoughts, and notions, and affections of our souls or spirits; all which, in the inspired writings are constantly said to be seated in the heart.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 14.

Urge those who stand; and those who faint, excite;
Drown Hector's vaunts in loud exhorts of fight;
Conquest, not safety, fill the thoughts of all;
Seek not your fleet, but sally from the wall.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

Every man that will make himself eminent in any virtue, will be a light to the world, his life will be a constant sermon, and he will often prove as effectual a benefactor to those about him by his example, as others are by their counsels and exhortations.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 3.

These words, although (as the very syntax doth immediately discover) they bear a relation to, and have a fit coherence with, those that precede, may yet (especially considering St. Paul's style, and manner of expression in the preceptive and exhortative part of his epistles) without any violence, or prejudice on either hand, be severed from the context, and considered distinctly by themselves.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

I close all the discourse with that, at which in pitching on this subject I chiefly did aim, an application exhortatory to ourselves, urging the practice of this virtue by considerations peculiar to us as scholars, and derived from the nature of our calling.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 19.

——— To confirm that pray'r
I have employ'd my exile; not in quest
Of splendid refuge in the courts of kings,
But through each city with unwearied steps
Have pass'd exhorting, stimulating Greece
To bold defence.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. ii.

Indeed the subject matter of them [the Psalms] is very different: but those of joy are much more numerous than any other sort; and all of them afford ground of praise at least; the doctrinal, the exhortatory, the historical, as well as the rest.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 26.

EXHUMA'TION. Lat. Ex, and humus, the ground. See Inhume.
Disinterment.

Mr. Flaquet says, in his collection of tracts relative to the exhumation in the great church at Dunkirk, that the town became more healthy after the bodies of those, who had been buried in it, had been taken up.
Seward. Anecdotes, vol. v. p. 288.

EXI'CCATE. See Exsiccate.

EXI'CONIZE, v. Gr. Εξ-εικον-ιζειν, to image forth, to delineate, to depicture.

Our faith, if you take in the whole, is no other but what is exiconized in the Apostle's creed, included in the Scriptures.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 701.

E'XIGENT, n. } Fr. Exigent, exigence; It. Esigente, esigenza; Lat. Exigens, pres. part. of Exig-ere, to drive out, (ex, and ag-ere, to drive or force.) See Exact.
E'XIGENCE.
E'XIGENCY.
E'XIGIBLE.
Driving or forcing, enforcing, extorting; of pressing, urgent, immediate, extreme necessity. And the noun is used as equivalent to—
Extremity; and also to, end, termination.
Exigible,—to be exacted, to be required.

But the Grekes hearing of the Kinges flight consulted together to breake the bridge whyche he as lord of the sea had made at Abydus, to the intent that his passage being cut of, he might either with his army be vtterly destroyed or else be brought to suche an exigent, that as clerely ouercome, he should be compelled to desyre peace at theyr handes.
Golding. Justine, fol. 18.

Iellius and Numitorius tooke up the bloudlesse corps, and held it aloft to the people; blaming and cursing the wickedness of Appius; pittying the unhappy and unfortunate beautie of the damsell; and bewailing the hard exigent and extremitie of the father.—Holland. Livie, p. 120.

These eyes, like lampes, whose wasting oyl is spent,
Waxe dimme, as drawing to their exigent.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 5.

What charms, that can reverse extent,
And null decree and exigent.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

No man will hire a general to cut wood, or shake hay with a sceptre, or spend his soul, and all his faculties upon the purchase of a cockle-shell; but he will fit instruments to the dignity and exigence of the design.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 2. s. 4.

Devout persons are directed to several saints, for their several exigences, to the end that both every saint may have his share in the worship, and every client in the relief.
Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 4. p. 75.

Thus should a benefaction be done with a good grace, and shine in the strongest point of light; it should not only answer all the hopes and exigences of the receiver; but even outrun his wishes.—Spectator, No. 292.

Dr. Gough, a Popish priest, in the Queen's name, had conjured the King to make his speedy escape, and in his own beseeched him not to insist too nicely upon terms in the present exigency of his affairs.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 100.

As the nature of the proposition decides what proofs are exigible, and what not, so the kind of proof determines the class into which the proposition is to be ranged.
Bolingbroke. Letter to Mr. De Pouilly.

——— Though squeez'd
By public exigence, till annual food
Fails for the craving hunger of the state,
Thee I account still happy, and the chief
Among the nations, seeing thou art free,
My native nook of earth!—Cowper. Task, b. v.

Its payments [may be] subjected to the inspection of the superior minister of finance; who is to judge of it on the result of the total collective exigencies of the state.
Burke. On Economical Reform.

EXI'GUOUS. } Lat. Exiguus, perhaps from
EXIGU'ITY. } Exig-ere, to drive or force out: being applied to such things as can be easily driven or forced out.
Minute, little, small.

We shall proceed to represent, that the newly mentioned exiguity and shape of the extant particles being supposed, it will then be considerable, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 683.

But to prosecute a little what I was saying of the conduciveness of bringing a body into small parts, in some cases the comminution may be much promoted by employing physical, after mechanical, ways; and that, when the parts are brought to such a pitch of exiguity, they may be elevated much better than before.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 236

——— Protected mice,
The race exiguous, unmurd'd to wet,
Their mansions quit, and other countries seek.
Philips. Fall of Chloe's Jordan.

E'XILE, v. } Fr. Exiler; It. Esiliare; Lat.
E'XILE, n. } Exulare, either, says Vossius,
EXI'LEMENT. } from Exsilire, or rather, Exsol, quasi ex solo, from the soil or land.
To send out of the land, out of the country; to banish.

Whan the erle was exiled, his sonnes tilie Ireland ouer,
William the Normant aryued vp at Douer,
In luf & in pes to speke with Sir Edward.
R. Gloucester, p. 59.

& how alle his kynde exile was on tham laid.—Id. p. 131.

Joon sig [saw] and wroot in the ile of Patmos whanne he was exiled of Domycian the moost wicked prince.
Wiclif. Prolog. Apocalips, fol. 143.

But yet n'ere Cristen Bretons so exiled,
That ther n'ere som which in hir privitee
Honoured Christ, and hethen folk beglied
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4967.

And of Saturne also I fynde,
Howe afterwarde into an ile
This Jupiter hym dyd exile.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For thinking to haue made himselfe strong by the affinitie of Philip, he was at length by him deprined of the whole kyngdome, and ended his life miserably in exyle.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 3.

I fonder than Cephisus, foolish child,
Who hauing viewed in a fountain shere
His face, was with the loue thereof beguil'd;
I fonder loue a shade, the body farre exil'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Yet she, most faithfull lady, all this while
Forsaken, woefull, solitary maid,
Farr from all people's praise, as an exile,
In wildernesse and wasteful deserts straid,
To seeke her knight. Id. Ib. b. i. c. 3.

Fitz Osborn (as some report was executed under him, or at the most) was discarded into a foreign service, for a pretty shadow of exilement.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 103.

Being now no longer able to dissemble her resentment, [she] grew in wrath with Ibrahim, and gave a second and more cruel exilement to the unfortunate nurse and her darling child whom she banished out of the serraglio, and could never after abide the Aga that introduced them.
Evelyn. History of Padre Ottemano

But since the vanquish'd laws in war are dumb,
To thee behold an exiled band we come;
For thee, with joy our banishment we take,
For thee our household hearths and gods forsake.
Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

Thus the man-child advanc'd, and learn'd so fast,
That in short time his equals he surpass'd:
His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

But they, on earth, or the devouring main,
Whom righteous Jove with detestation views,
With envious horrour hear the heavenly strain,
Exil'd from Praise, from Virtue, and the Muse.
West. Pindar. The First Pythian Ode.

Brutus, in the book which he writ on Virtue, related that he had seen Marcellus in exile at Mitylene, living in all the happiness which human nature is capable of, and cultivating with as much assiduity as ever, all kinds of laudable knowledge.—Bolingbroke. Reflections upon Exile.

E'XILE, adj. } Fr. Exile; Lat. Exilis; perEXI'LITY. } haps by syncope, says Vossius, from Εξιγηλ-ος, which denotes exile, evanidum, obscurum: for those things are called exile, (exilia,) which are so minute, and thin, as scarcely to be perceptible. May it not be ex-ibilis, ex-ilis; that may go, or pass, or be passed, out? and consequentially,— Minute, thin, slender, small.

And it were also good to enquire, what other meanes there may be, to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 75.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without, shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets.—Id. Ib. s. 155.

Yet there are certain flies that are called Ephemera, that live but a day. The cause is the exilitie of the spirit; or, perhaps, the absence of the sun.—Id. Ib. s. 697.

But then the voice, or other sound, is reduced, by such passage, to a great weakness, or exility.—Id. Ib. s. 154.

Empedocles blameth exility or smallness, the low posture, and the over-streight conformation of the matrix.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 691.

By reason of the exility and smallness of the parts, there can be perceived no difference.—Id. Ib. p. 836.

This extreme exility, (of a particle of light,) though difficult to conceive, it is easy to prove.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 21.

EXILI'TION. More correctly written Exsilition. Lat. Ex-silire, to leap out, (ex, and salire, to leap.) See Exult.
Leaping, or springing out.

From salt-petre proceedeth the force and the report; for sulphure and smal coal mixed will not take fire with noise or exilition.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

EXI'MIOUS. Lat. Eximius, quasi exemptus et extra cæteros positus; as if taken out and placed beyond others: particularly applied to animals selected for sacrifice, (Vossius.) And see Egregious.
Select, choice; and thus, excellent.

Take a taste out of the beginning of his dedicatory epistle: "Egregious Doctors and masters of the eximious and arcane Science of Physick, of your urbanity exasperate not yourselves against me for making this little volume of physick," &c.—Fuller. Worthies. London.

Hence who sees not that, in this first and principal mystery of our religion, the Holy Spirit is exhibited to us as a person, that about him as such, this excellent part of our duty, this eximious worship, is conversant.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 34.

EX-INANITION. Lat. Exinanire, to empty out, (ex, and inan-is; Gr. Ινας, to empty.) Cockeram has the verb to exinanite, which he explains—
To make empty, to spoil, weaken or make of no force.

There is some pain in spiritualizing of flesh, racking it, fetching it from the lees, rarifying and attenuating the πνευμα κεκτημενον απο μοχθηρας διαιτης, the spirit increasate by vicious diet, as Philoponus calls the habituate sinner, of returning the gross habit of sin to a spareness and slenderness of stature, an exinanition of that carnal appetite which hath brought in all the grosser joyes which hitherto we have fed on.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 478.

It was χρηστοτης και φιλανθρωπια, the benignity and philanthropy of God, which induced him to engage his son upon such a debasement and exinanition of himself, that we thereby might be raised to a capacity of salvation.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 33.

Tis matters of fact his Maty would have me deliver to the world: let me have them authentic then, and now especially in this crisis of extraordition, (with griefe and indignation I speak it,) and that the whole nation is sinking.
Evelyn. To Clifford, Nov. 1671.

EX-I'NTRICATE. Lat. Ex, and intricare, atus, to entangle.
To disentangle.

A man surprised, is even in reason more than half beaten; being taken at a disadvantage, from which he hath no way to ex-intricate himself, but by the dextrousness of his ingenuity.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 60.

EXI'ST, v. / EXI'STENT. / EXI'STENCE. / EXI'STENCY. / EXISTE'NTIAL. } Lat. Exist-ere, or exsistere, to stand out, (ex, and sistere, to stand.) To stand out, (sc.) from the surface; and thus, to cause a (new or fresh) sensation. See To Be, and Essence.

Chaucer uses existence, emphatically, as we should use reality.
To be; to live; to have essence or being.

She maketh through her aduersitie
Men full clerely for to se
Him that is frend in existence
From him that is by apperence.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

——— I do beseech you,
That by your vertuous means, I may againe
Exist, and be a member of his loue,
Whom I, with all the office of my heart,
Intirely honour. Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 4.

By the operation of the orbes,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Heere I disclaime all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee from this for euer.—Id. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

The metaphysicians look upon existence, as the formal and actual part of a being.
H. More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c. 4.

Yea, there was a great and famous sect among them that denied a life to come, and the existence of immaterial beings, for the Sadducees say, there is no resurrection, neither angels, nor spirit, Acts, viii. 23.—Glanvill, Ser. 6.

Nor is it onely of rarity, but may be doubted whether it be of existency, or really any such stone in the head of a toad at all.—Brown Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 13.

Neither is there so firm and close an union betwixt the soul and body, as there is betwixt Christ and the believing soul, for as much as that may be severed by death, but this never; away yet with all gross carnality of conceit, this union is true and really existent, but yet spiritual.
Bp. Hall. Holy Raptures, &c.

Enjoying the good of existence, and the being deprived of that existential good.—Bp. Barlow. Rem. p. 483.

Whatever exists, has a cause, a reason, a ground of its existence, (a foundation, on which its existence relies; a ground of reason why it doth exist, rather than not exist,) either in the necessity of its own nature, and then it must have been of itself eternal, or in the will of some other being; and then that other being must at least in the order of nature and causality have existed before it.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 1.

The reason then of their indefiniteness is with me, not "because in their real existent natures they are necessarily infinite," but quite the reverse, viz. because they have no real existent nature at all.—Law. Enquiry. Of Space, c. 1.

We know the reasons, in part at least, for which beings, much lower than us, exist: why may there not then be very sufficient reasons for our being no higher than we are?
Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

EXISTIMA'TION. Lat. Existimatio, from Existimare, (ex, and æstimare, to fix a price or value.)
Opinion, valuation.

How this is to be accounted for, I know not; but men's existimation follows us according to the company we keep.
Spectator, No. 456.

E'XIT. Lat. Ex-ire, exitum, to go out.
Way or passage out; departure.

They haue their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time playes many parts,
His acts being seuen ages.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act v. sc. 1.

——— Yet that we might
Find fair concordance, 'twixt his race and flight,
Having presented rich and stately scenes,
He scorn'd an exit by the common means.
Feltham. Lesoria, 23. On Sir Rowland Cotton.

There is one part provided for the formation of the body before its exit into the world, and another part provided for its nourishment after it is come into the world, till the bird is able to shift for and help itself.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vii. c. 4.

Is such a life so tediously the same,
So void of all utility or aim,
That poor Jonquil, with almost ev'ry breath,
Sighs for his exit, vulgarly call'd death.—Cowper. Hope.

EXI'TIAL. / EXI'TIOUS. } Lat. Exitialis, from ex-ire, itum, to go out; and hence, exitium, death, and exitialis, deadly.
Deadly, mortal, destructive.

And to this end is come that beginning of setting up of images in churches, then iudged harmlesse, in experience proved not only harmfull, but exitious, and pestilent, and to the destruction, and subuersion of all good religion.
Homilies. Against the Perill of Idolatry, pt. iii.

Such as repair to Paris (where it is excellent) and other like places, perfectly recovering of their health, which is a demonstration sufficient to confirm what we have asserted concerning the perniciousnesse of that about this city, produced only from this exitial and intolerable accident.
Evelyn. Fumifugium.

E'XODUS. / E'XODE. } Lat. Exodium, which, Vossius says, universally denotes the end; from Gr. Εξοδος, ex-itus, way or passage out.
The way or passage out, egress, departure; the end, termination, or conclusion; the catastrophe: also, a dramatic entertainment introduced at the end of the regular play. Mr. Twining calls it, the concluding act; Aristotle, that part which has no Choral Ode after it.

Then the youth leaving to comedians, the acting of parts in enterludes, began after the old manner to let flie, one at another, merrie scoffes and jestes, interlaced within their rime and meeter, which therefrom were afterwards called exodia, and were inserted commonly in the Atellane Comedies.—Holland. Livius, p. 251.

But it is not so easy to account for the patience, with which they bore, after the death of Joseph, a cruel servitude of fourscore years, to which the tyranny of the Egyptians had reduced them, when their number increased in every generation so vastly, that they could bring, at that time of the exode, six hundred thousand fighting men into the field.
Bolingbroke. Minutes of Essays.

Common sense is sufficient to convince us, that the whole is confined to the two generations; between the exodus from Egypt and the entrance into Canaan.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

The exode or catastrophe is prepared by the coming of Arviragus, the king's son, who, having escaped with life in the late battle, had employed the intermediate time in privately collecting his father's scattered forces, to put them again into a condition of facing the enemy.
Mason. Caractacus. Argument.

EXOLU'TION. See Exsolution.

EXOMOLO'GESIS. Gr. Εξομολογησις, from Εξομολογ-εω, to confess, (εξ, ὁμος, alike, and λογος, speech.)
A common confession.

And upon this account all publick criminals were tied to a publick exomologesis or repentance in the church, who by confession of their sins, acknowledged their error, and entered into the state of repentance; and by their being separate from the participation and communion of the mysteries, were declared unworthy of the communion with Christ, and a participation of his promises, till by repentance, and the fruits worthy of it, they were adjudged capable of God's pardon.—Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 10.

EXO'NERATE, v. / EXONERA'TION. } Lat. Exonerare, (ex, and onus, a load.)
To free from load or burthen; to disburthen; to free or relieve from charge; to relieve; to discharge.

But when those borderers wanted further place, whereunto they might exonerate their swelling multitudes, that were bounded in by the great ocean, then did they return upon the nations, occupying the countries through which they had formerly passed, oppressing first their neighbours, afterwards the people more remote.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 8. s. 4.

For the body which we now have is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, coition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Things no way agreeable to the life for which we are intended.—Grew. Cosmo-Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

They [glands] give the blood time to stop and separate through the pores of the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves unto one common ductus.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The debt thus exonerated of so great a weight of its odium, and otherwise reduced from its alarming bulk, the agents thought they might venture to print a list of the creditors.
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

E'XORABLE. / EXORA'TION. } Fr. Exorable; It. Exorabile; Sp. Exorable; Lat. Exorabilis, from exorare, (ex, and orare, from os, oris, the mouth.) See Adore, and Inexorable.
That can or may be prevailed upon by prayer; that can or may be persuaded.

Concerning the punishment of the senatours of Capua, Fulvius and Claudius could not agree. Claudius was more tractable and exorable, and might soone have bene intreated for a pardon.—Holland. Livius, p. 594.

——— I am blind
To what you do: deaf to your cries: and marble
To all impulsive exorations.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act v. sc. 1.

It [Religion] prompts us to bear the infirmities of our brethren, to be gentle in censure, to be insensible of petty affronts, to pardon injuries, to be patient, exorable and reconcileable to those that give us greatest cause of offence.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

EXO'RBITATE, v. / EXO'RBITANT. / EXO'RBITANCE. / EXO'RBITANCY. / EXO'RBITANTLY. } Fr. Exorbitant; It. Esorbitante; Sp. Exorbitante; Lat. Exorbitans, excentrick, (ex, and orbis, an orbit, sphere or circle.)
To go or move out of an orbit or circle; to move out of, deviate from, the regular course or path; to exceed bounds, to go out of or beyond compass; to deviate from rule or order. And thus exorbitant is,— Irregular, enormous, immoderate, excessive.

Whereas the other having the body still at command and ready to exorbitate together with the will, and to sin with it for company, are more seen and discovered, not for that they be more foolish, and have lesse use of reason, but because they have greater meanes to show their folly.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 569.

He was by nature over dull and slow; but this infirmitie he tempered with a very good and wise course that he tooke, suffering himselfe to be corrected and reformed, whensoever hee did exorbitate and swerve from the way of honestie.
Id. Ammianus, p. 269.

A cleare resolution, that the law, with the earles and barons assembled in parliament, are above the king, and ought to bridle him when he exorbitates from the law.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, p. 5.

And now, sir, since I cannot (how secretly faulty soever) guesse at my own publick exorbitances, I beseech you, where you hear my name traduced, learn of mine accusers (whose Lyncean eyes would seem to see farther into me then my own) what singular offence I have committed.
Bp. Hall. Letter sent from the Tower to Mr. H. S.

For it is easie for any reader to observe, that all the severalities of the degrees prohibited run still upon the male; under which if the like exorbitances of the other sex were not meant to be comprehended, females should be lawless, and the law imperfect.—Id. Cases of Conse. Dec. 4. Case 4.

Whose crime [the earle of Strafford's] coming under the cognizance of no human law, a new one was made, not to be a precedent, but his destruction; to such exorbitancy were things arrived.—Evelyn. Memoirs, an. 1641.

——— Your too much indulgence
To the exorbitant waste of young Caliban,
Your nephew and your ward, hath rendered you
But a bad report among wise men in Naples.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act i. sc. 1.

An absolute power in men is, for the most part, sinful and injurious; because of the imperfection of their will, which is not able to bound the exorbitancies of that power: and if it does not prove actually the cause of sin, yet it is always a temptation to it.—South, vol. i. Ser. 8.

'Tis the naked man's apparel which we shut up in our presses, or which we exorbitantly ruffle and flaunt in; 'tis the needy person's gold and silver which we closely hide in our chests, or spend idly, or put out to useless use.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

He is able not only to set bounds to the raging sea, and effectually say to it, hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther, and here shall the proud waves be stayed; but, (what is far more,) so to curb and moderate those stupendously rapid motions of the mundane globes and intercurrent fluids, that neither the unwieldiness of their bulk, nor celerity of their motions, have made them exorbitate or fly out, and this for many ages.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 135.

If the planets had moved in those lines above named sometimes they would have approached to the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.—Bentley, Ser. 8.

The distresses of government aided the friends of liberty, who managed their advantage so well as, in process of time, to support their claims, redress their grievances, establish their rights, and, in a word, to reduce the crown from the exorbitances it affected, within the ancient and legal boundaries of the constitution.

Hurd. Serm. before the Lords, Jan. 30, 1786.

We complain of what we call the exorbitant multiplication of some troublesome insects; not reflecting, that large portions of nature might be left void without it.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

E'XORCISE, v. E'XORCISER. E'XORCISING, n. E'XORCISM. E'XORCIST. } Fr. Exorciser; Sp. Exorcizar; It. Esorcizzare; Lat. Exorcisare; Gr. Εξ-ορκιζ-ειν, εξ, and ορκιζ-ειν, adjurare, sacramento adigere, from ορκος, juramentum quasi septum, (sc.) veritatis, (Lennep.)

To bind by oath; to charge upon oath; and thus, by the use of certain words, and performance of certain ceremonies, to subject the devil and other evil spirits to command, and exact obedience.

Minshew calls an exorcist, a conjurer; and it is so used by Shakespeare; and exorcism, conjuration.

But also summe of the Iewis, exorcistis, gheden aboute and assaieden to clepe the name of the Lord Ihesu Crist on hem that hadden yuele spiritis, and seiden, I conioure ghou bi Ihesu Crist whom Poul prechith.

Wiclif. Dedis, c. 19.

Then certaine of the vagabounde Jewes, exorcistes, toke vpon them to call ouer them whiche had euell spirites, the name of the Lord Jesus, sayig' we adiure you by Jesu whome Paull preacheth.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Lo what auailen incantacions
Of exorcisms, and conjurasions.

Lydgate. Story of Thebes, pt iii.

For hither than brought he al vain and crafty sciences, of countyng, riming, shauing, exorcising, enchaunting and conjuring.—Bale. Englishe Votaries, pt. i.

Sauynge onee (I remembre) as I was at Malden in Essexe, about xx yeares ago, I found an olde bishoppes ordynary, or boke of their exorcismes, for church halowinges, belle blessinges, and oyled orders geuynge.—Id. Apology, fol. 23.

He impudently exorcizeth devils in the church, whose pleasures he applaudes in stage players.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 12.

Guid. No exorcisor harme thee.
Arm. Nor no witch-craft charme thee.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

Their ministery and monuments exposed to utter scorne: their masses; their oblations; their adorations; their invocations; their anoylings; their exorcizings; their shrift; their absolutions, their images, rood lofts, and whatsoever else of this kind.—Bp. Hall. Apologie against Brownists.

And even at this day there remaineth a most notable precedent and example to all posteritie, in that prescript forme of exorcisme, whereby the two Decij, both father and sonne, betooke themselves to all the hellish furies and fiends infernall.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 2.

Bulling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided; will her ladyship behold and heare our exorcismes.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

Whosoever readeth the praier or exorcisme that is used, and which the warden or principall of the colledge of the Quindecemvirs is wont to read and pronounce to the exorcist, he would no doubt confesse that such charmes and execrations be of great importance: and namely, seeing they have been all approved and found effectuall by the experience and events observed for the space of eight hundred and thirtie yeares.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 2.

Kin. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 3.

Mr. Spectator, pray let me have a paper on these terrible groundless sufferings, and do all you can to exorcise crowds who are in some degree possessed as I am.

Spectator, No. 402.

Surprises none, but those who 'ave priests
To turn him out, and exorcists
Supply'd with spiritual provision,
And magasines of ammunition.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

They compared this performance of our Lord with those, and perhaps with things which they had seen done in their own times by professed exorcisers: and the comparison brought them to this conclusion, that "it was never so seen in Israel."—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

To evince these great truths, seems to have been the end both of possessions and of the exorcisms.

Warburton. Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 5.

In which I dare say they did not long continue, after the exorcist had thus consigned them over to Satan, now let loose to do Mr. Wesley honour.

Warburton. Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 5.

EXO'RDIUM. EXO'RDIAL. } Fr. Exorde; It. Esordio; Sp. Exordio; Lat. Exordium, from Exordiri, to begin from, (ex, and ordiri, to begin.)

A beginning, a preface.

And at last, out of some premeditate flouriah, there comes forth by him who is the bolder of the twaine and more confident of speech, some pleasant and delightsome exordium or beginning of speech.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 387.

This whole exordium [of Paradise Lost] rises very happily into noble language and sentiment, as I think the transition to the fable is exquisitely beautiful and natural.

Spectator, No. 303.

I have sometimes, however, been very much distasted at this way of writing, by reason of the long prefaces and exordiums into which it often betrays a writer.

Addison. Of Ancient Medals, Dial. 3.

The exordium of the Scribleriad proposes only to lead an hero, whose curiosity has already carried him into so many perilous adventures, through new attempts equally difficult and hazardous.—Cambridge. The Scribleriad.

Prolixity of paragraph, and length of sentence are peculiar to Milton. This is seen, not only in some of his exordial invocations in the Paradise Lost, and in many of the religious addresses of a like cast in the prose works, but in his long verse.—Warton. Milton, Pref.

EXORNA'TION. Lat. Exornatio, from Exornare, to deck or dress out, (ex, and ornare, to deck or dress.) See ADORN.

Decoration, adorning, or ornament.

Exornation is a gorgious beautifying of the tongue with borrowed wordes, and change of sentence or speech with much varietie.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 172.

Oh, it flowes from her like nectar, and shee doth give it, that sweete, quicke grace, and exornation in the composure, that (by this good ayre, as I am an honest man, would I might never stirre, sir, but,) she does observe as pure a phrase, and use as choice figures in her ordinary conferences, as any be i' the Arcadia.

B. Jonson. Every Man Out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 3.

He [Dinarchus] did imitate Hyperides, or as some think Demosthenes in regard of that pathetical spirit in moving affections, and the emphatical force which appeareth in his stile. Certainly in his figures and exornations he followeth him very evidently.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 169.

EXOSSA'TION. Exo'sseous. } Lat. Exos, boneless, (ex, and os, bone.) Exosseous,—Boneless, without bone.

Experiment solitary touching exosseous of fruits.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 854.

The like also in snails, a soft and exosseous animal, whereof in the naked and greater sort, as though she would requite the defect of a shell on their back, nature, neer the head hath placed a flat white stone, or rather testaceous concretion.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 13.

EXOTE'RICK, adj. EXOTE'RICK, n. EXOTE'RICAL. EXOTE'RICALLY. EXO'TERY. EXO'TICK, n. EXO'TICK, adj. EXO'TICAL. } Fr. Exotique; It. Esotico; Sp. Exotico; Lat. Exoticus; Gr. Εξωτερικος, external, εξωτικος, foreign; from Εξω, out, forth. Exoterical, is applied to—

External professions of doctrine; public doctrines; and thus is, external, open, public. Exotick—

External; and thus, foreign, or, according to our old English, outlandish.

Aristotle was wont to divide his lectures and readings into acroamatical and exoterical, some of them contained onely choice matter, and they were read privately to a select auditory: others contained but ordinary stuff, and were promiscuously, and in public exposed to the hearing of all that would.—Hale. Rem. Ser. John, xviii. 36.

Who think new air new vices may create,
And stamp sin lawful in another state;
Who make exotick customs native arts,
And loose Italian vices English parts.

Cartwright. On the Death of Lord Bayning.

So dainty were the Romans in their language then, that they would not suffer any exotic or strange word to be enfranchis'd among them, or enter into any of their diplomata, and publick instruments of command or justice.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 19.

I will the rather shew and proove, that we may both preserve and recover our health well enough without these exoticall and forein drugs, and that each region is furnished sufficiently with home-physick of their owne.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 24.

No more is there between us and perfumes or other forraine and exoticall sauces, and yet you would have us to abstain from them, rejecting and blaming on all sides, that which in any pleasure is neither profitable or needfull.

Id. Plutarch, p. 476.

Those vast exotick animals, which the multitude flocks to see, and which men give money to be allowed to gaze on, have had many of them less of my admiration than the little caterpillar, (as learned naturalists esteem it) to which we are beholden for silk.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 22.

Exotick terms, I hope you will find, that I have not at all affected, but rather studiously declined the use of them, which custom has not rendered familiar, unless it be to avoid the frequent and unwelcome repetition of the same word (so troublesome to the ear, and so much forbidden by orators) or for some peculiar significancy of some such word, whose energy cannot be well expressed in our language, at least without a tedious circumlocution.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 30.

The philosophy of the Pythagoreans, like that of the other sects, was divided into the exoteric and esoteric; the open, taught to all; and the secret, taught to a select number.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. Note B. B.

He divided his disciples (says Origen) into two classes, the one he called esoteric, the other exoteric. For to those he intrusted the more perfect and sublime doctrines: to these he delivered the more vulgar and popular.—Id. Ib. b. iii. s. 3.

It is then evident from these passages that, in his exoterics, he gave the world both a beginning and an end.

Id. Ib. b. iii. Note [F.]

It would be hard, on the supposition that this knowledge was ever entirely lost among men, to account for the belief of one Supreme Being, which prevailed in the esoterical, or secret doctrines of philosophers, while their exoterical, or publick doctrines, were favourable to polytheism.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

But if the nature of the subject will not teach these objectors that it must needs be handled exoterically, Jamblichus's authority must decide between us.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

The first observation I shall make on this long passage is, that the same subject, namely the nature of superior beings, was handled in a two fold manner, exoterically; and then the discourse was of the national gods: esoterically; and then it was of the first cause of all things. 2. That the exoteric teaching admitted fable and falsehood, fabulosa vel licita, the esoteric only what the teacher believed to be true, nihil fabulosum penitus.—Id. Ib. b. iii. s. 2.

The ancients delivering their lectures by word of mouth, could adapt their subjects to their audience, reserving their esoterics for adepts, and dealing out exoterics only to the vulgar.—Search. Freewill, p. 172. N.

Our choice exotics to the breeze exhale
Within the enclosure of a zig-zag rail.—Cowthorn. Taste.

Is hope exotic? grows it not at home?
Yes, but an object bright as orient morn
May press the eye too closely to be borne.—Cowper. Hope.

EXPA'ND, v. EXPA'NSE. EXPA'NSED. EXPA'NSIBLE. EXPANSIBI'LITY. EXPA'NSION. EXPA'NSIVE. EXPA'NSURE. } It. Espandere; Lat. Expandere, to open out, (ex, and pandere, which Vossius thinks is from Gr. Φαινειν, whence αναλογως may be φαντος, apertus, open.)

To throw or lay, to stretch or spread, open; to dilate, to extend, to widen, to broaden.

He catches at the stream with greedy lips;
From his toucht mouth the wanton torrent slips;
You laugh now, and expand your careful brow;
'Tis finely said, but what's all this to you?

Cowley. Ess. Of Avarice.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air
That felt unusual weight, till on dry land
He lights, if it were land that ever burn'd
With solid, as the lake with liquid, fire.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Again th' Almighty spake: let there be lights
High in th' expanse of heaven, to divide
The day from night. Id. Ib. b. vii.

The like doth Beda report of Belerophon's horse which, framed of iron, was placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, pendulous in the ayre.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

So that bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. i. c. 3.

For the extent of his fathome, or distance betwixt the extremity of the fingers of either hand upon expansions, is equal unto the space between the sole of the foot and the crown.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

But by increase of swift expansive light,
The lost horizon was apparent grown,
And many tow'rs salute at once their sight,
The distant glories of a royal town.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 1.

Now love in night, and night in love exhorts
Courtship and dances: all your parts employ,
And suit night's rich expansure with your joy.
Marlow & Chapman. Hero & Leander.

Still nearer heaven his virtues shone more bright
Like rising flames expanding in their height;
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight.
Dryden. Epit. on Sir Palmes Fairbone.

From the bleak beach, and broad expanse of sea,
To lofty Salem, Thought, direct thy way,
Mount thy light char ot, move along the plains,
And end thy flight where Hezekiah reigns.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry. Hezekiah.

All have springiness in them, and (notwithstanding) be, by reason of their shape, readily expansible on the score of their native structure, as also by heat, girations, and other motions, and compressible by an external force into a very little room.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 614.

Distance or space, in its simple, abstract conception, to avoid confusion, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which by some is used to express this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter, and so includes, or at least intimates, the idea of body: whereas the idea of pure distance includes no such thing.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 15. s. 1.

——— Then no more
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold;
But, full of life and vivifying soul,
Lifts the light clouds sublime, and spreads them thin,
Fleecy, and white, o'er all-surrounding heaven.
Thomson. Spring.

His bashful bounde disclosing Merit breaks;
And, big with fruits of glory, Virtue blows
Expansive o'er the land. Id. Liberty, pt. v.

(Oft from the boxes we perceived her spy us,)
Whether she [Taste] lik'd us and our warm endeavours,
Whether she found that we deserv'd her favours,
I know not, but 'tis certain she commanded
Our humble theatre should be expanded.
Cunningham. A Prologue spoken at York.

Praise him, Sun, at each extreme,
Orient streak, and western beam,
Moon and stars of mystic dance,
Bow'ring in the blue expanse. Smart, Ps. 148.

Venus, all bounteous queen, whose genial pow'r
Diffuses beauty, in unbounded store,
Through seas and fertile plains, and all that lies
Beneath the starr'd expansion of the skies.
Beattie. Lucretius, b. i.

A distant view of Ægina and of Megara, of the Piræus and of Corinth, then in ruins, melted the soul of an ancient Roman, for a while suspended his private sorrows, and absorbed his sense of personal affliction, in a more expansive and generous compassion for the fate of cities and states.
Eustace. Tour through Italy, c. 10.

EXPA'TIATE, v.
EXPATIA'TION.
EXPA'TIATOR.

More properly Ex-spatiate. Lat. Ex-spatiari, ex, and spatiari, from Spatium, which Vossius derives from the Gr. Σταδιον, and this απο της στασεως; denoting the place or station for spectators, of athletic contests, quia stantes spectarent; because they behold those contests standing. Stadium was thence generalized in its application to any place; and as from the place or room which any thing occupies, we judge of its size or magnitude, hence it was extended by usage to express, magnitude, size, room.

To roam, to occupy, to spread through, room or space; to rove or ramble; to make excursions, to enlarge or extend, or give extent or enlargement to; to take a wider or more extensive range.

There may we see thy soule expaciate,
And with true feruor sweetly meditate
Vpon our Sauiour's sufferings.
Beaumont. An Elegy to Sir John Beaumont.

——— They [the Bees] among fresh dews and flowers
Fly to and fro, or on the smoothed plank,
The suburb of the straw-built citadel,
New rub'd with baum expatiate and confer
Their State affairs. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Therefore Nature commandeth all, and these three are her substitute administrators, the course of Nature, the expatiation of Nature and Art, or the cooperation of Man with Nature in particular.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 2

The pipe of seven reeds, doth evidently demonstrate the consent and harmony, or discordant concord of Nature, which is caused by the motion of the seaven wand'ring starres, for there are no other errors, or manifest expatiations in Heaven, save those of the seaven planets.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 13.

It would be too long to expatiate upon the sense all mankind have of Fame, and the inexpressible pleasure which there is in the approbation of worthy men, to all who are capable of worthy actions.—Spectator, No. 218.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate therein.
Id. No. 494.

If I was large in my discourse concerning the nature and end of the Grecian mysteries, it was to show the sense the ancient lawgivers had of the use of Religion to Society, and if I had expatiated on the origin and use of the Egyptian hieroglyphics, it was to vindicate the logical propriety of the Prophetic language and sentiment.
Warburton. Ded. (1765) to Lord Mansfield.

The person intended by Montfaucon as an expatiator on the word "Endovelicus," I presume is Thomas Remesius
Pegge. Anonym. p. 201.

EXPA'TRIATE. Lat. Ex, and Patria, our country, or paternal land. Cotgrave has Expatriation and expatrie, which last he explains; "from home, banished, absent from, or out of his own country."

The word does not appear to have been familiarly used in English till the period of the French revolution. Fr. Expatrier.

The allied powers possess also an exceedingly numerous, well-informed, sensible, ingenious, high principled, and spirited body of cavaliers in the expatriated landed interest of France.—Burke. Remarks on the Policy of the Allies.

EXPE'CT, v.
EXPE'CT, n.
EXPE'CTABLE.
EXPE'CTANT, adj.
EXPE'CTANT, n.
EXPE'CTANCE.
EXPE'CTANCY.
EXPE'CTATIVE, adj.
EXPE'CTATIVE, n.
EXPE'CTER.
EXPE'CTINGLY.

More properly Exspect. It. Aspettare; Lat. Exspectare, to look out, (ex, and spectare, to look;) Gr. Σκεπτειν. Exspectantes sæpe eximus spectandi causâ.

To look out; to stand, stay or await, upon the look out for; to await the coming; to look for or await an event; to see the probability or likelihood of an event: sometimes, with a subaudition of hope or fear.

Expectaunt ale till I may mete
To getten mercy of that swete.—Chaucer: Rom. of the R.

[Perseus]; that was heire apparant
Upon the rëigne expectaunt.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

When contrarye to theyr expectacion, our enemyes saw vs who they beleeued to haue ben fled, return vpon them with force of armes, they were not able to abide so much as the onset, but at the fyrst meting taking themselues to their heles, fled to the next woodes.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 151.

He so stirred the multitude to the fauor of frugality, that some of them which were vtterlye drowned in riot, were, contrary to all hope and expectation brought again to good thrift.—Id. Justine, fol. 94.

Whereunto the multitude of expectative graces hath beene a great impediment and let.—Fox. Martyrs, Hen VI. p 640.

And if piety be wanting in the priests, equity in the judges, or the magistrate be found rated at a price, what justice or religion is to be expected? which are the only two attributes make kings akinne to Gods.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Nor is its substantial conversion expectible in any composition or aliment wherein it is taken
Brown. Vulgar Errours b. ii. c. 5.

He [Sir Julius Cæsar] continued more than twenty years Master of the Rolls, and, though heaved at by some expectants, sate still in his place, well poyzed therein with his gravity and integrity.—Fuller. Worthies. Middlesex.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will doe!
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. s. 5.

Ophe. O what a noble minde is heere o're-throwne!
The courtiers, soldiers, schollers; eye, tongue, sword;
Th' expectancie and rose of the faire State,
The glasse of fashion and the mould of forme,
Th' obseru'd of all obseruers, quite, quite downe.
Id. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

But Perseus by that deed, as he confirmed the hearts of the Romanes, so he quailed not a little the courages of the Macedonians, who depended upon the hope and expectance of their aid.—Holland. Livius, p. 1187.

He hath a mighty burden to sustain,
Whose fortune doth succeed a gracious prince,
Or where men's expectations entertain
Hopes of more good, and more beneficence.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

For by his royal goodness and by your favorable mediation, I am already abundantly satisfied in some expectatives, (as marks of his grace, and of your patronage) which have not only exceeded my merits, but even quieted mine appetites.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 486.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troylus to me:
And signifie this louing enterview
To the expecters of our Troian part.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

Dem. Who 's that, boy?
Boy. Another juggler, with a long name. O that your expectors would be gone hence, now, at the first act; or expect no more hereafter than they understand.
B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act i.

Meanwhile, unknowing of the captive chief,
Pompey prepares to march to his relief,
He means the scattering forces to unite,
And with increase of strength expect the fight.
Rowe. Lucan, b. ii.

The utmost ends of the earth do with good conscience (in that measure which is expectable from the natural infirmity and pravity of man in various degrees, some more, some less strictly,) serve God, and obey his laws.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

It is counted a valuable thing, and may be estimated at a certain rate, for a man to be one amongst four or five equal competitors for a place, to be the fourth or fifth expectant of an inheritance.—Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 2.

But long expectance of a bliss delay'd,
Breeds anxious doubt, and tempts the sacred maid.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

How often doth a man do that in the fury and expectancies of lust, for which, when his ardours are over, he is ready to bite his nails for very vexation.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Though Virtue is unquestionably worthy to be chosen for its own sake, even without any expectation of reward; yet it does not follow that it is therefore entirely self sufficient, and able to support a man under all kind of sufferings, and even death itself, for its sake, without any prospect of future recompence.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

Prepar'd for fight, expectingly he lies.
Dryden. Juvenal. Sat. 6.

I mean that when any organ of sense is for some time affected in some one manner, if it be suddenly affected otherwise, there ensues a convulsive motion; such a convulsion as is caused when any thing happens against the expectance of the mind.—Burke. Sublime and Beautiful.

Thus for example, in joy the pleasing part of the Impression owes its origin to the possession, or undoubted expectancy, of some desirable good.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

'Tis therefore many, whose sequester'd lot
Forbids their interference, looking on,
Anticipate perforce some dire event;
And, seeing the old castle of the State,
That promis'd once more firmness, so assail'd,
That all its tempest beaten turrets shake,
Stand motionless expectants of its fall.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

In its general operation, the indulgence of hope is mixed with certain portions of doubt and solicitude, but when doubt is removed, and the expectation becomes sanguine, hope rises into joy, and it has been known to produce transports and ecstacies, equally with the full accomplishment of ardent desires.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 3.

EXPE'CTORATE, v.
EXPECTORA'TION.
EXPE'CTORATIVE, n.

Lat. Expectorare, to throw out from the breast, (ex, and pectus, the breast.) Used chiefly in medical works.

To throw or heave out, eject or emit from the breast.

They affirm, that as well the one as the other, doth expectorat the fleame gathered in the chest.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 16.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of this disease, [inflammation of the lungs,] but, when the expectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it, and, in that case, sudorifics thicken the matter that is expectorated.
Arbuthnot. Of Diet, c. 3.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough.—Harvey. Consumptions

If we take but a cursory view of past times, we shall see that many who are now justly considered as models of virtue and of political wisdom, were in their day aspersed with all the venom which the virulence of party could expectorate upon them.—Knox, Ess. 6.

EXPE'DIATE, v.
EXPE'DIENT, adj.
EXPE'DIENT, n.
EXPE'DIENCE.
EXPE'DIENCY.
EXPE'DIENTLY.
E'XPEDITE, v.
E'XPEDITE, adj.
E'XPEDITELY.
EXPEDI'TION.
EXPEDI'TIOUS.
EXPEDI'TIOUSLY.
EXPEDI'TIVE, adj.

Fr. Expedier; It. Espedire; Sp. Expedir; Fr. Expedient; It. Espediente; Sp. Expediente; Lat. Exped-ire. Expedire dicitur, qui pedem retentum liberat; he is said, expedire, who sets at liberty a foot held fast. See DESPATCH.

To free, disentangle or disenthrall, from that which holds fast or retains; to free from hinderance, entanglement or im-pe-diment; to set free for motion, for flight; and thus, to set forward, give a quick or ready way; give speed or despatch to; to quicken, to hasten, to accelerate.

Expedient, the n. is—a quick, prompt, ready way or means; sometimes, a by-way or path, taken instead of, or to avoid the direct way; and thus, a shift or device, an evasion.

Expedient, the adj.—quick, ready, easy, apt, convenient, suitable, fit, or proper.

An expedition,—a march or journey, or voyage, requiring promptness or despatch; and thus, Shakespeare uses expedience. He also uses expedient as expeditious is now commonly used.

Burnet uses the v. Ex-pede, opp. to im-pede.

Neuerthelesse I tell you the truthe, it is expedient for you that I go awaye, for yf I goo not away, that Comforter wyll not come vnto you.—Bible, 1551. John, c. 16.

She committed the same woorke to Maister Frauncisce Malet, doctour in the facultie of diuenitee, with all celeritee and expedicion to be finished and made complete.
Udal. To Queen Catherine.

Whē winter time was expired, cōtrary to his custome, he goeth into Italy with as much expeditio as might be.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 270.

He landed his armye in the hauen of Tarent, leadynge with him his two yonger sonnes, Helen and Alexander, to beare him company in his farre expedition.—Id. Justine, fol. 85.

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leysure yield them further meanes
For their advantage, and your highnesse losse.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 4.

She [the mother of Cleomenes] wrote unto him, that he should not spare to do any thing that should be expedient for the honour of Sparta, without fear of displeasing Ptolemy, or for regard of an old woman and a young boy.
North. Plutarch, p. 675.

And the Roman religion is commodious in nothing more, than in finding out expedients either for removing quite away, or for shifting from one to another, all personal punishments.—Brecint. Saul & Samuel, c. 21.

——— Then let me heare
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmerland,
What yesternight our councell did decree,
In forwarding this deare expedience.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

Matters of good order in holy affaires may be ruled by the wise institution of men according to reason and expediency.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Angell & Zacharie.

——— Well, push him out of doores,
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent vpon his house and lands:
Do this expeditiely, and turn him going.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 1.

All this is plainly expedited with the same ease, and less perplexity and multiplicity, by the immediate command of the divine will and power in the first production of things.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 323.

In these dayes, remarkable above the rest, was the profitable and expedite service of Julius, colonell of the footmen on the further side of Taurus.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 431.

Great plentie of them is in the country of the Sydraci, the utmost limit of Alexander the Great his expeditions and voiages.—Id. Pinie, b. xii. c. 6.

I apprehend it as a safest course,
And may be easily accomplished;
Let us be all most expeditious.
Massinger. The Old Law Act i. sc. 1.

For which he expeditiously provided
That part of land into his power to get,
Which if made good might keep his foes divided,
Their combination cunningly to let.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

But I mean not to purchase the praise of expeditive in that kind; but as one that have a feeling of my duty, and of the case of others. My endeavour shall be to hear patiently, and to cast my order into such a mold as may soonest bring the subject to the end of his journey.
Bacon. Speech, on Taking his Place in Chancery.

When any see was vacant, a writ was issued out of the chancery for seising on all the temporalities of the bishoprick, and then the king recommended one to the Pope, upon which his bulls were expeded at Rome.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, b. i.

Great alterations in some kind of merchandise may serve for the present instant, to expediate their business.
Sir E. Sandys. State of Religion.

Prerogative being wound up to this height in England, and the affairs of the Church tending to a conjunction with the See of Rome, before any farther progress should be made therein here, it was thought expedient that the pulse of Scotland should be felt, and they perswaded or compelled to the like conformity.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 6.

Like tricks of State, to stop a raging flood,
Or mollify a mad-brain'd senate's mood:
Of all expedients never one was good.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

But it is a very easy matter in most cases to determine concerning the expedience of actions; that is to say, whether it be best and fittest for a man to do them or no.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 7.

From a wise consideration of humane affairs, and obvious events here, we may collect the reasonableness, the equity, the expediency, the moral or prudential necessity of a future judgment, according to which men shall receive due recompences, answerable to their demeanour in this life.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 32.

The Earl of Ormond being willing to see his relations and his estate in those parts, as also to expedite that service, accepted their invitation, and marched thither with about 3 or 4000 horse and foot for his guard.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 139.

One observation, relating to the motion of the bones in their articulations, I shall here add, That is, the care that is taken, and the provision that is made, for the easie and expedite motion of them.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Speech is a very short and expedite way of conveying their thoughts one to another.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 19.

Who would not more readily learn to write fairly and expeditely by imitating one good copy, than by hearkening to a thousand oral prescriptions.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

He sends them forth amongst wolves: a hard expedition, you will say, to go among wolves; but yet much harder to convert them into sheep.—South, vol. i. Ser. 3.

No man will or can be easily convinced, that the latter short expeditious way of appealing to the Bishop of Rome in all controverted cases, was ever so much as thought of when the Bible was written.—Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

The tincture of the glass of antimony is very tedious to make, being to be thrown with spirit of vinegar, I once made a menstruum to draw it more expeditiously.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 11.

What sure expedient then shall Juno find,
To calm her fears, and ease her boding mind?
Philips. The Fable of Thule.

And some, perhaps, who, busy as they are,
Yet make their progeny their dearest care,
(Whose hearts will ache, once told what ills may reach
Their offspring, left upon so wild a beach)
Will need no stress of argument t' enforce
Th' expedience of a less advent'rous course.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

Divine wisdom discovers no expediency in vice; nor admits of the carnival of a single day, for the indulgence of falsehood, profligacy, fraud, and cruelty.
Cogan. Ethical Treat. On the Passions, pt. ii. Dis. 2. s. 1.

Your Imperial Majesty's just influence, which is still greater than your extensive power, will animate and expedite the efforts of other sovereigns.
Burke. Letter to the Empress of Russia.

——— In unequal conflict joins
Th' unwieldy spear that loads the borderer,
With the broad targe and expeditious sword.
Smollett. The Regicide, Act iv. sc. 2.

The surgeon boasted that he could not only shave, which on the continent is a surgical operation, but that he could dress hair neatly and expeditiously; nor had he any objection to cleaning of shoes, or acting as a menial servant, till some opportunity should offer of improving his condition.
Cogan. Ethical Treat. On the Passions, pt. i. Note A.

EXPE'DITATE, v.
EXPEDITA'TION.

Lat. Expeditare, (ex, and pede, the foot,) a word, says Minshew, usual in the forest, signifying to cut out the balls of the dogg's foot, for the preservation of the king's game. Euerie one that keepeth any great dogs not expeditated forfeiteth to the king three shillings, four-pence, (Crompton, Jurisd. p. 152.) Manwood says, that the three claws of the fore-foot on the right side shall be cut off by the skin; and Rastell, citing Charta de Foresta, c. 6, describes the lawing of dogs in the same manner.

The king granted to him free chase and free warren in all those his lands, both within and without the forest; also freedom from the expeditation of dogs.
Ashmole. Berks, vol. ii. p. 425.

EXPE'L, v.
EXPE'LLER.
EXPU'LSE.
EXPU'LSER.
EXPU'LSING, n.
EXPU'LSION.
EXPU'LSIVE.

Fr. Expulser; Lat. Expellere, to force or drive out, (ex, and pellere; Gr. Πελ-ειν, to move or cause to move, to drive.)

To drive or force out, to eject; to hold or keep out, off or away, to exclude.

The vertue expulsif, or animal,
Fro thilke vertue cleped natural,
Ne may the venime voiden, ne expell.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2753.

Which hath expelled pacience
Fro the clergie in speciall,
And that is shewed ouerall,
In euery thyng whan thei be greued.
Gower. Con. A. Prologus.

The which thing when he forseing had fled vnto Cæsar, they persewed hym to the uttermost borders of theyr territory, and vtterlye expulsed him both frō his kingdome and countrey.—Golding. Cæsar. Commen. fol. 142.

For the man standeth as it were in the middest betweene his mother and his wife: and so either of them hateth other, as an expulser of herselfe.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. ii. c. 13.

Neuertheles, gentel reader, thou shalt not looke for a particular declaration of the shifting, remouing and expulsing of euery seuerall kind of people, nor of the alteration of the state of euerye seueral cōtry in that region.
Golding. Cæsar, Pref.

——— That had of yore
Their sceptere stretcht from east to westerne shore,
And all the world in their subiection held;
Till that infernall fiend with foule vprore
Forewasted all their land, and them expeld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c 1.

From Cunegiasus he cometh to the foresaid Maglocunus, whome he nameth the Dragon of the Isles, and the expeller of manie tyrants.—Holinshed. England, vol. i. b. v. c. 17.

Those wrongs the king had from the earl receiv'd,
Expuls'd the kingdom only by his pow'r,
Ev'n to the height his pow'rful hand up-heav'd
For full revenge in this unhappy hour.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Alanson. For euer should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title of an earldome here.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 3.

Then came the destruction of the inhabitantes: first at the comming of the Danes, and now in the expulsing of the English by the Normans.—Stow. Harold, 1066.

The assembly shall lay a considerable pecuniary mulct upon any one who shall be proved to have entered so far into a quarrel as to give uncivil language to his brother professor: and that the perseverance in enmity shall be punished by the governors with expulsion.—Cowley. Ess. College.

We had much ado to kindle a fire this evening, our huts were but very mean and ordinary, and our fire small, so that we could not dry our cloths, scarce warm ourselves, and no sort of food for the belly; all which made it very hard with us. I confess these hardships quite expell'd the thoughts of an enemy.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

But we apprehending such extraordinary expulsions as had been lately used, to be extremely hazardous to the publick safety, made it our endeavour to keep those from a readmission who might necessitate another occasion of using the like remedy.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 253.

For the expulsive faculty being oppressed by too great a repletion, stirs up so much of perspiration as without the staticks no one would believe.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 112.

Had not sedition's civil broils
Expell'd thee from thy native Crete,
And driven thee with more glorious toils
Th' Olympic crown in Pisa's plain to meet.
West. Pindar. Olympic Odes, Ode 12.

One great object is pursued throughout the Scriptures, from the expulsion of our first parents out of Eden, to the last of the prophets of Israel, namely, the coming of a great person under various titles; the deliverer from death and destruction; the promised seed that was to come of the woman, not of man, and therefore of a virgin.
Sharpe. Defence of Christianity, pt. ii. c. 1. Prophets.

EXPE'ND, v.
EXPE'NDITURE.
EXPE'NSE.
EXPE'NSEFULL.
EXPE'NSEFULLY.
EXPE'NSELESS.
EXPE'NSIVE.
EXPE'NSIVELY.
EXPE'NSIVENESS.

It. Spendere; Lat. Expend-ere, to weigh out, (ex, and pendere, to weigh.)

To weigh; and thus, to balance, examine, consider; and as money in ancient times was not counted but weighed, the Lat. Expendere, Eng. Expend, is,—

To pay away money, lay it out, distribute or dispose of it; to pay, discharge or defray costs and charges.

A kynge behoueth eke to flee
The vice of prodigalitee,
That he measure in his expence
So kepe, that of indigence
He mate be safe. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And as concernynge their lyues, more God desyreth not of the Christian minister, then to expende hys whole studye, laboure, and tyme to the lightening of other.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

For in all matters that man takes in hand, this consideration ought first to be had, that we first diligently expend the cause before we go through with it, that we may be assured whether it be lawfull or otherwise
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 101.

This oration liked Tissaphernes very well, wherevpon he allowed them not so liberal expences.
Golding. Justine, fol. 28.

His hand is open and bounteous, yet not so as that he should rather respect his glory than his estate; wherein his wisdome can distinguish betwixt parasites and friends, betwixt changing of favours and expending them.
Bp. Hall. Characters. Of the Truly Noble.

Jago. Thus do I euer make my foole, my purse:
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge should prophane
If I would time expend with such a snipe
But for my sport, and profit.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

A man had need, if he be plentifull in some kind of expence, to be as saving again, in some other.
Bacon. Ess. Of Expence.

Alinda. Who will have me?
Who will be troubled with a pettish girl?
It may be, proud, and to that vice—expenceful.
Beaum. & Fletch. Pilgrim, Act i. sc. 1.

Here is harmless and cheap plenty; there guilty and expenceful luxury.—Cowley. Ess. Of Agriculture.

Hereupon the states made up the sum presently, which came in convenient time, for it served to defray the expenceful progress he made to Scotland the summer following.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 11.

Which he who can wisely and timely do, is not only a great physician to himself and to his friends, but also may at some time or other, save an army by this frugal and expenseless means only.—Milton. Of Education.

So as when we meet with the greatest industry, and expensive carving, full of fret and lamentable imagery, sparing neither of pains nor cost, a judicious spectator is distracted and quite confounded.—Evelyn. Of Architecture.

Lastly, such as were beneath the place, as men of too narrow estates to discharge that office, especially as it were formerly in the magnificent expensiveness thereof, though such persons might be esquires of right ancient extraction.
Fuller. General Worthies of England, c. 14.

3. This duty implies a due esteem and valuation of benefits; that the nature and quality, the measure and quantity, the circumstances and consequences of them be well expended; else the gratitude is like to be none, or very defective.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

I made a seasonable discovery of money, plate, and jewels, to the value of about £1200. walled up by the enemy. Part of this sum I expended upon the garrison, and gave an account thereof to the parliament.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 61.

Already I am worn with cares and age,
And just abandoning th' ungrateful stage;
Unprofitably kept at Heaven's expense,
I live a rent-charge on his providence.—Dryden, Epis. 10.

When the Emperor began to engage in this design, the Pope, being jealous of his greatness, and desirous to intangle him in a long and expenceful war, published the secret ends of the league.—Burnet. Reform. b. i. an. 1547.

Where now is seen, saith Camden, the fair habitation of Sir William Sidley; a learned knight painfully and expensefully studious of the common good of his country.
Weever. Funeral Monuments, p. 316.

The law of England is the greatest grievance of the nation, very expensive and dilatory: there is no end of suits, especially when they are brought into chancery.
Burnet. Own Time, vol. iv. The Conclusion.

Schimei, whose youth did early promise bring
Of zeal to God, and hatred to his King;
Did wisely from expensive sins refrain,
And never broke the sabbath—but for gain.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

He knows that our expenditure purchased commerce and conquest: theirs acquired nothing but defeat and bankruptcy.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

But Wealth with nobler Virtue join'd
The means and fair occasions must procure:
In Glory's chase must aid the mind,
Expense, and toil, and danger to endure.
West. Pindar. Olympic Odes, Ode 2.

Whoever doubted the truth, or the insignificance of these propositions? what do they prove? that war is expensive, and peace desirable.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

My lords, the length and expensiveness of the proceedings in our Courts are not the only considerations, which make it expedient that the power should be placed in ourselves personally.—Horsley. Speech. June 10, 1803.

EXPE'RIENCE, v.
EXPE'RIENCE, n.
EXPE'RIENCER.
EXPE'RIENT.
EXPE'RIMENT, v.
EXPE'RIMENT, n.
EXPERIME'NTAL.
EXPERIME'NTALLY.
EXPERIME'NTALIST.
EXPERIMENTA'RIAN, adj.
EXPERIMENTA'RIAN, n.
EXPERIMENTA'TOR.
EXPE'RIMENTER.

Fr. Expérimenter, expérience, n; It. Esperienza, esperimento; Sp. Experiencia, experimento; Lat. Experiri, (ex, and periri; Gr. Πειρ-αν, to try.)

To try, prove, essay; to make trial; to search or enquire, to learn or ascertain by trial, by repeated trials; by practice.

And thus, Experience is—

Knowledge or wisdom acquired or gained by repeated trial, by frequent and repeated proof; by practice.

Experience, though non auctoritee
Were in this world, is right ynough for me
To speke of wo that is in marriage
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5583.

To euery crafte of mannes helpe
He had a redy witte to helpe
Through naturall experience. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

I haue good experience that though my bodye cannot be in two places at ones (bothe in the Tower and where I wolde haue it beyde) yet, blessed be God, in this one place I am not without company.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 65.

(They sayde) that as they neuer were his enemies, (but as they were prouoked by occasion of the warres,) euen so, if he woulde make an experiment of them rather by a benefite, then an iniurie, theye would labour not to bee ouercome in good will, nor in doyng yᵗ thyng that pertayned to theire duetie.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol 262.

So what oure auncient Englysh wryters had saide in this mater, which more experimētly knew it, and let the foren liares go, whyche beinge farre of cared the lesse to lye.
Bale. Englishe Votaries, pt. i.

Of one thyng I am sure, and I sale it not because I haue seen it, but experimēted in myself, that though the husband do al that his wife wil, yet will she do nothyng that hir husbande wolde haue done.—Golden Boke, c. 19.

——— He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye, and soon traverse
The whole battalion, views their order due,
Their visages and stature as of Gods.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Of all the which (for want there of mankind)
She caused him to make experience
Vpon wild beasts, which she in woods did find,
With wrongfull powre oppressing others of their kind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

When the consuls in this so great a broile and storme of outrage came in, to prevent further mischiefs, they knew soone by experience how slenderly guarded against danger, the majestie of rulers is, where force is wanting.
Holland. Livie, p 82.

Especiallie such as doo dwell in the marches, by reason of their continuall ware they are very valient, bold, and of great experiences.—Holinshed. Conq. of Ireland, b. ii. c. 40.

For long experienc'd wo well witnesse beares,
That teares cannot quench sighes, nor sighes drie teares.
Sterling. Aurora, s. 2.

And, a curious experiencer did affirm, that the likeness of any object (but particularly he often observ'd it of an iron grate,) if it be strongly inlightned, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it till he be dazel'd by it; even after he shall have turn'd his eyes from it.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 8.

Age. But pray you, tell me,
Why is the Prince, now ripe and full experient,
Not made a dore [door] in the State?
Nis. Because he is honest.
Beaum. & Fletch. Cupid's Revenge, Act iii. sc. 1.

For want of a clear, and sensible, and experimented observation of them, our positions and conclusions touching their causes, effects, order, and methods of their procedure are but fictions and imaginations, accommodated to our inventions, rather then to the things themselves.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 8.

And thus the prowesse of the old captains, the good services of the veterans and well experimented soldiers by the insolent, distempered, and lewd life of these new-comes, was discredited.—Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, b. ii. c. 38.

Vpon his card and compass firmes his eye,
The masters of his long experiment,
And to them does the steady helpe apply,
Bidding his winged vessell fairely forward fly.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7

——— Call me a foole,
Trust not my reading, nor my obseruations,
Which with experimental seale doth warrant
The tenure of my booke.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc 1.

2. Some things were discovered experimentally, though perchance not intentionally, or by design in the first discovery.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 153.

But besides this, the modern experimenters think, that the philosophers of elder times, though their wits were excellent, yet the way they took was not like to bring much advantage to knowledge, or any of the uses of human life: being for the most part that of notion and dispute, which still runs round in a labyrinth of talk, but advanceth nothing.
Glanvill. Ess. 3.

He who is bigot enough to believe these things, must bid adieu to the natural rule, of reasoning from analogy; must run counter to the maxim of common sense, That men ought to form their judgments of things unexperienced from what they have experienced.—Guardian, No. 27.

And so for the evidence of experience, I am by that to a great degree assured of the succession of night and day, winter and summer, and have no such reason to doubt, whether the house wherein now I am, shall the next minute fall upon me, or the earth open and swallow it up, as to be in continual fear of such accidents.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 1.

Certain it is, from the united testimony of many of the most experienced followers of Christ, that these abstinences and sour rudiments of self-denial have a signal influence, both to the pronouncing of mercies, and to the removal of impending judgment.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

This I accidentally experimented by exposing a couple of goats to the asperity thereof; which in four hours' space, or thereabouts, were deprived of life.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. iii. p 50.

This difference of intention, and remission of the mind in thinking, with a great variety of degrees between earnest study, and very near minding nothing at all; every one, I think, has experimented in himself
Locke. Of Hum. Underst b. ii. c. 19.

But they, finding the majority of the House of Lords could not be brought to favour their designs, resolved to make an experiment that none of our princes had ventured on in former times: a resolution was taken up very suddenly of making twelve peers all at once.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1711.

The Honourable Robert Boyle, Esq was a person no less zealously solicitous for the propagation of true religion, and the practice of piety and virtue; than diligent and successful in improving experimental philosophy, and enlarging our knowledge of nature.—Clarke On the Evidences, Pref.

That which the text here offers for the subject of this discourse, is flattery; a thing condemned by the mouth of one who could very well judge, as being a king, and therefore experimentally acquainted with the ways of flatterers, a sort of cattle that usually herd in the courts of princes, and the houses of great persons.—South, vol. viii Ser. 7.

Another thing that disposes an experimentarian philosopher to embrace religion, is, that his genius and course of studies accustoms him to value and delight in abstracted truths; by which term, I here mean such truths as do not at all, or do but very little, gratify men's ambition, sensuality, or other inferior passions and appetites.
Boyle. Works, vol. v p. 22.

Another thing then, that qualifies an experimentarian for the reception of a revealed religion, and so of Christianity, is, that an accustomance of endeavouring to give clear explications of the phænomena of nature, and discover the weakness of those solutions, that superficial wits are wont to make and acquiesce in, does insensibly work in him a great and ingenuous modesty of mind.—Id. Ib. p. 537.

The examination of some of them was protracted for many days, the nature of the experiments themselves, and also the design of the experimentators requiring such chasms.
Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 507.

Those that undertook the religion of our Saviour upon his preaching, had no experience of it: They were to be the first experimenters themselves.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 6.

The youthful sailors thus with early care
Their arms experience, and for sea prepare:
On some smooth lake their lighter oars essay,
And learn the dangers of the watry way.
Harte. The Sixth Thebaid of Statius.

I shall make no scruple to comprehend under the name of Experience, the grounds of our assent to all the facts on which our reasonings proceed, provided only that the certainty of these facts be, on either supposition, equally indisputable.
Stewart. On the Human Mind, vol. ii. c. 4. s. 5. Note.

These records of wars, intrigues, factions, and revolutions, are so many collections of experiments, by which the politician or moral philosopher fixes the principles of his science; in the same manner as the physician or natural philosopher becomes acquainted with the nature of plants, minerals, and other external objects, by the experiments which he forms concerning them.—Hume. Of Liberty and Necessity.

In such cases a decision can be made by the judgment alone. This must examine the pretensions of every experimentalist.—Cogan. Ethical Questions, Q. 6.

The assembly recommends to its youth a study of the bold experimenters in morality
Burke. Letter to the National Assembly.

EXPERRE'CTION. Lat. Expergisci, experrectus, to rouse, to rise or raise up.

The Phrygians also imagining that God sleepeth all winter, and lieth awake in the summer; thereupon celebrate in one season, the feast of lying in bed and sleeping; in the other, of experrection or waking, and that with much drinking and belly cheer.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1069.

EXPE'RT, v. } Fr. Expert; It. Esperto;
EXPE'RT, adj. } Lat. Expertus, from experiri.
EXPE'RTNESS. } (See EXPERIENCE.) Expert is used as a verb by Spenser.

An expert man is one who has the readiness, adroitness, presence of mind of experience, of much practice. And thus—

Ready, adroit, dexterous, skilful.

Expertly, though in common conversational usage, has not occurred in writing.

And though he were not depe expert in lore,
He wiste it was the eighte and twenty day
Of April, that is messager to May.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4424.

And whan that I have told thee forth my tale
Of tribulation in mariage,
Of which I am expert in all min age,
(This is to sayn, myself hath ben the whippe)
Than maiest thou chesen wheder thou wolt sippe
Of thilk tonne, that I shal abroche.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5756.

Yea, the wise and expert man will aske of themselues, how hangeth this to the purpose? To what ende do ye speake it?—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 89.

Vnwise and wretched men to weet what's good or ill.
We deeme of death as doome of ill desert:
But knew we fooles what it vs brings vntill
Die would we daily, once it to expert
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. November.

At length, by both allow'd, it to this issue grew,
To make a likely choice of some most expert crew,
Whose number coming near unto the other's dow'r,
The English should not urge they were o'er-borne by pow'r.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
Embarqu'd with such a steare-mate at the helm.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Ist. What say you to his expertnesse in warre?
Par. Faith, sir, h'as led the drumme before the English Tragedians.—Shakes. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 3.

The greatest part of the way was thick woods, where the Spaniards might easily lay in ambush for them, at which they are very expert.—Dampier. Voyage, an. 1684.

Now the Bituriges forget their fears,
And Suessone nimble with unwieldy spears;
Exult the Leuci, and the Remi now,
Expert in javelins, and the bending bow.
Howe. Lucan, b. i.

That monster which is daily found
Expert and bold thy country's peace to wound;
Yet dreads to handle arms, nor manly counsel knows.
Akenside, b. I. Ode 18.

There were no marks of expertness in the trick played by the woman of Endor, upon the perturbed mind of Saul.
Cogan. Theological Disquisitions, Dis. 2.

EXPE'TIBLE. Lat. Expetibilis, from expetere, to seek after.

That may or should be sought for; coveted.

And in a manner the same speeches or very like thereto, he hath delivered in the third book of such things as be expetible, and to be chosen for themselues.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 874.

And thus have they done in treating of good things and evil, expetible and to be avoided, proper and strange.
Id. Ib. p. 895.

E'XPIATE, v. } Fr. Expier; Sp. Expiar;
EXPIA'TION. } It. Espiare; Lat. Expiare,
EXPI'ATORY. } ex, and piare, from pius. Of EXPIATO'RIOUS. } which Vossius says, "Unde E'XPIABLE. } sit nondum reperi." Impiare,

i. e. impiè agere, and expiare, are contraries. Minshew says, To pacify God by sacrifice and prayer; to purge and cleanse by sacrifice.

To atone for impious by pious deeds; to atone for, to annul, guilt or the consequences of guilt, by pious deeds; to atone or make reparation for; to avert by atonement or acts of piety.

Your Ambrose appoynteth to your prestes the Judical expiacion, for companieng wyth theyr wyues.
Bale. Apology, fol. 74.

How many heathen lawgivers have subscribed to Moses! Arabians, Grecians, Romans, yea very Gothes, the dregs of barbarisme, have thought this wrong not expiable, but by bloud.—Bp. Hall. Epistles, Dec. 3.

For the Gregorian purgatory supposed only an expiation of small and light faults, as immoderate laughter, impertinent talking, which nevertheless he himself sayes are expiable by fear of death.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. II. b. II. § 2.

For malefactors, whilst that their misdeeds
Repentance expiats, made happy so,
Do (as from beds, to heaven from scaffolds go.
Stirling. Domes-day. The Tenth Houre.

This glorious prerogative hath betonie, that looke about what house soever it is set or sowed, the same is thought to be in the protection of the Gods, and safe enough for committing any offence, which may deserve their vengeance, and need any expiation or propitiatorie sacrifice
Holland Plinie, b. xxv. c. 8.

When intelligence came of the cruel execution and bloodie massacre committed in Argos, wherein the Argives caused to be put to death 1,500 of their own citizens, they caused in a solemn procession, and general assembly of the whole city, an expiatory sacrifice to be carried about, that it might please the Gods to avert and turn away such cruel thoughts from the hearts of the Athenians.—Id. Plutarch, p. 363.

They cannot tell in what measures God will exact the repentance, what sorrow is sufficient, what fruits acceptable, what is expiatory, and what rejected; according to the saying of Solomon, who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 9. s. 3.

Which are not to be expounded as if ordination did confer the first grace, which in the schools is understood only to be expiatorious; but the increment of grace and sanctification.
Id. Office Ministerial, § 7.

It was a common and received doctrine among the Jews, that, for some sins, a man was pardoned presently upon his repentance; that other sins were not pardoned, 'till the solemn day of expiation, which came once a year. That other sins, which were yet greater, were not to be expiated but by some grievous temporal affliction.
Sharp, vol. III. Ser. 11.

The sacrifice expiatory for our offences was to be a lamb without blemish, and without spot, whence he was to be fully sanctified: and to become το ἅγιον, that holy thing (absolutely) as he was termed by the celestial messenger.
Barrow, vol. II. Ser. 24.

——— Wherefore, ye powers?
Am I to misery deliver'd up?
What kindred crime, alas! am I decreed
To expiate, that misfortunes fall so thick
On my poor head.—Smollett. The Regicide, Act iv. sc. 6.

But in the place of the numerous ceremonies of heathenism, burthensome in themselves and apt to turn the attention from the business of devotion, rather than promote it, Christ established but two, both of them strongly significant, of cleansing from pollution by water; and the eucharist, of expiation by a sacrificed victim.
Knox. On the Lord's Supper, s. 22.

The depth of contrition was manifested by the value of the sacrifice; until at length human sacrifices, and the oblation of their beloved offspring, on the altars of their gods, being the most valuable offerings that could possibly be made, were considered as the most expiatory.
Cogan. Theological Disquisitions, Dis. 2.

E'XPILATE. Fr. Expile; Lat. Expilare, (ex, and pilare,) from the Gr. Πιλόω, densare, to thicken, to stow thick or close.

To take out of a thick or close quantity or number; to pluck out, to plunder, to rob.

Pilate would expilate the treasures of it for aquæ ductæ, which denied, cost the Jewes much bloud.
Bp. Hall. Serm. at the Earle of Exceter's in St. John's.

Some suggest, that he was loth to go back to Bath, having formerly consented to the expilation of that bishoprick: whilst others make his consent to signify nothing, seeing impowered sacriledge is not so mannerly as to ask any, By your leave.—Fuller. Worthies. Sussex.

——— Whence, says he, proceeds
This rav'nous exsilation of the State.
Daniel. Civil War, b. II.

Where profit hath prompted, no age hath wanted such miners [for sepulchrall treasure.] For which the most barbarous expilators found the most civil rhetorick.
Brown. Urne Burial, c. 3.

EXPIRE, v. } (More properly Ex-spire.)
EXPIRA'TION. } Fr. Expirer; It. Espirare, Sp.
EXPI'RING, n. } Expirar; Lat. Expirare, to EXPI'RY. } breathe out, (ex, and spirare, to breathe, A. S. Spir-ian.) See ASPIRE, and CONSPIRE.

To breathe out; to utter or emit the last breath, and, consequentially, to die: "to pass away as a breath or vapour; to determine, end finish."

After that manie dayes were expired, when sorow had lessened his tong, he [Herodes] spake of nothing but Pacorus. he thought he sawe Pacorus, he thought he heard Pacorus. he woulde talke as though he had ben with him.
Golding. Justine, fol. 174.

That so a little we may ease our overcharged hands:
Draw some breath, not expire it all.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Those that did offend in such crimes and afterwardes repented, were appointed a time of publique repentance, according to the qualitie of the fault committed, and vntil that time was expired, they were not admitted vnto the Lorde's table, except onely at the point of death.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 147

——— I die for food.
And like a shadow waxe, whiles with entire
Affection I doe languish and expire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii c 2

O! why do wretched men so much desire
To draw their daves vnto the vtmost date,
And doe not rather wish them soone expire,
Knowing the misery of their estate.—Id Ib. b iv c 3.

Iom. I feare too early, for my mind misgiues,
Some consequence yet hanging in the starres,
Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this night's reuels, and expire the tearme
Of a despised life.—Shakespeare. Rom. & Jul. Act i. sc. 4.

Saul is fain to be struck down in the place; a kind of λειποψυχία or swooning fit, an expiration of the animal man, necessary to so great a change.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 478.

This is the proper action of the lungs, to draw wind from without; wherewith when it is filled there is made another attraction by a second appetition; and the breast deriveth the said wind into it, which being likewise replent therewith, not able to draw any more, it transmitteth back againe the superfluity thereof into the lungs, whereby it is sent forth by way of expiration: and thus the parts of the body reciprocally suffer one of another by way of interchange.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 687

Also close aire, is warmer than open aire; which (it may be, is for that the true cause of cold, is an expiration from the globe of the earth which in open places is stronger and again, aire itselfe, if it be not altered by that expiration, is not without some secret degree of heat.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 866

The first means of producing cold, is that which Nature presenteth us withall, namely, the expiring of cold out of the inward parts of the earth in winter, when the sun hath no power to overcome it; the earth being (as hath been noted by some) primum frigidum.—Id. Ib. s. 69.

Or endless apathy succeeds to death,
And sense is lost with our expiring breath;
Or if the soul some future life shall know,
To better worlds immortal shall she go.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

Yet London, Empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire;
Great as the World's, which, at the death of time,
Must fall, and rise a nobler frame by fire.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

The nearest to them is the aspirate he, which is no other than a gentle expiration.—Sharp. Dissertations, p. 41.

The Consuls at the expiration of their office took an oath that they had faithfully and zealously discharged their trust.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. I. Let. 3.

EXPISCA'TION. Lat. Expiscari, to fish out, (ex, and piscis, a fish.

A fishing out.

All thy worth, yet, thyselfe must patronise
By quaffing more of the Castalian head;
In expiscation of whose mysteries,
Our nets must still be clogg'd with heavie lead
To make them sinke and catch.
Chapman. On B. Jonson's Sejanus

EXPLA'IN, v. } Fr. Explaner; Sp. Explanar; Lat. Explanare, to EXPLA'INABLE. } smoothen, (ex, and planus,
EXPLANA'TION. } smooth; Gr. Πλαξ, tabula
EXPLA'NATORY. } plana.)
EXPLA'INER. }

To smoothen or make smooth, or plain; to declare or make clear, evident or manifest; to express clearly; to illustrate; to interpret or expound; to expose, to lay open.

The Constantinopolitan, or horse-chesnut, is turgid with buds, and ready to explain its leaf.
Evelyn. Letter to the Secretary of the Royal Society.

But yet, what are the instruments of sensitive perception, and particular convers [conveyers] of outward motions to the seat of sense, is difficult to find; and how the pure mind can receive information from things that are not like itself, nor the objects they represent, is, I think, not to be explained.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

And thus it is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness, when in the burnt offerings the priest is commanded to wash the inwards and legs thereof in water.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

If he once willed adultery should be sinful, and to be punisht with death, all his omnipotence will not allow him to will the allowance that his holiest people might as it were by his own antinomie, or counter statute, live unreproved in the same fact as he himself esteemed it, according to our common explainers.—Milton. Of Divorce, b. ii. c. 3.

I demanded of him who was to explain them? the Papists, I told him, would explain some of them one way, and the Reform'd another; the Remonstrants and Anti Remonstrants gave them different senses; and probably the Trinitarians and Unitarians will profess, that they understand not each other's explications
Locke. Vindication of Christianity, &c.

And therefore, unless he can show his authority to be the sole explainer of fundamentals, he will in vain make such a pudder about his fundamentals. Another explainer, of as good authority as he, will set up others against them.—Id. Ib.

The ill effects that were like to follow on those different explanations [of the Trinity] made the bishops move the king to set out injunctions requiring them to see to the repressing of error and heresy with all possible zeal, more particularly in the fundamental articles of the Christian faith: and to watch against and hinder the use of new terms or new explanations in those matters.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1698.

Yet to such as are grounded in the true belief, these explanatory creeds, the Nicene and this of Athanasius, might perhaps be spared; for what is supernatural, will always be a mystery in spite of exposition.—Dryden. Rel. Laici, Pref.

With easy verse most bards are smitten,
Because they think it's easy written;
Whereas the easier it appears,
The greater marks of care it wears;
Of which to give an explanation
Take this. Lloyd. Epistle to Mr. Colman.

This appears from what follows, which, by necessary construction, is explanative of what went before.—Warburton. Of Julian's attempt to Rebuild the Temple, b. ii. c. 5.

On the one hand, to give a long catalogue of pictures and statues, without explanatory observations, appeared absurd; and on the other, to execute such a work in a becoming manner requires leisure, technical information, and the pen of a professed artist, perhaps of a Reynolds.
Eustace. Tour in Italy, vol. i. Pref. p. ix.

EXPLA'T. Ex, and plat; Fr. Plesser, to plash, to bow, to fold or plait, (young branches) one within another, (Cotgrave.)
To unfold, to explain.

—— While thou dost deale
Desired justice to the publique weale,
Like Solon's selfe, explat'st the knottie lawes
With endlesse labours; whilst thy learning drawes
No lease of praise, then readers in all kinds
Of worthiest knowledge, that can take men's minds.
B. Jonson. Epigram on Sir Edward Coke.

EXPLE'TION. } Lat. Explere, etum, to fill
EXPLE'TIVE, adj. } out, ex, and plere, to fill, from E'XPLETIVE, n. } the obsolete Gr. Πλ-ειν, whence Πληθ-ειν,
E'XPLETORY. }
Filled out, fulfilled or accomplished.
Expletive,—applied to certain words or syllables, which seem to be used rather to fill out the line than add to the sense.

They conduce nothing at all to the perfection of men's natures, nor the expletion of their desires.
Killingbeck. Ser. p. 374.

While expletives their feeble aid do join,
And ten low words oft creep in one dull line.
Pope. Ess. On Criticism.

To excuse these faults the swearer will be forced to confess, that his oaths are no more than waste and insignificant words; deprecating being taken for serious, or to be understood that he meaneth any thing by them; but only that he useth them as expletive phrases to plump his speech, and fill up sentences.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 15.

It is true, the word successor favoured these seizures; except that he thought an expletory word, put in out of form, but still to be limited to an estate of inheritance.
Burnet. Reformation, vol. i. b. iii. an. 1538.

Behold a group of figures awe create,"
Set off with all th' impertinence of state;
By lace and feather consecrate to fame,
Expletive kings, and queens without a name
Churchill. The Rosciad.

The strong figurative language so characteristic of the apostle's style, should inspire caution. In the impetuosity of his thoughts, he despises expletives, or paraphrastic diction.—Cogan. On the Passions. Theol. Disq. Note P.

E'XPLICATE, v. } Fr. Expliquer; It. Esplicare; Sp. Explicar;
E'XPLICATE, adj. } Lat. Explicare, to unfold, to untwine, or untwist,
E'XPLICABLE. } (ex, and plicare; Gr. Πλεκ-ειν, to knit, to intertwine.)
EXPLICA'TION. } To unfold, to untwine or untwist, to evolve; to E'XPLICATIVE. } explain; to make straight or plain, clear or manifest.
E'XPLICATORY. }
EXPLI'CIT. }
EXPLI'CITLY. }
EXPLI'CITNESS. }

And Tertullian therfore, beyng red thus, as appeareth to be most probable, that (that is to say in Tertullian) should be onely referred to the explicacio of the first (this)
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 42.

Then I beseeched her to explicate without delay, wherein true happinesse consisteth. To which she answered, I will willingly doe so for thy sake.
Boetius. Philosophicall Comfort, b. iii. p. 81.

We must suppose her [the Church] to be a building, and that she relies upon the foundation, which is therefore supposed to be laid before, because she is built upon it, or (to make it more explicate) because a cloud may arise from the allegory of building and foundation, it is plainly thus.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, s. 1.

Thus was his person made tangible, and his name utterable, and his mercy brought home to our necessities, and the mystery made explicate, at the circumcision of this holy babe.—Id. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 5.

Though we can never get a complete idea of the divine regiment, yet we may attain such a notion thereof as may render it evidently credible, and in some kind explicable.
Hale Origin. of Mankind, p. 34.

In the explication of this question it is much insisted upon, that it be enquired whether, when we say we believe Christ's body to be really in the Sacrament, we mean, that body, that flesh, that was born of the Virgin Mary, that was crucified, dead, and buried?
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, s. 1.

How contrary it is to Christianity, and the nature of explicative love, I appeal to those minds where grace hath sown more charity.—Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 24.

And so here is forbidden, not only the outward act, but the inward inclinations to murder, that is, an anger with deliberation, and purpose of revenge, this being explicative and additionall to the precept forbidding murder.
Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 10.

Again, if we look upon the supposition of Epicurus, and his explicator, Lucretius, and his advancer, Gassendus, how many things must be taken for granted, that are not only perfectly inevident to our sense, but altogether improbable.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 10.

It [the doctrine of a life to come] must arise then either from some universal explicite revelation, or a universal instinct, or voice of nature.—Glanvill, Ser. 6.

And that the earth shall be burnt, is as explicitly affirmed, as any thing can be spoken.—Id. Pre-existence of Souls.

The judgment (of speculative doctrine) is of itself more difficult, more remote from matter and humane observation, and with less curiosity and explicitness declared in Scripture, as being of less consequence and concernment in order to God's and man's great end.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 12.

Then her infallibility, as well
Where copies are corrupt or lame, can tell;
Restore lost canon with as little pains,
As truly explicate what still remains.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

He himself allows that the air has a spring, whereby it is able, when it has been violently compressed, to recover its due extension; the manner whereof, if he will intelligibly explicate his adversaries, will have no great difficulty to make out the spring of the air.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 134.

Lastly; if whatever arises not from, and is not explicable by, the natural powers of body be a miracle; then every animal motion whatsoever is a miracle.
Clarke. Third Reply to Mr. Leibnitz, p. 91.

All life from that of a worm to that of a man is explained; and as I may so speak, the wondrous works of the creation, by the observations of this author [Derham] lie before us as objects that create love and admiration, which, without such explications, strike us only with confusion and amazement.
Guardian, No. 175.

Hereupon also are grounded those evangelical commands, explicatory of this law as it now standeth in force; that as we have opportunity we should do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith; that we should abound in love one toward another, and towards all men, &c.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 25.

If it be said, "the understanding hath an implicit knowledge of these principles, but not an explicit, before this first hearing," (as they must, who will say, "that they are in the understanding before they are known,") it will be hard to conceive what is meant by a principle imprinted on the understanding implicitly; unless it be this, that the mind is capable of understanding and assenting firmly to such propositions.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 2.

The baptismal creed, I say, must of necessity contain explicitly in it at least all the fundamentals of faith.
Clarke. On the Trinity, Introd.

Otherwise, surely, the knowledge of this article could but very obscurely be gathered from the bare writings of Moses and the prophets, and consequently was by no means received with that explicitness in the ancient Jewish church, that it is now in the Christian.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

Besides, it is not explicable upon any grounds, that can be avowed, why the Nabob, who could afford to give these bills as a present to Mr Hastings, could not have equally given them in discharge of the debt, which he owed to the company.—Burke. Report of a Comm. on the Affairs of India.

The wrong explications of this poem, [Horace, Art of Poetry,] have arisen, not from the misconception of the subject only, but from an inattention to the method of it.
Hurd. Works, vol. i. Introd.

But, if the type had been designed to carry a single sense, and kings had been that sense, as explicatory of hills, it had been very preposterous to give the interpretation of the type, and then to interpret the interpretation, unless the expression had been so guarded as to convey this purpose in the most distinct manner.—Id. Ib. vol. v. Ser. 11.

Except a man be born again of the Spirit, we read in express language, "he cannot see the kingdom of God," no words can be more explicit. They mean regeneration by grace, or what else do they mean.
Knox. Christian Philosophy, s. 53.

After what your friend had published in the world, and what you had said yourself, I thought it incumbent upon me to tell you explicitly, and to repeat it, that I was not to be frightened.—Warburton. Letters from Dr. Lowth.

EXPLO'DE, v. } Fr. Exploder, explauder;
EXPLO'DER. } Lat. Explodere, to clap out
EXPLO'SION. } or off, (ex, and plaudere, to EXPLO'SIVE. } clap or beat.) See APLAUD.
To clap off, to drive off by clapping of hands; to go or cause to go off, to expel,—with much noise; and, generally, to expel or eject, to reject; to drive out (of use or practice.)

—— Him old and young
Exploded and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence
Unseen amid the throng.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

—— In vulgar nuptials
Priority is exploded, though there be
A difference in the parties; and shall I,
His vassal, from obscurity raised by him
To this so eminent light, presume t' appoint him
To do, or not to do, this, or that.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act iii. sc. 2.

Oracles, omens, portents, were generally exploded; the old fables of Elysian fields, and Pluto's kingdom, were grown ridiculous, and given over to poets and painters as the same author [Cicero] informs us.—Law. Theory of Religion, pt. ii.

As for the story of the Manucodiata, or bird of Paradise, which in the former age was generally received and accepted as true, even by the learned, it is now discovered to be a fable, and rejected and exploded by all men: those birds being well known to have legs and feet as well as others.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

We must not take patience here for a willingness of disposition to suffer, only where a man has no power to resist: according to the republican divinity of some scandalous explodere of the doctrine of passive obedience.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south, eruptive through the cloud;
And following slower, in explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.
Thomson. Summer.

Whose stately cities in the dark abrupt
Swallow'd at once, or vile in rubbish laid,
A nest for serpents; from the red abyss
New hills, explosive, thrown. Id. Liberty, pt. i.

Among th' obscene, the violent, the false,
Of justice and religion, truth and peace,
He [Enoch] spake exploded, and from menac'd death
To God withdrew. Glover. The Athenaid, b. xxx.

Thereat thé multitude that stood around,
Sent up at once a universal roar
Of boisterous joy: the sudden-bursting sound,
Like the explosion of a warlike store
Of nitrous grain, th' afflicted welkin tore.
West. Education.

Churches, play-houses, coffee-houses, all alike are destined to be mingled, and equalized, and blended into one common rubbish; and well-sifted and lixiviated, to crystallize into true democratick, explosive, insurrectionary nitre.
Burke. A Letter to a Noble Lord.

EXPLO'IT, v.
EXPLO'IT, n.
EXPLO'ITING, n.
EXPLO'ITURE.

Fr. n. Exploict, done, performed, says Skinner, (q.d.) explicatum, (see EXPLICATE,) or, according to Minshew, expletum, (see EXPLETE.) Menage, from explicare; thus, explicitum, explictum, explectum, expletum,—exploit.

"Fr. Exploicter,—to perform, despatch; act, execute, achieve," (Cotgrave.)

I dwell with hem that proude be,
And full of wiles and subtelte;
That worship of this worlde coueiten,
And great nede connen exploiten,
And gon and gadren great pitaunces.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Wherfore I say, all the enuy, all the langling, that welnie people vpon my seruauntes maken efte, is rather cause of exploit, than of any hindring.—Id. Testament of Love, b. i.

Admytte it to be thy foote, that is to say, thy seruaunte or factour, whose seruyce thou canste not lacke for the exploiture of suche affayres, as thou hast to dooe in thys worlde.—Udal. Marke, c. 9.

Surulue, and tell the westerne world
What we exployted haue:
How that to Rome, amidst her roofe,
The mayden sacke we gaue.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

One act there is reported of his, when he was neither generall, nor in any office at all, which he exploited in Thessaly, not inferiour to any one of his other worthy deeds.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 329.

She therefore besaught the Faerie Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exploit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Letter to Sir W. Raleigh.

The love and pleasure of hunting, carrieth men into mountains, woods, and forests: through frost and snow, after their game: shal not we then use the like sufferance in the needfull exploits of warre, which pastimes, sports, and delights, are wont to draw and fetch out of us?
Holland. Livie, p. 183.

He shewed himself (above all others) most forward in the enterprize, as having contributed (for the exploiting of this service) two thousand dragmes weight in silver, and two hundred targuets.—Id. Plutarch, p. 754.

To high exploits, the praises that belong
Live, but as nourish'd by the poet's song.
Lansdowne. To the Memory of Waller.

——— The spirit-stirring form
Of Cæsar raptur'd with the charm of rule
And boundless fame; impatient for exploits,
His eager eyes upcast, he soars in thought
Above all height. Dyer. The Ruins of Rome.

EXPLO'RE, v.
EXPLO'RATE, v.
EXPLORA'TION.
EXPLORA'TOR.
EXPLO'RATORY.
EXPLO'REMENT.
EXPLO'RER.

Fr. Explorer; It. Esplorare; Sp. Explorar; Lat. Explorare, i. e. ploratu tentare animum, to try to affect the mind by weeping; as they usually do who are endeavouring to obtain pardon for an offence; or are earnest to accomplish any thing or purpose, (Vossius.) Hence, generally, he adds, to seek or search, that you may learn.

To seek, search or enquire into; to try or prove by searching; to pry or examine into.

Then doth she see by spectacles no more,
She heare not by report of double spies;
Herself in instants doth all things explore;
For each thing's present, and before her lies.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul.

Not caring to observe the wind,
Or the new sea explore,
Snatcht from myselfe, how far behinde
Already I behold the shore.
F. Beaumont. Of Loving at First Sight.

They will nevertheless exclude their hornes, and therewith explorate their way as before.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

And since my refuter will find out a match for her out of the chayre of exploration, why should we not dance at the wedding.—Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. ii.

For the apostolical imposition of hands that there was an exploration of doctrine, and a profession of faith, the history doth manifestly witness. Acts, xix.—Id. Impos. of Hands.

You are to know, that this your imployment is, for the present, meerly exploratory and provisional, to give us a clear and distinct accompt of the present affairs, both how they stand at your arrival there, (being every day changeable,) and how they incline in the future.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 496.

Percy, their explorator, was let out like a raven, and sent as a spy, to descry, by the best inducements he could find, whether the state took hold of their proceedings or not.
Proceedings against Garnet, an. 1606.

It is surely very rare, as we are induced to believe from some enquiry of our own: from the trial of many who have been deceived; and the frustrated search of Porta, who, upon the exploremeut of many, could scarce finde one.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 13.

What cause so'er the wond'rous motion guide,
And press the ebb, or raise the flowing tide,
Be that your task, ye sages, to explore,
Who search the secret springs of nature's power.
Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

The use lately proposed of our hydrostatical way of exploration suggests to me another, which may be deduced from it as a kind of corollary.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p 463.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-ey'd Fancy, hovering o'er,
Scatters from her pictur'd urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
But ah! 'tis heard no more. Gray. Progress of Poesy.

On the report of the cowardly explorers of the land, they relapse again into their old delirium, "Wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and children should be a prey!"
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

EXPOLIA'TION. See EXPOLIATION.

EXPO'RT, v.
E'XPORT, n.
EXPORTA'TION.
EXPO'RTER.

Fr. Exporter; Lat. Exportare, to carry out, (ex, and portare, to carry.) To bear or carry out.

Exports,—articles of commerce carried out of one country or place, and imported, or carried into, another.

Likewise glorious followers who make themselves as trumpets, of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint businesse through want of secrecy; and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envie.—Bacon. Ess. Of Followers.

Whom, when their home-bred honesty is lost,
We disembogue on some fair Indian coast:
Thieves, panders, pattiards, sins of every sort,
Those are the manufacturers we export.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Being informed, that the English fleet was in great want of all sorts of naval stores, they [the Dutch] published a placart to prohibit the exportation of them under severe penalties.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 4.

But this advance will be but little, and will always keep within the bounds which the risque and trouble of melting down our coin shall set to it in the estimation of the exporter.—Locke. Concerning raising the Value of Money.

The ordinary course of exchange being an indication of the ordinary state of debt and credit between two places, must likewise be an indication of the ordinary course of their exports and imports; as these necessarily regulate that state.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 3.

The two principles being established, however, that wealth consisted in gold and silver, and that those metals could be brought into a country which had no mines, only by the balance of trade, or by exporting to a greater value than it imported; it necessarily became the great object of political œconomy to diminish as much as possible the importation of foreign goods for home consumption, and to increase as much as possible the exportation of the produce of domestic industry.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

EXPO'SE, v.
EXPO'SEDNESS.
EXPO'SING, n.
EXPOSI'TION.
EXPO'SITOR.
EXPO'SITORY.
EXPO'SURE.
EXPO'UND, v.
EXPO'UNDER.

Fr. Exposer; It. Esponere; Sp. Exponer; Lat. Exponere, (ex, and ponere; of uncertain origin,) to put, place or set out.

To put or lay out; put or lay open, (sc.) to view, for examination; to make clear or plain, to explain; to make known, to show openly, discover, disclose, make manifest.

Expound, is, by general usage, to lay open, (sc.) the meaning; and thus, to explain, to interpret.

Thanne he lefte the puple, and cam vnto an hous, and hise disciplis camen to him and seiden, expowne to us the parable of taris of the felde.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 13.

Amonges other Daniel was on,
That was the wisest child of everich on,
For he the dremes of the king expouned,
Wher as in Caldee clerk ne was ther non,
That wiste to what sin his dremes souned.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,102.

But sothly yet, some expositours
Grounding hem vpon old auethours,
Saine that Cadmus the famous old man, &c.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

And than he speaketh of that and this,
And maketh his exposicion
After his disposicion,
Of that he wold. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The occasion of his epistle is thys: Dardanus did write vnto S. Austē for the exposicīō of those wordes that Christ spake vnto the thefe saying: This daye shalt thou be with me in Paradyse.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 52.

And also the tongue, which is rayson's expositour, is depriued of his office as it appereth in them whyche are drunke, and them whyche haue greuous peynes in theyr head, procedynge of replecion.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. i.i.

A definition is a perfect sentence, whereby the veric nature of the thing itselfe, is set fourth and expounded.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol 37.

If question happen to be moued touchinge the meaninge of a lawe, first of al we must see, what order hath been vsed in the like cases in times past. For the custome and practise of the people, is the best expounder of the law.
Jewel. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 120.

But for all yt ye expounders do differ in the declaration of the metaphor.—Calvine. Shorte Declaration upon Ps. 87.

As he that hath espyde a vermeill rose,
To which sharpe thornes and briers the way forestall,
Dare not for dread his hardy hand expose,
But wishing it farre off his idle wish doth lose.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

But whilst mild Ell and good Samuel were
Busied with age, and th' altars sacred care,
To their wild sons they their high charge commit,
Who expose to scorn and hate both them and it.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iv.

By vertue of this act, the great expositours of the law, denie that any man is sacrosainct or inviolable: but (say they) it is enacted only, That whosoever hurt any of them shall be accursed.—Holland. Livie, p. 125.

Which his faire tongue (conceit's expositor)
Deliuers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged eares play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite rauished.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act ii. sc. 1.

And when we haue our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure; let vs meet,
And question this most bloody piece of worke,
To know it further. Id. Macbeth, Act ii. sc 3.

——— And sets Thercite
A slaue, whose gall coines slanders like a mint,
To match vs in comparisons with durt,
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How ranke so euer rounded in with danger.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

This was that woman, this that deadly wound,
That Proteus prophecide should him dismay;
The which his mother vainely did expound
To be heart-wounding loue, which should assay
To bring her sonne into his last decay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4

Both himselfe [Julian] and the expounders of visions, considering the present occasions, pronounced, that the day following, which was the foureteenth day before the kalends of April should be well observed.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 220

When all is said, it is a vain thing for any man to expect a tolerable easy passage through this world, unless he have the hopes of God's favour to support him under the multitude of evil accidents, which the state of human life will necessarily expose him to.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 9.

The Duke of Monmouth, who understood what a rabble was, and what troops were, looked on this as a mad exposing of themselves, and of their friends.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1685.

Nobody can think that any text of St. Paul's epistles has two contrary meanings, and yet so it must have to two different men, who taking two commentators of different sects for their respective guides into the sense of any one of the epistles, shall build upon their respective expositions.
Locke. Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epistles, Pref.

For those, who find they need help, and would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments from themselves in the great and approved points of their systems, as dangerous and not fit to be meddled with; or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators promiscuously.—Id. Ib.

But he [King James] spoke in the style of a conqueror who thought he was master, and therefore would limit himself by no promises, but such as were conceived in general words, which might be afterwards expounded at pleasure.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1693.

Then Mother Church did mightily prevail:
She parcel'd out the Bible by retail
But still expounded what she sold or gave;
To keep it in her power to damn or save.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

The Jewish doctors and Pharisees, though they be hypocrites, and covetous, and vain-glorious men, yet since they succeed Moses and the Prophets, in being teachers and expounders of the law of God; ye ought to hearken and attend to their teaching.
Dr Clarke. Paraphrase. Matthew, xxiii. 2.

And because we refuse to sacrifice to those, to whom we had formerly done, we are made to suffer extreme tortures: and being exposed to death, we rejoice, trusting that God will raise us up through his Christ, and render us incorruptible, impassible, and immortal.
Sharpe. Def. of Christianity (from Justin Martyr,) p. 127.

So that, on the whole, the exposedness to guilt or blame is left just as it was.—Edwards. On the Will, pt iii. s. 3.

Shall we then allow these two circumstances to compensate each other, to wit, monastic vows and exposing of children, and to be unfavourable, in equal degrees, to the propagation of mankind? I doubt the advantage is here on the side of antiquity.—Hume, Ess 11.

Amongst other expositions of which words, (in Zechariah, ch. iv. ver. 11, and 12,) Junius and Tremovius interpret them, to mean the various gifts and effusions of the Holy Spirit, which are by Christ derived upon the church
Thompson. Sickness, Note.

With these predictions of the Messiah, (predictions which by all expositors, Jews as well as Christians, by Rabbis of later times as well as by the more candid and more knowing Jews of earlier ages, are understood of the Messiah,) with these predictions Balaam intermixes many brief but eloquent assertions of the first principles of natural religion, the omnipotence of the Deity, his universal providence, and the immutability of his counsels.
Bp. Horsley. A Dissertation on the Prophecies.

This book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.
Johnson. Preface to his Abridged Dictionary.

They will regard with much more satisfaction, as he will contemplate with infinitely more advantage, whatever in his pedigree has been dulcified by an exposure to the influence of heaven in a long flow of generations, from the hard, acidulous, metallic tincture of the spring.
Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

But then, so unusual an exposure of the globe of the eye requires for its lubricity and defence, a more than ordinary protection of the eyelid, as well as a more than ordinary supply of moisture.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

And, if neglect had lavish'd on the ground
Fragment of bread, she would collect the same;
For well she knew, and quaintly could expound,
What sin it were to waste the smallest crumb she found.
Shenstone. The Schoolmistress.

The Pundits are the expounders of the Hindu Law; in which capacity two constantly attended the Supreme Court of Judicature, at Fort William.
Sir W. Jones. To Charles Chapman, Esq. Note.

EXPO'STULATE, v.
EXPOSTULA'TION.
EXPO'STULATORY.

Fr. Expostuler; It. Espostulare; Lat. Expostulare, ex, and postulare, which Vossius thinks is from the obsolete supine poscitum, (contracted into postum,) of the verb poscere, i. e. aliquid pro potestate ac jure petere: to seek or demand authoritatively, or as a right.

To demand or require, as a right; to remonstrate, as against an invasion of right; to dispute on matter of right; to dispute, to discuss, to debate; to investigate, to examine.

The reprobate (as obstinately ill)
Expostulating blasphemy doe use,
And with their crimes would burden others still,
Not to be clear'd, but that they may accuse.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Tenth Houre.

I haue great cause to expostulate with you for this your vnchristian, vnbrotherly, and most vniust handling of me.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 704.

Gonz. What I have done, sir, by the law of arms
I can and will make good.
Ast. I have no commission
To expostulate the act.
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act iii. sc. 1.

The same expostulation that Jeptha makes with Gilead, God also at the same time makes with Israel; ye haue forsaken me, and serued other Gods, wherefore should I deliuer you any more? goe and cry vnto the Gods whom ye haue serued.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Jeptha.

For if there had, the heathens, to whom he revealed it not, could not have been thus without excuse: but might have rationally expostulated the case with their great Judge, and demurr'd to the equity of the sentence, had they been condemned by him.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

The men too, as to different camps they go,
Join their sad voices to the public woe;
Impatient to the gods they raise their cry,
And thus expostulate with those on high.
Rowe. Lucan, b. ii.

Thus also he expostulates the case with us as pathetically, with as much affection and earnestness, as a tender father did with his rebellious son, Ezek. xxxiii. 11.
Beveridge, vol ii. Ser. 86.

The Queen sent the next day for the Duke of Marlborough, after some expostulations, she told him Harley should immediately leave his post, which he did within two days.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1708.

It was a long expostulatory letter full of freedom and as great wisdom.—Strype. Memorials, vol. ii. b. i. c. 22.

Are we not still children with all our beard and gravity about us, if we play till we quarrel? Our conduct, in this respect, is almost too absurd to admit of serious expostulation.—Knox, Ess. 119.

EXPRE'SS, v.
EXPRE'SS, n.
EXPRE'SS, adj.
EXPRE'SSEDLY.
EXPRE'SSIBLE.
EXPRE'SSION.
EXPRE'SSING, n.
EXPRE'SSIVE.
EXPRE'SSIVELY.
EXPRE'SSIVENESS.
EXPRE'SSLY.
EXPRE'SSMENT.
EXPRE'SSNESS.
EXPRE'SSURE.

Fr. Exprimer; It. Esprimere; Sp. Expressar; Lat. Exprimere, expressum, to press or squeeze out, (ex, and premere, to press or squeeze.)

To press or squeeze out, force out by pressure; to press or force out, (as,) the form or manner, the image; and thus, to present or represent, to portray, to delineate or describe the image or likeness, to resemble.

To press or force out; to utter or give utterance to; and thus, to present or represent, delineate or describe, the ideas or thoughts; to declare them, show or exhibit them clearly; in clear and firm marks or characters, terms or words; in decisive language. And, generally—

To represent, to delineate, to describe, to signify or designate, to denote.

An express,—a messenger or message despatched, for some express, i. e. some clear, direct or especial purpose.

Lady, thy bountie, thy magnificence,
Thy vertue and thy gret humanitee,
Ther may no tong expresse in no science.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 14,406.

In here expresse of wimmen may ye find,
That woman was the loose of all mankind.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6301.

But wel I wot, expresse withouten lie,
God bad us for to wex and multiplie:
That gentil text can I wel understond.—Id. Ib. v. 5609.

Redeth the Bible, and find it expresly
Of wine yeving to hem that haue justice.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,520.

But for finall conclusion,
I thynke a supplicacion,
With plaine wordes and expresse,
Writte vnto Venus the Goddesse.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

It is not we that can fynde out the Almightye: for in power, equite, & ryghteousnesse, he is hyer thã can be expressed.
Bible, 1551. Job.

For in those ii. ch. is no such matter to be seene, neyther yet is ther any expresse doctryne of vowes in all the whole wurk containing ix. bokes.—Bale. Apology, fol. 117.

But here muste we consider, wherfore God putteth this name Face expressedly.—Calvine. Foure Godlie Sers. Ser. 4.

Cæsar had expresselye commaunded him that he should not ioyne battell with his enemies before suche time as he saw his armye neare vnto their camp, to th' intẽt that assault might have ben made vpon them on al sides at ones.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 17.

A mighty man and tyrannous of conditions, named Eborym, as shall appeare by his condicions ensuynge, when the tyme convenyent of the expressement of them shall come.
Fabyan. Works, vol. i. c. 37.

'Twixt his two mighty armes him vp he snatcht,
And crusht his carcase so against his brest,
That the disdainfull soule be thence dispatcht,
And th' idle breath all vtterly exprest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

——— Thou shalt command
The Lydian Tmolus, and Campanian mounts,
To nod their grape-crown'd heads into thy bowls,
Expressing their rich juice.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act iv. sc. 1.

Some marke his words, as tokens fram'd t' expresse
The sharpe conclusion of a sad successe.
Sir J. Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

Seb. I perceiue in you so excellent a touch of modestie, that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keep in: therefore it chargeth me in manners, the rather to express myself.—Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 1.

Whereby [hieroglyphical pictures] they [the Ægyptians] discoursed in silence, and were intuitively understood from the theory of their expresses.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. v. c. 20.

It is sufficiently justifiable out of old coins, inscriptions, and express assertion, that the ancient character among the Greeks was almost the same with that which is now the Latins.—Selden. Illustrations of Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

All the gazers on the skies
Read not in faire heaven's stone,
Expresser truth, or truer glorie,
Than they might in her bright eyes.—B. Jonson, Epig. 40.

The defect in our tongue for the expressing of this, is a little repair'd by the use of the word sent, and so read it thus, God having raised up his son Jesus, gave him commission to bless us.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 525.

This [hieroglyphical pictures] many conceive to have been the primitive way of writing, and of greater antiquity then letters, and thus indeed might Adam well have spoken, who understanding the nature of things, had the advantage of natural expressions.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 20

Eternal God, (for whom whoever dare
Seek new expressions, do the circle square,
And thrust into strait corners of poor wit
Thee who art cornerless and infinite)
I would but bless thy name, not name thee now.
Donne. Upon the Translation of the Psalms.

You haue restrain'd yourselfe within the list of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 1.

Nature also is most expressively set forth with a biformed body, in reference to the differences betweene superior and inferior bodies.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 13.

John Prideaux, an excellent linguist, but so that he would make words wait on his matter, chiefly aiming at expressiveness therein.—Fuller. Worthies. Devonshire.

They were heathens, such as the Prophet speaks, had not the knowledge of God's law, (viz.) in the fulness and expressness of it; and yet they repented.—Glanvill, Ser. 9.

And now considering the expressness of all these places, I cannot see but that any duty of religion may be more easily evaded than this.—Id. Ser. 2.

And therefore for want of such an expressness in the meaning of this day's creation as is in the others, the mystery thereof may well be look'd upon as sealed and locked up from vulgar sight, and thereby the most concerning things in the whole Cabbala.
More. Def. of the Philosophical Cabbala, App. c. 5.

By the colour of his beard, the shape of his legge, the manner of his gate, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complection, he shall finde himselfe most feelingly personated.—Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 3.

There is a mysterie (with whom relation
Durst neuer meddle) in the soule of state;
Which hath an operation more diuine,
Then breath or pen can giue expressure to.
Id. Troil. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 3

When St. John Baptist came preaching repentance unto Israel, the people asked him, saying, What shall we do? meaning in what manner they should express their repentance: His answer was this, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none, and he that hath meat, let him do so likewise.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser 4.

We have shewn of time in particular, that it is so far from being consequent on God's existence, that it is absolutely incompatible with it, and cannot be applied to it without an express contradiction; the idea either of actual or possible change or succession necessarily accompanying all time, as our author himself allows; and God's sole existence as necessarily excluding both.—Law. Enquiry, c. 2. p. 93.

All that knew him, when they read them, did without any sort of doubting conclude that he [King Charles II.] never composed them: for he never read the Scriptures, nor laid things together, further than to turn them to a jest, or for some lively expression.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1685

Besides, the edges of these clouds are gilded with various and afrighting colours, the very edg of all seems to be of a pale fire colour, next that of a dull yellow, and nearer the body of the cloud a copper colour, and the body of the cloud which is very thick appears extraordinary black: and altogether it looks very terrible and amazing even beyond expression.—Dampier. Voyage, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 71.

"Is this," the serious said, "is this the man
Whose golden sayings, and immortal wit,
On large phylacteries expressive writ,
Were to the forehead of the rabbins ty'd,
Our youth's instruction, and our age's pride."
Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

The murrain at the end [of the 3d Georgic] has all the expressiveness that words can give it.

Addison. On Virgil's Georgics.

But Lockhart and Cunningham, the two lawyers on whose opinion they depended chiefly, said, that a commission to represent the king's person fell not under the notion of an office, and since it was not expressly named in the Acts of Parliament, they thought it did not fall within the general words of "all places and offices of trust."

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1682.

Now through the deep'ning wood's projected gloom,
To Dido's Cave with devious step we come,
Where the dim twilight of the arch above
Seems to express the queen's disastrous love.

Boyse. The Triumphs of Nature.

So far was Mr. Fox's bill from providing funds for it, as this ministry have wickedly done for this, and for ten times worse transactions, out of the publick estate, that an express clause immediately preceded, positively forbidding any British subject from receiving assignments upon any part of the territorial revenue, on any pretence whatsoever.

Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

This is a diphthong composed of our first and third vowels, and expressible, therefore, by them, as in the word Vaidya derived from Véda, and meaning a man of the medical cast: in Bengall it is pronounced as the Greek diphthong in Poimén, a shepherd, was probably sounded in ancient Greece.

Sir W. Jones. On the Orthography of Asiatic Words.

Tell how each beauty of her mind and face
Was brightened by some sweet, peculiar grace
How eloquent in every look
Through her expressive eyes her soul distinctly spoke.

Littelton. To Miss Lucy Fortescue.

As to any other method more agreeable to them than a congress, an alternative expressly proposed to them, they did not condescend to signify their pleasure.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

E'XPROBRATE, v. } Lat. Exprobrare, (ex, and probrum, which signifies, generally,—Any thing not consentaneous to virtue.)
EXPROBRA'TION. }

To hold out, to show forth, as vicious, shameful or scandalous; to reproach or upbraid with.

He [Demetrius] was sente agayne vnto Hyreanie his olde place of penaunce, and was rewarded with a payre of dyes of golde in exprobration of hys chyldishe lightnesse.

Golding. Justine, fol. 148.

The stork in heaven knoweth her appointed times, the turtle, crane, and swallow observe the time of their coming, but my people know not the judgment of the Lord. Wherein to exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of storks. Now if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii c. 27.

And long before this, it was so known a business that one city should have but one bishop, that Cornelius exprobrates to Novatus his ignorance.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 43.

If the Church of Rome do vse any such kind of silly exprobration, it is no such vgly thing to the eare, that wee should think the honour and credit of our religion to receiue thereby any great wound.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 9.

This chapter [Ezek. xvi. 30.] is the exactest history of the spiritual estate of the Jews, i. e. The elect of God, and the powerfulest exprobration of their sins, that all the writings under heaven can present to our eyes.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 561.

Yea, it will be a denial with scorn, with taunting exprobrations; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery.—South, vol. i. Ser. 3.

What remonstrances concerning the gentleness, kindness, and equity of his dealings, what exprobrations of their stubbornness and stupidity God did anciently make to Israel under that particular dispensation, (which yet in tendency and in representation may be deemed general) the same he might now use toward all mankind, under this universal œconomy.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

Prophet Micha: addressing himself to his corrupt and idolatrous countrymen, amongst his other exprobrations, ridicules, and, at the same time, instructs them, in this manner, Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, &c.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Notes.

EXPROPRIATE. } Lat. Ex, and proprius, perhaps from prope, (with r inserted,) near.
EXPROPRIA'TION. }

"Fr. Exproprie,—expropriated, put from the propriety of, deprived of all propriety in," (Cotgrave.)

The soul of man then is capable of a state of much peace and equanimity, in the exterior bands and agitations, but this capacity is rather an effect of the expropriation of our season, than a vertue resulting from her single capacity.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 2.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will (if I may so call it) to God, and thereby (as it were) entrusted him to will for you, all his disposals of, and dispensations towards you are in effect the acts of your own will, with the advantage of their being directed and specified by him: an advantage that does at once assure you both of their rectitude and success.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 255.

EXPU'GN, v. From Lat. Expugnare, to beat, to overpower. Cotgrave has, "Expugner,—to expugne, force, break open, or into by violence; win by assault; vanquish, conquer, overcome. Expugnable,—expugnable, &c. Expugnateur,—an expugner, &c. Expugnation,—an expugnation."

Ouer and besides all this, secretlie and sleightlie they suborned certain men, which when they could not expugne him by arguments and disputations, should by intreatie and faire promises, or any other meanes allure him to recantation: perceiuing otherwise what a great wound they should receiue, if the archbishop had stood stedfast in his sentence: and again on the other side, how great profit should they get, if he as the principall standerd bearer should be ouerthrown.—Fox. Mart. p. 1110. Recantation of Dr. Cranmer.

When the reuengefull flames of Troy, properly called Ilion, then the principall citie of all Asia, had perfected the more than tenne yeares' siege of the Grecians expugning of the same, then Æneas, &c.

Warner. Addition to the Sec. Book of Albion's Eng.

Since the nasturtia are singly, and alone as it were, the most effectual and powerful agents in conquering and expugning that cruel enemy, it were enough to give the salletdresser direction how to choose, mingle, and proportion his ingredients.—Evelyn. Discourse of Sallets.

EXPU'LSE. See EXPELL.

EXPU'NGE, v. } Lat. Expungere, ex, and pungere, to prick; properly (says Gessner) applied to letters, when they are struck out, puncto styli.
EXPU'NCTION. }
EXPU'NGING, n. }

To strike out; to efface.

Yet do they afford our junior capacities a frequent occasion of error, setling impressions in our tender memories, which our advanced judgements generally neglect to expunge.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 9.

There be also books which are partly usefull and excellent, partly culpable and pernicious; this work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the common-wealth of learning be not damnified.

Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

Every step was to be made by a vote, against which many lords protested; and the reasons given in some of their protestations were thought to be so injurious to the house, that they were by vote ordered to be expunged; a thing that seldom happens.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1701.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expunging made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick.—Swift.

Is every word in the declaration from Downing-street, concerning their conduct, and concerning ours and that of our allies, so obviously false that it is necessary to give some new invented proofs of our good faith in order to expunge the memory of this perfidy?

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let 3.

EXPU'RGATE, v. } Lat Expurgare, atum. to cleanse out, (ex, and purgare, to cleanse, to purge.)
EXPURGA'TION.
EXPU'RGATOR.
EXPU'RGATORY.
EXPURGATO'RIOUS.
EXPU'RGE, v.
EXPU'RGING, n. }

To cleanse or clear out, to eject or expel.

The watry matter the two kidnies expurgate, by those emulgent veines, and vreteres.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 18.

That glosse would tel us more; and so would Gratian himself, if their tongues were not clipt by a gullitie expurgation.—Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, s. 3.

And wise men cannot but know, that arts and learning want this expurgation: and if the course of truth be permitted unto itself; like that of time and uncorrected computations, it cannot escape many errors which duration still enlargeth.—Brown. Vulgar Errours. To the Reader.

Henricus Boxhornius was one of the principal expurgators.—Jenkins. Hist. Ec. of Councils, p. 6.

After all your monkish prohibitions, and expurgatorious indexes, your gags and snaffles.

Milton. Animad. upon Remonstrants' Defence.

Herein there surely wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

It was a rude kind of blasphemy, but not much more than that which their severest men do say, and were never corrected by their expurgatory indices.

Bp. Taylor. The Real Presence, Ep. Ded.

Which course Leo the Xth, and his successors followed, until the Council of Trent, and the Spanish Inquisition engend'ring together, brought forth, or perfected those catalogues, and expurging Indexes, that rake through the entrails of many an old good author, with a violation worse than any could be offer'd to his tomb.—Milton. Areopagitica.

What courses they have taken for the prohibiting of those authors which they censure as heretical, and for the expurging of those of their own, whom they dare not deface, I refer my reader to the painfull and useful observations of D. James.—Bp. Hall. The Peace Maker, s. 20.

It ought here to be remarked, that this mode of conviction not only concludes the party has failed in his expurgatory proof, but it is sufficient also to subject to the penalties and incapacities of the law the infant upon whose account the person has been so convicted

Burke. Tracts on the Popery Law.

There are some annotations reprehensible in another point of view, which I should gladly have omitted, but they have so long retained their places, that such an expurgatory liberty seemed to me to be going beyond the bounds of my "limited service."—Boswell. Adv. to Shakespeare.

EXQUI'RE, v. } Fr. Exquis; It. Esquisito, Sp. Exquisito; Lat. Exquisitus, from exquirere, to search out, (ex, and quærere, to search. See CONQUIRE.) Exquisite is,— E'XQUISITE. }
E'XQUISITELY. }
E'XQUISITENESS. }

Sought, picked, culled, chosen or choice, select; and thus, excellent, perfect, exact, elaborate.

Who hath ben there and liking for to here
His second tong, and ternes exquisite
Of rethorike the practike he might lere
In brefe sermon.—Chaucer. The Testament of Creseide.

Askyng his iourney first into Egypt, and afterward to Babylo, to learn perfectly the mouing of the planets, and to searche out the beginning of the world, whereof it was made, he [Pythagoras] attained meruelous exquisite knowledge.

Golding. Iustine, fol. 34.

Certesse it is great pity, that such fine wits so exquisitely polished withal kinde of learning, and traded in so goodly lawes and institutions, should be so far ouer-seene as to commit so heinous an act.—Id. Ib. fol. 42.

——— Can
Thy years determine like the age of man,
That thou shouldst my delinquencies exquire,
And with variety of fortunes tire.

Sandys. Paraphrase of Job, p. 16.

Of such whom Fame did most accomplish'd call
The naked snowes he seuerally perceiued,
Then drew th' idæa which his soul conceiued,
Of that which was most exquisite of all.

Stirling. Aurora, son. 3.

By pencils this was exquisitely wrought;
Rounded in all the curious would behold,
Where life came out, and met the painter's thought.
The force was tender, though the strokes were bold.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c 6.

Howbeit, the most probable opinion is, that they were so called of separation; because they were or would seeme to bee separated from others: first, in cleanenesse of life; secondly, in dignitie; thirdly, in regard of the exquisiteness of those obseruations, whereto they were separated.

Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ii. c. 8. s. 3.

Where greatness is to Nature's works deny'd.
In worth and beauty it is well supply'd:
In a small space the more perfection's shown,
And what is exquisite in little's done.—Yalden. Insect.

His [the younger Pliny] ingenuous manner of owning it [passion for fame] to a friend, who had prompted him to undertake some great work, is exquisitely beautiful, and raises him to a certain grandeur above the imputation of vanity.—Spectator, No. 555.

Christ suffered only the exquisiteness and heights of pain, without any of those mitigations, which God is pleased to temper and allay it with, as it befalls other men; like a man who drinks only the spirits of a liquor separated and extracted from the dull, unactive body of the liquor itself.

South, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

But can these men after all their confidence produce any one person in the world, who by the exquisiteness of his natural temper hath ever walked upon the waters, or poised himself in the air, or kept himself from being singed in the fire.

Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 9.

One altar erected by the late bishop, of the finest marbles, chastest decorations, and best proportions, cannot fail to attract the eye of the observer; it is exquisite in its kind, and was, in our opinion, almost the only object in the cathedral worthy of attention.—Eustace. Classical Tour, vol. i. c. 7.

It is the same in the present instance, molle atque facetum, i. e. a soft-flowing versification, and an exquisitely finished expression: the two precise, characteristic merits of Virgil's rural poetry.—Hurd. Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

EX-SA'NGUIOUS. (Corruptly written Exanguious.) Lat. Exsanguis; Fr. Exangue; ex, and sanguis, blood.

Without blood, bloodless.

The third is the paucity of blood observed in this animal, scarce at all to be found but in the eye, and about the heart; which defect being observed, inclined some into thoughts, that the ayr was a sufficient maintenance for these exanguious parts.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 21.

The exanguious [insects] alone, by what that learned and critical naturalist, my honoured friend, Dr. Martin Lister, hath already observed and delineated, I conjecture, cannot be fewer than 3000 species, perhaps many more.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The whole heart [a flounder's] observed for a pretty while such a succession of motion in its divided and exanguious pieces, as I had taken notice of in them, whilst they were coherent.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 69.

EXSCI'ND, v. Lat. Exscindere, to cut out or off, (ex, and scindere; Gr. Σχιζ-ειν, to cut off, to split off.)

To cut off; and thus to destroy.

In the most terrible and amazing examples of divine justice, (such as were the ejecting and excluding mankind from Paradise; the general destruction of the Deluge; and exscinding, and extirpation of the Amorites, together with other the inhabitants of Canaan.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

EXSCRI'BE, v. Lat. Exscribere, to write out, (ex, and scribere, to write.)

To write out; and thus, to copy.

I that have beene a louer, and could shew it,
Though not in these, in rithmes not wholly dumbe,
Since I exscribe your sonnets, am become
A better lover, and much better poet.

B. Jonson. To the Lady Mary Worth.

EXSE'CTION. Lat. Exsecare, to cut out or off, (ex, and secare, sectum, to cut.)

A cutting out.

Sometimes also they [frogs] would nimbly leap first out of the vessel, and then about the room, surviving the exsection of their hearts, some about an hour, and some longer.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 69.

And divers hazardous operations in surgery, such as are arteriotomy, the exsection of the spleen, and other parts, were, or should have been, first attempted upon brutes, and then practised on human bodies.—Id. Ib. p. 169.

EX-SI'CCATE, v. } Corruptly written Exiccate, &c. Lat. Exsiccare, atum, to dry out, (ex, and siccare, to dry.)
EXSI'CCANT, adj.
EXSI'CCANT, s.
EXSICCA'TION.

To dry or drain out; to press out moisture; to free from moisture or humidity.

They enter into emplastres, which are devised and made for to exiccate.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 16.

If in a full dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation or exhalation, the exsiccated powder hath lost its wings, and ascends not unto the loadstone.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

Air exsiccates and draws to itself.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 69.

That which is concreted by exsiccation or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth, dirt, and clay.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

It is one of the ingredients also to those emplastres which are devised for gentle refrigeratives and exsiccatives.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 13.

In generall, any rudale whatsoever is exiccative, in which regard it agreeth well with salves and healing plastres.

Id. Ib. b. xxxv. c. 6.

If it be dry bare, you must apply next to it some dry or exsiccant medicine.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vi. c. 5.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccants, as bones.—Id. Ib.

I cannot imagine after what manner the preservation of bodies uncorrupted for many years, without embalming or other artifice, can be performed, except it be by intense natural cold, or by exsiccating sands.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 196.

Now what more easily refuted, than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exsiccation of the earth? as if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere?—Bentley, Ser. 4.

These last words I add, because that, when there is an obstruction, or any other expulsion of the menstruum by heat, if it be total it is called exsiccation.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 338.

Had the exsiccation been progressive, such as we may suppose to have been produced by an evaporating heat, how came it to stop at the point at which we see it?

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

EX-SOLU'TION. Corruptly written Exolution. Lat. Exsolutio, from Exsolvere, exsolutum, (ex, and solvere, to loosen.) See DISSOLVE.

Fr. Exolution,—a faintness or looseness in all parts of the body.

And if any have been so happy as truely to understand Christian annihilation, extasis, exolution, liquefaction, transformation, the kisse of the spouse, gustation of God, and ingression into the divine shadow, they have already had an handsome anticipation of heaven: the glory of the world is surely over, and the earth in ashes unto them.

Brown. Urne Burial, c. 5. p. 30.

EX-SPOLIA'TION. Corruptly written Expoliation. Fr. Expolier, to deprive or bereave of. Lat. Ex, and spoliare; Spolium, Tooke derives from A.S. Spill-an, privare, to deprive, to divest.

Now thy bloody passion begins: a cruel expoliation begins that violence; againe doe these grim and mercilesse soldiers lay their rude hands upon thee, and strip thee naked.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Crucifixion.

EX-STI'MULATE. } Corruptly written Exstimulate. Lat. Exstimulare, to spur or goad, (ex, and stimulus; Gr. Στιζ-ειν, pung-ere, to prick.) See STIMULATE.
EXSTIMULA'TION.

To spur or goad on; to incite; to sharpen; to quicken.

That is, the fat and pitch being cleaving bodies, and the air continually extimulating the parts; by the action of the one, nature was provoked to expell, but by the tenacity of the other forced to retain.—Brown. Vulgar Err. b. ii. c. 5.

The choler is the naturall glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily into the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

Hence proceed most of the vertues, and qualities (as we call them) of bodies; but the air intermixt, is without vertues, and maketh things insipide and without any extimulation.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 841.

EX-STRUCT, v. } Corruptly written Extruct, &c. Lat. Extruere, extructum, (ex, and struo, to build out, pile up.)
EXSTRU'CTIVE.

If it were not as easy for us to say, that papistry is both affirmative and extructive of all wickedness.

Fulke. Answer to Fraine's Declaration, (1580.) p. 41.

These high extructed spires he writ
That mortal Delius must quit.

Byrom. Remarks on Horace, b. ii. Ode 3.

EX-SU'CCOUS. Corruptly written Exuccous. Lat. Exsuccus, without moisture, (ex, and succus, moisture.)

Without moisture, juice, or sap, and therefore, dry.

And this is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in some manner also in that which is brought exsuccous and dry unto us.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

The reticulum by those crossed oels, makes a further digestion, in the dry and exuccous part of the ailment received from the first ventricle.—Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

EXSU'CTION. Lat. Exsug-ere, ex-suctum, to suck out, (ex, and sug-ere, to suck; A. S. Succ-an.)

To suck out, to draw out, exhaust or extract by suction.

What operation the exsuction of the air hath on other liquors, as oil, wine, spirit of vinegar, milk.

Glanvill, Ess. 3.

In his book of the air we have a great improvement of the Magdeburgh experiment, of emptying glass vessels by exsuction of the air to far greater degrees of evacuation, ease, and conveniences.—Id. Ib.

This bladder being conveyed into the receiver, and the cover luted on, the pump was set to work, and after two or three exsuctions of the ambient air (whereby the spring of that which remained in the glass was weakened) the imprisoned air began to swell in the bladder.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 18.

EXSUFFLA'TION. } The first folio of Shakespeare reads Exufflicate. Hanmer substituted Exsuffolate. Todd says it should be Exsufflicate; and means contemptible. (See Shakespeare, by Boswell.) Exsufflare, it is true, is explained by Du Cange (consequentially) to signify contemnere, despuere, rejicere; arising from the custom in the Romish administration of baptism, of renouncing the devil and all his works, exsufflando et despuendo, by blowing and spitting him away. Hence also, the application of exsufflare, and exsufflatio (common words among early Latin ecclesiastical writers,) to a species of exorcism. (See Du Cange, and Spelman, and the quotation from Puller.) Exsufflation is used by Bacon in its ordinary sense. And—

EXSU'FFLICATE.

Exufflicate, in Shakespeare, is not improbably a misprint for Exsufflate, i.e. efflate or efflated, puffed out, and consequently, exaggerated, extravagant, —to which blow'd is added, not so much for the sake of a second epithet, with a new meaning, as of giving emphasis to the first.

The primitive Church used, in the first admission of infants to the entrance of a new birth to a spiritual life, pray against the power and frauds of the devil; and that brought in the ceremony of exsufflation for ejecting of the devil.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 7. s. 1.

So of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning. The next is, when it will fly up, but with ease return. The next is, when it will fly upwards over the helm by a kind of exsufflation without vapouring.

Bacon. Physiological Remains.

——— Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turne the businesse of the soule
To such exsufflicate, and blow'd surmises,
Matching thy inference.—Shakes. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

That wondrous number of ceremonies in exorcism, exsufflation, use of salt, spittle, inunction, &c. in the church of Rome required.—Puller. Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 252.

EX-SU'PERANCE. Corruptly written Exuperance. Lat. Ex-superare, to pass over or beyond.

A passing over or beyond; an excess.

The exuperance of the density of A to water is 10 degrees, but the exuperance of B to the same water is 100 degrees.

Digby. Of Bodies, c. 10.

EXSU'SCITA'TION. Lat. Exsusciture, ex, and suscitare, (i. e. sursum citare,) to awaken.

An awakening.

Virtue is not a thing that is merely acquired, and transfused into us from without, but rather an exsuscitation and raising up of those intellectual principles, pro re nata, and according as the circumstances of human actions invite, which were essentially engraven and sealed upon the soul at her first creation.

Hallywell. Excellency of Moral Virtue, (1692.) p. 84.

E'XTANT. } Etymology requires Ex-stant. Lat. Ex-stans, pres. part. of exstare, to stand out.
E'XTANCE.
E'XTANCY.

Standing out; standing or being above; rising or remaining above; exposed to view; being or remaining. See EXIST.

Though for no other cause, yet for this, that posteritie may know, we haue not loosely through silence permitted things to passe awaye as in a dreame, there shall be for men's information extant thus much concerning the present state of the church of God established amongst vs, and their careful endeavour which would haue vpheld the same.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, Pref.

The British story says, Brute built it, [Tours,] (so also Nennius,) and from one Turon, Brute's nephew there buried, gives it the name. Homer is cited for testimony; in his works extant 'tis not found.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion. s. 1

I believe [Ovid] was not only acquainted with the Mosaical history, but with most of those writings that were extant in that time, containing the origination of the world and mankind; though he mingle his own fancies with what he has so learned.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 248.

There is nothing more frequent among us than a sort of poems entitled Pindarick odes; pretending to be written in imitation of the manner and style of Pindar, and yet I do not know that there is to this day extant in our language, one ode contrived after his model.

Congreve. Discourses on the Pindaric Ode

[This] renders clear a different effect as to the swelling and extancies of the parts, then we find it in works where this method [of perspective] has not been observed.

Evelyn. Sculpture, c. 8.

And then it is odds but the order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions in point of situation will be altered likewise.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 687

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, he must answer who asked it, who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unbeing; who hath in his intellect the ideal existences of things and entities before their extances.

Brown. Christian Morals, iii. 25.

There are some ancient writings still extant, which pass under the name of Sibylline oracles; but these oracles "seem to have been all, from first to last, and, without any exception, mere impostures."—Melmoth. Cicero, b. i. Let. 12.

E'XTASY, v.
E'XTASY, n.
EXTA'TICK.
EXTA'TICAL.

Also written Ecstasy. Fr. Ecstase; It. Estasi; Sp. Extasi; Gr. Εκστασις, from Εξιστασθαι, to remove from its place; εξ, from, and ιστ-ασθαι, to place.

The removal of any thing from its place; applied (met.) to the amotion or emotion of the mind, the unsettling of the powers of the mind, (from whatever cause,) and, consequentially, to the loss of the senses; to madness; to any excess of emotion or passion, of joy or grief, hope or fear, rapture, delight, enthusiasm.

It is now more commonly restricted to excess of joy or delight.

To extasy, the verb, is,—to eurapture, to transport.

Leo. They are too slow, despatch new messengers,
To entreat 'em fairly hither, I am extasi'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act v. sc. 1.

At hearing this, they us'd to be so extasi'd and impassion'd, as presently to tear their garments.

Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 1.

The persons meeting together to compare and unite their joyes, and their Eucharist, and then made prophetical and inspired, must needs have discoursed like seraphims, and the most extasied order of intelligencies.

Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 2.

He maruail'd more, and thought he yet did dreame,
Not well awak't, or that some extasie
Assotted had his sense, or dazed was his eye.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

Which when the principall person of the embassage once heard, even hee, whose big and brave words a little before the whole senate house was hardly able to containe, fell downe flat before them in a swoune and extasie.

Holland. Livius, p. 1179.

Qu. This is the very coynage of your braine.
This bodilesse creation extasie is very cunning in—
Ham. Extasie!
My pulse as yours doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthfull musicke. It is not madnesse
That I haue vttered: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word, whiche madnesse
Would gambol from.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

Which suddein fit, and half extatick stoure
When the two fearefull women saw, they grew
Greatly confused in behavioure.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

And whether that which we call extasy, be not dreaming with the eyes open, I leave to be examined.

Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 19.

This they manage at first by graue nods, and secret whispers, by deep sighs, and extatick motions, by far-fetched discourses, and tragical stories, till they find the people capable of receiving their impressions, and then seem most unwilling to mention that which it was at first their design to discover.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 7.

When the mind is conversant about the divine objects, the innumerous and (as to our way of apprehension) manifold prospects they afford, are such, both for excellency and number, that the mind can never exhaust that fountain of rational, and perhaps extatical delights.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 762.

But, hark, methinks I hear her hallow'd tongue!
In distant trills it echoes o'er the tide;
Now meets mine ear with warbles wildly free,
As swells the lark's meridian extasy.

Mason. Ode 6. To Independency.

When the Christian army, after a tedious march towards the land of Canaan, came within view of the Holy City, and beheld afar off the towers and turrets of Jerusalem, they were so extasied with joy, that they made the heavens ring with triumphant shouts and acclamations.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4. s. 5.

EXTE'MPORE, n.
EXTE'MPORE, adj.
EXTE'MPORE, ad.
EXTE'MPORAL.
EXTE'MPORALLY.
EXTEMPORA'NEAN.
EXTEMPORA'NEOUS.
EXTE'MPORARY.
EXTE'MPORIZE, v.

Compounded of the Lat. Ex, and tempore, out of the time; and used as noun, adjective, and adverb.

Arising from or out of the time, the occasion; quick, sudden, prompt; and thus, opposed to—prepared, premeditated, deliberate.

Let no poetaster command or entreat
Another extempore verses to make.

B. Jonson. Miscel. Rules for the Tavern Academy.

Which he did with that readiness and sufficiency, as at once gave testimony to his ability, and to the evidence of the truth he asserted; which, amidst the disadvantage of extempore against premeditation, dispelled with ease and perfect clearness all the sophisms that had been brought against him.—Fell. Life of Hammond.

And many you may hear to report, that there be certaine poetical persons, practised in versifying, sit yet about the oracle, for to receive and catch [illegible] words there delivered; which presently and extempore they reduce and contrive into verse, metre, and rhime, as if they were panniers to bestow all the answers in.—Holland. Plutarch, p 977.

The reason whereof being not perceiued, but by greater intention of braine then our nice minds for the most part can well away with, faine we would bring the world, if we might, to think it but a needlesse curiositie, to rip vp any thing further then extemporall readines of wit doth serue to reach vnto.—Hooker. Ser. On the Nature of Pride.

——— The quicke comedians
Extemporally will stage vs, and present
Our Alexandrian reuels.—Shakes. Ant. & Cleop. Act v. sc. 2.

And for those other faults of barbarisme, Dorick dialect, extemporaneas stile, tautologies, apish imitation, &c.

Burton. Democritus, to the Reader, p. 9.

I had not time to lick it into forme, as she doth her young ones, but even so to publish it, as it was first written, quicquid in buccam venit, in an extemporaneas stile, as I do commonly all other exercises.—Id. Ib. p. 12.

God feeds his people with extemporary provisions, that by needing always they may learn to pray to him, and by being still supplied, may learn to trust him for the future, and thank him for that is past, and rejoyce in the present.

Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. ii. Dis. 12.

Here it may be observed, that as in their publick prayer one pray'd, and others held their peace; so it was in their singing, at least in that singing which was of extempore hymns by the impulse of the Spirit.

Locke. On 1 Cor. c. 14. Note (n.)

For (first) the accustoming one's self to make extemporal reflections, and that upon all kind of occasions, does by degrees bring the mind to a readiness of conception, which keeps a man from being easily surprized by the subject he has occasion to consider, and enables him oftentime to surprize his hearers.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 347.

But if it happen, (as it often will in extemporaneous discourse) that a philosopher be not rightly understood, either because he has not the leisure, no more than a design to explain himself fully, or because the persons he converses with bring not a competent capacity and attention; he then runs a greater danger than before.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 54.

And so whoever has the legislative or supream power of any commonwealth, is bound to govern by establish'd standing laws, promulgated and known to the people, and not by extemporary decrees.—Locke. Of Civil Government.

It seems to me the more probable opinion, that he rather imitated the fine raileries of the Greeks which he saw in the pieces of Andronicus, than the coarseness of all his old countrymen in their clownish extemporary way of jeering.

Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

Certainly the extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

He [Crichton] then visited Padua, where he engaged in another publick disputation, beginning his performance with an extemporal poem in praise of the city and the assembly then present, and concluding with an oration equally unpremeditated in commendation of ignorance.—Adventurer, No. 81.

To those we owe his famous book of fragments, composed occasionally, and taken as an extemporaneous cordial, each stronger than the other, to support himself under his frequent paroxysms.—Warburton. Of Ld. Bolingbroke's Philosophy.

There is no doubt but that the practice which prevails among some respectable sects, of filling up a long portion of time in their public service, with extemporary prayer, has contributed greatly to increase the length of prayers, beyond the limits both of reason and of sincere and attentive devotion.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 23.

EXTE'ND, v.
EXTE'NDABLE.
EXTE'NDEDLY.
EXTE'NDER.
EXTE'NDIBLE.
EXTE'NDLESSNESS.
EXTENSIBI'LITY.
EXTE'NSIBLE.
EXTE'NSILE.
EXTE'NSION.
EXTE'NSIONAL.
EXTE'NSIVE.
EXTE'NSIVELY.
EXTE'NSIVENESS.
EXTE'NSOR.
EXTE'NSURE.
EXTE'NT, n.

Fr. Estendre; It. Estendere; Sp. Extender; Lat. Extendere, to stretch out, (ex, and tendere, to stretch; Gr. Τειν-ειν.) See DISTEND.

To stretch out, to reach out; to spread; to spread over; to dilate or display; to enlarge, to magnify, to increase, to expand, to diffuse, to amplify, to widen; to lengthen out, to prolong.

For the legal application, see the quotation from Blackstone.

In his auhtend gere that William was regnand,
Extendours he sette forto extend the land,
Eridam & baronie how mykelle thei helde.

R. Brunne, p. 83.

& William wist of alle what it suld amounte
Of lordyng & of thralle the extente thorgh accounte.

Id. Ib.

Flemer of fendes, out of him and here
On which thy limmes faithfully extenden,
Me kepe, and yeve me might my lif to amenden.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4881.

Therefore men and women, hauinge their bodies feble, and their breathe louse, and not firme, must reade oftentimes loude, and in a base voyce, extendyng out the wind pipe, and other passages of the breath.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 35.

Alexander in the meane season came to the Ryuer of Tanais, where hee enclosed aboute wyth a wall so much ground as his campe did conteyne, extendyng in compasse lx. furlonges, and named the same cittie Alexandria.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 193.

In this no sorenes is felt, but onely an heuynesse with extension or thrustinge out of the body.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 5.

Who thus, both having gain'd a glorious end,
Soon ended that great day; that set so red,
As all the purple plains that wide extend,
A sad tempestuous season witnessed.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Mes. Labienus (this is stiffe-newes)
Hath with his Parthian force
Extended Asia: from Euphrates his conquering
Banner shooke, from Syria to Lydia,
And to Ionia.—Shakes. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 2.

Over. Good! good! conspire
With your new husband, lady; second him
In his dishonest practices; but when
This manor is extended to my use,
You'll speak in an humbler key, and sue for favour.

Massinger. New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act v. sc. 1.

But both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Aboue the water were on high extent,
And faynd to wash themselues incessantly;
Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Let thy faire wisdome, not thy passion sway
In this vncluill, and vnjust extent
Against thy peace.—Shakes. Twelfth Night, Act iv. sc. 1

——— Yet there lives a foolish creature
Call'd an under-sheriff, who, being well paid, will serve
An extent on lords or lowns' land.

Massinger. The City Madam, Act v. sc. 2.

The rule of Solon, concerning the territory of Athens, is not extendible unto all, allowing the distance of six foot unto common trees, and nine for the fig and olive.

Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 4.

Certain molecule seminales must be supposed to make up that defect, and to keep the world and its integrals from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 10.

The Earl of Bristol addressed their lordships in these words: "My lords; being to speak unto your lordships somewhat more extendedly than what is my use, and upon a subject wherein there may be, perhaps, not only difference, but even fervour of opinions, I find myself obliged," &c.

Parliamentary History. 13 Charles II. 1660.

Our love of one opinion induceth us to embrace it; and our hate of another doth more than fit us for its rejection: And, that love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 13.

We know too, by the chymical analysis of a muscule, that it is compounded of divers kind of principles. But of what just number they are, or in what precise manner, they are mixed together so as to give a fiber extensibility, and all its other qualities, who can say?

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 5.

For Reason put t' her best extension,
Almost meets Faith, and makes both centres one.

Donne. On the Death of Prince Henry.

You run upon these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires.—More. Divine Dialogues.

——— But these two
Make the rest ductile, malleable, extensive.

B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act ii. sc. 3.

For let it [Westminster] be taken (as truly it ought) extensively with the liberty of Lancaster from Temple Bar, and it filleth as much ground (not to say containeth more reasonable souls) than any city in the land.

Fuller. Worthies. Westminster.

The cheerful ruby then, much lov'd,
That doth revive the spirit,
Whose kind to large extensure grown,
The colour so inflamed
Is that admired mighty stone
The carbuncle that's named.

Drayton. Muses Elysium, Nymph. 9.

And instantly an embassy is sent
To Charles of France, to will him to restore
Those territories, of whose large extent
The English kings were owners of before.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flowery plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontrol'd and boundless reign.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. i.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c. 1.

The extenders of empire are admired and commended, however they doe it, although with cruel wars, or by any unjust means.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

I exposed a copper box of a pear fashion, which did bear three several freezings, by reason of the great extensibility of that metal, but at the fourth essay, it cracked all along one side of it, almost to the screw.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 706.

In proportion as these small [blood] vessels become solid, the larger must of course become less extensile, and more rigid —Armstrong. Of Preserving Health, b. ii. Note 6.

§ 15. If any one ask me, what this space, I speak of, is? I will tell him, when he tells me what his extension is. For to say, as is usually done, that extension is to have partes extra partes, is to say only, that extension is extension: for what am I the better inform'd in the nature of extension, when I am told that extension is to have parts that are extended, exterior to parts that are extended, i. e. extension consists of extended parts.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 13. § 15.

Neither could Saint Peter's charge be more extensive than was that of the other apostles; for they had a general and unlimited care of the whole church; that is, according to their capacity and opportunity.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

For what a power must that be (how unconceivably great both intensively and extensively must it be!) which could so expeditely and easily rear such a stupendious vast frame! vast beyond the reach of our sense, of our imagination, of any rational collection that we can make.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 12.

Here, by the by, we take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents. I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The peroneus longus helps to constrict the foot, and to direct the power of the other extensors towards the ball of the great toe.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 2. (Note 8.)

Yet he [Leighton] gave his vote for it, not having sufficiently considered the extent of the words, and the consequences that might follow on such an act: [assenting to the King's supremacy:] for which he was very sorry, as long as he lived.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1669.

Rate not th' extension of the human mind
By the plebeian standard of mankind,
But by the size of those gigantic few,
Whom Greece and Rome still offer to our view.
Jenyns. On the Immortality of the Soul.

One great cause of our insensibility to the goodness of the Creator, is the very extensiveness of his bounty.
Paley. Theology, c. 26.

It is evident, that the reciprocal energetic motion of the limbs, by which we mean motion with force in opposite directions, can only be produced by the instrumentality of opposite or antagonist muscles, of flexors and extensors answering to each other.—Id. Ib. c. 9.

One of the chief reasons commonly assigned for the fitness of the time of Christ's appearing in the world, was the extent of learning and commerce through the then known parts of it; which tended very much to open men's minds, and qualify them to receive his institution.
Law. Theory of Religion, pt. i.

What antic notions form the human mind!
Perversely mad, and obstinately blind.
Life in its large extent is scarce a span,
Yet, wondrous frenzy, great designs we plan,
And shoot our thoughts beyond the date of man!
Cotton. An Allusion to Horace, b. ii. Ode 16.

The process hereon is usually called an extent or extenda facias, because the sheriff is to cause the lands, &c. to be appraised to their full extended value, before he delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how soon the debt will be satisfied.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 26.

EXTE'NUATE, v.
EXTE'NUATE, adj.
EXTENUA'TION.
EXTE'NUATOR.

Fr. Exténuer; It. Estennare; Sp. Extenuar; Lat. Extenuare, (ex, and tenuare, to thin or make thin.) See ATTENUATE.

To thin, to rarefy; to make thin, slender or small; to lessen or diminish, weaken or impair; to weaken the force, lessen the consequences; and thus, to palliate, to mitigate.

Radishe rootes haue the vertu to extenuate, or make thyn, and also to warm.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

We shall find fauour by speaking of the matter; if in handling our owne cause, we commende it accordingly, and dispraise the attempt of our aduersary extenuating all his chief purposes, so much as shall be necessarie.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 105.

It doth extenuat and resolve all excressence of proud, ranke, or dead flesh.—Holland. Pliny, b. xx. c. 9.

It much extenuates the ill of his action, that he was besieged with continual and undigestable incentives of the clergy, with traitorous confidence striking at his crown, and in such sort, as humanity must have exceeded itself, to have endured it with any mixture of patience.
Selden. On Drayton's Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

Yet such extenuation let me begge.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

If Anna had been tainted with this sinne, shee would haue denied it with more fauour, and haue disclaimed it with extenuation; what if I should haue been merry with wine? yet I might be deuout.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Elis & Anna.

Thinness. Having extenuate parts.
Scott. Essays. On Drapery, (1635.) p. 7.

Now even to extenuate, or excuse a sin, is bad enough; but to defend it is intolerable.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 3.

But since it would be infinitely in vain for a finite power to contend with an infinite, innocence of any thing must be the plea; and that must be either by an absolute denial, or, at least, by an extenuation or diminution of his sin.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 7.

The power of covering sin, is in Scripture ascribed to no other grace or virtue whatsoever but charity: when, therefore, the multitude of our sins is to be judged and punished, the fittest and kindest enquiry that our judge can make, is, what deeds of charity we have to alledge in extenuation of our punishment.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

As to the other matters objected against me, which in their turn I shall mention to you, remember once more I do not mean to extenuate or excuse.
Burke. Speech at Bristol, previous to the Election.

The extenuators of the sacrament sometimes suggests a hint that the command to perform this slight service may possibly not extend to us in these days, but might have been confined to the Apostles, to whom it was immediately given by the institution.—Knox. On the Lord's Supper.

EXTE'RIOR, adj.
EXTE'RIOR, n.
EXTE'RIORLY.
EXTE'RN, adj.
EXTE'RNAL, n.
EXTE'RNAL, adj
EXTE'RNALLY.
EXTERNA'LITY.

Fr. Extérieur; It. Esteriore; Sp. Exterior; Lat. Exterior; Fr. Externe; It. Esterno; Sp. Externo; Lat. Externus, from Exterus, outward. Outward, foreign.

The exteriour ayre whyche compasseth the body beinge cold, causeth the heate to withdrawe into the inner partes.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

What did Roboam to his calues, if this be not honouring, define mee what honouring is: what more exteriour honour can you deuise then this is?—Barnes. Workes, p. 341.

Fortunate I call them that haue goodnesse eyther of mind or of body, or externall: infortunate I call those, that lack any of thes thre.—Vives. Instruct. of Christ. Women, b. ii. c. 4.

If (quoth I) I consider liuing creatures, which haue any nature to will and to nill, I find nothing, that without externe compulsion, forsake the intētion to remain, and of their owne accord hasten to distruction.
Boecius. Philosophical Comfort, p. 79.

Fal. O'she did so course o're my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seeme to scorch me vp like a burning glass.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. sc. 3.

In speech of man, the whispering, which they call susurrus in Latine, whether it be louder or softer, is an interiour sound; but the speaking out, is an exteriour sound.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 138.

And you haue slander'd nature in my forme
Which howsoeuer rude exteriorly,
Is yet the couer of a fayrer minde,
Then to be butcher of an innocent childe.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iv. sc. 2.

For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act, and figure of my heart
In complement externe, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart vpon my sleeue
For dawes to pecke at.—Id. Merch. of Ven. Act i. sc. 1.

It is certain, the end, unlesse it be in products meerly natural, does not take its estimate and degrees from the external means.—Bp Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 10.

For divinity never knew any other vicious restraining the spirit, but either suppressing those holy incitements to vertue and good life, which God's spirit ministers to us externally, or internally, or else a forbidding by publick authority the ministers of the word and sacraments, to speak such truths as God hath commanded, and so taken away the liberty of prophesying.
Bp. Taylor. On Set Forms of Liturgy, s. 126.

All which is done, I say, by enlarging those simple ideas we have taken from the operations of our own minds, by reflection; or by our senses, from exteriour things, to that vastness to which infinity can extend them.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 24. s. 1

But Fortune's gifts if each alike possest,
And each were equal, must not all contest?
If then to all men happiness was meant,
God in externals could not place content.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep 4.

Supremacy cannot be an absolute or essential character in the divine nature, because it is a relative term, and only supposes, that when God has made any thing, he has a right of dominion over it, but it does not follow, that if he had never proceeded to make any thing, or to operate externally, this attribute could in a proper sense have belonged to him.
Fiddes. Theologia Speculativa, p. 98.

What though the sword lay treach'rous at my side?
Sure, guilt could never want the craft to hide!
The spots of bloody circumstance explain,
That inward truth fears no exterior stain.
Brooke. Constantia.

I have hinted above, that few churches present an exterior and interior equally finished; in reality, one-half of the great churches in Italy are left in a very imperfect state with regard to the outside.—Eustace. Italy, vol. i. Prel. Disc.

These qualities of the mind, like the features of the face, are more prominent and conspicuous in southern countries, and in these countries perhaps the traveller may stand in more need of vigilance and circumspection to guard him against the treachery of his own passions, and the snares of external seduction.—Cogan. Passions, vol. i. Prel. Disc.

The next circumstance to be remarked, is, that whilst the cavities of the body are so configurated as externally to exhibit the most exact correspondency of the opposite sides, the contents of these cavities have no such correspondency.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

Pressure or resistance necessarily supposes externality in the thing which presses or resists.
A. Smith. On the External Senses.

EXTE'RMINE, v.
EXTE'RMINATE, v.
EXTERMINA'TION.
EXTE'RMINATORY.

Fr. Exterminer; It. Esterminare; Sp. Exterminar; Lat. Exterminare, e terminis finibusque profligare, (ex, and terminus, a bound or limit; Gr. Τερμων, τερμονος.) See DETERMINE.

To drive out or expel, from the bounds or limits, from the land, country or territory; to root out or eradicate; to utterly destroy.

No doubte, but the towne of Bruges must nedes fall in ruyne and vtter extermination.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 5.

By the chacing the Britons out of England into Wales, their language was wholly exterminated from hence with them, and by the successive incursions and invasions of the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, the English language grew a kind of mixture of them all, which yet in process of time hath been so much varied, that the English that was written in the time of Henry I. is not now intelligible.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 163.

It is the custom of kings to impute all misfortunes to their servants that chance in their affairs, and to attribute the good success unto themselues: and this makes them very easily incline to the extermination of them, of whom report is made, that they have not done that which was committed to their charge.—North. Plutarch, p. 1227.

Sil. Whereuer sorrow is, reliefe would be.
If you doe sorrow at my griefe in loue,
By giuing loue, your sorrow and my griefe
Were both extermin'd.
Shakespeare. As You Like It. Act iii. sc. 5

They deposed, exterminated, and deprived him of communion, warning the whole church to reject and disavow him [Paulus Samosatenus.]—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

The Spaniards, as they pretend, conscious of their own inability to occupy the vast regions which they had discovered, and foreseeing the impossibility of maintaining their authority over a people infinitely superior to themselves in number, in order to preserve the possession of America, resolved to exterminate the inhabitants, and by converting a great part of the country into a desert, endeavoured to secure their own dominion over it.
Robertson. History of America, b. viii.

Indeed we should be mutually justified in this exterminatory war upon each other, full as much as you are in the unprovoked persecution of your present countrymen, on account of the conduct of men of the same name in other times.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

Against this new, this growing, this exterminatory system, all these churches have a common concern to defend themselves.—Id. Letter to Richard Burke, Esq.

EXTI'NCT, v. EXTI'NCT, adj. EXTI'NCTION. EXTI'NCTURE. EXTI'NGUISH, v. EXTI'NGUISHABLE. EXTI'NGUISHER. EXTI'NGUISHMENT. Etymology requires Ex-stinct. Fr. Extraindre; It. Estinguere; Sp. Extinguir; Lat. Exstinguere, exstinctum; pungendo delere, to erase with the point, (see EXPUNGE;) from ex, and stinguere; Gr. Στιζ-ειν, pungere. See DISTINGUISH.

To put out; erase or obliterate; to put out or to quench: to annul or anhihilate; to abolish; to destroy.

Whiche bryngeth forthe the charettes and horses, the host and the power, that they may fal aslepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, lyke as tow is quenched.—Bible, 1551. Is. c. 43.

Nowe ah lasse howe is this doctrine to praye obecured and extincted viterly with praying to the dead with a faise faithe with so many mediators.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 12.

From thence came theire latter kynges, whose lynage the power of the Romaynes long after did extincte.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 225.

For Jhon Capgraue saithe, that Ethelredus the abbot of Retnall, not only by it abated thardent heates of his flesh, but extinguished also the flames of all other vices.
Bale. Englishe Votaries, pt. ii.

As in the sacrament the visible element is not extinguished by the presence of Christes most precious body, no more is Christes humanitie by his Godhode.
Bp. Gardner. On Transubstantiation, fol. 142.

——— Great Joue, Othello guard,
And swell his saile with thine owne powerfull breath,
That he may blesse this bay with his tall ship,
Giue renew'd fire to our extincted spirits
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

The memoriall thereof farre surpassing all the treasures in the world, for a time through malice mai be couered, but neuer suppressed nor extincted: but as fire long hid, shall in the end breake out into great flames, and for euer remain in perpetual memorie.—Holinshed. Conq. of Ireland, c. 16.

Yet though these men against their conscience strive,
There are some sparcles in their flinty breasts,
Which cannot be extinct, but still revive;
That though they would, they cannot quite be beasts.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 30. R. 2.

Divers of their doctrines, such as, the sleep, and natural mortality of the soul, the utter extinction, and annihilation of the wicked after the day of judgment, are very obnoxious to philosophy and reason.—Glanvill, Ess. 5.

Did we think their soule vanisht into air (as that heathen poet profanely expresseth it) and their bodies resolved into dust, without all possibility of reparation, we might well crie out our eyes for the utter extinction of those we loved; but if they do but sleep, they shall do well.
Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead.

What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extincture hath.
Shakespeare. Lover's Complaint.

—— Since those fair tables, where
The law was writ by death, now broken are,
By death extinguisht is that star, whose light
Did shine so faithfull, that each ship sayld right
Which steer'd by that.—Habington. Castara, Eleg. 7. pt. ii.

Nor would I, you should melt away yourselfe
In flashing brav'rie, least while you affect
To make a blaze of gentrie to the world,
A little puffe of scorne extinguish't it,
And you be left, like an unsav'ry snuffe,
Whose propertie is only to offend.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 1.

The old heroes in Homer dreaded nothing more than water or drowning; probably upon the old opinion of the fiery substance of the soul onely extinguishable by that element.—Brown. Urne Burial, c. 1. p. 4.

For when death's form appears, she [the wicked soul] feareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishment:
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 30. R. 4.

The two former [distance and order] are perhaps no more necessary than the things themselves, i. e. Take away the things; and their respective order and distance, as well as the measure whereby we computed that order and distance, may cease and be extinct.—Law. Enquiry. Of Space, c. 1.

By his own blood he cancels the original covenant, and purchases a new one full of grace and mercy; freeing us from the whole of Adam's curse, viz. death and utter extinction.—Law. Theory of Religion, pt. ii.

When lo! the burning fire that shone so bright,
Flew off, all sudden, with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

A hollow chrystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above:
Of it a brode extinguisher he makes,
And holds the flames that to their quarry strove.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 261.

If age of ministers is then the test,
And, as of wines, the oldest are the best,
Let's try and fix some era, if we can,
When good ones were extinct, and bad began.
Jenyns. Horace, Ep. 1. b. ii.

A scene where Virtue sickening dies,
Where Vice to dark extinction flies,
And spurns the future day
Mickle. Odes. Knowledge, Ode 1.

O that some Angel's more than magic art
Would kindly tear the hermit from this heart!
Extinguish every guilty sense, and leave
No pulse to riot, and no sigh to heave.
Cawthorn. Abelard to Eloisa.

——— If more you wish,
His Cyclops shall bestir
Their brawny stumps, and for thy sake,
Of Pinchbeck's own mixt-metal make
A huge extinguisher. Mason. Ode to Mr. Pinchbeck.

By way of extinguishment: as if my tenant for life makes a lease to A for life, remainder to B and his heirs, and I release to A, this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall enure to the advantage of B's remainder as well as A's particular estate.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 20.

EXTI'RP, v. EXTI'RPATE, v. EXTIRPA'TION. Etymology requires Ex-stirp. Fr. Extirper: It. Estirpare; Sp. Extirpar; Lat. Exstirpare, to root out, (ex, and stirps, the root.)

To root out or eradicate; to exterminate; utterly to erase; to remove, to destroy, all traces or vestiges of.

Neither haue ye any care (we are enformed) to extirpe and plucke the same vp by the rootes [sc. wild cockle from the pure wheate]
State Trials. Pope's Bull. Wickliffe, an. 1383.

He thought it best to make a peregrinatiõ, and take his progresse into yᵉ other quarters of his realme, yᵗ he might wede, extirpate, and purdge the myndes of mẽ spotted and cotaminate with the cõtagious smoke of dissencion, and pruy faccions.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 1.

By the means of certayne abbottes and ignorant prestes [they were] not a litle stirred and prouoked for the suppression of certain monasteries, for the extirpacion and abhollishyng of the byshoppe of Rome.—Id. Hen. VIII. an. 28.

Sophy. Then to extirp you all ye Persian powers,
Assist our courage, make the conquest ours.
Heywood. Foure Prentices of London, Act i. sc. 1.

And from black cinders, and rude heaps of stones,
Shall gather up the martyr's sacred bones;
And shall extirp the pow'r of Rome again,
And cast aside the heavy yoke of Spain.
Drayton. Lady J. Gray, to Lord Dudley.

(Nothing is permanent within this round,)
One age is now, another that succeeds,
Extirping all things which the former breeds.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

Luc. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred, it is well allied, but it is impossible to extirpe it quite, Frier, till eating and drinking be put downe.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

——— If we could do that,
France were no place for Henryes warriers,
Nor should that nation boast it so with vs,
But be extirped from our prouinces.
Id. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 3.

I, for all horrid practises, am fit:
To wrap this roofe in flame, and him in it:
His eyes, his tongue, or what did thee enforce,
T' extirp: or with a thousand wounds divorce
His guiltie soule.—Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. vi.

The Carthaginians taking indignation and great disdaine, that the people of Rome should require all those to be yielded unto justice (as offenders and malefactors) that had besieged Saguntum, have thereupon passed the river Iberus, with this intent, even to destroy and extirp the Roman name, and to set free the whole world out of their servitude and bondage.
Holland. Livie, p. 409.

This King of Naples being an enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens to my brother's suit,
Which was, That he in lieu o' th' premises,
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedome, and confer fair Milliaine
With all the honours on my brother.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

And albeit, great was their malice, yet was their nobilitie so honourable and great; that by no meanes, doo what they could, was the same to be extirpated or rooted out.
Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, c. 16.

Together with the oyle of this unction, here was a charge of revenge; a revenge of the blood of the prophets, upon Jezebel, of wickednesse and idolatry, upon Ahab: neither was the extirpation of this lewd family fore-prophesied onely to Jehu, but injoyned.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Jehu with Jehoram.

What think you of extirpation, and rooting up? even this you shall hear denounced, and executed on those that cast a faire shadow, either as on degenerous or unprofitable trees, either for bad fruit, or none at all, cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 612.

When lawless men their neighbours dispossess,
The tenants they extirpate or oppress,
And make rude havoc in the fruitful soil,
Which the right owners plough'd with careful toil.
Dryden. Suum Cuique.

And that our liberties might be extirpated at once, and we become tenants at will to the king, that rare invention of ship-money was found out by Finch.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 5.

All who pleaded for the bill [against occasional conformity] did in words declare for the continuance of the toleration, yet the sharpness with which they treated the dissenters in all their speeches, showed as if they designed their extirpation.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1702.

The vicious are the disorderly members of a moral state; and were not the supreme governor more mild than his representatives, they would be immediately extirpated from the society they offend and insult.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise on the Passions, Disc. 2. c. 2.

The case with our historian stood thus: His country was now in great distress; its constitution overturned, and his brethren in apparent danger of utter extirpation.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 4.

EXTISPI'CIOUS. Cotgrave has "Extipicine,—divination or soothsaying by the inspection of the entrails of beasts." Lat. Extispicium, from exta, and specere, to look into the entrails.

Thus hath he deluded many nations in his augurial and extispicious inventions: from casual and uncontrived contingencies divining events succeeding.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 11.

EXTO'L, v. EXTO'LLER. EXTO'LLING, n. EXTO'LMENT. Fr. Extoller; It. Estollere; Lat. Extollere, to raise out, (ex, and tollere, from the A. S. Til-ian, to lift up, raise or turn up.—Tooke.)

To raise or lift up, to elevate, to exalt; to raise or elevate, (sc.) by praise or commendation; and thus, to praise, to commend highly.

But this kinge shall do what himself lysteth. And shall extoll and preferre himself aboue all the Goddis or aboue the most highe God.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

If man should then waxe proude and glorye (as of himself) and extolle his owne deuotion in these ministeries, suche men should bewraye their own noughtye hypocrisye, and yet therby empayre not the very dignitie of the mynesterie, ne the very true frute and effecte therof.
Bp. Gardner. On the Presence in the Sacrament, p. 54.

That was the righteous virgin, which of old
Liv'd here on earth, and plenty made abound;
But after wrong was lov'd, and justice solde,
She left th' unrighteous world, and was to heauen extol'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 7. Of Mutabilitie.

All spirits, that arround their raies extoll,
Possesse each point of their circumference
Presentially. More. Song of the Soul, pt. iii. c. 2. s. 28.

Chlo. Poets? they did not talk of me since I went, did they?
Cri. O yes, and extoll'd your perfections to the heavens.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act ii. sc. 2.

Whatsoever hath been said or written on the other side, all the late statutes, which inflict capital punishment upon extollers of the Pope's supremacy, deniers of the King's supremacy, Jesuits and seminaries, and other offenders of that nature, have for their principal scope, not the punishment of the error of conscience, but the repressing of the peari [peril] of the state.
Bacon. Charge upon the Commission for the Verge.

These praisings and extollings, said the other, do more properly belong to you than me, for truely you may give two to one, to the best and skilfullest brayer in the world.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 24.

In the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

And some men say that great delight have we,
To be for truth extoll'd, and secrecy.
Dryden. The Wife of Bathes Tale.

——— The beauteous queen
Rejoices to behold her native walls,
Exil'd so long: her peers with lifted hands
Extoll'd the bounteous pow'rs, their queen return'd,
The wond'rous work of fate.
Hamilton. Pragment of Bruce.

EXTO'RSE, v. EXTO'RSIOUSLY. EXTO'RT, v. EXTO'RTER. EXTO'RTION. EXTO'RTIONER. EXTO'RTIOUS. Fr. Extorquer; It. Estorcere; Sp. Estorcer; Lat. Extorquere, extortum, (ex, and torquere, to twist or wrest.)

To wrest or wring out; to force out; to take or get by force or violence; to exact violently. See the quotation from Blackstone.

And therfore by extortion I leve,
For soth I take all that men wol me yeve.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v. 7011.

For whan he doth extorcion,
With many an other vice mo,
Men shall not fynde one of tho
To grutche or speake there ageine,
But holden vp his oyle and sayne:
That all is wel, what euer he doth.—Gower. Con. A. b vii.

Confession in the eare was cruellye extorted of Christian people vnder the payne of death and damnatio by the whole consente both of the princes and bishops.—Bale Image, pt. ii.

Thou haste taken vsury and increase, thou hast oppressed thy neyghbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, sayeth the Lord God.—Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 22.

It is a muche greater myracle to make of an ambicious man, a temperate, of a fierce fellowe, a patiente, of the lecherous person, a chaste liuer, of the extortioner or one that lyueth by pollyng and pulyng, a lyberal man, then to delyuer a man a body from a wicked spirite
Udal. Mark, c. 1.

They rekened in theyr mynde all his good gotten in effecte with wronge, because he was growen to substance in that office, that was commonly misseused extorsionsly
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1207.

Go, get you hence to the Tartarian Gate,
And breed such terrours in the damned soules:
Too many grieuous plagues my state extorse,
Though apprehended horrours bost not worse.
Stirling. Avrora, s. 64.

By men even dead (as oft alive) extorc'd,
To avarice, else cruelty, still slave,
Those shall from dust no sooner be divorc'd,
Then they who sought the centre for a grave.
Id. Doomes day. The Fourth Houre.

While they swore subjection to him, [Antichrist,] while they defended him, whiles they worshipt him above all that is called God, and extorted this homage from others, how could they be other but limmes of that man of sinne.
Bp. Hall. Apologie against Brownists, s. 29.

Hauing great lordships got and goodly farmes,
Through strong oppression of his powre extort;
By which he still them holds, and keeps with strong effort.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2

Is the violent extortour of other men's goods carried away with his couetous desire? Thou mayest liken him to a wolfe.—Boetius. Philosophical Comfort, p. 98.

Card. All goodnesse
Is poison to thy stomache.
Sur. Yes, that goodnesse
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by extortion.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

As when some covetous extortioner, out of the strength of his purse, buyes up the whole lading of the ship, that he may have the sole power of the wares to sell them at pleasure, which there is no fear but he will do with rigour enough.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. I. Case 5.

Upon the sight we do well and wisely, by all politick provisions, to meet with or prevent all those peccant humours which may occasion a publick distemper; to curb the lawless insolence of some, the seditious machinations of others, the extortious cruelties of some, the corrupt wresting of justice in others.—Id. Remains, p. 77.

Let me be pardoned, if just indignation against a wickedness so contemptible, so heinous, and so senseless, and withall so notorious, and so rife among us, doth extort from me language somewhat tart and vehement.
Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 13

The truth was, the King did not come into those concessions seasonably, nor with a good grace; all appear'd to be extorted from him.—Burnet. Own Time, b. I.

The Earl of Shaftsbury was the chief man in this advice. He excused it [the shutting up of the Exchequer] to me, telling me what advantage the bankers had made, and how just it was for the King to bring them to an account for their usury and extortions; and added, that he never meant the stop should run beyond the year.—Id. Ib. an. 1672.

An epicure hath some reason to alledge, an extortioner is a man of wisedom, and acteth prudently in comparison to him, [the swearer;] for they enjoy some pleasure, or acquire some gain here, in lieu of their salvation hereafter; but this fondling offendeth heaven, and abandoneth happiness, he knoweth not why or for what.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 15.

Receivers of bribes, extorters of money by threats, &c.
Sir W. Jones. The Laws of Menu.

Extortion is an abuse of the public justice, which consists in any officer's unlawfully taking by colour of his office, from any man, any money or thing of value, that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1.

He is pleased if he possesses a non-descript fossil, and envies not the wretched enjoyments of the intemperate, nor the ill gotten wealth of the oppressor or extortioner.
Anox. Essays, No. 151.

EXTRA'CT, v. E'XTRACT, n. E'XTRACT, adj. EXTRA'CTION. EXTRA'CTIVE. Fr. Extraire; It. Estrarre; Sp. Extraher; Lat. Extrahere, actum, (ex, and trahere, to draw.)

To draw out; to draw or bring out or from; to take out; and, as Cotgrave says, to draw, write or copy out.

He [true Love] first extracted from th' earth-mingled mind
That heav'nly fire, or quintessence divine,
Which doth such sympathy in beauty find,
As is between the elm and fruitful vine.
Davies. On Dancing.

Ol. A most extracting frensie of mine owne
From my remembrance clearly banisht his.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

And the sun (saith he) is the very issue extract from that good, giving unto things visible, together with their appearance, being also, and subsistence.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 839.

For what man was there ever extract and descended from the seed of the Gods, who exploited more laborious, more difficult and dangerous combats? unless it were Hercules, again, the son of Jupiter.—Id. Ib. p. 1045.

All the operations of arithmetick are performed by addition, subtraction, multiplication, division, and extraction of roots (which is a species of division.)—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

This miserable captive forgetting the miserable estate wherein he was, returned harsh language unto his conqueror, and with injurious terms began to inveigh against Tamberlain, reproaching him with his base extraction and with his former profession of thievery.—North. Life of Tamberlain.

A feather, shooting from another's head,
Extracts his brain, the principle is fled;
Lost is his God, his Country, every thing;
And nothing left but homage to a King.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iv.

And therefore Caius Marius, a person of a plebeian extraction, but one who, by his valour and labour had made himself the envy of the Roman nobility, defends himself against them in his speech to the people with great reason
South, vol. v. Ser. 10.

There appears, in this extract, such simplicity and goodness, and warmth of heart, as, one would think, should affect every reader, capable of being moved by such excellent qualities, and render it impossible for him to think that these are the men who have imposed upon the world false facts and spurious gospels.—Sharp. Def. of Christianity.

Cease, if you love me, mother, cease to brace
Our long extraction to an ancient race,
'Tis theirs alone who boast no inbred worth
To found their claim of honour on their birth.
Fawkes. Virtue only is Nobility.

EXTRADI'CTIONARY. Lat. Extra, without or beyond, and dictio, a word or saying.

Out of, beyond words; and thus, not caused by, or formed of, words.

Of these extradictionary and real fallacies, Aristotle and logicians make in number six, but we observe that men are most commonly deceived by four thereof, those are petitio principii, &c.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. I. c. 4.

EXTRA-ESSE'NTIAL. Lat. Extra, without, and essential, (qv.)

Not essential; beyond what is essential.

They perswaded modesty, in all extraessential doctrines, and suspense of judgment in things that were not absolutely certain.—Glanvill, Ess. 7.

For bodies are what they are by the matter and modification that doe for the present constitute them, whatever they may prove to be in the future; and it is extraessential to the form that is said to be previous, that it is to be succeeded by another which is said to be more noble.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 118.

EXTRA-JUDI'CIAL. EXTRAJUDI'CIALLY. Lat. Extra, without, and judicium, judgment, law.

Beyond or out of the course of judicial duty or process.

Though they do it by vertue of any extrajudiciall countermand from the king or his ill counsellors, they do both in point of law, divinity, conscience, resist the higher powers, because they resist the Parliament, (which is, in truth, the highest power, as I have manifested, not the king.)
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. I. p. 106.

Examples have been seen in the manifestos of some princes, when they have been put to such extrajudicial and private ways of animadversion.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

In the mean time, to speak upon it in an extrajudicial way, if the lady happens to be of the Romish perswasion, I advise her to a nunnery.—Tatler, No 293.

Which must have taken place, if the said General Clavering and Philip Francis, Esq. had persisted in their claim, as they were by law entitled to do, the extrajudicial interposition of the judges notwithstanding.
Burke. Articles of a Charge against Warren Hastings.

The said Warren Hastings did cause to be taken at Lucknow, and other places, before divers persons, and particularly before Sir Elijah Impey, Knight, his majesty's chief justice, acting extrajudicially, and not within the limits of his jurisdiction, several passionate, careless, irrelevant, and irregular affidavits.—Id. Ib.

EXTRA-MI'SSION. Lat. Extra, without, and missio, from mittere, to send.

A sending or throwing out; emission, (qv.)

They hold that sight is made by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rayes of the object into the eye, and not by sending any out.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 7.

EXTRA-MU'NDANE. Lat. Extra, without, and mundus, the world.

Out of the world, beyond the limits, out of the sphere, beyond or out of the laws of this material world.

'Tis a philosophy [the Aristotelian] that makes most accurate inspections into the creatures of the brain, and gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

The same reason, which shows that extramundane space is imaginary, proves that all empty space is an imaginary thing; for they differ only as greater and less.
Clarke & Leibnitz. Mr. Leibnitz's Fourth Paper.

And further, to hide from their own consciences the fraud and prevarication of such a measure, they first brought those whom they had intrusted with that knowledge, and afterwards themselves to believe, That the first cause was an extramundane being, too excellent, as well as too remote, to be approached and addressed to in the first instance.
Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 5

EXTRA'NEOUS. EXTRA'NEOUSLY. Lat. Extraneus, from extra, without. See EXTERN.

Outward, foreign, strange; and thus, irrelevant.

That the lentous drops upon it [the Ros Solis] are not extraneous, and rather an exudation from itself then a rorid concretion from without.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

If the eye (says he) be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. That is, nothing extraneous must cleave to, or join with the eye in the act of seeing, but it must be solely, and entirely to itself, and its bare object, as naked as truth, as pure, simple, and unmixed as sincerity.
South, vol. iii. Ser 2.

Where every virtue would, in every one, essentially promote and perfect those of others, and each with infinite consistency, conspire to exert the natural effects of all, in universal happiness: without that motley mixture of the contrary qualities, which can at best but indirectly and accidentally, and by their being extraneously overruled, produce any share thereof.—Law. Theory of Religion, pt. iii.

Finding no sort of principle of coherence with each other in the nature and constitution of the several new republicks of France, I considered what cement the legislators had provided for them from any extraneous materials.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

EXTRA-O'RDINARY, adj. EXTRAO'RDINARY, n. EXTRAO'RDINARILY. EXTRAO'RDINARINESS. Fr. Extraordinaire; It. Estraordinario; Sp. Extraordinario; Lat. Extraordinarius, i. e. Extra-ordinem, because beyond ordinary custom, (Minshew.) See DISORDER.

Out of or beyond order, bounds or limits; out of station or rank; out of, or not according to, custom or rule; unwonted, unusual, beyond what is common or regular; and thus, remarkable.

Do we not se hi that sitteth highest among iudges, and for that cause is called the chef iudge, whe he is required to be present in extraordinari iudgementes (as it is often sene) placed after others in the iii. or iiii. roume.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 46.

Now, that it may thoroughly appeare, euen vnto the simple, what the Fathers meaute by suche extraordinarie vse of speache, it shall not be from the purpose to reporte certaine woordes of Gregorius Nyssenus teaching the same.
Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 434.

While these things were a doyng, the Romaynes for dread of so dangerous a warre, created Æmilius Paulus, consull, and made him extraordinarely lieutenaunte of the warres in Macedone.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 132.

I attended him also with the note of your extraordinaries, wherein I find him something difficult and dilatory yet.
Howell. Letters, b. i. s. 6. Let. 8.

Indeed it were something strange, that thousands and thousands of times, every day for above 1500 years together, the same thing should be done, and yet this should be called a miracle, that is, a daily extraordinary.
Bp Taylor. Of the Real Presence, s. 11.

He [Henry Stubbe] had a strange persuasion in his mind which did very frequently suggest to him that there was bestowed on him the gift of curing the king's evil; which for the extraordinariness of it, he thought fit to conceal for some time.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

For I begin to forget all my hate,
And tak't unkindly that mine enemy
Should use me so extraordinarily scurvily.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

No common usage, then, something proper to tell what they are, and to what purposes they are designed, and to signifie their separation and extraordinariness.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. Disc. 7.

They have extraordinary good eyes, and will discry a sail at sea farther and see any thing better than we.
Dampier Voyages, an. 1681.

They live scrapingly and uncharitably, and uselessly in the world, all their lives long, and then when they come to die think to atone for their sins and neglects of this kind by shewing some extraordinary bounty to the poor, or devoting some part of their estates to public or pious uses?
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 3.

What we say, is, that the God of nature required it [circumcision] extraordinarily, for many and great reasons, as things then stood; which reasons have since ceased; and so the law has been abrogated by the same authority that gave it.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 59.

Nay, even supposing that paternity and monarchy were both the ordinance of God in the same and supreme sense of an ordinance, immediately and extraordinarily revealed from God, it would by no means follow, that the offices of father and of king were the same; nor, consequently, the administration of those offices.
Warburton. Alliance between Church and State, b. i. Notes.

EXTRA-PARO'CHIAL. } Lat. Extra, and
EXTRAPARO'CHIALLY. } parochia; Eng. Parish; Fr. Paroisse; It. and Sp. Parrochia, from the Gr. Παροικια, vicinia, seu conventus, a neighbourhood or assembly of neighbours, i. e. παρα, near, and οικος, a house. See PARISH.
Out of a parish.

But some lands, either because they were in the hands of irreligious and careless owners, or were situate in forest and desert places, or for other now unsearchable reasons, were never united to any parish, and therefore continue to this day extraparochial.—Blackstone. Comment. Introd. s. 4.

But it is farther enacted, "that the registers of all such marriages as hereby are made to be valid in law, shall, within fourteen days next after the said 25th day of March, 1805, be removed to the parish church of the parish in which such chapel shall be situate, or in the case of a chapel extraparochially situate, then to the parish-church next adjoining to such extraparochial place."
Horsley. Charges, p. 207.

EXTRA-RE'GULAR. Lat. Extra, and regula, a rule, from reg-ere, to rule or order.
Out of rule; beyond common rules.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Living, c. 4. s. 2.

There are some suddain accidents against which there are no regular provisions in laws; but to provide for them at the instant by extraregular means, is within the power of the Supreme.—Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

Such things as these which are extraordinary egressions and transvolations beyond the ordinary course of an even piety, God loves to reward with an extraordinary favour; and gives them testimony by an extraregular blessing.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 4.

S. Bernard, in the life of S. Malachias, tells that S. Mulchus, Bishop of Lismore in Ireland, confirmed a lunatick child, and at the same time cured him; but such things as these are extraregular and contingent.
Id. Discourse of Confirmation, s. 6.

EXTRA'-VAGANT, adj. } Fr. Extravagant;
EXTRA'VAGANT, n. } It. Estravagante;
EXTRA'VAGANTLY. } Sp. Extravagant;
EXTRA'VAGANCE. } Lat. Extra, and vagans, from vagare,
EXTRA'VAGANCY. } to wander.
EXTRA'VAGATE, v. }

Wandering, straying or straggling; rambling, roving, ranging beyond or out of, (sc.) bounds or limits, rules or regulations, bounds or moderation; and thus,—

Irregular, immoderate, unbounded, illimited, wild, wasteful, prodigal, lavishly expensive.

Cotgrave has Extravaguer, to extravagate, roame, range, &c.; a word which Warburton has adopted.

Then came in canõs, decrees, sentences, sinodals, decretals, Clementines, extrauagañces, with other popysh lawes, the Gospell cleane set apart.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

These two accidents, precisely true, and known to few, I have reported as not altogether extravagant from my purpose, to shew how the earl stood in certain perplexities, wherewith the duke's days were not distracted.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 170.

——— Come, y' are fond.
Shall I be so extravagant to think,
That happy judgments, and composed spirits,
Will challenge me for taxing such as these.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

(Aug. 15, 1661.) Walking about the solitudes [at Tunbridge Wells,] I greatly admired the extravagant turnings, insinuations, and growth of certaine birch trees among the rocks.—Evelyn. Memoirs.

There is a sort of madness which takes men in some particular things, when they are sound in others, which one proposition will afford a good account of many of the phænomena of enthusiasm; and shews that the extravagants among us may be really distracted in the affairs of religion, though their brains are untouch'd in other matters.
Glanvill, Ess. 4.

Upon which accounts it hath been, that mankind hath been more extravagantly mad in many tenets about religion than in any thing else whatsoever for in other things the use of reason is permitted, but in religion it hath been almost universally denyed.—Id. Ser. 2.

Thus have all extravagancies been brought into religion, beyond the imaginations of a fever, and the conceits of midnight; whatever is phansied, is certain; and whatever is vehement, is sacred; every thing must be believed that is dream'd, and every thing that is absurd, is a mystery.
Id. Ess. 5.

Most writers, mounted on a resty Muse,
Extravagant and senseless objects choose:
They think they err, if in their verse they fall
On any thought that's plain or natural.
Fly this excess. Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Sir Robert Murray told me, that the king was not well pleased with this act, as being extravagantly severe; chiefly in that of the preachers, being to be punished by death.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1670.

The Croisades gave much occasion to these institutions; and the extravagance was carried so far, that the military orders were instituted among the rest, that is, orders of men, whose profession obliged them to defend and propagate Christianity, as long as they lived, by cutting of throats.
Bolingbroke. Authority in Matters of Religion, Ess. 4.

The chief officers of the army began publicly to own the design, pretending thereby to keep the private soldiers (for they would no longer be called common soldiers) from running into greater extravagancies and disorders.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 166.

Divine and heavenly things do indeed refine and lop off the extravagancy: but they abate nothing of the vigour of our affections.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 5.

The wild extravagant, whose thoughtless hand,
With lavish tasteless pride commits expense;
Ruin'd, perceives his waning age demand
Sad reparation for his youth's offence.
Dodsley. Pain & Patience.

All these together, Gratian's decree, Gregory's decretals, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the corpus juris canonici, or body of the Roman canon law.
Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd. s. 82.

And could we trust the extravagancy
Of every poet's youthful fancy,
They'd make each Nymph they love so well
As cold as snow, as hot as ——.
Lloyd. A Familiar Letter of Rhymes.

Alas! they took a very different course. They declaimed against human reason; they depressed it as extravagantly as their adversaries had advanced it.
Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. iii. c. 2.

But when the body plunges into the luxury of sense, the mind will extravagate through all the regions of a viciated imagination.—Id. Works, vol. x. Ser. 20.

EXTRA-VA'SATE, v. } Lat. Extra, without, out of, and vas,
EXTRAVASA'TION. } a vessel.
Out of, let out, forced out of, the vessels.

It is not my design in these papers, to treat of my subject, as it may be considered (to borrow a school phrase) in fieri, which would have obliged me to trace the progress from the reception of aliments at the mouth, to the full elaboration, which were to write the history of sanguification as well as that of blood; but to treat of this liquor, as it is completely elaborated, and that too, not as it is formed in the vessels of a living body, but as it is extravasated, and let out by the lancet.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 596.

Every part is clothed, joined together, and corroborated by membranes, which upon several occasions (as extravasations of humours, compressions or obstructions of vessels) are capable of a prodigious extension.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Perhaps also causing some extravasation, as we see, that wounds and bruises are attended with some inflammation, more or less of the part affected.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 83.

EXTRA-VE'NATE. Lat. Extra, without, out of, and vena, a vein.
Out of, let out, forced out, of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds by anointing the weapon, and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravenate bloud by the sympathetic medicine, is for matter of fact put out of doubt by the noble Sir K. Digby.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 21.

EXTRA-VERT. } Lat. Extra, without, out
EXTRAVE'RSION. } of, and vertere, to turn.
To turn out.

I must not forget to take notice, that some learned modern chemists would be thought to expliciate divers of the changes, that happen to bodies in point of odours, colours, &c. by saying, that in such alterations, the sulphur, or other hypostatical principle, is intraverted or extraverted, or as others speak, inverted. But I confess, to me these seem to be rather new terms, than real explications.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 280.

For, to omit divers of the arguments mentioned in this present treatise, that may be applied to this way of solving the phænomena of qualities, one may justly object, that the supposed extraversion or intraversion of sulphur, can by no means reach to give an account of so great a variety of odours, colours, and other qualities, as may be found in the changed portion of matter we are speaking of.—Id. Ib.

EXTRA'UGHT. In Brende, Distracted. In Shakespeare, Extracted.

There was a woman accustomed to haunt the court, whiche being extraught of her mind, and seemyng by some inspiration to showe thinges to come, mette Alexander, and would in noe wise suffer him to passe, but purswaded hym by all meanes she could deuise, to retourne and sit downe agayne.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 227.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 2.

EXTRE'AT. "Fr. Extraict,—extracted, drawn, derived," (Cotgrave.)
Extraction.

Some clarks do doubt in their deuiceful art,
Whether this heauenly thing whereof I treat,
To weeten mercy, be of justice part,
Or drawne forth from her by divine extreat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

EXTRE'ME, adj. } Fr. Extréme; It. Estremo; Sp. Extremo; Lat.
EXTRE'ME, n. } Extremus, outmost, outermost, utmost, from Extra.
EXTRE'MELY. }
EXTRE'MITY. }
See EXTERIOR.

Outmost or utmost, last, "farthest from a mean, or from goodness," (Cotgrave.) Also applied as equivalent to—excessive, bordering upon excess; very much out of the ordinary course; more than extraordinary.

For richesse and mendicitees
Bene cleped two extremitees,
The meane is cleped sufficiaunce.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

For as the philosopher tolde
Of golde and silver thei ben holde
Two principall extremites,
To whiche all other by degrees
Of the metalles ben accordant.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

They thought it yet much better, to die the extreeme death of hunger, showing truth to their king, and love to their countrie, than to giue any place to the rebell, and fauour him with ayde, although they might have done it with their lesse daunger.—Sir J. Cheke. Hurt of Sedition.

And so long as he laye in extremes, a certaine roode (they say) in the cathedrall churche there, whyche was called the church of Saint Mercial, did pitiously wepe and lament, so that the teares fell downe from hys eies, as it hadde bene a floud of water.—Bale. Englishe Votaries, pt. ii.

Whereby it commeth to passe, that moste places within the coast of Parthia, are eyther excessiuely whote, or extremely colde, by reason that the mountaynes are commonly infested with snow, and the open fyeldes with the heate of the sunne.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 169.

And sometimes thei are brought to such extremitie that onles they digge the earth to gett water, they haue not a droppe of water to drinke.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 4.

So doth 'twixt two extreames each virtue lye,
To which the purest spirits ought to aspire:
He lives most sure who no extreame doth touch,
Nought would too little be, nor yet too much.
Sirling. To Prince Henry.

The wretched man [Lear] gan then aulse too late,
That loue is not where most it is profest;
Too truely tride in his extreemest state.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

But his most hardned crest was arm'd so well,
That deeper dint therein it would not make;
Yet so extreamely did the buffe him quell,
That from thenceforth he shund the like to take.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 11.

Bidding them fight for honour of their love,
And rather die then ladies cause release.
With which vaine termes so much they did them moue,
That both resolv'd the last extremities to proue.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 2.

With this wind, they run away in the same parellel 35 or 36d. before they cross the line again to the northward, which is about midway between the extremes of both promontories.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. iii. p 9.

Let the extremest hardships and difficulties that ever happen to any man that gives up himself a votary to religion, be taken into the consideration; yet, for all that, it ought not to be accounted a severe or grievous imposition, but an obligation upon us that is very natural, very easy, nay, and very delightful; his commandments are not grievous
Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

Maj.-Gen. Skippon, the only old soldier remaining among the chief officers of the army, received a shot in the body from one of our own party, as was supposed, unwillingly; whereby he was in great measure disabled to perform the duty of his place that day, though extremely desirous to do it
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 192.

No less man than St Augustine was doubtful, whether the extremity of bodily pain were not the greatest evil that human nature was capable of suffering
Ray. On the Creation, Epist. Ded.

For though innovations, which appear very plausible, may be found, when examined, very dangerous; and therefore love of change is by no means to be encouraged, yet aversion to it may be carried to an extreme also.
Seeker, vol. v. Ser. 7.

The times (till very lately) for this last fifteen years have been extreme bad for the graziers; I got of him, for them, two abatements in their rents at two several times.
Warburton. Appendix to the Life of the Author.

Petrarca's villa is at the extremity farthest from Padua.
Eustace. Classical Tour, vol. i. c. 4.

E/XTRICATE, v. } Lat. Extricare, ex, and EXTRICA'TION. } tricæ; Gr. Τριχες, hairs.
E'XTRICABLE. } Junius copies from Vossius, and Minshew following him says, "Tricæ signifie generally all impediments, stops, lets or hindrances, but properly haires or threds about chickens' legs, which so span them, that they cannot goe, and from hence by a metaphor taken for any kinde of incumberance."

To free from any impediment, stop, let or hinderance; any difficulty, trouble, embarrassment, perplexity or entanglement; to unfetter, to disembarrass, to disentangle.

And this is that which being duly considered extricateth that question which hath so much troubled the world, concerning the sinful acts of men, and how far forth the glorious God is at all concerned in them.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 40.

The consciences of penitents, which should be extricated and eased, are (by this means) catch'd in a snare, and put to torments, said Cassander.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. s. 11.

He [Sir Thomas Wait] was servant to King Henry the Eighth, and fell (as I have heard) into his disfavour, about the business of Queen Anna Bollen, till by his innocence, industry, and discretion, he extricated himself.
Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

2. A great congruity of reason attended this hypothesis, and an extrication thereby of the minds of considering men from infinite difficulties, which the supposition of eternal generations doth necessarily produce.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 235.

His treasure was now exhausted: his subjects were highly irritated: the ministry were all frighted, being exposed to the anger and justice of the parliament: so that he had brought himself into great distress, but had not the dexterity to extricate himself out of it.—Burnet. Own Time, vol. i. b. i.

Germ above roundish-egged, very villous, scarce extricable from the calyx enclosing and grasping it.
Sir W. Jones. On Select Indian Plants.

We had now not only traversed the Apennines, but extricated ourselves from the various labyrinths and defiles which border the immense base of these mountains.
Eustace. Classical Tour, vol. i. c. 9.

EXTRI'NSECAL, or } Fr. Extrinsèque; It.
EXTRI'NSICAL, adj. } Estrinseco; Sp. Ex-
EXTRI'NSICALLY, } trinseco; Lat. Extrin-
EXTRI'NSICK. } secus, (extra, and secus; secus, (i. e. secundum,) externa,) Vossius.
From without; outward, foreign to; not intimately appertaining to, or connected with.

So in like manner astronomy exhibiteth the extrinsique parts of celestial bodies (namely, the number or situation, motion, and periods of the starres) as the hide of heaven.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 4.

And the third is mixtus, that is, such things which the understanding assents to upon the report, testimony, and affirmation of others, viz. by arguments extrinsecal to the nature of the thing, and by collateral and indirect principles.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2. Rule 3.

That is as much as to say, when the opinion which intrinsecally, or at least in his private judgment seems less probable becomes extrinsecally the more probable, he may follow either.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 2. Rule 5.

The royal stamp upon any kind of metal may be sufficient to give it an extrinsick value, and to determinate the rate at which it is to pass amongst coins: but it cannot give an intrinsick value, or make that which is but brass to be gold.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 6.

The several degrees of nobility, titles, and places, of dignity, are usually called by this name of honour; but these things (as they are abstracted from magistracy, being wholly extrinsecal, have no more due to them, but a mere external respect.—Id. Ib.

Neither onely relatively and extrinsecally is our state bettered and exalted from death to life, from slavery to freedom, from baseness to dignity; but ourselves answerably are changed, and amended by the same Holy Spirit, with a real and intrinsecal alteration, transforming us into other things, much different from what we were in our former natural state.—Barrow, vol iii. ser. 45.

In that republic [literary] as well as in the political, the brightest and most lasting lustre of character must be derived from the merit of the constituent members; but in both there are extrinsic circumstances which cannot but produce a very powerful effect
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 44.

More observe the characters of men than the order of things: to the one we are formed by nature, and by that sympathy, from which we are so strongly led to take a part in the passions and manners of our fellow men. The other is as it were foreign and extrinsecal.
Burke. Hints for an Essay on the Drama.

EXTRU'CT. See EXSTRUCT.

EXTRU'DE, v. } Lat. Extrud-ere, extrusum,
EXTRU'SION. } to thrust out.
To thrust or push out.

I received yesterday word from Grandvela that he would take upon him the charge that the treaties shall be followed to the extrusion from all their dominions.
Sir T. Wyatt. To Cromwell. Shrove Tues. 1540.

Rashly extrudes you to tumultuous arms,
And from the safety wherein late you stood.
Drayton. Barons' Wars.

But Turnus (at that time) the proud Rutulian king,
A suitor to the maid, Æneas malicing,
By force of arms attempts his rival to extrude.
Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

It is improbable that the vigor of nature should extrude that so specious to sight, which is not also soveraign to service.—Fuller. Worthies. London.

There I myself determin'd to bestow,
Until time might this passion overblow;
Or if at least it wrought not, the extrusion
Might strengthen me yet in my resolution.
Drayton. Legend of Matilda the Fair.

Pope Innocent did not censure Theophilus and his complices, who so irregularly and wrongfully had extruded St. Chrysostome, although much displeased with them; but endeavoured to get a general synod to doe the business.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

The lateral parts of the water are made to insinuate and get between the lower parts of the wood and the bottom of the vessel, and so lift or thrust upwards the wood, which bulk for bulk is less heavy than the water that extrudes it.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 636.

EXTU'BERANT. } Cockeram has "Extu-
EXTU'BERANCE. } berate, to swell like the EXTU'BERANCY. } sea." Lat. Extuberare, to swell out, (ex, and tuber, a swelling, from tumere, to swell.) See PROTUBERANT.
Swelling out.

Extuberant lips.—Gayton. On Don Quixote, (1654.) p. 223.

Consider the humerus, its head, its neck, its pullies, its cavities, its extuberances.—Smith. Portrait. of Old Age, p. 60.

"And the dry land appeared;" Not so precisely globous as before, but recompenced with an extuberancy of hills and mountains for the receipts, into which God had sunk the waters.—Gregory. Notes on Passages in Scripture, p. 114.

EXTU'SION. Lat. Extundere, extusum, to beat out, (ex, and tund-ere, to beat.)

In all alimentation, or nourishment, there is a twofold action; extusion and attraction, whereof the former proceeds from the inward function, the latter from the outward.
Bacon. History of Life and Death.

EXU'BERATE. } Lat. Exuber-are, to EXU'BERANT. } abound, (ex, and uber,
EXU'BERANTLY. } which some think from
EXU'BERANCE. } Gr. Υυ, humeo; but Vos-EXU'BERANCY. } sius from ουθαρ, mamma.)
"Fr. Exubérer,—to abound, be plentiful, swell with store of fruit, bear in great abundance," (Cotgrave.)
Cockeram has Exuberate.

And certainly, O my soul, there is nothing but infidelity can keep thee from an exuberance of joy, and delight in the apprehension of heaven.
Bp. Hall. Of the Soul's Farewell to the Earth.

There cannot be a more pregnant proof hereof than those seeds of love, which I have long since cast into your breast, which have thriven so well and in that exuberance, that they have been more fruitful to me, than that field in Sicily called Le Trecente Cariche, the field of 300 loads, so called, because it returns the sower 300 for one yearly.
Howell, b. i. s. 4. Let. 2.

Lest thy redundant and superfluous juice
Should fading leaves instead of fruits produce,
The pruner's hand, with letting blood, must quench
Thy heat, and thy exuberant parts retrench.
Denham. Of Old Age, pt. iii.

Continue yet to cleanse your vines from exuberant branches that too much hinder the sun.
Evelyn. Kalendarium. August.

Our acts of gratitude are, by the exuberance of our great benefactor's goodness, made to be such, that instead of paying our debt they increase it; since by his bounty, the thanks that we give for past benefits, entitles us to new ones.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 708.

So with superiour boon may your rich soil,
Exuberant, Nature's better blessings pour
O'er every land, the naked nations clothe,
And be th' exhaustless granary of the world.
Thomson. Spring.

And as the patriarch's steward was furnished with so sumptuous an equipage to court Rebecca, not for himself, but for Isaac; so all the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, but to give us some more enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 264.

So that allowing me in my exuberance one way, for my deficiencies in the other, you will find me not unreasonable.
Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

Surely they whom, neither any exuberant praise bestowed by others, nor any eminent conquests over stubborn problems, have entitled to exalt themselves above the common orders of mankind, might condescend to imitate the candour of Socrates.—Adventurer, No. 58.

How grateful to the senses the freshness of the herbage, the fragrancy of the flowers, and all those simple delights of the field, which the poets have from the earliest ages, no less justly than exuberantly described!—Knox, Ess. 8.

EXU'CCOUS. See EXSUCCOUS.

EXU'DE, v. } More correctly, from its ety-
EXU'DATE, v. } mology, exsude. Lat. Exsudare,
EXUDA'TION. } to sweat out, or emit a sweat, (ex, and sud-are, to sweat.)
To sweat, or emit a sweat or moisture; to throw out or emit.

Some perforations only in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exudate.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

Though the regular spots in their wings [the caterpillar] seem but a mealie adhesion, and such as may be wiped away, yet since they come in this variety, out of their cases, there must be regular pores in those parts and membranes defining such exudations.—Brown. Cyrus Garden, c. 3.

But if it be so that it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then sure it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 495.

Another kinde of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction.—Id. Ib. s. 561.

The humming bird feeds on flowers, whose exudations with his long little bill he sucks like the bee.
Boyle Works, vol. v. p. 369.

Immediately below the tail is a narrow, transverse orifice, which opens in a kind of pouch, from whence exudes a white substance of a very fœtid smell; this seems peculiar to the badger and the hyæna.—Pennant. British Zoology. Badger.

When cattle die, let him carry to his master their ears, their hides, their tails, the skin below their navels, their tendons, and the liquor exuding from their foreheads.
Sir W. Jones. On Judicature and on Law.

Oily exudations, nail-parings, phlegm, tears, &c. are the twelve impurities of the human frame.
Id. On Diet, Purification, and Women.

EXU'LCERATE, v. } Lat. Exulcerare, ex, and ulcus; Gr. Ἕλκος, ἐπι του ἑλκειν, i. e. trahere, to draw; because the flesh is drawn asunder, distracted, by an ulcer.
EXU'LCERATE, adj.
EXULCERA'TION.
EXU'LCERATIVE.

"Fr. Exulcerer; to exulcerate or make ulcerous; to gall, fret, break or eat into the skin or flesh; also, to vex, exasperate, corrupt or fill with rancour," (Cotgrave.)

But if it be a hotte cause, the vse thereof is dangerous, for inflammation or exulceration of the raynes or bladder.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

This acrimonious soot produces another sad effect, by rendering the people obnoxious to inflammations, and comes (in time) to exulcerate the lungs, which is a mischief so incurable, that it carries away multitudes by languishing and deep consumptions, as the bills of mortality do weekly inform us.—Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. i.

It is not easie to speake to the contentation of mindes exulcerated in themselues, but that somewhat there will be alwayes which displeaseth.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 2.

These uncharitable expressions, what can they bewray, but a distempered heart, from which they proceed! as the smoak and sparks flying up show the house to be on fire; or as a corrupt spittle shows exulcerate lungs.
Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. s. 14.

Tortoise egges, dried and hardened, are good to be applied to the wens, called the king's evill; to any exulcerations, caused either by extreame cold or burning.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 4.

The leaves and braunches be exulcerative, and will raise blisters upon the bodie.—Id. Ib. b. xxiii. c. 1.

For that the saliva, notwithstanding its insipidness, hath a notable virtue of macerating and dissolving bodies, appears by the effects it hath in killing of quicksilver, fermenting of dough like leaven or yeast, taking away warts, and curing other cutaneous distempers; sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

I have informed you in another essay, of the cure I observed to be made of the exulcerated tumours of one sick of the king's evil, by the use of beer, altered by a little plant, that did not at all disturb the taker.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 115.

The persons that wore these arsenical amulets, were affected, some with great anxieties about the heart, some with inflammations, some with burning fevers, some with exulcerations of the breast.—Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 61.

EXU'LT, v. } More correctly written EXSULT, &c. Lat. Ex-saltare, to leap out, (ex, and saltare, from Sal-ire, to leap; Gr. Ἁλλ-ομαι.)
EXU'LTANT.
EXU'LTANCE.
EXU'LTANCY.
EXULTA'TION.
EXU'LTINGLY.

To leap out, to leap up, to bound, to jump, (as. with joy, with triumph;) and thus, to triumph; to be overjoyed.

Fa. I would exult man: you know he brought me out o' fauour with my lady, about a beare-baiting heere.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 5.

Always upon terms of spiritual exultancy what great things God hath done for their soules; how he hath fitted them for himself, never with humbled bended knees in acknowledgment of unworthiness with St. Paul.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 614.

Nay, certainly it hath proved scandalous to those without: as may appear by that boast and exultancy of Campian in his eighth reason.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 624.

——— Go together,
You precious winners all your exultation
Partake to euery one.—Shakes. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 3.

This very Angell, that talkes with the blessed Virgin, could scarce haue beene able to expresse the joy of her heart in the sense of this divine burden. never any mortall creature had so much cause of exultation.
Bp Hall. Cont. The Birth of Christ.

The Goddess goes exulting from his sight,
And seeks the seas profound, and leaves the realms of light.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

So when the sun runs down th' ethereal plain,
Extinct his splendours in the whelming main.
A transient night earth, air, and heaven invades,
Eclips'd in horrours of surrounding shades:
But soon, emerging with a fresher ray,
He starts exultant, and renews the day.
Brooms On Death.

In the early ages of the Church, the custom was annually to observe those days, on which the Martyrs were crowned (such was the language of the time) not with dejected looks, or any outward expressions of sorrow; but with the solemnities usual on birth-days (and such also were they styled) even with all possible instances of devout exultation and joy.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. i.

Yet the same sense of his own frailty that puts this exclamation into his mouth, may comfort his heart, by its being a pledge that he shall one day be able exultingly to say with the same apostle in another place, thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. xv. 57.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 372.

Vain strove the chief to whirl the mountain o'er,
It slip't—he headlong rattles on the floor,
Around the ring loud peals of thunder rise,
And shouts exultant echo to the skies.
P. Whitehead. The Gymnasiad, b. viii.

Late in the evening we entered Padua,
Urbem Patavi sedesque Teucrorum,
and reflected with some exultation that we stood, as it were, on the confines of Greek and Latin literature, in a city which derives its origin from a catastrophe celebrated in itself or in its consequences, by the two greatest poets of antiquity.
Eustace. Classical Tour, vol. i. c. 3.

In his last moments, he thus exultingly cries out, "Their rock is not as our rock, our enemies themselves being judges."—Warburton. App. to the First Ed. of the Alliance.

EXUNDA'TION. Lat. Exundare, to overflow, (ex, and unda, a wave.) See INUNDATION.
An overflowing; a superabundance.

Now, this river Nilus running along by the parts of Æthiopia, having also gone through divers names, which many nations have given him as he passeth along the earth, with a most rich exundation, cometh at length to the Cataracts.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 211.

About this season a great part of Flanders being drowned by an exundation or breaking in of the sea, a great number of Flemings came into England, beseeching the king to have some void place assigned them, wherein they might inhabit.
Holinshed. Hen. I. an. 1108.

It is more worthy of the Deity to attribute the creation of the world to the exundation and overflowing of his transcendent and infinite goodness, which is, of its own nature, and in the very notion of it, most free, diffusive, and communicative.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

EXU'PERANCE. See EXSUPERANCE.

EXU'STION. Lat. Exurere, ustum, to burn out, (ex, and urere, to burn.)
"Fr. Exustion, — an exustion; parching, or burning."

The frightful effects which this exustion (of Sodom and Gomorrah) left are still remaining.
Biblioth. Bibl. (1720.) vol. i. p. 424.

EXU'VIÆ. Lat. Exuviæ, from Exuere, to strip off.

At the end of that time, and much about the same day, they divested the habit they had, whilst they lived as fishes, and appeared with their exuviæ or cast coats under their feet, showing themselves to be perfect gnats.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 378.

Yet is there no danger lest the despotism of influence should destroy the vitals of a free constitution, and leave nothing behind but the form, the exuviæ, the name!
Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 29.

EY'AS, n. Skinner says from the Fr. Niais, niez; It. Nidiace, nidaso, i. e. accipiter nidarius; but adds, that though this appears very probable, yet his mind inclines to believe that the Eng. Nyas; Fr. Niais, are of German origin, viz. from our eyas or eyes-hawk; and this from Ger. Ey, an egg; meaning a hawk recently out of the egg. The first etymology has been generally adopted. (See NIAS.) Cotgrave says, "Niais, a nestling, a young bird taken out of a nest;" and niez, "a nias-hawk" —Caseneuve;—"Oiseaux niais; from Nidus." And thus eyas, used adjectively, is—Unfledged; immature, youthful.

But there is, sir, an ayrie of children, little yases, that cry out on the top of question: and are most tyrannically clap't for't.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

Hang these tame-hearted eyasses, that no sooner
See the lure out, and hear their husbands hollow,
But cry like kites upon 'em.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act i. sc. 1.

'Ere flitting Time could wag his eyas wings
About that mighty bound, which doth embrace
The rolling sphere, and parts their houres by space,
That high Eternall powre, which now doth moue
In all these things, mou'd in itselfe by loue.
Spenser. An Hymne of Heauenly Loue.

As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave
Where he hath lefte his plumes all hory gray
And deckt himselfe with fethers youthly gay,
Like eyas hauke up mounts unto the skies,
His newly-budded pinions to assay.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11

Mist. Ford. How now my eyas-musket, what news with you? Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. sc. 3.

If through their beauties, like rich work through lawn,
They would set forth their minds with virtues drawn,
In letting graces from their fingers fly,
To still their eyass thoughts with industry.
Marlow and Chapman. Hero & Leander.

EYE, v. } Goth. Augo; A. S. Eag; Dut. Ooghe; Ger. Aug. Skinner is inclined to prefer the Fr. Th. Ougan, ostendere; others, through the Fr. Œil; the Lat. Oculus. Tooke the Goth. Augyan, ostendere; in Ger. Aug-en; Dut. Oog-hen; and in this primitive meaning it is used by Shakespeare, in Antony and Cleopatra.
EYE, n.
EY'ER.
EY'EING, n.

To show; to snow to the sight; to hold or keep in sight or view; to view, to observe, to look at.
Eye is used for a small speck or spot, portion or quantity.
Eye, the n. is much used in Composition.

So rygtful he was, that than he hadde a dede hym self ydo,
That ageyn ys lawes was, and ys sone also,
For such dede a man schulde, that this hadde ywrogt,
Lose ys on eye, and he hym self ne sparede hym self nogt,
Bute let pulte out ys owne eye, and ys sone's al so.
R. Gloucester, p. 71.

And an dreduol dragon fram the West come myd hym to fyghte,
That the beom of ys eyen al the contreye lyghte.
Id. p. 202.

For as a man may nat see, that myase thus eyen
No more can no clerkes, bote hit be of bookes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 231.

For all that han here hele, and here eyen syghte
And lymes to laborye with. Id. Ib.

Your father is in sleight as Argus eyed.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv

And in his harping, whan that he hadde songe,
His eyen twinkeled in his head aright
As don the sterres in a frosty night.—Id. Prologue.

And downe on knees he gan to fall,
And forth his necke and heed out straught
To drinke of that well a draught,
And in the water anon was sene
His nose, his mouth, his eyen shene,
And he thereof was all abashed.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

So howe curious these Fathers wer, in the wa. eying of theyr wares.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

Full many mighty strokes on either side
Were sent, that seemed death in them to beare:
But they were both so watchfull and well eyde,
That they avoyded were, and vainly by did slide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

Cleop. ——— But, sir, forgive me
Since my becommings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you.—Shakespeare. Ant. & Cleop. Act i. sc. 3.

The stranger ey'd her earnestly, and she
As earnestly desir'd that she might see
His perfect visage.—Chalkhill. Thealma & Clearchus.

—— Giovanni!
My nephew! let me eye thee better, boy.
In thee, methinks, my sister lives again.
Massinger. The Great Duke of Florence, Act I. sc. 2.

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.
Seb. With an eye of green in't.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act II. sc. 1.

Waiting aid, with earnest eying,
Calling God with bootlesse crying;
Dymm and dry in me are found,
Eye to see, and throat to sound.—Sir P. Sidney, Ps. 69.

The suitor was a diligent eyer of her.
Gayton. On Don Quixote, Notes.

What but faith eying the prize, will quicken us to run patiently the race that is set before us?
Barrow, vol. II. Ser. 3.

As the eyes are the windows to let in the species of all exterior objects into the dark cells of the brain, for the information of the soul; so are they flaming torches to reveal to those abroad, how the soul within is moved or affected.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. II.

Directing our eye is necessary for guiding our steps, and therefore the apostle here directs the eye of our mind to Jesus Christ: whom if we so contemplate as to learn what he was, and expects us to be, nothing will be wanting to carry us happily through the journey of life.
Seeker. Works, vol. I. Ser. 6.

EYRE. See Eire.

He was created Marquess of Buckingham, and made Lord Admiral of England, Chief Justice in eyre of all the parks and forests on the south side of Trent.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 211.

EY'RY. Spelman says, from the Sax. Eghe; Ger. Eye, i. ovum, g, as is usual, softened into y; and thus, Eyery, (q.d.) eggery, ovorum repositorium. Egg is written ey in old English authors. See Egg.

In the rocks of this maritime coast of Pembroke are eyries of excellent falcons.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 5.

—— There the eagle and the stork
On cliffs and cedar tops their eyries build.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. VI.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent eiry does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

EY'SELL. See Eisell.

F.

F, Ben Jonson says, is a letter of two forces with us; and in them both sound with the nether-lip rounded and a kind of blowing out; but gentler in the one than the other. The difference, he adds, will best be found in the word of, which, as a preposition, sounds ov, of him; as the adverb of distance, off, farre off, (The English Grammar, c. 3.) Wilkins considers F as the correspondent mute to V, framed by the same kind of position of the lips and teeth, and percolation of the breath betwixt them, with this only difference, that as the former (V) was with some kind of vocal sound, so this (F) is wholly mute, i. e. without any vocal sound. Wilkins also remarks, that F and V have the same power which is commonly ascribed to P and B, asperated, or rather incrassated, and that F is answerable to the Gr. Φ. (On a Real Character, pt. iii. c. 12.) There seems reason to suspect that in some instances F is a corruption from be; as flap, from be-lap; pe or ph, lap, phlap, or flap; flank, from be-lank, pe or ph, lank, phlank, flank.

FA'BLE, v.
Fa'ble, n.
Fa'bler, n.
Fa'bling, n.
Fa'bulist.
Fa'bulous.
Fa'bulously.
Fa'bulousness.
Fabulo'sity.

Fr. Fabloyer; Sp. Fabular; It. Fabula, favellare, favola; Lat. Fabulare; from the verb fari, to speak. Nothing more clear than that fable is spoken as well of that which is true, as of that which is false, (Vossius.) And hence confabulandi vox. Fable in English is applied only to—

Any feigned thing; a fiction or invention, told or narrated. A feigned tale or story; and

To fable,—to tell, narrate or relate feigned tales or stories, fictions or inventions.

As I preiede thee that thou schuldist dwelle at Ephesi whanne I went into Macedonie, that thou schuldist denounce to summen, that thei schulden not teche othirwise, neithir gyue tent to fablis.—Wiclif. 1 Tim. c. 1.

As I besought the to abyde styll in Ephesus when I departed into Macedonia, euen so do, yᵗ thou commaûde some that they teache no otherwyse: nether gene hede to fables.
Bible, 1551. Id.

First, whereof mirth serued there,
And eke what folke there with him were,
Without fable I wol discrive.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Christ loued to haue the talke of his birth, and coming, first to aryse and beginne of suche reporters and publishers, as were men of suche simplicitie and plainnes, that no man woulde suspecte or mistrust any of them eyther of fablyng and lying, or elles of clokyng and counterfeicting.
Udal. Luke, c. 2.

Though I remembre the fable
Of Penelope most stable,
To her husband most trew,
Yet long time she ne knew
Whether he were on liue or ded.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

If so many examples, if suche copie of presydentes collected out of your own histories and gathered oute of youre owne writers suffice not to confounde your simple salique lawe inuented by falce fablers and crafty imaginers of your fablyng Frenche menne, then here what God saith in the booke of Numeri.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

Mayest (thou, Theophilus) refuse the fablinges of a great sorte which dooe at thys present, vnder the false counterfeyte name of the Gospel, set out theyr owne peynted sheath.
Udal. Luke, Prologue.

Wherof with the froth of yt raging gust, the fabulous poets reporteth men to be engendered, which was ye first mother of the pagane priestes Chastyte.
Bale. Englishe Votaries, pt. II.

As for Noah, the fabling heathen, it is like, deified him. The Berosus of fabling Annius, calleth him Father of Gods, Heauen, Chaos, the Soule of the World.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. I. c. 16.

Though wicked kyngs and tyrants counterfeit her [Justice] sword, as some did that buckler, fabled to fall from heaven into the Capitol, yet she communicates her power to none but such as like herself are just, or at least will do justice.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

Tal. He fables not, I heare the enemie.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 2.

Parth. What a strange torture
Is avarice to itself! what man, that looks on Such a penurious spectacle, but must
Know what the fable meant of Tantalus.
Massinger. The Roman Actor, Act I. sc. 3.

Clar. Yet women sure, in such a case, are ever
More secret than men are.
Sil. —— Yes, and talk less.
Rom. That is a truth much fabled, never found.
You secret, when your dresses blab your vanities!
Ford. The Fancies, Chaste and Noble, Act III. sc. 3.

These idle fablers in the mean time slander us to the world, as guiltie of the same outragious proceedings against them.—Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome.

Those bold fabulists, therefore take a course to cast themselves into that pit, whence they have presumptuously fained the deliverance of others.—Id. A Sermon of Thanksgiving.

I know they [books] are as lively, as vigourously productive, as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men.
Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

When she [the Phœnix] her selfe is able to endure and carrie such a burthen, and to accomplish the voiage, she lifteth vp her father's bodie, and carrieth it to the altar of the sunne, and there doth burn and sacrifice it. These things are uncertain, and fabulously augmented.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 131.

Herodotus hath besprinkled his work with many fabulosities, whereby if any man be led into errour, he mistaketh the intention of the author; who plainly confesseth he writeth many things by hearsay.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. I. c. 8.

But chiefly the words of consecration were by no means to be heard by the people; it being fabled, that when the words were spoken aloud, some shepherds had repeated them over their bread, which was thereupon presently turned into flesh.—Burnet. History of Reformation, an. 1548.

Fables were first began and raised to the highest perfection in the eastern countries, where they wrote in signs and spoke in parables, and delivered the most usefull precepts in delightful stories, which for their aptness were entertaining to the most judicious, and led the vulgar into understanding, by surprising them with their novelty.
Prior & Mountague. On Dryden's Hind and Panther.

Gregory of Tours (about A. D. 573) tells us a story of an infant Jew who happened to receive the Eucharist among the Christian children communicants. The story perhaps is fabulous, but the manner of his telling it is an argument of the practice of his own time.
Waterland. Works, vol. IX. p. 504.

From what has been observed, the attentive readers may perceive how to distinguish the true and proper allegorists from the fablemongers or mythics, (I know not what else to call them,) such as Dr. Burnet, &c. before mentioned.
Waterland. Works, vol. VI. p. 16.

Then ever, beauteous Contemplation, hail!
To loftier rapture thou canst wake the thought,
Than all the fabling poets boasted pow'rs.
Warton. Pleasures of Melancholy.

From seeds, or suckers, layers, or sets arise
Their various tribes, for now exploded stands
The vulgar fable of spontaneous birth
To plant or animal. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

Without more words you will readily apprehend that the fancies of our modern bards are not more gallant, but on a change of the scene, more sublime, more terrible, more alarming, than those of the classic fablers.
Hurd. On Chivalry & Romance, Let. 6.

Chief he admir'd that learned piece
Wrote by the fabulist of Greece,
Where Wisdom speaks in crows and cocks,
And Cunning sneaks into a fox.
Cawthorn. Birth and Education of Genius.

A forger or a fabulist would have made for Christ, discourses exhorting to virtue and dissuading from vice in general terms.—Paley. Evidences, pt. II. c. 4.

I take the fabulous birth of Minerva, the Goddesse of Arms, Wisdom, Arts, and Sciences, to have been an allegory of the ancients calculated to show, that women of natural and usual births must not aim at those accomplishments.
Chesterfield. Misc. Pieces. Common Sense, XIII.

His [Boethius'] is written with elegance and vigour, but his fabulousness and credulity are justly blamed. His fabulousness, if he was the author of the fictions, is a fault for which no apology can be made; but his credulity may be excused in an age when all men were credulous.
Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

Now, as, by his history, he means this book of Job, it is evident he supposed the fabulosity of the book concluded against the existence of the patriarch.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. VI. s. 2.

FA'BRICATE.
Fabrica'tion.
Fa'bricator.
Fa'brick, n.
Fa'brick, v.

Fr. Fabriquer; It. Fabricare; Sp. Fabricar; Lat. Fabricare, faber; which Isidorus, rightly says Vossius, derives a faciendo, to form or frame.

"Fr. Fabriquer,—to fabricate, frame; build, make, forge, fashion, form; plot, invent, contrive, devise," (Cotgrave.)

The common verb is to fabricate. Milton has given an example of, to fabrick.

But going further into particulars, [Plato] falls into conjectures, attributing the affection of the soul unto the great God, but the fabrication of the body to the Dii ex Deo, or Angels, it seems according to the tradition of the Egyptians.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 290.

The almighty Fabricator of the universe, who doth nothing in vain, nor suffers his handmaid Nature to do so, when he created the erratic and fixed stars, did not make those huge immense bodies, whereof most are bigger than the earth and sea, tho' conglobated, to twinkle only, and to be an ornament to the roof of heaven.—Howell, b. III. Let. 9.

Ver. Why, here's a fabric that implies eternity,
The building plain, but most substantial;
Methinks it looks as if it mock'd all ruin.
Middleton. The Mayor of Quinborough, Act IV. sc. 2.

He who hears what praying there is for light and clear knowledge to be sent down among us, would think of other matters to be constituted beyond the discipline of Geneva, framed and fabric'd already to our hands.
Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

Once more, harmonious, strike the sounding string,
Th' Epean fabric, fam'd by Pallas, sing;
How stern Ulysses, furious to destroy,
With latent heroes sack'd imperial Troy.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

She found the polish'd glass whose small convex
Enlarges to ten million of degrees
The nute, invisible else, of Nature's hand
Least animal; and shows what laws of life
The cheese-inhabitants observe, and how
Fabric their mansion in the harden'd milk,
Wonderful artists! J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

As he was not vain enough to think, that any Bill he could fabricate would be perfect, or that a Bill containing so large a number of various regulations would not call for much discussion, and even some alteration, he certainly would give due time for gentlemen to consider the subject.
Fox. Speech on the East India Bills, (Nov. 27, 1783.)

The very idea of the fabrication of a new government, is enough to fill us with disgust and horrour.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

The Revolution Society, the fabricators of governments, the heroick band of cashierers of monarchs, electors of sovereigns, and leaders of kings in triumph, strutting with a proud consciousness of the diffusion of knowledge, of which every member had obtained so large a share in the donative, were in haste to make a generous diffusion of the knowledge they had thus gratuitously received.—Id. Ib.

The distracted inhabitants of the world will fly to us for sanctuary, driven out of their countries from the dreadful consequence of not attending to seasonable reforms in government, victims to the folly of suffering corruptions to continue, till the whole fabric of society is dissolved and tumbles into ruin.—Erskine. Trial of Thomas Hardy.

FA'BURDEN. Fr. Faux-bourdon, which Cotgrave calls, the drone of a bag-pipe.

Nor the great belles he ronge after that, nor yet the freshe discante, prycksonge, counter point, and faburden be called for; in the whiche are the verye synagoge of Sathan.
Bale. Image, pt. iii.

What is the cause that it was a custom among the maidens of the Bottiæans in their dancing, to sing, as it were, the faburden of a song. Go we to Athens.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 735.

FACE, v. } Fr. Face; It. Faccia; Sp. Haz; Lat. Facies, from facere, to do, to make. Facies proprie idem sit, quod factura, say Vossius and Nonius. Facies est forma omnis et modus, et factura quædam corporis totius; a faciendo dicta, (Aul. Gellius, xxiii. 29.) The whole form and manner, and the make or composition of the whole frame or body; so called from facere, to form or frame. Face, the noun, is—

FACE, n. }
FA'CING, n. }
FACA'DE. }

The general form or appearance.

Then applied to, the exterior or superficial appearance; the front view, the countenance; the front or forepart of the head; and also, emphatically, to a good, confident, or bold face, with a subaudition of the adjectives.

Façade,—It. Facciata; Fr. Façade, facies domus, the front or frontispiece of a house;—a common term in architecture.

——— That blod adoun wende
So vaste in eye, and in face, that hym ney ablende.
R. Gloucester, p. 208.

And made him a loute al adoun, is face vpe on the ston.
Id. p. 476.

No non so faire of face, of spech so lufty.
R. Brunne, p. 30.

Bold was hire face, and fayre and red of hew.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 460.

Solinus speketh of a wonder kinde,
And saith of foules there is one,
Whiche hath a face of bloode and bone,
Like to a man in resemblance. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

I haue here in thys fyrst part alreadye broughte you for the trewe fayth of the Catholike churche, agaynst your false heresy, wherewith you would face our Sauiour out of the blessed sacrament: I haue brought agaynst you to your face, Saint Bede, and Theophylactus.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1132.

And he sayde furthermore: thou mayst not see my face for there shal no man see me and lyue
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 33.

For there thou needs must learne to laugh, to lie,
To face, to forge, to scoffe, to companie.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.
Bible. 2 Cor. iv. 6.

But since she did neglect her looking glasse,
And threw her sun-expelling masque away,
The ayre had starv'd the roses in her cheekes,
And pinch'd the lily tincture of her face,
That now she is become as blacke as I.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 4.

——— Or do you think
Your tawny coats, with greasy facings here
Shall conquer it?—Barry. Merry Tricks, Act iii. sc. 1.

Did you ever in your life know an ill painter
Desire to have his dwelling next doore to the shop
Of an excellent picture-maker? 'twould disgrace
His face-making, and undo him.
Webster. The Dutchesse of Malfy, Act iii. sc. 2.

On the 26th of this, [October,] was this murderer hanged, for more terror, at Charing Cross, in the very face of the court, though five hundred crowns had been offered by the strangers, his country men, to save his life
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

The times were no more, when a Dryden or a Swift, in support of ministers and courts, alone faced legions, and fought them with advantage.
Maty. Memoirs of Lord Chesterfield, s. 4.

While the men wore shoes so long and picked, that they were forced to support the points by chains from their middle; the ladies erected such pyramids on their heads, that the face became the center of the body.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

FA'CET. Fr. Facette, diminutive of face; a small face or surface.

Honour, that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection; like diamonds cut with facets.
Bacon. Ess. Of Honour & Reputation.

FACE'TE, adj. }
FACE'TELY. }
FACE'TENESS. }
FACE'TIOUS. }
FACE'TIOUSLY. }
FACE'TIOUSNESS. }

Fr. Facétieux; It. Facetioso, faceto; Lat. Facetus, which Donatus thinks is from Facere; facetus est, qui facit verbis, quod vult. Alii facetus, quia imitando se alium facit. But Perottus, inasmuch as facetiæ has respect to words and not to deeds, derives from fari, to speak.

Facetiousness implies, good humour or cheerfulness combined with wit.

Barrow (see the quotation from him) gives an elaborate and copious description of it. (Sermon against Foolish Talking or Jesting.)

Lodovicus Suessanus, a facete companion, diswaded him to the contrary.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 149.

They are the chiefe seats of love, and as James Lernutius hath facetely expressed in an elegant ode of his, &c.
Id. Ib. p 461.

Parables do not only by their plainness open the understanding, but they work upon the affections, and breed delight of hearing by the reason of that faceteness and wittiness which is many times found in them, by reason of which they insinuate themselves, and creep into us, and ere we are aware work that end for which they were delivered.
Hale. Rem. Ser. Luke, xviii. 1.

Next, the word politician is not used to his maw, and thereupon he plays the most notorious hobby horse, jesting and frisking in the luxury of his nonsense with such poor fetches to cog a laughter from us, that no antic hobnail at a morris but is more handsomely facetious.
Milton. Colasterion.

His [Thomas Bastard's] discourses were always pleasant and facete, which made his company desired by all ingenious men.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

In deliberations and debates about affairs of great importance, the simple manner of speaking to the point is the proper, easie, clear, and compendious way: facetious speech there serves onely to obstruct and entangle business, to lose time, and to protract the result.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

B. answers very facetiously: I must own that a command to lend, hoping for nothing again, and a command to borrow, without returning any thing again, seem very different commands.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 86.

But first it may be demanded, What the thing we speak of is, or what this facetiousness doth import? To which question I might reply, as Democritus did to him that asked the definition of a man, 'Tis that which we all see and know: any one better apprehends what it is by acquaintance, than I can inform him by description.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

On the reputation, however, of that education, by his singing, excellent mimickry, and facetious spirit, he [Worsdale] gained many patrons and business, and was appointed master-painter to the Board of Ordnance.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 3.

Magnificent in his living, reserved in his conversation, grave in his common deportment, but relaxing with a wise facetiousness, he [William I.] knew how to relieve his mind and preserve his dignity.
Burke. Abridgement of English History, an. 1067.

FA'CILE. }
FA'CILENESS. }
FA'CILY. }
FACI'LITATE, v. }
FACILITA'TION. }
FACI'LITY. }

Fr. Facile; It. Facile; Sp. Facil; Lat. Facilis, contracted from facibilis, that can or may be done; and thus, easy to be done, easily done.

Easy to be done or made, performed or accomplished; and applied to persons who have no hard or harsh, austere or repulsive qualities; who are affable, easy of access; easily persuaded or prevailed upon.

The principal cause of this my lyttell enterpryse, is to declare an induction or meane, howe children of gentyll nature or disposition may be trayned into the way of vertue with a pleasant facilite.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, c. 22.

And let ourselues againe but vnderstand,
That as it more concernes the Turke then Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question beare it.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

——— If from this houre
Within these hallow'd limits thou appeer,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd.
And seale thee so, as henceforth not to scorne
The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Too facil then thou didst not much gainsay,
Nay didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss:
Hadst thou bin firm and fixt in thy dissent,
Neither had I transgress'd, nor thou with mee.
Id. Ib. b. ix.

——— Alas,
That facil hearts should to themselves be foes,
When others they with facilness befriend,
That pliant twigs should break because they bend.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 17. st. 197.

——— So facile he bore
His royall person, that he shooke shoutes from the Greekes, with thirst,
That he should conquer though hee flew.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

They persuade themselves that your majesty [K. of Denmark] for this reason, will take those counsels in reference to this republic, which may facilitate the good success of those things propounded by your majesty to ourselves so desirous of your amity.—Milton. Let. of State, April, 1652.

A generall habit of sincerity, when it is referred to religious uses, proves a facilitation towards fidelity and perseverence in them.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 10. s. 6.

P. Broth. Yes, yes, yes, she'll take still; she has a kind of facility in taking. How comes your hand bloody, sir?
Middleton. A Mad World, my Masters, Act iii.

And when once a man hath attained to such a sense of God as this is, all other acts of piety will be facile and easy to him. for indeed he cannot but exert them.
Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 91.

Upon occasion of this communication, the ambassadors mixt such discourse as might serve to facilitate somewhat more to be attained of that court for the said college (Oxon.)
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1528.

Which, though of divers kinds, may (to add towards the facilitations of trials) be made of a very conspicuous colour, by the self-same metal, copper.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 497.

It breeds up a nursery of watermen, which upon occasion will prove good seamen; and with much facility maintaine intercourse and communion between cities and countries.
Parl. Hist. Chas. II. an. 1664. The Speaker's Speech.

Obedience becomes facile, and facility communicates the pleasures of habit.—Cogan. Ethical Treat. pt. ii. Dis. 2. c. 3.

If terms were offered to the Americans before it was too late, they might perhaps accept them at least it would be doing no more than justice required at our hands; it would detach many of them from the congress, and by dividing them, facilitate a conquest.
Fox. Speech. On the King's Speech, 18th Nov. 1777.

It is evident that the earliest searchers after knowledge must have proposed knowledge only as their reward; and that science, though perhaps the nurseling of interest, was the daughter of curiosity: for who can believe that they who first watched the course of the stars, foresaw the use of their discoveries to the facilitation of commerce, or the mensuration of time?—Rambler, No. 103.

Some gentlemen are not terrified by the facility with which government has been overturned in France.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

FACI'NOROUS. Lat. Facinorosus, formed from facinus, oris; and this, from fac-ere, to do;—any act or deed; subsequently applied, to a wicked act or deed.

Wicked, to an excess. See an example from Feltham in v. Epidemick.

And although in ye adepcion and obteining of ye garlāde I being seduced and prouoked by sinister counsail and diabolical temptaciō did commyt a facynerous and detestable acte.—Hall. Rich. III. an. 3.

He was of such stowte stomack and haute courage, yt at the same time yt he was drawen on the herdle toward his death, he sayd (as men do reporte) that for this myscheuous and facinorus acte, he should haue a name perpetual and a fame permanat and immortal.—Hall. Hen. VII. an 7.

He's of a most factinerious spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the—

Ol. Laf. Very hand of heauen.
Par. I, so I say.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 3.

FACT.
FA'CTION.
FA'CTIONARY.
FA'CTIONER.
FA'CTIONIST.
FA'CTIOUS.
FA'CTIOUSLY.
FA'CTIOUSNESS.
FACTI'TIOUS.
FA'CTIVE.
FA'CTOR.
FA'CTORESS.
FA'CTORY.
FA'CTURE.
FA'CULTY.

Fr. Faict or Fait; It. Fatto; Sp. Hecho; Lat. Factum, from Facere, to do; any thing done. (The Lat. Ag-ere, aug-ere; Gr. Αγ-ειν, appear to be the Goth. Auc-an; A. S. Eac-an;—and the Lat. Fac-ere (c, hard;—fag-ere, g, hard) to be the A. S. Feg-an,—itself formed of the A. S. Eac-an, to eke, and the prefix, Be, successively corrupted into pe, p, ph, (φ,) f;—thus, f-eac-an, f-eg-an. See F, and FAG.)

Fact,—any thing do-ed or done; a deed, an act.

Faction,—applied to those who would do one thing in opposition to those who would do another. A party.

Facultas (from the obsolete facul) and facilitas (from facilis,) (see FACILE,) were originally the same, and only distinguished by usage. Facultates, sunt aut quibus facilius fit, aut sine quibus omnino confici non potest. (Cic. de Inven. lib. ii. 40.)

Faculty,—is that by which any thing may be done more easily, or without which it cannot be done at all; power, ability, capability.

It is applied to the professors or practitioners of a science: to the science; as the faculty of medicine.

For unto swiche a worthy man as he
Accordeth nought, as by facultie,
To haven with sike lazars acquaintance.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 244.

For it is no godly poynete for to cast a man headlong into the ryuer, yt by delueryng of him thou mayest seme to be a man of great feacte: but it is a godly thing to plucke out him yt chaunce is fallen in.—Udal. Matthew, c. 4.

In Galilea, not onely in all cityes, and in al villages, and al quarters, but also almost in euerye house are factions. And the heades of theis factions are they, whom they esteme worthyest to have it.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 153.

But because he liued not longe, he coulde not proceede farre in his factious doinges, which tainted the Romaine prelates shamefully at this time especiallye.
Bale. The Pageant of Popes, fol. 60.

Therfor muste they be more cleane than the other, for they are the factours, or bayliffes of God.—Id. Apol. fol. 74.

First it is to be vnderstood, that the shipe for the voyage to St. Nicholas, in Russia, in which the factors and merchandise for the Persian voiage were transported, departed from Graues-end the 19th of June, 1579, which arrived at S. Nicholas in Russia, the 22d of July, where the factors and merchants landed, and merchandize were discharged.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 419.

He was one of them that had the charge of the kinge's person, a valyant man of warre, and yet more famous in the faculties of peace.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 277.

When he who most excells in fact of arms,
In what he counsels and in what excels
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

I sing the civil wars, tumultuous broils,
And bloody factions of a mighty land;
Whose people haughty, proud with foreign foils,
Upon themselves turn back their conq'ring hand.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Men. Prythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your generall.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 2.

I see zealous professors transformed to key-cold worldlings; reformed Catholicks turned to Romish factionists.
Bp. Hall. The Estate of a Christian. A Sermon.

This speech of his, the lesse that it favoured of factious partialitie and affection, the more auctoritie and sway it carried with it.—Holland. Livius, p. 528.

Glasses are sometime made hereof, and it becomes the chiefest ground for artificial and factitious gemms.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 1.

Your majesty is a king whose heart is as unscrutable for secret motions of goodness, as for depth of wisdom. You are creator-like, factive, and not destructive.
Bacon. To the King, (James I.) Let. 276.

My factor sends me word a merchant's fled
That owes me for a hundred tun of wine.
Marlow. The Jew of Malta, Act ii.

Heere [Sofala] the Portugals haue on a little island (whence the whole kingdome hath his name) a fort and factorie of very rich trade, the people bringing great quantity of gold (whereof they haue plentifull mines) for their cloth and other commodities.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. vii. c. 7. s. 3.

——— I scent your cruel mercies,
Your factress hath been tamp'ring for my misery;
Your old temptation; your shee-devil.
Ford. The Fancies, Chaste & Noble, Act iii. sc. 2.

And as to the diversity of parts, there is no doubt but the facture or framing of the inward parts is as full of difference as the outward.—Bacon. On Learning, b. ii.

——— Her soul is so immense,
And her strong faculties so apprehensive,
To search into the depth of deep designs,
And of all natures, that the burthen, which
To many men were insupportable,
To her is but a gentle exercise,
Made, by the frequent use, familiar to her.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act i. sc. 1.

Lor. Allow her fair, her symmetry and feature
So well proportion'd, as the heavenly object
With admiration would strike Ovid dumb,
Nay, force him to forget his faculty
In verse, and celebrate her praise in prose.
Id. The Bashful Lover, Act iv. sc. 1.

In a body, when the blood is fresh, the spirits pure and vigorous, not only to vital, but to rational faculties, and those in the acutest, and the pertest operations of wit and suttlety, it argues in what good plight and constitution the body is.—Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

——— This Duncane
Hath borne his faculties so meeke.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 7.

It would have been absurd to allege, in preaching to unbelievers, a fact which itself presupposed the truth of Christ's mission; and which could not have been proved without first taking for granted the truth of that very doctrine, in proof of which this fact was to have been alleged Clarke, vol. ii. Ser 69.

Not that Paul, and Apollos, and Cephas, were themselves the persons, about whom the factions were really raised: but, (as may well be gathered from what he adds at the conclusion,) he puts the case of other teachers in his own, and Peter's, and Apollo's name; that under that representation, he might reprove the unreasonableness of the Corinthian factions, the more inoffensively and the more effectually.
Id. Ser. 139.

All the factioners had entered into a seditious conspiracy.
Bp. Bancroft. Dangerous Positions.

He [Dr. Stile] was a man of courage and spirit, and kept a strict hand over the growing factionists.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1576.

Christianity is an humble, quiet, peaceable, and orderly religion; not noisy or ostentatious, not assuming or censorious, not factious or tumultuous; they who think otherwise of it, are altogether strangers to it.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 376.

Lord Hyde. You of the jury, you see the indictment is for causing a libellous and seditious book to be printed, under such a title, that is, "The Speeches and Prayers, &c.," it is for causing this, seditiously, factiously, and wickedly, to be printed; and for selling and publishing it abroad to the king's people.—State Trials. Sim. Dover & others, an. 1663.

If our work and office be attended with this difficulty, sure it is your duty to pity us, to pray for us, to encourage us by all possible ways and means, to the vigorous performance of it; at least not to add to our load, or discourage us, either by your wayward factiousness, or stubborn profaneness, or sacrilegious injustice.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 6.

The king, about a year after, seemed to make him his merchant, and granted him a licence, under the name of Sir Anthony Guidot, his factors and attorneys, to transport and carry over beyond seas woollen cloths, and kersies, &c.
Strype. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1549.

For gain has wonderful effects,
T' improve the factory of sects.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

For man's natural powers and faculties, even as they were before the fall, entire, were not sufficient or able of themselves to reach such a supernatural end, but needed the power of the divine Spirit to strengthen, elevate, and raise them thereunto.—Bp. Bull, vol. ii. Disc. 5.

It is true, that one man is charmed with Don Bellianis, and reads Virgil coldly: whilst another is transported with the Æneid, and leaves Don Bellianis to children. These two men seem to have a taste very different from each other; but in fact they differ very little.—Burke. On Taste, Introd.

The members of the court faction are fully indemnified for not holding places on the slippery heights of the kingdom, not only by the lead in all affairs, but also by the perfect security in which they enjoy less conspicuous, but very advantageous situations.—Id. On the Present Discontents.

Another thing will be of use to the administration, which is, that factious and seditious spirit that has appeared of late, in petitions, associations, &c. which shocks all sober thinking people, and will hinder them from going so far as otherwise they would have gone.
Chesterfield. Miscell. Works, vol. iv. Let. 91.

The opposition, whether patriotically or factiously, contending that the ministers had been oblivious of the national glory, and had made improper sacrifices of that publick interest, which they were bound not only to preserve, but by all fair methods to augment.—Burke. Reg Peace, Let. 3.

I have added sweets, from which our factitious wines are made.—Id. Ib.

The house in Leadenhall-street is nothing more than a change for their agents, factors, and deputies to meet in, to take care of their affairs, and support their interests.
Id. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Instead of this, he totally sequestered himself from his country; and, abandoning all appearance of state, he took up his residence in an ordinary house, which he purchased in the suburbs of the Company's factory at Madras.
Id. Speech on the Nabob of Arcot's Debts, Adv.

——— With boundless will
Let Self maintain her state and empire still,
But let her, with more worthy objects caught,
Strain all the faculties and force of thought
To things of higher daring.—Churchill. The Conference.

The obstinacy of Lord Chesterfield's deafness, which increased every day, and disqualified him more and more for society, had induced him to yield to the repeated advice of the faculty, to try whether any benefit could be obtained from a journey to Spa.—Maty. Mem. of L. Chesterfield, s. 6.

FACU'ND.
FACU'NDOUS.

From Lat. Fari, to speak. Facundus, so said, quia facile ornateque fatur, (Vossius.) And thus equivalent to—Eloquent, (qv.)

Discrete she was in answering alway,
Though she were wise as Pallas, dare I sain,
Hire facounde eke ful womanly and plain,
No counterfeted termes hadd she
To semen wise.—Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 11,984

Of eloquence was neuer found
So swete a sowning facound
Ne trewer tonged.
Id. Dreame.

This Richard was a man of meruelous qualities, and facundious facions.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 33.

FA'DING, n.
FADE, v.
FADE, adj.
FA'DELESS.
FA'DINGNESS.
FA'DY.

Kilian says—Vadden, deflorere, deflorescere, flaccescere; Eng. to fade. Vaddigh, flaccidus; Fr. Fade; Eng. Faded. Junius derives from the Fr. Fade, insipidus; and this he and Menage from the Lat. Fatuus. In our older writers the word is also written with v,—Vade. See the quotation from the Mirrour for Magistrates, and the last from Udal.

To decay, to decrease, to languish; to wither, to expire; to wither away, to vanish, to disappear.

So feble and eke so olde was she,
That faded was all her beautie.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And thus whan that the light is faded,
And vesper sheweth hym alofte,
And that the night is longe and softe
Under the cloudes derke and stille,
Than hath this thynge most of his wille.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And saw comyng ageine his chare,
Two pilgremes of so great age,
That like vnto a drie image
That weren pale and fade hewed.
Id. Ib. b. i.

My writhled cheekes bewraye that pride of heate is past,
My stag'ring steppes eke tell the trueth, that nature fadeth fast.
Gascoigne. The Divorce of a Lover.

But it [your minde] shall despise these vile and fading thinges.—Udal. Matthew, c. 6.

It is a naughty chaunge or alteracion of thinges, whē a man falleth again from the loue of the goodes of the soule, to the desyre of the goodes of the body from true riches to vayne and deceyuable riches: from euerlastyng commodities, to fading and transitory.—Id. Marke, c. 10.

That if God dooe with so great prouydence clothe a blade euen commoly growing euerie where, and anon after to vade and perishe awaie, and such a blade as this daie is freash and greene in the field, and the next morow whan it is dried vp, is cast into yᵉ fournace mouth to be burned, how much more wil he not suffer you to be vnclothed, O ye of litel faith.
Id. Luke, c. 12.

——— Beauties freshest greene
When spring of youth is spent, will vade, as it had neuer been;
The barren fields, which whilom flower'd as they would neuer fade,
Inricht with Summer's golden gifts, which now been all decay'd,
Did shew in state there was no trust, in wealth no certaine stay,
One stormie blast of frowning chance could blow them all away.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 556.

—— With greedy eye
He sought, all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithlesse enemy;
Who all that while lay hid in secret shade;
He stands amazed how he thence should fade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 8.

What stony hart, that heare thy haplesse fate,
Is not impierst with deepe compassiowne,
And makes ensample of man's wretched state,
That flowres so fresh at morne, and fades at evening late!
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

This befals them, when beautie (the fadingness whereof is the greatest detector and impeacher of our frailtie) proves an insurer of the lastingness of this life.
Mountagne. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. ii. s. 3.

Jove, with his fades thunder I despise,
And only fear the lightning of your eyes.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

My glory [Virgil] by thy skill shall brighter shine
With native charmes and energy divine!
Britain with just applause the work shall read,
And crown with fadeless bays thy sacred head.
Needler. To the Earl of Roscommon.

Tar water being made in an earthen vessel unglazed, or that hath lost part of its glazing, may extract, (as it is a strong menstruum) from the clay, a fade sweetishness, offensive to the palate
Bp. Berkeley. Farther Thoughts on Tar-water.

Know, first, that light displays and shade destroys
Refulgent nature's variegated dyes.
Thus bodies near the light distinctly shine
With rays direct, and as it fades decline.
Mason. Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting

Survey those walls, in fady texture clad,
Where wand'ring snails in many a winding path,
Free, unrestrain'd, their various journeys crawl.
Shenstone. Economy, pt. iii.

FADGE. Ger. Fugen; Dut. Voeghen, fochen; A. S. Feg-an, "gefeg-an, componere, jungere, to compound or compose, to set, put or joyn together; it. quadrare, to agree, to serve aptly in a place. Hence, happily, our Fadge; as when we say, things will not fadge, i. they will not be brought together, they will not so suit, correspond or agree, as to serve to that end whereto they are designed," (Somner.) See FAG.

"It hath beene when as heartie loue
Did treate and tie the knot,
Though now, if gold but lack in graines
The wedding fadgeth not."
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 29.

With flattery my Muse could neuer fadge,
Nor could this vain security effect,
From looser youth to win a light respect
Too base and vile. Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 3.

If this Scotch garboils do not fadge to our minds, we will pell mell run amongst the Cornish choughs presently, and in a trice.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 2.

Yet they shall be made, spite of antipathy, to fadge together, and combine as they may to their unspeakable wearisomeness, and dispair of all sociable delight in the ordinance which God establish'd to that very end.
Milton. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce, b. i. Pref.

For when they came the shape to model,
Not one could fit another's noddle;
But found their light and gifts more wide
From fadging, than th' unsanctify'd.—Hudib. pt. iii. c. 2.

Proceed to tragics: first, Euripides
(An author where I sometimes dip a-days)
Is rightly censur'd by the Stagirite,
Who says his numbers do not fadge aright.
Swift. To Dr. Sheridan, 1718.

FAG, v. } Perhaps a consequential usage of
FAG, n. } Fegan, ge-fegan, to order rightly, to labour or strive to make things fit or suit, or answer their purposes; and thus—

To labour hard, to labour assiduously, to work or labour till wearied. To be fagged; to be over-laboured, to be wearied with labour. A fag, a hard worker; a laborious drudge.

By Act of Parliament (4 Edw. IV.) cloths are required to be perfected according to one order of workmanship, without difference in the weaving, &c. And in case (it is added) any such difference or raw or skaw cocle or fagge, happen to be in any part of the said clothes, &c., then a seal of lead shall be set, &c. for perfect knowledge to be had to the buyer thereof. (See Rastall, fol. 123.) Thus, fag appears to have been applied to—

The inferior material or workmanship joined or fitted to the superior. And then, generally, to—

Any coarser or inferior material or workmanship; any thing coarser or inferior.

Fag, the verb and noun, though common in speech, (especially at our public schools,) are not so in writing.

Fag-end,—the end finished or worked off with inferior materials or workmanship, or both; and thus, (met. and lit.) the part or portion less valued or esteemed; of less value or estimation, consideration or consequence.

Spun. Who should think that we, coming forth of the fag-end of the world, should yet see the golden age, when so little silver is stirring.
Massinger. The Virgin-Martyr, Act ii. sc. 3.

The sprightlier infidel, as yet more gay,
Fires off the next ideas in his way,
The dry fag-ends of ev'ry obvious doubt,
And puffs and blows for fear they should go out.
Byrom. Enthusiasm.

But in comes a gentleman in the fag-end of October, dripping with the fogs of that humid and uncertain season, and does not hesitate in diameter to contradict this wise and just royal declaration.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

FA'GOT, v. } Fr. Fagoter, fagot; It. Fagotto.
FA'GOT, n. } Skinner, from the Lat. Fascis, (sc.) ligni; Menage, from Φακελος, i. e. Φορτιον ξυλων; Caseneuve, from the Lat. Fagus, a beech tree, fagots (he imagines) being first made of that wood. The It. Faggetto is a plantation of beech trees. Perhaps from A. S. Feg-an, to put together. (See FADGE.) It is (like the Lat. Fascis) applied to—

A bundle of sticks.

To fagot,—to bind or tie up in fagots or bundles; also, to burn with fagots.

Defending by their seculare armes idolatry, fighting, burning, and fageting for their idols
Joye. The Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

Casting before them the earth by little and little, they made one trauerse euen vnto the wall on two sides in all their batteries the which they made thick and strong with woolpacks, and other fagots, to assure themselues the better of our flanckers.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol ii pt. i. p 123.

But here I must give warning, that it be done distinctly and severally, the philosophies of every one throughout by themselves, and not by titles packed and fagotted up together, as hath been done by Plutarch.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b ii.

Did they not bind your worship's knighthood by the thumbs? then fagotted you, and the fool, your man, back to back.—Wilkins. Miseries of Inforced Marriage, Act v.

Ent'ring into their inner lodgings, they found faggots of bones of men's armes and legges, which they reserue to make heads for their arrowes.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ix. c. 13. s. 2.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagotted his notions, as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well.
Dryden. On Elkanah Settle.

The said reverend father enjoyned him by his oath, and under pain of relapse, that on the Lord's-day next, he should go before the cross bare headed, in procession, in his Church of Saint Leonard at Hith, near Colchester, where he was a parishioner, carrying a faggot on his shoulder.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1527.

She, wretched matron, forc'd in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread,
To pick her wintry faggot from the thorn,
To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn
She only left, of all the harmless train,
The sad historian of the pensive plain.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

FAIL, v. }
FAIL, n. }
FA'ILANCE. }
FA'ILING, n. } Fr. Faillir; It. Fallire; Sp. Fallar; Dut. Faelen, from the Lat. Fallere, which Vossius thinks is from Φαλ-ειν, Dorice pro Φηλ-ειν, decipere. As the Fr. Faillir,
FA'ILURE. }
To deceive, to disappoint; and thus, to desert, to forsake, to quit, relinquish or abandon; and also, to wane, to decay, to decease, to perish; to be wanting or deficient; to miss, to err.

Frut and corn ther faylede, tempestes ther come,
Lygtynge & thondre ek. R. Gloucester, p. 378.

Ac smot to hym myd ys ost, & ther wythoute fayle,
At Eccestre strong ynou hii smyte an batayle.—Id. p. 245.

Sore thei were trauailed, & socour com tham non,
And alle ther store failed, ther mete was nere gone.
R. Brunne, p. 30.

For meny men of this molde, setten more her herte
In worldliche good than in God, for thy grace hem failleth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 193.

I hold a mouse's wit not worth a leke
That hath but on hole for to starten to,
And if that faille, than is all ydo.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6156.

[He] thinketh, here cometh my mortal enemy,
Withouten faille, he must be ded or I.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1646.

Of silver in thy purse shalt thou not faille.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,178.

To mourther who that woll assente,
He mate not faile to repent.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

For tristeth wel withoute faile,
There is no thinge, which shall you faste,
That ought of reason to be do.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

Albeit that the season of the yeare mete for the warrefare fayled, yet he thought it might be greatly for hys behoof, to go vnto the iland and see what manner of men they were.
Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 97.

Than they sayd, sirs, without fayle there is no body within the castell. howe know you that? quod Sir Gualtier: Sir, quod they, we know it, for there is none appereth at their defence at all our shot.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 38.

Till that the rest him seeing lye on ground,
Ran hastily, to weet what did him ayle.
Where, finding that the breath gan him to faile,
With busie care they stroue him to awake,
And doft his helmet, and vnlid his maile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

K. Hen. —— Let dinner cheerfully
Be serv'd in; this day of the week is ours,
Our day of providence, for Saturday
Yet never fail'd, in all my undertakings
To yield me rest at night.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc 1.

—— So thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the leauen on all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and periur'd
From thy great faile.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc 4.

Kin. Speake on;
How grounded hee his title to the crowne
Vpon your faile; to this poynt hast thou heard him
At any time speake ought?—Id. Hen. VIII. Act i. sc 2.

His sicknesses in the later years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce, and always made it necessary for him not to stir from his chair, or so much as read a letter for two hours after every meal, failance wherein being certainly reveng'd by a fit of the gout.
Fell. Life of Hammond

If I acknowledge myself ever to have been a sinner, and to have failings in all I do, having always believed in Christ, is not this (say they) enough!
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. p. 359.

And am I so far grown mistress of myself,
That I who th'other day could scarce o'ercome
The sense of a slight failure at Madrid,
Can here at home suffer indignities,
And tell you calmly, and with unconcern'dness,
Be you Elvira's, and Elvira yours!—Digby. Elvira, Act v.

—— The soul
Of man alone, that particle divine,
Escapes the wreck of worlds, when all things fail.
Somervile. The Chace, b. iv.

The Fathers of the first three centuries, (that golden age of Christianity, tried and purified in the fire of persecution,) though not exempt from failings, not infallible, were yet men of higher character than those of the tenth or eleventh.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 304.

If you do not succeed, you are without resource; for, conciliation failing, no further hope of reconciliation is left.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

He insinuates that I was incited by avarice, or ambition, or party spirit. I have failings in common with every human being, besides my own peculiar faults: but of avarice I have generally held myself guiltless.
Fox. Speech. East India Bills.

[His enemies accused] him of having incited Creech to translate Horace, that by his failure in that work he might lose the reputation which he had gained by his poetical version of Lucretius.—Malone. Life of Dryden.

Our business is to shew, that objects of great dimensions are incompatible with beauty, the more incompatible as they are greater, whereas the small, if ever they fail of beauty, this failure is not to be attributed to their size.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. § 24.

FAIN, v. }
FAIN, adj. }
FAIN, adv. } A. S. Fægnian, gaudere, lætari, to be glad, to rejoice, to fain, (Somner.) Fain, the adverb, is still in common use,
FA'INNESS. }
Gladly, willingly, joyfully.

Tho this strong mon was slawe, that so strong was in fygt,
Ys men bi gonne to flee and fayn that heo mygt.
R. Gloucester, p. 121.

Thei were fayn to ask pes, & feaute thei him suore.
R. Brunne, p. 28.

"Ellred," said Dunstan, "thi brother Edward was slayn Thorgh thi moder Estrid, ther of scho was fulle fayn."
R. Brunne, p. 37.

Then Waryn Wyseman, and Wyleman his felawe
Fayne were to folwen hem, and faste ryden after.
Piers Ploughman, p. 65.

And of another thing they were as fayn,
That of hem alle was ther non yslayn.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2709.

The countreymen burye theyre corne after that manner, for want wherof the souldiours were fayne to lyue with herbes, and suche fishe as they caught in the ryuers.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 183.

As touching heretikes, I hate that vice of theirs and not their persons, and very fayne would I that the tone were destroied, and the tother saued.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 925.

But the vnrewly multitude flocking about him, were euermore at the veray heeles of him with importune throng, and pressed stil vpon him, for fainneese to heare the word of God out of his mouth.—Udal. Luke, c. 5.

His hart's enshrined saint, his heaven's queene,
Fairer then fairest, in his fayning eye
Whose sole aspect he counts felicitye.
Spenser. Hymne. In Honour of Loue.

Whose steadie hand was faine his steed to guyde,
And all the way from trotting hard to spare,
So was his toyse the more, the more that was his care.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

And, maiden, here in the sight
Of all your suitors, every man of worth,
I'll tell you whom I fainest would prefer
To the hard bargain of the marriage-bed.
London Prodigal, Act ii. Anon.

That puffed up with smoke of vanity,
And with selfe-loved personage deceiv'd,
He gan to hope of men to be receiv'd
For such, as he him thought, or faine would bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

This cooled them a little that would fain have been doing, because they supposed that all the army of the Athenians had been already in the city: the other, on the contrary side, were very glad to talk of peace, without any further danger.—North. Plutarch, p. 179.

My comfort is, that by this opinion my enemies are but sucking criticks, who would fain be nibbling ere their teeth are come.—Dryden. Pref. to All for Love.

The poem also, or the pilgrim, or both, have accompanied me from first to last, and perhaps it may be a pardonable vanity which induces me to reflect with complacency on a composition which in some degree connects me with the spot where it was produced, and the objects it would fain describe.—Byron. Ded. to Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

FAINT, v.
FAINT, adj.
FA'INTING, n.
FA'INTISH.
FA'INTISHNESS.
FA'INTLESS.
FA'INTLY.
FA'INTLING, adj.
FA'INTNESS,
FA'INTY.

Past part. Fained, fain'd, faint or feined, feind, feint; of the A. S. verb Fynig-ean, to corrupt, to decay, to wither, to fade, to pass away, to spoil in any manner, (Tooke, ii. 61.) And on this past part. the verb is formed.

To decay, to pass away, to wane, to deprive of all strength or power; to waste away, to be or become weak or feeble, to be or cause to be enfeebled, to sink, deject or depress.

& tho it com to the strengthe, hii fouzte feinteliche.
R. Gloucester, p. 515.

Conseil gan he take, that he suld be partie,
And Gode acorde to make, forsothe fulle fayntlie.
R. Brunne, p. 152.

O foule lust of luxurie, lo thin ende,
Nat only that those faintest mannes mind,
But verraily thou wolt his body shende.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5347.

What shall she sain, her witte is all ago,
Right as a wolfe that fainteth a lambe alone,
To whom shal she complain or make mone.
Id. Legend of Lucrece.

And all so feble, and in such wise
I was, that vnneth might I rise
So far trauailed, and so faint
That neither knew I kirke ne saint
Ne what was what, ne who was who.—Id. Dreame.

And though he differ thee, thinke it not long, nor faint not in thy fayth, or be slacke in thy prayer.
Tyndall. An Exposition vpon Matthew, c. 7.

Like as the feeble moone doth give sometime a fainting light
To men that walke in woodes, whã clouds do kepe the skies from sight,
And al things altred ben, and coulouree cleere are hyd by night.— Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

And as I sat to write my plaint,
Meaning to show my great vnrest,
With quaking hand, and hart ful faint,
Amid my playntes among the rest, &c.
Vncertaine Auctore. The Louer telleth his Diuers Ioies, &c.

That it woulde please hym to graunt vnto vs, the grace of perseuerasunce, to continue in the exercise and obseruation of his wyll and pleasure, least that by the faynting and faylyng therin, we myght after fall from that our former happy state of his grace and fauour.
Fisher. On Prayer, Last Reason.

Nimirum hi homines frigent, in faieth these men are colde and faintly.—Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, p. 48.

Whan they came to the barryers they began to skrymisshe but faintly, and lyke suche persones as coulde but lytell skyll of feates of armes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 170.

And vpon them that are lette a lyue of you I wyll sende a fayntnesse into theyr hartes in the lande of theyr enemies: so that the sounde of a leafe that falleth, shall chase them, and they shall flee as though they fled a swerde, and shal fall no man folowinge them.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 26.

Jacob sod potage, and Esau came frõ the felde and was faynte, and sayde to Jacob· let me suppe of yᵗ redde potage, for I am fainty.—Id. Genesis, c. 25.

The houses spoyld (that mischeif yet remaynd, and great anoy)
Shall I abide to see? and Drances woordes not prooue vntrue?
And shall this ground faint-harted dastard Turnus flying viewe?
Is it so vile a thyng to die?
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xii.

—— Yet least they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I behold them softned and with tears
Bewailing thir excess, all terror hide.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

He blest himselfe, as one sore terrifide;
And, turning feare to faint deuotion,
Did worship her as some celestiall vision.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

Methought I saw my late espoused saint,
Brought to me, like Alcestis, from the grave,
Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
Rescued from death by force, though pale and faint.
Milton, son. 23.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o're
To death's benumming opium as my only cure
Thence faintings, swoonings of despair,
And sense of heav'n's desertion.—Id. Samson Agonistes.

And I assure you this root [elecampane] thus confected is singular good for faintings; and especially quickneth the dulnesse and defect of the stomacke.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 5.

The temper of my loue, whose flame I find
Fin'd and refin'd too oft, but faintless flashes,
And must within short time fall downe in ashes.
Stirling, son. 22.

His bootelesse bow in feeble hand vpcaught,
And therewith shot an arrow at the lad;
Which faintly fluttring scarce his helmet raught,
And glauncing fel to ground, but him annoyed naught.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Though much renown'd because it [the emeraud] chastness loues,
And will when worn by the neglected wife,
Show when her absent lord disloyal proues,
By faintness, and a pale decay of life.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 4.

Yea, such a fear and faintness is grown in court, that they wish rather to hear the blowing of a horn to hunt, than the sound of a trumpet to fight.
Lyly Alexander & Campaspe, Act iv. sc. 3.

His name was Daunger, dreaded over all;
Who day and night did watch and duely ward,
From fearefull cowards entrance to forstall
And faint-heart fooles, whom shew of perile hard
Could terrifie from fortune's faire award.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iv. c 10.

Though great the pain and anguish that he bore,
His friends' and subjects' grief afflict him more,
Yet even that, and coming fate, he bears;
But sinks and faints to see a brother's tears
Duke On the Death of Charles II.

Thus every plant has its atmosphere, which have very various effects on those who stay near them, some producing head-achs, sleep, fainting, vapours; and others, a great refreshment of the spirits.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 3. s. 3.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintishness and debility in a hot day.—Id. On Air.

Hab. There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling, silly creature.—Id. Hist. of John Bull, pt. ii. c. 13.

—— Thy little sons
Permit to range the pastures; gladly they
Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet,
From whence thou artificial wines shalt drain
Of icy taste, that, in mid fervours, best
Slack craving thirst, and mitigate the day.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Conon. From Severn's banks, even to this barren down,
Our foremost men have prest their fainty rear,
And not one Saxon face has been beheld.
Dryden. King Arthur, Act i. sc. 1.

What boldly I begin, let others end;
My strength exhausted, fainting I descend,
And choose a less, but no ignoble theme.
Young. The Last Day, b. iii.

The story of Saint Peter delivered out of prison; the drawing and execution good, but the colouring in some parts faint.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 1.

Faintings, giddiness, pains in my stomach, vapours, all take it by turns, and sometimes attack me in a body, and almost overpower me.
Chesterfield. Miscell. Works, vol. iii. Let. 78.

If on coming home from a journey in hot weather you find yourself faintish and drouthy, and call for a glass of wine and water, have you not a pleasure in seeing the wine pour from the bottle or sparcle in the glass, even before you bring it to your mouth.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c 6.

Oh! many a night on this lone couch reclined,
My dreaming fear with storms hath wing'd the wind,
And deem'd the breath that faintly fann'd thy sail,
The murmuring prelude of the ruder gale
Byron. The Corsair, c. i.

FAIR, adj.
FAIR, ad.
FAIR, n.
FAIR, v.
FA'IRLY.
FA'IRNESS.

A. S. Fæg-er; which Skinner derives from fæg-en, (see FAIN,) gaudium, joy or gladness, (q. d.) aspectu jucundus; for all things fair or beautiful, gaudium excitant. In Goth. Fairgus is mundus. See Junius, Goth. Gloss.

Free from speck, spot or blemish; spotless, pure; and thus, pleasing, pleasing to the sight, beautiful; and, (met.) candid, equitable, impartial, just, honourable; also pleasing, gratifying, favourable, conferring success; gentle, peaceful.

That maide was to lond y brogt of so noble gentrise,
Fairor womman nas the non, y hote heo was Gewise.
R. Gloucester, p. 66.

Malde hight that mayden, a fayrer mot non lyue.
R. Brunne, p. 105.

Thanne was ich al so fayn. as foul of fair morwenynge
Piers Ploukman, p. 188.

Ich ros up and reverenced God. and ryght fayre hym greete. Id. p. 317.

And fariche hadd of hus fairnesse. Id. p. 224

What ladies fayrest ben or best dancing,
Or which of hem can carole best or sing,
Ne who most felingly speketh of love.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2203.

But what she was, she wold no man seye
For foule ne faire, though that she shulde deye.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4945.

They were ful glade whan I spake hem fayre,
For God it wot, I chidde hem spitously.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 8804.

But soch a fairnesse of a necke
Had that swete, that bone nor brocke
Nas there non seen. Id. Dreame.

To draw folk to heven, with fairnesse,
By good ensample was his besinesse.—Id. Prologue, v. 521.

My faire maiden well ye bee,
Of thyn answere, and eke of thee
Me liketh well. Gower Con. A. b i

Tedet harum quotidianarum formarum, I am wery of these, that amonge vs are called and taken for faire women. or I haue dooen with those faire women, that we haue dayly here among vs.—Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 81.

And yet all the season yᵉ Duke of Berry was behynde, and came but fayre and easely, for he had no grete appetyte to go into Englande.—Berners. Frois. Cron. vol. ii. c. 55

The whitenesse thereof [ivory] was so much esteemed, that it was thought to represent the natural fairenesse of man's skinne.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 19.

They of the castell sawe how they were assailed on all sydes, and coude parceyue no consort, and sawe well how the duke nor the constable wolde not departe thens tyll they had ye castell at their wyll, outher wyth foyrnesse or foulnesse.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 321.

Lyke as a fayre playstred wall in a wynter house, and an hye buyldynge, may not abyde the wynde and storme euen so is a fooles hearte afrayde in hys ymaginacyon.
Bible, 1551. The Boke of Jesus Syrach, c. 22.

Which faire-told tale, allured to him muche people, as well of the chiualry as of the meane sort
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 30.

For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Fairing the foul with art's false-borrowed face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy hour,
But is profaned, if not liues in disgrace.
Shakespeare, son. 127.

For sure the fayrest Florimel him seemed
To him was fallen for his happie lot,
Whose like alive on earth he wened not.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv c 2.

Yet, to die innocent, and have the glory
For all posterity to report, that I
Refused an empress, to preserve my faith
To my great master: in true judgment, must Show fairer, than to buy a guilty life
With wealth and honour.
Massinger. The Roman Actor, Act iv. sc. 2.

If his will was they should march on a pace, they would for the nonce go faire and softlie. If he encouraged them in propre person to plie their busines, they would all of them slacke their former service, whereunto they were entred of themselves.—Holland. Livie, p. 83.

The louely lillie, that faire flower for beautie past compare,
Whom winter's cold keene breath hath kill'd, and blasted all her faire,
Might teach the fairest under heau'n, that beauties freshest greene,
When spring of youth is spent, will vade, as it had neuer been. Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 556.

—— O happie faire!
Your eyes are loadstarres, and your tongues sweet ayre
More tuneable then lark to shepheards eare,
When wheate is greene, when hauthorne buds appeare.
Shakespeare. Mids. Night's Dreame, Act I. sc. 1.

Now ginnes that goodly frame of Temperaunce
Fayrely to rise, and her adorned head
To pricke of highest prayse forth to aduance.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Fayrest of faire, that fairenesse doest excell,
This happie day I haue to greete you well.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 2.

Zeal and charity; the which may be said to make a good complexion in the face of religion, the first relating to the colour of the blood, and the last to the fairnesse of the skin, through which the good tincture of zeale is transparent in the works of charity.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 3. s. 2.

In the year of his majesty's happy restoration, the first play I undertook was the Duke of Guise, as the fairest way which the act of indemnity had then left us of setting forth the rise of the late rebellion, and by exploding the villainies of it upon the stage to precaution posterity against the like errours.—Dryden. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

Talk'd I of love? yon swain, with amorous air
Soft swells his pipe, to charm the rural fair.
She milks the flocks; then list'ning as he plays,
Steals, in the running brook, a conscious gaze.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 4.

You will say, perhaps, that the doctor sets light by the Fathers and lays no stress upon them: I shall believe you, when he fairly gives them up.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 314.

The colours of beautiful bodies must not be dusky or muddy, but clean and fair.
Burke. On the Sublime, pt. iii. s. 17.

The print gives a very inadequate idea of it; and none of her Flemish fairness, [Anne of Cleve.]
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

FAIR. } Fr. Foire; It. Fiéra; Sp. Feria,
FA'IRING, n. } from the Lat. Feriæ, or rather, says Skinner, from Forum. Quo conferrent suas controversias, et quæ vendere vellint, et quo quæque ferrent, Forum appellarunt, (Varro, de L. L. lib. iv.)

A place to which things, (sc.) goods, wares, and merchandises are brought (feruntur) for sale.

Ther markettis & ther faires & ther castels reft.
R. Brunne, p. 296.

To Wy and to Winchestre, ich wente to the faire
With many merchandises.—Piers Ploughman, p. 97.

I governed hem so wel after my lawe,
That eche of hem ful blisful was and fawe [fain]
To bringen me gay thinges fro the feyre.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5802.

For tho' [the senses] be properly the gates
Through which, as to the hert algates,
Cometh all thing vnto the feire,
Whiche maie the mannes soule empeire.
Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Whereupon thei sent the Lorde Ambrose de Lore with vii. c. horsemen, to robbe and spoyle the poore people, commynge to the faier, on the daye of Sainct Michaell the Archangell, kepte in the suberbee of the toune of Caen.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 11.

He [Cæsar] made suite unto the consuls for a licence to hold faires and markets, for his own private manors and lands.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 159.

Qu Sweethearts, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc 2.

With a further grant, that there shall be for ever one market and two faire at Ringwood.—Strype. Mem. an. 1555.

If I am entitled to hold a fair or market, and another person sets up a fair or market so near mine that he does me a prejudice, it is a nuisance to the freehold which I have in my market or fair.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii c. 13.

FA'IRY, n. } Skinner derives from the A. S.
FA'IRY, adj. } Faran, to go, to travel; and Ruddiman (Gloss. to G. Douglas) thinks they received their name either, q. fair folk, pulchri homines; or q. faring folk,—homines vagantes et peregrinantes. The first supposition receives confirmation, as Dr. Jamieson thinks, from the circumstance, that another class of Genii have been called Brownies, most probably from their supposed swarthy appearance. In Dut. Vaerende vrowe, varende wijf, is rendered by Kilian, Dryas, Hamadryas; and also, incantatrix, venefica; volatica mulier; and this, Dr. Jamieson observes, seems to countenance the opinion of Skinner. See Jamieson, in v. Farefolkis.

They are likewise called Faye, (qv.); in Fr. Fée; which also signifies, "Fatal, appointed, destined; taken, bewitched or forespoken; charmed, inchanted." "Féerie, par féerie; fatally, by destiny, by appointment of the Faeries," (Cotgrave.) Faere, ensorcelé, enchanté, (Lacomb and Roquefort.) Faer, enchanter, ensorceler, (Roquefort.) Fr. Fée, and It. Fata, from the Lat. Fata, Parcæ. (See Menage, in vv. Fée and Fata, Dict. Etymol.; and Origini della Lingua Italiana.)

In olde dayes of the King Artour,
Of which that Bretons speken gret honour,
All was this land fulfilled of faerie;
The Elf-queene, with hire joly compagnie,
Danced ful oft in many a grene mede
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6439.

But evermore his most wonder was,
How that it coude gon and was of brass;
It was of fairie, as the peple semed.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,515.

The fier and ayre agreed, and to this cowplyng gaue their light
In signe of loye, and ouer head the mountain faries shright.
Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. iv.

But listen, and I shall you tell
A chance in fairy that befell,
Which certainly may please some well,
In love and arms delighting —Drayton. Nymphidia.

In the deserts of Affricke yee shall meet sometimes with fairies [hominum species] appearing in the shape of men and women, but they vanish soon away like fantastical illusions.—Holland. Pinie, b. vii. c. 2.

Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 'twill proue so; vp with't, keep it close: home, home, the next way.
Shakespeare. Winter Night's Tale, Act iii. sc. 3.

Dame Fortune, some men's tutelar,
Takes charge of them without their care;
Does all their drudgery and work,
Like fairies, for them in the dark.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

The parts of the airy and earthy spirits, and that fairy kind of writing which depends only upon the force of imagination, were the grounds of her liking the poem, and afterwards of her recommending it to the queen.
Dryden. Dedication to King Arthur.

And see the fairy valleys fade,
Dun night has veil'd the solemn view!
Yet once again, dear parted shade,
Meek nature's child, again adieu!
Collins. Ode on the Death of Mr. Thomson.

FA'ISIBLE, i. e. Feasible, that may be done. Fr. Faire; Lat. Facere, to do.

To require tasks not faisible, is tyrannicall, and doth onely picke a quarrell to punish; they could neither make straw, nor find it, yet they must have it.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Affliction of Israel.

FAIT. } Fait; Fr. Fait, or faict;
FA'ITOUR. } Lat. Factum, anything done, a
FA'ITOUROUS. } deed. See FEAT.
FA'ITRY. } Faitours, Skinner says, is explained—erro, seu vagabundus, from the Fr. Faitard, ignavus. Minshew thinks from the Fr. Fauseurs; that is, factores, doers; or, he adds, it may not improbably be interpreted idle livers, taken from Faitardise,—a kind of nummesse or sleepie disease, proceeded of too much sluggishnesse. Mr. Tyrwhitt, Faitour, a lazy, idle fellow. Faitard, piger. Faitard, faciens tarde, (Menage,) doing or acting slowly or sluggishly.

That faiteth for hue lyflode.—Piers Ploughman, p. 152.

Tho were faitours aferede, and feynede hem blynde.
Id. p. 134

—— Treuthe would
That no faiterye were founde. in folk that gon a begged
Id. p. 135

And nethles she wiste wele
My worde stode on an other whele,
Without any feiterie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For the more party they that wrote the fayts or deeds of the Brytons, make but a short rehersayll of these v. kyngs.
Fabyan, pt. i. c. 23.

And whan my lord [Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester] saw yt he had him walke faytoure, and made him be set openlye in the stockes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 134.

I let passe ouer the faitry and falsehed that is therin vsed amõg, sometyme by the priestes, sometime by beggers in fayning or false miracles.—Id. Ib. p. 140.

Which whenas Blandamour beheld, he sayd:
False faitour Scudamour, that hast by slight
And foul advantage this good knight dismayd,
A knight much better than thyself behight,
Well falls it thee that I am not in plight
This day, to wreake the dammage by thee donne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

The whole court from all parts thereof cryed out and said, that this was a fraudulent and faiterous Carthaginian trick, to chuse and send such for to sue for the old peace, which they themselves could not remember.
Holland. Livie, p. 755.

FAITH. }
FA'ITHED. }
FA'ITHFUL. }
FA'ITHFULLY. }
FA'ITHFULNESS. }
FA'ITHLESS. }
FA'ITHLESSLY. }
FA'ITHLESSNESS. } Skinner says, it seems to be from the It. Fede, (cum crassiori accentu et spiritu.) Tooke, that it is the A. S. Fægth, that which one covenanteth or engageth, the third person singular of the indicative of Fæg-an, (which is also written Feg-an, see FACT,) pangere, pag-ere, to engage, to covenant, to contract. It was, as he observes, anciently written faeth. It was also variously written feyth, feth, fayeth: and also Fay, (qv.)

That which any one covenanteth, pledgeth, or promiseth, (sc.) to believe or live, by or according to; a covenant, pledge, or promise; credit staked or pledged; credit given; and is thus used as equivalent to,—belief, trust or confidence, truth, fidelity.

Thorgh that Christendom, tho, that were so wrothe,
At haly kirke's feyth alle on were bothe.
R. Brunne, p. 24.

Sire Eymere of Valence lay at Saynt Jon toun,
In his alliance with many earle & baroune
Of Scotland the best were than in his feith.—Id. p. 333.

For whilom thou wrote him tille, & cald him in thi brefe,
Thi kynde, feythfulle & leale of Gascoyn noble duke;
Therto thou set thi seale. Id. p. 339.

—— So feithfulle thei bisemed
Bothe earls & barons. Id. p. 307.

Ne non so feithful fysician for alle that bysouhte
He lechede hem of here languor.—Piers Ploughman, p. 311.

God of his grete myght, and his good grace
Saue alle freres, that feithfulli lybben.—Id. Crede.

—— Holy wryt telleth
That Pais ys feithles. the fend ys hus syre.
Id. Vision, p. 31.

Thanne turnede I me forth, and talked to myselfe
Of the falshede of this folke, whom feythles thei weren.
Id. Crede.

Feithly for to speke. hus furste name wus Jhesus
Tho he was bore in Bethleem.—Id. Vision, p. 369

So also feith if it hath not workis, is deed in it silff. but sum man schal seie, thou hast feith, and I haue werkis. schewe thou to me thi feith withoute werkis. and I schal schewe to thee my feith of werkis.—Wichf. James, c. 2.

Euen so fayeth, if it have no dedes, is dead in itselfe. Yea, and a mã might saye: thou hast fayeth, and I haue deeds. shew me thy fayth by thy deedes. and I wyll shewe thee my fayth by my deedes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For the unfeithful housbonde is halowid by the feithful womman, and the unfeithful womman is halowid bi the feithful housbonde: elliis ghoure children weren unclene, but now thei ben hooli.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 7.

Alle men that wolen lyue faithfulli in Crist Iesu schulen suffre persecucioun.—Id. Tyte, c. 3.

(But I wol not avowen that I say,
And therfore kepe it secree I you pray)
He is to wise in faith, as I beleve.
Chaucer. Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,112.

Thā arne they folk that han most god in awe
And strengest faithed ben I vnderstond
And con an errour alderbest withstond.—Id. Troilus, b. i.

Thou lovest me, that wot I well certain,
And art my faithful liegeman ybore,
And all that liketh me I dare wel fain
It liketh thee. Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8185.

Ey goddes moder, quad she, blisful maid,
Is their ought ellee? tell me faithfully.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7789.

Complained eke Heleine of his sickenesse
So faithfully that it pety was to here.—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

Fayth is the beleuyng of God's promises, and a sure trust in the goodness and truth of God, which fayth iustified Abrah. Gen. xv. and was the mother of all his good workes whiche he afterward did, for faith is the goodnesse of all works in the sight of God.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 7.

He is weake faithed which loueth and embraceth the trwe doctrine, wold promoue it, suffreth himself to be enstructed, and studieth to profite therein and desyreth the techres to be preserued, and confesseth the trwth in a maner, albeit he dare not defende it openly and frely enoughe nor strongly, nethelesse he nether denieth it nor persecuteth it.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 6.

Where as agaynst his false ground that ther can be no true fayth but if it be writen in Scripture, I objected against him the faith of many good and faithfull men, in whose dayes we cannot proue that their faith was written, and yet we doubt not but that thei wer good and faithfull: he saieth, I cannot proue that they hadde no Scripture.
Sir T. More, Workes, p 468.

For Lycurgus succeadinge his brother Polybita in the kingdom of Sparta, when as he might lawfullye haue chalenged it to himselfe, surrendered the same with as muche faithfulnesse as might be, vnto his sonne Charilaus whyche was borne after the deathe of hys father, as soone as he came to mannes estate.—Golding. Justine, fol 21.

Praye God that he wyll witsafe to worke faith in thyne herte, for else shalt thou remaine euermore faithlesse, fayne thou, ymagin thou, enforce thou, wrastle with thy self, and do what thou wilt or canst.—Udal. Prologue to Romaynes.

Or if no skill they think it, but suppose
'Tis faith (and faith ne'er thinks heav'n's height too high.)
Yet faithe so sev'ral be, that few are those
Can choose right wings when they to heav'n would fly.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 1.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals,
Living and dead recorded, who, to save
Her countrey from a fierce destroyer, chose
Above the faith of wedlock bands; my tomb
With odours visited and annual flowers.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

—— I provided death; so death becomes
His final remedie, and after life
Tri'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith and faithful works, to second life,
Wak't in the renovation of the just,
Resigns him up with heav'n and earth renew'd.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

I' faith sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you haue vttered words in your owne, you should not passe heere.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 1.

—— He replied,
Thou vnpossessing bastard, dost thou thinke
If I would stand against thee, would the reposall
Of any trust, vertue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faith'd? Id. Lear, Act ii. sc. 1.

Lion. A faithful, not a ceremonious friend;
But one that will stick by you on occasions,
And vindicate your credit, were it sunk
Below all scorn, and interpose his life
Betwixt you and all dangers.
Marmion. The Antiquary, Act i. sc. 1.

But still thy words at random, as before,
Argue thy inexperience what behooves
From hard assaies and ill successes past
A faithful leader, not to hazard all
Through wayes of danger by himself untried.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Be briefe, in what thou wouldst command, that so
The docile mind may soone thy precepts know,
And hold them faithfully.—Johnson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

—— O name,
O sacred name of faithfulness profan'd!
Faithful to whom! to thy rebellious crew?
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv

He in his furie all shall over-ronne,
And holy Church with faithlesse hands deface,
That thy sad people, utterly fordonne,
Shall to the utmost mountaines fly apace.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

—— If ought seem vile,
As vile hath been my folly, who have profan'd
The mystery of God giv'n me under pledge
Of vow, and have betray'd it to a woman,
A Canaanite, my faithless enemy.—Milton. Samson Agon.

Which [peace and unity between England and Ireland] doubtlesse had beene easily effected long ere this, had we all beene faithfull, true, reall to the publike cause of God and our countrey in our severall places, and not faithlessely betrayed, but sincerely discharged the severall trusts reposed in us to the uttermost of our powers.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, p. 218. App.

If they had gone to God without Moses, I should have praised their faith; but now they goe to Moses without God, I hate their stubborne faithlessenesse.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Golden Calfe.

Faith, is that firm belief of things at present not seen, that conviction upon the mind, of the truth of the promises and threatnings of God made known in the Gospel; of the certain reality of the rewards and punishments of the life to come; which enables a man, in opposition to all the temptations of a corrupt world, to obey God in expectation of an invisible reward hereafter.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Aman. Well my opinion is, form what resolution you will, matrimony will be the end on't.
Ber. Faith, it wont.—Vanburgh. The Relapse, Act ii sc. 1.

Or if my frowning stars have so decreed,
That one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, within whose faithfull breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

And therefore the bishop requires them to deal plainly and faithfully with him and the church, and to tell him, whether they really trust, that they are mov'd by the Holy Ghost to take this office upon them? to which every one is bound to answer, I trust so.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser 3.

The word faith, always contains in it the notion of faithfulness or fidelity.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 26.

No natural cause she [Io] found, from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands to produce the fogs:
Then round the skies she sought for Jupiter,
Her faithless husband; but no Jove was there.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Let us give a faithful pledge to the people, that we honour indeed the crown; but that we belong to them; that we are their auxiliaries, and not their task masters; the fellow-labourers in the same vineyard, not lording over their rights, but helpers of their joy.—Burke. Economical Reform.

Though the generality of painters at that time were not equal to the subjects on which they were employed, yet they were close imitators of nature, and have perhaps transmitted more faithfull representations, than we could have expected from men of brighter imagination.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

But, as I said before, a case,
So far remov'd by time and place,
Is seldom faithfully related,
Or in most points, exaggerated.
Cambridge. Learning. A Dialogue.

Still nod the plumage o'er the brainless head.
Still o'er the faithless heart the riband spread.
Such toys may serve to signalize the tool,
To gild the knave, or garnish out the fool.
P. Whitehead. Manners, a Satire, 1738.

When the heart is sorely wounded by the ingratitude or faithlessness of those on whom it had leaned with the whole weight of affection, where shall it turn for relief?
Blair, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

FA'LCHION, or Fa'uchion. Fa'lcated. Falca'tion. } Fr. Fauchion, ensis falcatus, (Junius and Skinner,) from the Lat. Falx, a cutter. Applied to—

An arched or crescent-shaped cutter; a scimitar.

—— Ne Paul whit his fauchon
That wolde defende me hevene dore, dynge ich nevere so late. Piers Ploukman, p. 272.

And on his haunch a rousty fel fauchoun.
Chaucer. Testament of Cresside.

Aeneas sodenly for feare his glistring sword out tooke,
And as they threatning came he towards them his fauchon shooke. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. vi.

And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple faulchion, painted to the hilt,
In blood of those that had encountered him.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

Queene Margaret saw
Thy murd'rous faulchion smoaking in his blood:
The which, thou once didd'st bend against her brest,
But that thy brother's beate aside the point.
Id. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 2.

The trumpets sound, and they together run
With greedy rage, and with their faulchions smot;
Ne either sought the others strokes to shun,
But through great fury both their skill forgot.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

They are all horse men, carrying nothing but a bow, a sheaf of arrowes, and a fauchion sword: they are expert riders, and shoot as readily backward as forward.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. iv. c. 15. s. 1.

Venus, Mercury, and our Moon, have phases, and appear sometimes falcated, sometimes gibbous, and sometimes more or less round.—Derham. Astro-Theology, b. v. c. 1.

And this sphæricity, or rotundity, is manifest in our moon, yea in Venus too; in whose greatest falcations the dark part of their globe may be perceived, exhibiting themselves under the appearance of a dull and rusty colour.
Id. Ib

The locusts have antennæ or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c 3.

Heaven's queen, who favours both, gave this command,
Suppress thy wrath, and stay thy vengeful hand,
Be all thy rage in tauntful words exprest;
But guiltless let thy thirsty falchion rest.
Tickell. Homer. Iliad, b i.

But let us now (this tale awhile dismiss'd)
To Gryphon turn, who, when he reach'd the list,
Already found the manly jousts begun,
Spears broke, and falchions flashing in the sun.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xvii.

FA'LCON, or Fa'ucon. Fa'lconer. Fa'lconry. } Fr. Faulcon, faucon; It. Falcone; Sp. Halcon; Lat. Falco, a falce, quia ungues ejus falcem imitantur, (Vossius;) because its nails or claws resemble a hook. Skinner says, its nails and beak.

It is also a name given to a piece of artillery, which, according to Meyrick, (iii. 70,) in the time of Queen Elizabeth carried a ball of one pound and a half, and measured two inches in the bore; and thus, within falcon-shot; within the reach of shot from a falcon.

Morkar reeleymed es, as es the faukon fre,
And Eadwyn com to pes, he mot ne better se.
R. Brunne, p. 72.

And fatte thy faucones, to culle wylde foules.
Piers Ploughman, p. 129.

Amidde a tree for dry, as white as chalk
As Canace was playing in hire walk
Ther sat a faucon over hire hed ful hie,
That with a pitous vois so gan to crie,
That all the wood resouned of hire cry.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,725

The faucon whiche fleeth ramage,
And sufreth no thynge in the wale,
Wherof that he maie take his praie:
Is not more set vpon rauayne,
Than thilke man. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

In lyke manner as by cõparyson of faucons pelegrynes, that haue stande and rested longe on the perche hath grete desyre to flye abrode, in lyke manner the knyghtes and squyers of Englonde desyred to fynde dedes of armes to auaunce themselfe.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. ii. c. 46.

Well, said the admiral, the matter is not great, for there can be no danger in this sally, for where they worke it is within falcon-shot of the ships.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 714.

Eft fierce retourning, as a faulcon fayre,
That once hath failed of her souse full neare,
Remounts againe into the open ayre,
And unto better fortune doth herselfe prepayre.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

Hee is much delighted with pleasures of the field, for which in Grœcia and Natolia he hath fortie thousand falconers; his huntsmen are not much fewer.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. iii. c. 9. s. 5.

I have noted this fault in many of our younger brood of gentry, who either for want of education in learning, or their owne neglect of learning, have no sooner attained to the strength of making their fist a pearch for a hawke, but by the help of some bookes of faulconry, whereby they are instructed in the words of art, they will run division upon discourse of this pleasure.
Brathwait. English Gentleman, (1633.) p. 220.

Wee find in faulconrie, sixteen hawkes or fowls that prey.—Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 8.

Our hopes, like towering falcons, aim
At objects in an airy height:
The little pleasure of the game
Is from afar to view the flight.
Prior. To the Hon. Charles Montague, Esq.

For still to be deluded so
Is all the pleasures lovers know;
Who, like good falconers, take delight
Not in the quarry, but the flight.
Waller. To the Mutable Fair.

So, when a falcon skims the airy way,
Stoops from the clouds, and pounces on his prey;
Dash'd on the earth the feather'd victim lies,
Expands its feeble wings, and, flutt'ring, dies.
P. Whitehead. The Gymnasiad, b. iii.

FA'LDING. } Falding, Skinner says, is a
FA'LDSTOOL. } kind of coarse cloth, perhaps from the A. S. Feald, a fold, from Feald-an, to fold.

It. Faldisto-ro; "Fr. Faudetueil,—a low, large, and easie foulding chair, having both a back and elbows," (Cotgrave.) Skinner has, faldistor, which he derives from falde, septum, and stow, locus. It is probably no more than a folding stool. (See Du Cange in v. Faldistorium.)

His presse ycovered with a falding red.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3212.

He rode upon a rouncie, as he couthe,
All in a goune of falding to the knee
Id. The Prologue, v. 393.

FALL, v. }
FALL, n. }
FA'LLER. }
FA'LLING, n. } Dut. Uallen; Ger. Fallen; Sw. Falla; A. S. Feall-an, cadere, decidere, ruere. Fall is properly applied to a change of place, when a body moves by its own weight from a higher to a lower place. It is used as equivalent to the Latin verbs, cadere and ruere; and by consequence denotes, suddenness, quickness, destruction.

To move from an upright to a flat or prostrate position; from an elevated or raised, to a low, dejected, or depressed, station or condition; to drop, to sink, to lower; to descend, to depress, to deject; to drop, droop or decay; to chance, Fr. Cheoir, Lat. Cadere, to happen or come to pass, (as by the motion or action of falling;) and generally, to happen or come to pass. (See BEFALL.)

Fall, with prepositions subjoined, has various metaphorical and consequential usages; the force or import of which must be collected from the context.

To fall away,—he, i. e. his fleshiness, has fallen away; he is thinner.

They have fallen away, or fallen off,—i. e. moved off or away, ceased to accompany, quitted the ranks or party; and thus, to revolt, to apostatize.

To fall in or into,—to coincide, to concur, to concede.

To fall on or upon,—to rush upon, to attack, to assault.

To fall off or out,—to separate from, to sever, to sunder, to disagree, to quarrel.

Faller, n.—is used in the margin of the Bible on Jer. xlvi. 6.

Vor he let hym myd hors to drawe fram strete to strete,
That the peces felle of ys fleos aboute monye and grete.
R. Gloucester, p. 313.

R. had minoures, that myned vndere the walle,
A pece with a grete cours at one felle doun alle.
R. Brunne, p. 179.

And thenne falleth the fur. on false menne houses.
Piers Ploughman, p. 43.

Jhesus selde to hise disciplis that the boot schulde kepe him fro the puple, lest thei thristen him, for he helide manye, so that thei felden faste to him to touch him.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 3.

Netheles it bihoueth me to day and to morowe and the day that sueth to walke: for it fallith not a profete to perische out of Jerusalem.—Id. Luke, c. 13

Anon ther is a noise of peple begonne
For joye of this, so loud and high withall,
It semed that the listes shulden fall.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2664.

For sothly ther na's no discomfiture,
For falling n'is not but an aventure.—Id. Ib. v. 2724.

And natheless there is no man
In all this worlde so wise, that can
Of loue temper the measure:
But as it falleth in auenture.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

But it is saide, and euer shall
Betwene two stooles is the fall,
When that men wenen best to sitte. Id. Prol.

For the children from their youth oughte to geue theim selfe to trauayle, whereby thei ought to liue and reuyste the disfauour and falles of fortune.—Golden Boke, c. 25.

The which on al parts roũd about hauing most high rockes and steepe fallings, had left on one syde an ascent gentlye rising by littel, not passing two hundred fote brode.
Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 62.

A cause farre fetched is this. Such a one fell out with his neighbour. Ergo, he killed him, falling out bringeth chyding, chyding bringeth hatred, &c.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 44.

Cleon. Never varlets
So triumph'd o'er an old fat man: I was famish'd.
Timag. Indeed you are fallen away.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act iv. sc. 4.

Hot. Reuolted Mortimer!
He neuer did fall off, my soueraigne leige,
But by the chance of warre.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 3.

Cons. Thou cold blooded slaue
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Beene sworne my souldier, bidding me depend
Vpon thy starres, thy fortune and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall ouer to my foes?
Id. K. John, Act iii. sc. 1.

Ah doe not teare away thy selfe from me;
For know, my loue, as easie maist thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulfe,
And take vnmingled thence that drop againe
Without addition or diminishing,
As take from me thy selfe, and not me too.
Id. Comedy of Errors, Act ii. sc. 2.

And as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
Which lyon vile with bloody mouth did staine.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act v. sc. 1.

Othe. ——— Oh diuell, diuell;
If that the earth could teeme with woman's teares,
Each drop she falls would prone a crocodile:
Out of my sight. Id. Othello, Act iv. sc. 1.

For meeting her of late behinde the wood,
Seeking sweet sauors for this hatefull foole,
I did vpbraid her, and fall out with her.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iv. sc. 1.

I pray you fall too, if you can mocke a leeke you can eate a leeke.—Id. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 1.

The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the soule of euery man
Prophetically doe fore-thinke thy fall.
Id. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

How did he shew his condescension to his appostles, to his disciples, who had great differences, great fallings short!
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 402.

Casca. He fell downe in the market-place and foam'd at mouth, and was speechelesse.
Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the falling-sickness.
Cassi. No, Cæsar hath it not: but you and I,
And honest Casca, we haue the falling-sickness.
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act i. sc. 2.

Your own notion of dignity (if you have any sense in it) falls in with mine of subsetance; for whatever expresses intrinsic dignity, (and not mere outward relation) expresses the nature and subetance) the seat and ground of that intrinsic dignity.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 200.

Tho' all we can possibly do, must needs fall infinitely short of our most perfect pattern, yet we are indispensibly obliged to be like it in our proportion, and according to our capacity.—Clarke, vol. vi. Ser. 17.

Doctor London, who had by his most servile flatteries insinuated himself into Cromwell, and was much employed in the suppression of monasteries, and expressed a particular zeal in removing all images and relics which had been abused to superstition, did now upon Cromwell's fall apply himself to Gardiner, by whose means he was made a prebendary there.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1543.

And three indirect insinuations will go as far in law towards the giving a downright lie, as three foils will go towards a fall in wrestling.
Dryden. The Duchess of York's Paper Defended.

And therefore if any of our divines following the Remonstrants abroad, have herein departed from the principles of our church, it is high time to take notice of this falling-off, and to endeavour to call them back again to our old and sound principles.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 466.

Rest certainly tends to relax; yet there is a species of motion which relaxes more than rest; a gentle oscillatory motion, a rising and falling.—Burke. Sublime & Beautiful.

FA'LLACY. }
FALLA'CIOUS. }
FALLA'CIOUSLY. }
FA'LLENCY. }
FA'LLIBLE. }
FALLIBI'LITY. }
FA'LLIBLENESS. }
FA'LLAX. }
FALLA'CION. } Fr. Fallacie; It. Fallacia; Sp. Falacia; Lat. Fallacia, from Fallax, and this from Fallere, to deceive. Fallere, Varro derives a fando, because speech is the great source of deception. But Vossius thinks Varro is himself deceived, and prefers the Gr. Σφαλλ-ειν, which properly signifies supplantare, and (met.) evertere, to turn out, to overturn; and then decipere, circumvenire, to deceive or betray, to circumvent.

A deception or deceit, a delusion; a guile; a mistake; applied to sophisms in argument, to causes of error or mistake.

Hauing his brother, suspect in this cass
That by fraud, or by some fallas
He wold werke, to his distruction.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

For thei, by whom this art was founde,
To euery poynt a certayne bounde
Ordeinen, that a man maie finde,
This crafte is wrought by way of kinde,
So that there is no fallace in. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Here playeth master More the suttle sophister, and would deceive men wyth a fallace, which lyeth in thys woorde, true, so that when he sayeth that such apparitions be true, thys sentence may be taken two maner of wayes.
Frith. Workes, p. 48.

He sayd the fallacies was very pretty and notable, and tooke his penne and wrote in my booke the very wordes wherein the very controversy stode.
Ascham. State of Germany.

My eares shut up that easie dore
Which did proud fallacies admit;
And vow to hear no follies more;
Deafe to the charmes of sinne and wit.
Habington. Castara, pt. iii.

So spake the son of God, and Satan stood
A while as mute, confounded what to say,
What to reply, confuted and convinc't
Of his weak arguing, and fallacious drift.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

Such an one that fallaciously pretends religion, though by this disguise he escape here, yet shall surely pay for it hereafter.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 301.

In the 149 page he reasoneth thus: those which authorized the book of Common Prayer, were studious of peace, and buylding the churche, therefore those which finde fault with it are pullers downe of the churche, and disturbers of the peace, which was a fallation of the accident, when a man thinketh that every thing which is verified of the subiect, may be likewise verified of that which is annexed vnto it.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 30. (T. C.)

Secondly, your minor is ambiguous, and therefore in that respect, your argumente may be also placed in the fallacie of equiuocation.—Id. Ib. p. 63.

The fallax of this colour is, first in respect of hope, which is a great antidote against evills, for the reformation of a fault is many times in our own power, but the amendment of fortune is not.—Bacon. Learning, by G. Wats, b. vii. c. 3.

Maranta enumerates forty cases in which (a negative ought to be proved) and Socinus sets down eight hundred and two fallencies (that's the word of the law) concerning the contestation of suits and actions at law.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, Pref. p. 7.

——— Then fallible, it seems,
Of future we may deem him, though till now
Omniscient thought. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Besides, let me tell you, that decisions and anathematizings have sometimes done as much hurt toward occasioning of breaches, as licence and acknowledgment of fallibility hath done.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 508.

Having mentioned the weakness and fallibleness of these few principles, I leave you to the farther consideration of the frailness, and danger of those superstructures, which shall be erected on any, or all of these.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 335.

His principal and most general fallacy, is his making essence and person to signify the same.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 283.

But here gay Folly keeps her Court, and here,
In crowds, her tributary fops appear;
Who, blindly lavish of their golden days,
Consume them all in her fallacious ways.
Pomfret. Love triumphant over Reason.

Being persuaded by trials purposely made, as well as by the reason of the thing, of the fallaciousness of such thermoscopes.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 334.

It would require a long disclosure to point out to you the many fallacies that lurk in the generality and equivocal nature of the terms "inadequate representation."
Burke. On the French Revolution.

Descartes thus, great Nature's wandring guide,
Fallacious led philosophy aside,
Till Newton rose, in orient beauty bright
He rose, and brought the world's dark laws to light.
Pawkes. Will with a Wisp.

This fallacious idea of liberty, whilst it presents a vain shadow of happiness to the subject, binds faster the chains of his subjection.—Burke. A Vindication of Nat. Society.

On a little enquiry, they will be found as great an imposition as the successes they are meant to deprecate, for they are all either false or fallaciously applied, or not in the least to the purpose for which they are produced.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

The followers of Democritus and Epicurus conceived the forms of heat, and sound, and colour, to be in the mind only, but that our senses fallaciously represented them as being in bodies.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 5.

What have we to judge of visible objects beside the eye? yet this eye, upon their being brought nearer or placed in a different light, may discover the fallaciousness of the notices itself had given before: or on perceiving a haziness in the prospect, may know its own appearances to be imperfect and yield to the information of others who stand in a situation to discern them clearer.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 35.

FA'LLOW, v.
FA'LLOW, adj.
FA'LLOW, n.
FA'LLOWNESS.

A. S. Fealewe. Flavus, yellow, yellowish. Falewe, helvus, gilvus, (Somner.) Dut. Vaeluwe, value; Ger. Fal, which Wachter renders, pallidus; and says, it is spoken of the paleness of all colours, especially tawny, yellow, and black, as the Lat. Helvus and gilvus. It. Falvo; "Fr. Fauve,—deep-yellow, lyon-tawny, light-dun," (Cotgrave.) To fallow is thus used as a verb in an old poem quoted by Hickes, (Thesaurus Gram. Anglo-Sax. 232,) and somewhat modernized by Ellis, (Early Eng. Poets, i. 89,) to become pale, to fade.

There beth rosis of red ble,
And lilie, likful for to se
That falowcth neuer day no nyt.

Fallow-field,—so called (says Lye) ob colorem, on account of the colour which land newly tilled or turned presents.

To lie fallow,—to be prepared for seed or plant; not yet sown or planted; unsown, unplanted; and by further consequence, uncultivated, neglected.

That false traitouresse vntrewe
Was like that falowe horse of hewe,
That in the Apocalips is shewed.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

His eyen hulwe, and grisly to behold,
His hewe falwe, and pale as ashen cold.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1366.

Whoso that bildeth his hous al of salwes,
And pricketh his blind hors over the falwes,
And suffereth his wif to go seken halwes
Is worthy to be hanged on the galwes
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6238.

Burning of thistles, and diligente weeding them out of the corne, doth not halfe so much rydde them, as when the ground is fallowed and tilled for good grayne.
Ascham. Toxophilus.

He [the slothfull] enters bonds and forfeits them by forgetting the day, and asks his neighbour when his owne neid was fallowed, whether the next piece of ground belonged not to himselfe.—Bp. Hall. Charactersimes of Vices.

In the warmer countries, lands should bee broken up and fallowes made immediately after the winter solstice or sunstead.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 19.

If the climat be such as yeeldeth but little heat in summer, and therewith many showrs of raine, where the soile also is fat and beareth a thicke greene-sord, it were better to breake up ground and fallow in the hotest season.—Id. Ib.

O be thou such to me, as thou appearedst unto Magdalene; break up the fallowes of my nature, implant me with grace, prune mee with meet corrections, bedew me with the former and latter raine, doe what thou wilt to make me fruitfull.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

——— It is my birth-day,
And I'd doe it betimes; I feele a grudging
Of bounty, and I would not long lye fallow.
I pray thee thinke, and speake, or wish for something.
B. Jonson. The Staple of Newes, Act I. sc. 2.

Lik one, who in her third widowhood did profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
So affects my Muse now a chaste fallowness.
Donne. To Mr. Rowland Woodward.

A Christian, if he will apply their rules to the spiritual Georgicks, the culture of his soul, shall be able to husband it the better; and by their directions have a further insight into those fallow-grounds of his own heart, which the prophet speaks of.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 619.

Genius himself (nor here let Genius frown)
Must, to ensure his vigour, be laid down,
And fallow'd well. Churchill. The Journey.

Young kids light skipping, and the timorous fawns
Brush through the copse and bound along the lawns;
While in fresh pastures or on fallows gray
Lambs nimble in the wantonness of play.
Fawkes. Description of May

Yet such his task, a dismal truth,
Who watches o'er the bent of youth,
And while a paltry stipend earning,
He sows the richest seeds of learning,
And tills their minds with proper care,
And sees them their due produce bear,
No joys, alas! his toil beguile,
His own lies fallow all the while.
Lloyd. The Author's Apology.

It should be in a university as in the empire of China, where "no husbandman is ever idle, and no land ever lies fallow."—Horne. Works, vol. i. Essays & Thoughts.

FALSE, v.
FALSE, adj.
FALSE, ad.
FA'LSEHOOD.
FA'LSELY.
FA'LSENESS.
FA'LSER.
FA'LSARY.
FA'LSIFY, v.
FA'LSIFIER.
FALSIFICA'TION.
FA'LSIFICATOR.
FA'LSITY.
FA'LSETTO.

Fr. Faulx; It. and Sp. Falso; Lat. Falsus, from Fallere, falsum; Gr. Σφαλλειν, to deceive or betray. (See FALLACY.) The verb is formed upon the past part. To deceive, to delude, to cheat, to betray, to lie, to counterfeit, to forge; to make deceitful or perfidious offers or pretences; to elude, to evade, to conceal; to misrepresent.

Harald thys false erl. tho Seynt Edwarde dede lay,
Hym selue he let crouny kyng thulke sulue day
Falsiyche. R. Gloucester, p. 354.

Haralde's falshede tho the pope ysey there,
And per auenture me hym tolde more that soth were.
Id. p. 358.

The right lawes did he loke for fals men and fikelle.
R. Brunne, p. 36.

What did Jon Baliol, that Edward did auance,
But falsety, as a fole, bigan a disceyuance?
Thorgh conseile of hise he sent vnto the pape,
& controued aquaintise, a new falsnes did schape.
Id. p. 268.

With wrong all it cam, with gile salle gyuen be,
Dlexit hir Adam gherie & falste. Id p 247.

Hit ys nogt semly forsoth in eyte ne in borw ton
That usurers oth regratours for eny kynne geftes
Be fraunchised for a free man, and have false name
Piers Ploughman, p 43.

And ful meny fayre flus [fleece] falsliche wasshe
Id. p. 161.

Thise tokens hauen freres taken, but I trowe that a fewe
Folwen fully that cloth, but falsiyche that vseth.
Id Crede.

They freten [eat] vp the firste froyt, and falsliche lybbeth.
Id. Ib

Thanne Ihe to Judas, and to the Jewes seyde
Falsenesse ich fynde in thy faire speche.—Id. Vision, p. 313.

The good that thow ygete, by gan al with falshede.
Id. Ib. p. 104.

But for falshed of freres, I fele in my soule.—Id. Crede.

To bagbyten and to bosten, and bere fals whitnesse.
Id. Vision, p. 28.

But Saul, which is seid also Poul, was fillide with the Hooli Goost, and biheelde in to hym and seide, a thou ful of al gile and al falsenesse, thou sone of the Deuel, thou enemye of al rightwisenesse, thou leeuuyst not to turne upsodoun the righful weies of the Lord.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 13.

And the prince of prestis & al the counseil soughten fals-witnessyng agens Jhesus that they schulden take him to deeth. And thei founden not, whanne many false witnessis weren come, but at the laste, tweyne false witnessis camen, and seiden, this seide I may distrye the temple of God & aftir the thridde day bilde it agen.—Id. Matthew, c. 26.

The chief priestes and the elders, and all the counceil, sought false witnesse agaynste Jesus for to put him to death, but founde none. In so much, that when manye false witnesses came, yet founde they none. At the last came two false witnesses, and sayde: Thys felowe sayde: I can destroye the temple of God, and build it agayne in iii dayes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And therfore every gentil wight I pray,
For Goddes love as deme not that I say
Of evil entent, but that I mote reherse
Hir tales alle, al be they better or werse,
Or elles falsen som of my matere.
Chaucer. The Millieres Prologue, v. 3176.

For paramours they do but faine
To loue truely they disdaine,
They falsen ladies traitorously.—Id. The Rom. of the Rose.

He sterte him up out of the bushes thikke,
And sayde: False Arcite, false traitour wicke,
Now art thou hent, thou lovest my lady so,
From whom that I haue all this peine and wo.
And art my blood, and to my conseil sworn.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1532.

And now thou woldest falsly ben aboute
To love my lady, whom I love and serve,
And ever shal til that min hert sterve.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1141

His sleightes and his infinite falsenesse
Ther coude no man writen, as I gesse,
Though that he mighte live a thousand yere;
In all this world of falsenesse n'is his pere.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,447

God thanke I, and in good time be it sayde,
That ther n'as never man yet evil assayde
For gold ne silver that he to me lent,
No never falshede in min herte I ment.—Id. Ib. v. 16,519.

These felons full of falsitie,
Haue many sithes begyled me,
And through her falshed her lust achiued
Wherof I repent, and am agreued.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And yet vnto this day, men selth,
A lapynke hath lost his feith,
And is the birde falsest of all.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Whan the emperour it herde seine
And knewe the falsehead of the vice,
He smide, he wolde do justice. Id. Ib. b. i.

Logike hath eke in his degree
Betweene the trouth and falshede
The pleyne wordes for to shede. Id. Ib. b. vii.

The tauerner that falsethe othes,
And litle reckes to lye,
The souldyer that doth deale the battes,
And makes his foes to flye.—Drant. Horace, Sat. I.

Dauid in Psalm 101 abhorreth soche false accusers (false tale bringers into the kynges eares and the wrath of God shall they neuer escap.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

If I translate, nonnulli sacerdotes, sundrie priestes, yee crie oute, a corrupter, a falsarie. I should haue saide, certaine priestes, or somme priestes: but I should not in any wise haue saide sundrie.
Jewell. To Maister Hardinge, Oct 1567

All thei which haue receiued the gospell as the Germans, and thei that vnder the same pretence debarre hun of his false vsurped powr & money falselyer exacted, as Englonde, fight yet ayenst him.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniell, c. 12.

Thā he aware by his father's soule, wherby he was neuer forsworne, that he woulde gette it agayne, and that he wolde make ye traytours derely abye their falsnesse
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 280.

The next day following, earlye in the morning, ye Germanes vsing the like dyssemblyng & falshed yt they had done before, came to our camp in great number accompanyed wyth all theyr nobles and auncient men
Goldyng Cæsar, fol. 92

Shall you suffer this kind of man to raygne? No, let us make all the speede wee may to see him crucified, and so to shewe vnto all kinges and nations a justice done vppon one, that so vilely falsified his fayth.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol 143

As before he misreported S. Cyprian, euen so doeth he now likewise misreporte S. Hierome, and so shoareth vp a ruinous mater with the falsification of his doctours.
Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 251

As for Grattan, M. Hardinge knoweth he is a common falsifier of the doctours, and therefore his credit in suche cases cannot be great.—Id. Ib. p. 407.

Male wee not now allow you with favour, to take al these, that ye cal fittons, lies, corruptions, and falsifieinges, home againe vnto yourselfe?—Id. Defence of Apology, p. 178.

And therein all the famous history
Of Iason and Medæa was yritt,
Her mighty charmes, her furious loving fitt,
His goodly conquest of the golden fleece,
His falsed fayth, and loue too lightly flitt.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12

Such one was I, my beauty was mine own;
No borrow'd blush, which bankrupt beauties seek,
That new-found shame, a sin to us unknown;
Th' adultrate beauty of a falsed cheek.
Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond

——— What thou would'st highly,
That would'st thou holily would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly winne.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act I. sc. 5.

All states are good, and they are falsly led,
Who wish to be vnborne, or quickly dead.
Beaumont. The Answer of Metrodorus.

Dye had she rather in tormenting griefe
Then any should of falseness her reprove.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Such end had the kidd, for he nould warned be
Of craft, covered with simplicitie;
And such end, perdie, does all hem remayne
That of such falsers friendship bene fayne.
Id. Shepheard's Calender. June.

Yet in this thing, which all men thought so plain,
And to have been accomplish'd with such care,
Their inward falsehood hidden did remain,
Quite from the colour that the outside bare.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iii.

—— Whereof hee soon aware,
Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calme,
Artificer of fraud; and was the first
That practic'd falshood under saintly show,
Deep malice to conceale, coucht with revenge.'
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Charles himself refutes you, you prodigy of impiety! who thinking that oath no light matter, chose rather by a subterfuge to avoid the force of it, or by a fallacy to elude it, than openly to violate it; and would rather falsify and corrupt the oath, than manifestly forswear himself after he had taken it.—Id. Defence of the People of England, c. 12.

True humility, in opposition to this false and proud appearance of it, consists in making, not our own will, but the will of God, the rule of our duty.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 44.

To these was Allen the conjurer joined, of whom we have spoken before: but Underhil soon forsook them, by reading the Scriptures and hearing the preachers; and then, as some satisfaction to the world, he put forth a satire against the wickedness of these men, revealing the falsehood and knavery that he was made privy to.
Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

He divers ways falsely defamed King Henry with intents of submission (as though he had intended to submit himself and his realme to the Pope again) such was the bishop's [Gardner's] impudence.—Id. Ib. Q. Mary, an. 1554.

They that reject superstition in theory, and yet retain it in life, and that upon principle too, do but expose their own folly and falseness both in one.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 60.

If the Evangelists had falsified in these narratives, it is infinitely improbable, that the enemies of the Christian religion who could so easily have convinced them of such falsification, should not sometime or other have objected it against the truth of our religion, which yet they never did.
South, vol. xi. Ser. 4.

The Macedonians also in their turn pleaded tradition for their rejecting the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. But the great St. Basil laid open the falsity of their pretences that way, and demonstrated that tradition was on the contrary side.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 324.

While impious men despise thy sage decree,
From vain deceit, and false philosophy;
Let us its wisdom own, its blessings feel,
Receive with gratitude, perform with zeal.
Mason. Hymn for York Cathedral.

The commentators on Homer apologize for the glaring falsehoods which Ulysses relates, by showing they are told to the Phæacians, a credulous people.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, (Note.)

We cannot, I fear, falsify the pedigree of this fierce people, and persuade them that they are not sprung from a nation in whose veins the blood of freedom circulates.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

Extreme necessity (to do his lordship all the right we are able) forced him upon this bold and violent falsification of the doctrine of the alliance.—Warburton. Works, vol. vii. p. 328.

He was prepared to shew the madness of their declaration of the pretended rights of man; the childish futility of some of their maxims; the gross and stupid absurdity, and the palpable falsity of others.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

A strange uncouth thing, a theatrical figure of the opera, his head shaded with three-coloured plumes, his body fantastically habited, strutted from the back scenes, and after a short speech, in the mock heroick falsetto of stupid tragedy, delivered the gentleman who came to make the representation, into the custody of a guard, with directions not to lose sight of him for a moment.
Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

FA'LTER, or FA'ULTER, v. FA'ULTERING, n. } Minshew says from the Fr. Faulte, a fault. Skinner refers to fall, and fault. The Sp. Faltar is, to fail.

To fail or fall short; to fail, (sc.) in utterance; to hesitate.

—— Fooles, the whiche fauten in witt.
Piers Ploughman, p. 175.

Bestyre youre werye handes, plucke vp youre weake and foltryng knees, and runne streyght to the marke that is set before you.—Udal. Hebrues, c. 12.

Whan the Emperor had ended his said recommendacions, the day began to springe, and his eie strynges began to breake, & his tongue faultered, and his handes shooke.
Golden Boke, c. 47.

How can the uncorrupt and majestic law of God, bearing in her hand the wages of life and death, harbour such a repugnance within herself, as to require an unexempted and impartial obedience to all her decrees, either from us or from our Mediator, and yet debase herself to faulter so many ages with circumcis'd adulteries by unclean and slubbering permissions.—Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 13.

Wee found in a nouke remote farre out of the way one souldior lying hid alone by himselfe: who being presented unto our captain, faltered in his speech for feare, so that his words hung not together.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 114.

The deliquium and faltering of our spirits, the violence and torment of bodily pains.—Kettlingbeck. Ser. p. 238.

Twice she began, and stopp'd; again she try'd,
The faltering tongue its office still deny'd;
At last her veil before her face she spread,
And drew a long preluding sigh, and said.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. x.

—— At his controul
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,
And his last faultering accents whisper'd praise.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

FAME, v. FAME, n. FA'MELESS. FA'MOUS. FA'MOUSED. FA'MOUSLY. FA'MOUSNESS. } Lat. Fama; Fr. Fame; It. and Sp. Fama; Gr. Φημη, from φημι, φασθαι, to say, to speak.

To speak or talk (well or ill) of; to report, to record, to rumour, to celebrate, to renown; to confer or bestow—renown or celebrity.

The kyng hadde eke a brother, Nenny was hys name,
Strong knygt and hardi, and mon of gret fame.
R. Gloucester, p. 48.

Ac thow hast fameds me foule by fore the kynge here.
Piers Ploughman, p. 49.

And his fame wente into al Syrie, and thei broughten to him alle that weren at mal ese.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 4.

And his fame spred abrode thorow out al Siria. And they brought vnto hym al sycke people that were taken with diverse diseases.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

The fame anon thurghout the toun is born,
How Alla King shal come on pilgrimage,
By herbergeours that wenten him beforn.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5417.

—— So that the name,
And of wisedome the high fame,
Towarde himselfe he wolde wynne.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

There was a clerke one Lucius
A courtier, a famous man,
Of euery witte some what he can. Id. Ib. b. v.

But bycause that Samuel shulde be famed abroad to haue bene promysed and borne by myracle, he was receyued of Heli the hygh preste, and offered as a peculyar gyfte to God, to be more dylygently loked to.—Bale. Apologie, fol. 69.

There haue been diuers sonnes of Rome, whiche beyng in straunge countreies, haue doen great profite to the cõmon weith, and no lesse famed throughout the worlde, which after thei were retourned to their own houses, haue spilt more bloud in innocents, than thei had done before of the Barbariens.—Golden Boke, c. 13.

I answere that Master Wyclife was noted whyle he was lyuynge, to be a man not onely of moste famous doctryne, but also of a very syncere lyfe and conuersacio.
A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 19.

This is certaine and cannot be denied, but that he being the publick reader of diuinitie in the vniuersitie of Oxford was for the rude time wherein he liued, famously reputed for a great clearke, a deepe schoolema, and no lesse expert in all kind of philosophy.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 390. John Wickliffe, his History.

Unto this heauenly matter there was specially deputed a tendre young virgin, not set forth to the world with aboundaunce of riches or possessions, not by famousness of name, not portlynesse of lyfe, ne with the other thynges whiche this world vseth to haue in highe regarde, but endewed with excellent vertues of the minde, the whiche doe make a man acceptable in the sight of God.—Udal. Luke, c. 1.

A mischiefe Fame, there is none else so swift;
That mouing growes, and flitting gathers force:
First small for dred, sone after climes the skies:
Stayeth on earth, and hides her hed in cloudes.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

This wit Futelli brings a suit of love
From Levidolche, one, however mask'd
In colourable privacy, is fam'd
The Lord Adurni's pensioner, at least.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act i. sc. 3.

Mar. Why, art thou fam'd for any valour?
Bes. Fam'd! I, I warrant you.
Mar. I'me e'en heartily glad on't, I have been with thee e're since thou cam'st to th' wars, and this is the first word that ever I heard, prethee who fames thee?
Beaum. & Fletch. King & No King, Act i. sc. 1.

D. Zan. Madam, 'tis true, that absent at Madrid,
The custom of the Court, and vanity,
Embark'd me lightly in a galiantry
With the most fam'd of beauties there, Elvira.
Digby. Elvira, Act v.

Julius Cæsar took Pompey unprovided, and laid asleep his industry and preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out, how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not; and being wearied with the wars, and laden with the spoils of Gaul, would forsake him as soon as he came into Italy.
Bacon. Fragment of an Essay on Fame.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with th' abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton. Lycidas.

Petill. That man that loves not this day,
And hugs not in his arms the noble danger,
May he dye fameless and forgot.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 2.

Arabia may be happy in the death
Of her reviving phenix: in the breath
Of cool Favonius, famous be the grove
Of Tempe: while we in each other's love.
For that let us be fam'd. Habington. Castara, pt. ii.

She that with silver springs for ever fills
The shady groves, sweet meddowes, and the hills,
From whose continuall store such pooles are fed,
As in the land for seas are famoused.
Brown. The Inner Temple Masque.

Marvellous piece of divinity! and well worth that the land should pay six thousand pounds a year for, in a bishoprick, although I read of no sophister among the Greeks that was so dear, neither Hippias nor Protagoras, nor any whom the Socratic school famously refuted without hire.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 5.

Bernard Gilpin, fam'd in the North for his zeal in religion, and his care of his flock, was sent for up to court, to preach before the King.—Strype. Memorials, an. 1552.

Macrobius too relates the vision sent
To the great Scipio, with fam'd event;
Objections makes, but after makes replies,
And adds that dreams are often prophesies.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

In such base sentence if thou couch thy fear,
Speak it in whispers, least a Greek should hear.
Lives there a man so dead to fame, who dares
To think such meanness, or the thought declares.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

Since you do me the favour to desire a name from me, take that of Corinna, if you please; I mean not the lady with whom Ovid was in love, but the famous Theban Poetess, who overcame Pindar five times, as historians tell us.
Dryden. To Mrs. E. Thomas, Nov. 1699.

He [W. Thorne] was reputed eminent, not only for his incomparable skill in the oriental sacred tongues by men unmatchable in them (worthily famoused on this side and beyond the sea), but also for other learning.
Wood. Athen. Oxon.

Fame is a blessing only in relation to the qualities, and the persons that give it, since otherwise the tormented prince of Devils himself were as happy as he is miserable, and famousness unattended with endearing causes is a quality so undesirable, that even infamy and folly can confer it.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 306.

It may be fit that I should set out with reminding you, that the great Earl of Chatham began and established the fame and glory of his life upon the very cause which my unfortunate clients were engaged in, and that he left it as an inheritance to the present minister of the crown, as the foundation of his fame and glory after him; and his fame and glory were accordingly raised upon it.
Erskine. Speech on the Trial of Hardy.

He [Du Fresnoy] had read his poem to the best painters in all places through which he passed, and particularly to Albano and Guercino, then at Bologna; and he consulted several men famous for their skill in polite literature.
Mason. Life of Monsieur Du Fresnoy.

FAMI'LIAR, adj. FAMI'LIAR, n. FAMI'LIARY, adj. FAMILIA'RITY. FAMI'LIARLY. FAMI'LIARIZE, v. FA'MILY. FA'MILISM. FA'MILIST. FA'MULATIVE, adj. } Fr. Famille, familier; It. Famiglia, famigliare; Sp. Familia, familiar; Lat. Familiaris, from familia; Gr. Ὁμιλια, from ὁμιλος, an assembly, a gathering; from ὁμος, and ιλη, a crowd, a multitude. A family,—

Many assembled, gathered or collected together; under the same household, of the same kin or kind, or lineage.

Familiar, adj.—domestic, living together, as of one family; and thus, well known to, or acquainted with, each other; free from, or without restraint or ceremony; free, unceremonious, unrestrained; common, frequent,

Familiar, n. is applied to a supposed demon or spirit, who serves as a familiar or domestic attendant;—to an officer of the Inquisition.

Familism, familist, — see the quotation from Baker.

Famuler fo, in Chaucer,—a domestic foe:

Famulate is, in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, to serve; and famulative, in Cudworth, is—serving, aiding, abetting.

Ful wel beloved, and familiar was he
With frankeleins over al in his countree.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 216.

This yonge monk, that was so faire of face,
Acquainted was so with this goode man,
Sithen that hire firste knowlege began,
That in his hous as familiar was he,
As it possible is any friend to be.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 12,961.

Lo in aduersity, thilke been his foes that glosed and seemed frendes in wealth; thus arne his familiares his foes & his enemies: and nothing is werse ne more naughty for to annoy, than is a familiar enemy.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. ii.

She [Fortune] vseth ful flatteringe familiaritie with hem that she enforceth to beguile.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

O perilous fire, that in the bedstraw bredeth:
O famuler fo, that his service bedeth!
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9658.

I Nebuchadnezar, happye and prosperous in my familie, and ryche in my palace, did see a dreame so ferefull, that my thoughtes in my bedde troubled my head greuously.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

He called Diuitiacus vnto him, and remouinge his accustomed interpreters, commoned with him by Caius Valerius Troucillus, chiefe gouernour of the Romane Prouince in Gallia, his familiar friend whom he chiefly trusted vnto in al thinges.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 15.

He saide to her in sport that ye Gods gaue him good aduice: and thereupon called back his familiares, and sat drynking till it was two houres after day light.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 227.

This grudge was perceiued, by their mutuall frendes, whiche by charytable exhortacion and godly aduertisement, exhorted theim to renewe their old loue and famyliarytye, and to mete and entreuieu, in some place decent and conuenient.—Hall. Hen VI. an. 12.

But ye that knowe me nerer & more familiarly, who doe ye take y^t I am? There Peter being more ardēt and fyerie then the residue, made answer in y^e name of them al we know the to be Messias, whom God hath enoincted with al heauenly giftes of grace.—Udal. Luke, c. 9.

Mor. Jun. My lord, the family of the Mortimores
Are not so poor, but, would they sell their land,
Could levy men enough to anger you.—Marlow. Edw. II.

Nor is 't inconstancie to change
For what is better, or to make
(By searching) what before was strange,
Familiar, for the use's sake.
B Jonson. Women's Inconstancie.

——— Thus your aunt of Burgundy,
Your dutchess aunt inform'd her nephew; so
The lesson prompted, and well conn'd, was moulded
Into familiar dialogue, oft rehearsed,
Till, learnt by heart, 'tis now received for truth.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 2.

Mel. Dost know that spirit? 'tis a grave familiar,
And talk'd I know not what.
Id. Lover's Melancholy, Act v. sc. 1.

I have discovered, that a fam'd familiarity in great ones is a note of certain usurpation on the lease. For great and popular men faine themselves to bee servants to others, to make those slaves to them.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Intending, though it be the highest and uttermost point of Christian philosophy, to familiarise it (final resignation to ourselves) between us as much as I can, and to address it in form of a letter to yourself.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 478.

——— We have descended
Somewhat (as we may term it) too familiarly
From justice of our birthright, to examine
The force of your allegiance,—sir, we have,—
But find it short of duty.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act ii. sc. 3.

Yet it pleas'd God to make him see all the tyranny of Rome, by discovering this which they exercis'd over divorce, and to make him the beginner of a reformation to this whole kingdom, by first asserting into his familiary power the right of just divorce.—Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

At this time [23 Eliz.] there arose up in Holland a certain sect, naming themselves, the Family of Love, who persuaded their followers, that those only who were adopted into their family were elected.—Baker. Chronicle, an. 1602.

Such mystical, mist-all and misse-all interpreters are our familiste in these times, by vnseasonable and vnreasonable allegories, raysing mysts ouer the Scripture sense, which thereby they misse and cannot finde.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. i. c. 3.

This was their constant way of working miracles, insomuch that the Jewish exorcists taking notice of it, they also called over them that had familiar spirits, in the name of our Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preaches, Acts, xix. 13.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii.

And this he received from certain of their own familiars, as he called them, and their privy conveyers, but now repentant.—Strype. Mem. Q. Mary, an. 1553.

We should, as learned poets use,
Invoke th' assistance of some Muse;
However Critics count it sillier
Than Jugglers talking to familiar.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

All this was before his [Horace] acquaintance with Mecenas, and his introduction into the court of Augustus, and the familiarity of that great emperor.
Dryden. Origin and Progress of Satire.

Our blessed Lord has told us, that he and the Father are one; that whosoever hath seen him hath seen the Father, that he is in the Father, and the Father in him; and very familiarly speaking of the Father and himself, he says, "we will come unto him," (that loveth Christ,) "and make our abode with him."—Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt ii. p 234.

The whole world is the house and family of God: and in this great family of the universe good angels and good men are, by way of eminence, styled the sons of God and his first-born.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 123.

Hereby the divine creative power is made too cheap and prostituted a thing, as being famulative alwaies to brutish, and many times to unlawful lusts.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 45.

But Socinianism being (as was observed) an heresy much too fine for the gross and thick genius of vulgar capacities, the Devil found it requisite, sometimes, to change his engine, and amongst such as these, to set up his standard in familism, or enthusiasm.—South, vol. v. Ser. 3.

Antinomianism, as both experience and the nature of the thing has sufficiently taught us, seldom ends but in familism.
Id Ib.

The lawn-rob'd prelate and the plain presbyter,
Ere-while that stood aloof, as shy to meet,
Familiar mingle here, like sister streams
That some rude interposing rock had split.
Blair. The Grave.

Since we have been familiarized to the study of landscape, we hear less of what delighted our sportsmen ancestors—a fine open country.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 7.

Of the family of Isaac Oliver I find no certain account, nor is it of any importance; he was a genius; and they transmit more honour by blood than they can receive.
Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 7.

FA'MINE, n. FA'MISH, v. FA'MISHMENT. } Fr. Famine; It. Fame; Lat. Fames; according to Perottus, Ανο του φαγ-ειν, because he who labours under famine, desires φαγ-ειν, i. e. to eat.

Hunger; a craving for food; starvation, scarcity, dearth or want of food.

Hit is no thing for love, thei labour thus faste
Bote for fere of famyn.—Piers Ploughman, p. 139.

Al shulde hire children sterven for famine,
Nay, I wol drinke the licour of the vine,
And have a joly wenche in every toun.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,385.

But deadly warre hath his couine
Of pestilence, and of famine,
Of pouertee and of all wo.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Moreouer the yearth itselfe, as though it were not content to nourish so wicked and vngodlie people, shal be shaken with yearthquakes, and so shall there be in sondry places of the worlde, greate dearthe and famyne, because it shall denye men theyr natural foode and sustenaunce.
Udal. Marke, c. 13.

There was no bread in al the lande, for the derth was exceedynge sore: so y^t the land of Egypte, and the land of Canaan, were famyshyd by reason of the derth.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 47.

To be without pestelence, warre and famishment, and all maner other abhominable diseases & plagues pertayne to vs as well as to them, if we keepe our temporall lawes.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 206.

And Eliah went to shewe him selfe vnto Ahab, for there was a great famyshment in Samaria.
Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 18.

As when two tygers prickt with hunger's rage
Have by good fortune found some beast's fresh spoyle,
On which they weene their famine to asswage,
And gaine a feastfull guerdon of their toile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

In this mood and fit, whiles they were minded to famish the poore bellie, behold the other lims, yea and the whole bodie besides, pined, wasted, and fel into an extreme consumption.—Holland. Livius, p. 65.

You must have patience, royall Agrippina.
Agr. I must have vengeance, first: and that were nectar
Unto my famish'd spirits.—B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iv.

Eleuen of our men, after much misery and famishment (which killed some of them in the way) got to Coro.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ix. c. 3. s. 2.

So shipwreck'd passengers escape to land,
So look they, when on the bare beach they stand
Dropping and cold, and their first fear scarce o'er
Expecting famine on a desert shore.
Dryden. Prol. The first Day of Acting after the Fire.

Horace had ease and plenty when he writ,
And free from cares for money or for meat,
Did not expect his dinner from his wit;
'Tis true; but verse is cherish'd by the great,
And now none famish who deserve to eat.
Id. Threnodia Augustalis.

Still mark if vice or nature prompts the deed;
Still mark the strong temptation and the need.
On pressing want, on famine's powerful call,
At least more lenient let thy justice fall.
Langhorn. The Country Justice, pt. i.

Forcibly drawn from many a close recess,
They meet with little pity, no redress;
Plung'd in the stream they lodge upon the mud,
Food for the famish'd rovers of the flood.
Couper. Charity.

FAN, v. FAN, n. FA'NNING, n. } Fr. Van; It. Vanno; Ger. Wanne; Dut. Wanne. Wan, "A. S. Fanne, ventilabrum, vannus, a fanne or vanne, to winnow and clean corn withall," (Somner.) "And Hys fann ys on hys handa." "Whos wynewing tool in his hond," (Wic. Luke, iii. 17.) The Lat. Vannus is derived from the Gr. Βαλλ-ειν, to cast or throw, (Vossius;) and means—

Any thing thrown, so as to strike, and thus, move the air; to blow gently; to winnow. See WINNOW.

Upon this word in Chaucer's Manciples Prologue, Mr. Tyrwhitt remarks, that the thing meant is the quintaine, which is called a fan or van, from its turning round like a weathercock.

And strouted as a fanne large and brode.
Chaucer. The Millieres Tale, v. 3315.

Now, sweete sire, wol ye just at the fan.
Id. The Manciples Prologue, v. 16,991.

The king gaue our captaine at his departure a plume or fanne of hernshawes feathers died in red.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol iii. p. 308.

My being heere it is, that holds thee hence,
Shall I stay heere to doo't? no, no, although
The ayre of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 2.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle aires, due at their hour,
To fan the earth now wak'd, and usher in
The evening cool. Milton. Par. Lost, b. x.

Nature worketh in vs all a loue to our owne counsels, the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that loue.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, Pref.

Others take this fanning (Luke, iii. 16, 17) for that discovery which shall be made at the day of judgment, but to me it seems clear to be in this life, whilst the corn is on the floor, as the several degrees of this comparison do show.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. pt. ii. p. 144

By slow degrees he fans the gentle fire,
Till perseverance makes the flame aspire.
King. Art of Love. pt. xiv

Women are armed with fans as men with swords, and sometimes do more execution with them: to the end therefore that ladies may be entire mistresses of the weapon which they bear, I have erected an academy for the training up of young women in the exercise of the fan, according to the most fashionable airs and motions that are now practised at court.—Spectator, No. 102.

The grateful fair the hero's worth confess'd;
Love found admittance in her gentle breast;
His early virtues rais'd her first desire;
His manly beauty fann'd the blameless fire.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. vi.

I find little of her work [Magdalen Pas] but a very scarce little head in my own collection, representing the Lady Catherine, at that time Marchioness, afterwards Duchess, of Buckingham, with a feather fan.
Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v

Foes to the Dryads, they remorseless fell
Each shrub of shade, each tree of spreading root,
That woo the first glad fanmuse of the breeze.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

FANA'TICK, n. FANA'TICK, adj. FANA'TICISM. FANA'TICAL, adj. FANA'TICALLY. FANA'TICALNESS. } Fr. Fanatique; It. Fanatico; Sp. Fanatico; Lat. Fanaticus, a priest; from Fanum, a temple; then applied (says Vossius) furioso et insano, to the furious or raving and insane; because, when about to deliver the oracles, they were supposed to be seized with a divine fury; and this opinion they confirmed by the frequent shaking of the head, and other actions indicating madness.

Any one raving or insane; wildly enthusiastic: a wild, irrational enthusiast.

A Christen mannis obedyence standeth not in the fulfyllyng of fanaticall vowes, as they haue bene vsed, better broken than kepte, but in the faythfull obseruation of God's holy preceptes, declared by Christe in hys Gospell.
Bale. Apology, fol. 96.

Pretending to be the setter of France at freedome, and a God, (for so he intitled himself,) he had drawen already together eight thousand men, and began to waste the frontiers of the Æduans: but that graue and wise city, assembling the choice of their youth with some of Vitellius's cohorts, discomfited that fanatical multitude.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 52.

No wonder then in the reforming of a church, which is never brought to effect without the fierce encounter of truth and falsehood together, if (as it were the splinters and shares of so violent a jousting,) there fall from between the shock many fond errors and fanatic opinions.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 7.

The men shaking and wagging their bodies too and fro after a fanaticall fashion, as if they were bestraught and out of their right wits, seeme to divine and tell things to come.—Holland. Livius, p. 1031.

There is a treasury of merits in the fanatick church, as well as in the papist, and a pennyworth to be had of saintship, honesty, and poetry, for the lewd, the factious, and the blockheads.—Dryden. Pref. to Absalom & Achitophel.

Nay they are fanaticks too, however that word seem to have a more peculiar respect to something of a Deity: all atheists being that blind Goddess, Nature's fanaticks.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 134.

And thus I have shewen, under five material heads, that the knowledge of nature and the works of God, promotes the greatest interests of religion; and by the three last it appears how fundamentally opposite it is to all schism and fanaticism, which are made up and occasioned by superstition, enthusiasm, and ignorant perverse disputings.
Glanvill, Essay 4. s. 9.

From hence weak and wicked men have taken the handle to ascribe all religion to enthusiasm or fanaticism; that is, to a kind of phrensy or dotage.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 61.

Indeed all claims to any internal notices exclusive of God's written word, whether they be entitled inspiration, or internal revelation, or inward light, or reason, or infallibility, or what else soever; I say, all such claims brought to exclude Scripture are enthusiastick and fanatical, false and vain.
Id. Ib. vol. viii. p. 67.

That temper of prophaneness, whereby a man is disposed to contemn and despise all religion (how slightly soever men may think of it) is much worse than infidelity, than fanaticalness, and idolatry.—Wilkins. Nat. Relig. b. ii. c. 1.

It is common with them to dispute as if they were in a conflict with some of those exploded fanaticks of slavery, who formerly maintained what I believe no creature now maintains, that the crown is held by divine, hereditary, and indefeasible right.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

These old fanaticks of single arbitrary power dogmatized as if hereditary royalty was the only lawfull government in the world, just as our new fanaticks of popular arbitrary power maintain, that a popular election is the sole lawfull source of authority.—Id. Ib.

Tho' all these reason-worshippers profess
To guard against fanatical excess,
Enthusiastic heat, their favourite theme,
Draws their attention to the cold extreme.
Byrom. Thoughts upon Human Reason.

When men are furiously and fanatically fond of an object, they will prefer it, as is well known, to their own peace, to their own property, and to their own lives; and can there be a doubt in such a case that they would prefer it to the peace of their country?—Burke. Petition of the Unitarians.

From the consequences of the genius of Henry Duke of Viseo did the British American empire arise, an empire which, unless retarded by the illiberal and inhuman spirit of religious fanaticism, will in a few centuries perhaps be the glory of the world.—Mickle. Introduction to the Luciad.

FA'NCY, v. FA'NCY, s. FA'NCIFUL. FA'NCIFULLY. FA'NCIFULNESS. FA'NCILESS. } Variously written,—Fansy, fantasy, phantasy. Fr. Fantaisie; It. and Sp. Fantasia; Lat. Phantasia; Gr. Φαντασια, απο του φαινεσθαι, to appear; because (says Vossius) the forms of the things of which we have, or think we have, sensations, intus apparent. See FANTASY.

To take or apprehend; to perceive or conceive the forms or images of things; to think, conceive or imagine; to depicture, delineate, or portray, the forms or images, the qualities or appearances of things; to appropriate them to other things; sometimes restricted to—pleasing qualities; and thus, to fancy, or have a fancy for, is to like, to have a liking or desire for; sometimes opposed to, or distinguished from,—to reason strictly, to argue convincingly; and thus, to assume, to suppose, to take for granted.

See the poetical description of Fancy in the quotation from Milton.

To fancy, as distinguished from imagination, may be ascribed the province of personifying, and of investing the personification, with the qualities of real beings.

Which mercie he had afore promised by his word (being vttered by the mouthes of the prophetes) to the people of Israell, whom as a people more derely beloued and fansied euen for his owne tooth, he doeth in Holy Scriptures call his seruaunt.—Udal. Luke, c. 1.

And if we agree with the philosophers that there is (materia prima) whiche in all thinges is one and altereth not, but as a newe forme cummeth, taketh a newe name, fansinge that as one waue in the water thrusteth away another, so doth one fourme another.
Bp. Gardner, fol. 137. Of Transubstantiation.

And being moued with their light reports and here sayes, they fal to counsel oftentimes euen of most weighty matters, wherof they must needs repent them by and by after, seeing they are so fondly led by vncertaine rumors, and that divers persons tell the forged newes to fede their fancyes withall.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 87.

The poets seeke to profit thee
or please thy fansie well,
Or at one time things of profit
and pleasaunce both to tell.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetrye.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fansie that they feel
Divinitie within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the Earth.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. ix.

Either while the skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony with artful and unimanageable touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer.—Id. Of Education.

I dare not force affection, or presume
To censure her discretion, that looks on me
As a weak man, and not her fancy's idol.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act v. sc. 3.

Play with your fancies: and in them behold,
Vpon the hempen tackle, ship-boyes climbing:
Heare the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd: behold the threaden sayles,
Borne with th' inuisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Chorus.

—— But know, that in the soule
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief; among these Fansie next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, aerie shapes,
Which Reason, joyning or disjoyning, frames
All what we affirm or what deny, and call
Our knowledge or opinion; then retires
Into her privat cell, when nature rests.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Not only the melancholick and the fanciful, but the grave and the sober, whose judgments we have no reason to suspect to be tainted by their imaginations, have from their own knowledge and experience made reports of this nature.
Glanvill, Ess. 6. s. 6.

Albertus Magnus, as I remember, with somewhat curiosity, and somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions and astrological calculations, supposeth that religion hath had its successive alterations and seasons according to certain periodical revolutions of the planets.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 168.

Others, whom avaricious thoughts bewitch,
Consume their time to multiply their gains;
And, fancying wretched all that are not rich,
Neglect the end of life to get the means.
Walsh. Retirement.

Every opinion concerning the divine nature or perfections which is in itself absurd and unintelligible, is just so far hurtful to religion, as it diverts men from the practice of the law of righteousness, by filling them with a childish and superstitious imagination, that God is pleas'd with their pretending or fansying that they believe they know not what.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 35.

While in dark ignorance we lay, afraid
Of fancies, ghosts, and every empty shade,
Great Hobbes appear'd, and by plain Reason's light
Put such fantastic forms to shameful flight.
Buckinghamshire. On Mr. Hobbes and his Writings.

And just as children ▪ surprised with dread,
And tremble in the dark, so riper years
Even in broad day-light are possess'd with fears;
And shake at shadows fanciful and vain
As those which in the breasts of children reign.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. ii.

Even in painting, a judicious obscurity in some things contributes to the effect of the picture; because the images in painting are exactly similar to those in nature; and in nature, dark, confused, uncertain images have a greater power on the fancy to form the grander passions than those have which are more clear and determinate.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

These shocking extremes, provoking to extremes of another kind, speculations are let loose as destructive to all authority, as the former are to all freedom; and every government is called tyranny and usurpation which is not formed on their fancies.—Id. Let. to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

I love a fanciful disorder
And straggling out of rule and order;
Impute not that to vacant head,
Of what I've writ, or what I've said,
Which imputation can't be true,
Where head and heart's so full of you.
Lloyd. A Familiar Letter of Rhymes.

For wit consists in using strong metaphoric images in uncommon yet apt allusions, just as antient Egyptian wisdom did in hieroglyphic symbols fancifully analogized.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s 4

But I find myself called upon, by the way, to justify the bishop against an unexpected accusation of a late author, who charges him with fancifulness and presumption.
Bp. Horne. Works, vol. i. Pref. to Sec. Edition.

Zounds! shall a pert, or bluff important wight,
Whose brain is fanciless, whose blood is white,
A mumbling ape of taste, prescribe us laws
To try the poets, for no better cause
Than that he boasts per ann. ten thousand clear.
Armstrong. Taste.

FANE. Lat. Fanum, a temple, from the Gr. Naov, by transposition avov, and prefixing the Digamma Favor. And vaov, from va-ειν, habitare, to inhabit, to dwell.

The habitation or abode, (sc.) of deified personages; the place in which their worship is performed or solemnized; a temple.

Also written phane, (qv.)

This most religious king [Ethelbert] with most devout intent,
That mighty fane to Paul, in London did erect,
And privileges gave, this temple to protect.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11

Yet I nor honours seek, nor rights divine,
Nor for more altars, or more fanes repine.
Croxall. Ovid. Met. b. xiii.

Proud castle, to thy banner'd bowers,
Lo! picture bids her glowing powers
Their bold historic groupes impart,
She bids th' illuminated pane,
Along thy lofty vaulted fane,
Shed the dim blaze of radiance richly clear.
Warton. Ode. For the New Year, 1785

And now imperial Charles, with grieving eye,
Beheld around his slaughter'd people lie;
His palace burning, and his fanes o'erthrown;
And desolation through the wretched town
Spread wide and wider.—Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xvi.

FANE, or VANE. } See VANE.

O stormy people unsad and ever untrewe
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8872.

FA'NFARON. FANFARONA'DE. } It. Fanfarone; "Fr. Fanfarer,—to sound or resound, as trumpets; to challenge or brave one with sound of trumpets; to brag, vaunt; make a great flourish or bravado," (Cotgrave.) The word, says Menage, is Arabic, and signifies light, inconstant, talkative; one who promises more than he can perform.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his owne virtues:
Sum pius Æneas famâ super æthera notus;
which, in the civility of our poets is the character of a fanfaron or Hector: for with us the knight takes occasion to walk out, or sleep, to avoid the vanity of telling his own story, which the trusty 'squire is ever to peform for him.
Dryden. On Dramatick Poesy.

The second notification was the king's acceptance of the new constitution, accompanied with fanfaronades in the modern style of the French bureaus, things which have much more the air and character of the saucy declamations of their clubs, than the tone of regular office.

Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs.

FANG, v. FANG, n. FA'NGED. FA'NGLESS. } Dut. Vangen; Ger. Fangen; A.S. Feng-an. See FINGER. To take, seize, or grasp. To under*fang*, i. e. to undertake, is not uncommon in our early writers. See UNDERFANG.

To Inglond with him thei cam, & led him vnto London,
The first dome he fanged, for treson was he drawen.
R. Brunne, p. 329.

——— Therefore he ABhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men.
His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines.
Destruction phang mankinde.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc 3.

Ham. There's letters seal'd: and my two school fellowes—
Whom I will trust, as I will adders fang'd,—
They bear the mandate.—Id. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

The wild bores of India have two bowing fangs or tuskes of a cubit length growing out of their mouth, and as many out of their forheads, like calves hornes.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 52.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very instruments of chasticement:
So that his power, like to a fangleese lion,
May offer, but not hold.
Shakespeare. Henry IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
With passing through the brakes and prickly thorn:
Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embru'd.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

——— Scarce sounds so far
The direful fragor, when some southern blast
Tears from the Alps a ridge of knotty oaks
Deep fang'd, and ancient tenants of the rock.
Watts. The Victory of the Poles.

In Poland, liberty is subverted, that fair portion of the creation seized by the relentless fangs of despotism; the wretched inhabitants reduced to the same situation with the other slaves of their new masters, and in order to add insult to cruelty, enjoined to sing Te Deum for the blessings thus conferred upon them.—Fox. Speech, Jan. 1794.

FA'NGLE, n. FA'NGLED. FA'NGLENESS. } Perhaps, says Skinner, from the old word Fangles, carpta, and this from A. S. Feng-an, suscipere, rem aggredi, capessere, (sc.) nova carpta. Applied to—

An attempt at something new; a foolish innovation.

The word is of rare occurrence without the epithet new.

As doeth the Tidife, for new fanglenesse.
Chaucer. The Legend of Good Women, Prol.

And thus it standeth the in hande to doo so muche the rather bycause thou art called to be a teacher of the Ghospel being not yet of full growen age, whiche is not wonte easylye to swerue into newe fangles, but thou hast ben brought vp (as it were) euen from thy youth in the fayth of the Ghospell and in good learnyng.—Udal. Timothy, c. 4.

The resydue that reste vnroulde,
the remnaunte that remayne
Of this new fangide fickle flocke,
woulde pose and put to paine
The fabling Fables tatling tongue.—Drant. Horace, Sat. 2.

They diminyshe noo part of their malestie, eyther with newe fanglenesse, or with ouer sumptuous expences.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 3.

Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it couers.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 4.

Their curious and inconstant new fangleness will not abide to stay it, but with an heady importunity labours to overhasten the pace of God.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Saul & Samuel.

In holyday gown, and my new-fangled hat,
Last Monday I tript to the fair;
I held up my head, and I'll tell you for what,
Brisk Roger I guess'd wou'd be there.
Cunningham. Holyday Gown.

FA'NNOM. Ger. Fane, pannus lineus; Goth. Fana. "Fr. Fanon; a scarf-like ornament worn on the left arm of a sacrificing priest," (Cotgrave.)

She is in lyke case florishinglye decked wyth golde, preciouse stone, and pearles, not only in her many folde kyndes of ornamentes, as is her coopes, corporasses, chesybles, tunicles, stooles, fannoms and miters, but also in mysterye of conterfeite godlinesse.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Take from your true subiects, the Pope's false Christ with his bels and bablinges, with his miters and mastries, with his fannoms and fopperies, and let them haue frely the true Christ again.—Bale. English Votaries, Pref.

FA'NTASY, v. FA'NTASY, n. FA'NTASYING, n. FA'NTASM. FANTA'STICK, adj. FANTA'STICK, n. FANTA'STICAL. FANTA'STICALLY. FANTA'STICALNESS. FANTA'STICKNESS. FANTA'STRY. } Fr. Fantaisie; It. and Sp. Fantasia; Lat. Phantasia; Gr. Φαντασια, from Φανταζεσθαι, and this from Φαινεσθαι, to appear. See FANCY, and PHANTASM.

"Fr. Fantasier, — to imagine, devise, conceive, invent; cast about, think of, revolve in the mind; represent by imagination; also, to fancy or affect." (Cotgrave.)

Fantastical,—imaginary, whimsical, capricious. See the quotation from Sir J. Davies.

——— Bote swery grete othes
And fynde up foule fantesyes, and foles hem maken.
Piers Plouhman, p. 3.

We wimmen han, if that I shal not lie,
In this matere a queinte fantasie.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prol. v. 6098.

Wherof diuers fantasies
Upon his great holinesse
Within his herte he gan impresse.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

For he fantasieth thus: In case thei go to wracke, what then? I haue no losse thereby. My wage is safe, & though I lose some deale thereof, I had rather lose it, than to cope & fight wt ye woulfe, for another manes cattel.
Udal. John, c. 10.

In fredome was my fantasie,
Abhorring bondage of the minde,
But now I yelde my libertie,
And willingly myselfe I binde.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Lover, &c.

Howeuer God's hand dealeth heere in this world in punishing his enemies, or howsoeuer the image of things not seene but fantasied, offer themselues to the secret cogitation of man, his sences being asleepe, by the operation or permission of God, working after some spirituall influence in our imaginations: certaine it is, that no dead man materialie can euer rise againe or appeare, before the iudgement date.
Fox. Martyrs, p 206. Appearing of Dead Men.

I passe ouer the fantasieng of formes, accidentes, outwarde elementes, miraculous changes, secrete presences, and other like forced termes, whereof Tertullian knoweth none.—Jewell. Replie to Mr. Hardinge, p. 465.

But they that so thinke after Austen's minde, do take awaye the truthe of his naturall bodye, & make it a very fantasticall bodye from ye which heresie God delyuer his faithful.—A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 54.

Ne they be not in cõmune (as fantastical foles wolde haue all thynges) nor one man hath not all vertues, and good qualities.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 1.

Where fantasy, near hand maid to the mind,
Sits and beholds, and doth discern them all;
Compounds in one things different in their kind;
Compares the black and white, the great and small.
Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try;
Where some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some in her fantastic eye.
This busy power is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With fluttering wings do keep her still awake.
Sir John Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 20.

For however in matter of sensation, it [my soul] sees by the eyes, and hears by the eares, and imagines by those fantasms that are represented unto it; yet when it comes to the higher works of intellectual elevations, how doth it leave the body below it.
Bp. Hall. Temptations Repelled, Dec. 1.

And what else shall they heare from all the Russians, fantastiques, and Frenchefied wanton dames that live about them, but this opprobrious censure, that they are become professed Puritans.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act. viii. sc. 7.

And if that any drop of slombring rest
Did chaunce to still into her weary spright,
When feble nature felt herselfe oppresst,
Streightway with dreames, and with fantastike sight
Of dreadfull things, the same was put to flight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c. 2.

Yea, through the indiscretions and inconsiderateness of some preachers, the fantastry and vain-babble of others, and the general disposition of the people to admire what makes a great show, and pretends to more than ordinary spirituality; things are in many places come to that pass, that those who teach Christian vertue and Religion, in plainness and simplicity without senseless phrases, and fantastick affectations, shall be reckon'd for dry moralists, and such as understand nothing of the life and power of godliness.—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

Thy trumpet such supposed to advance
Is but as those fantastically deem,
Whom folly, youth, or frenzy doth intrance.
Drayton. Legend of Robert Duke of Normandy.

Nor is this corruption happened to the Greek language, as it useth to happen to others, either by the law of the conquerot, or inundation of strangers; but it is insensibly crept in by their own supine negligence and fantastickness.
Howell, b. ii. Let. 57.

Dear, from thine arms then let me fly,
That my fantastic mind may prove
The torments it deserves to try
That tears my fix'd heart from my love.
Rochester. A Song.

Our pains are real things, and all
Our pleasures but fantastical;
Diseases of their own accord,
But cures come difficult and hard.
Butler. Weakness and Misery of Man.

You must know he has got his estate by the China trade in the East Indies, and at that time grew so fantastically fond of the manners, language, habit, and every thing that relates to those people, that he prefers 'em not only before those of his own country, but all the world besides.
Rowe. The Biter, Act i.

He hath indeed in this last book of his, to my great amazement, quitted that glorious title. Not that I dare assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.
Tillotson. Works, Pref.

Haste thee, Nymph! and hand in hand,
Bring fantastic-footed Joy,
With Sport, that yellow tressed boy.
Warton. On the Approach of Summer

Though a false philosophy was permitted for a season to raise up her vain fantastic front, and to trample down the Christian establishments and institutions, yet, on a sudden, God said, "Let there be light, and there was light."
Erskine. Speech for the Rev. Mr. Markham.

Such is the fantastical and unjust inequality between mass and mass, in this curious repartition of the rights of representation arising out of territory and contribution.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

'Twas sweet of yore to see it play
And chase the sultriness of day,
As springing high the silver dew
In whirls fantastically flew,
And flung luxurious coolness round
The air, and verdure o'er the ground.—Byron. The Giaour.

FA'NTOM. See PHANTOM, and FANCY, and FANTASY.

Parfay, thought he, fantome is in min hed.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5457.

FAP. Mr. Douce says, that fap certainly means drunk, as appears from the Glossaries; and Mr. Nares declares, that he has met with it in no Glossary: and in this he is not singular. Goose-berries are in some counties called feabes or feaberries, and in Suffolk, fapes; whence Mr. Moore suggests that we may be helped to the meaning of the word. Fap, (sc.) intoxicated with goose or fea-berry wine, and thus (generally) drunk. Fea-berry, Skinner thinks, may be so called from fean, gefean, gaudere, to gladden; because these berries are pleasing both to the sight and palate.

Bar. And being fap, sir, was as they say casheerd; and so conclusions past the car-eires.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act I. sc. 1.

FAR, adj. FAR, ad. FA'RNESS. } Goth. Fairr, fairra; A.S. Feor. feorre, feorrest; Dut. Verra; Ger. Ferr; from the A.S. Far-an, to go: and meaning—

Gone; gone to a distance, removed, remote. See AFAR.

Farther and farthest are probably a corruption of further and furthest, (qv.) The regular comparison of far, being farrer, farrest.

Far is much used—prefixed.

And the kynge's tresour he delde eke aboute fer & ner
R Gloucester, p. 167

For in the farreste stude of Affric geandes while fette
Pike stones for medycine, & in yrlond hem sette.
Id. p. 146

& thou ert comen fro ferne.—R. Brunne, p. 193

He said, Now sall I die
Help knyghtes if ge may, I may no ferrer go.
R. Brunne, p. 44.

Wide was his parish, and houses far asonder,
But he ne left nouht for no rain ne thonder
In sikenesse and in mischief to visite
The ferrest in his parish, moche and lite,
Upon his fete, and in his hand a staf.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 497.

And if y leeve hem fasting into her hous thei schulen fayle in the weye for summe of hem cummen fro fer.
Wiclif Mark, c. 8.

This peple honoureth me with lippis but her herte is fer fro me.—Id. Matt. c. 15.

Gan I behold besely
And I woll tell you redely
Of thilke images the semblaunce
As farre as I haue remembraunce.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Alla goth to this inne, and as him ought
Arraied for this feste in euery wise,
As fer-forth as his conning may suffice.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5519.

The fend (quod he) you feeche body and bones,
As fer-forthly as ever ye were foled,
So mochel wo as I have with you tholed, [suffered.]
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7127.

Als farre as euer he might see
With Abraham. Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Fyrst I consider the labour that this woman tooke in her great and ferre journey.—Fisher. Seven Psalmes, Ps. 143.

He passed farre his grandfather in synne (in that he blaspheimed the very God) in worshiping & doing reuerent behauours to his false Gods and images, and prophaning or abusing ye holy vessels.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

So the matter was brought to thys passe, that Cesar would not suffer his horsmen to stray any farneese from his maine battell of fotemen.—Golding. Cæsar, fol. 119.

Cri. Nay, but where is't? I pr'ythee, say.
Hor. On the farre side of all Tyber yonder, by Caesar's gardens.—B. Jonson. Poetaster.

The equalitie or inequalitie of dayes, according to the neereness or farness from the equinoctiall, &c.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. i. c. 2.

If therefore there be any, who, under colour of the blessed name of Christ, subvert his doctrine, annihilate his authority and our salvation; it is so far from being our duty to unite ourselves to them, that, on the contrary, we are obliged to part with them.
Daillé. Apology for the Reformed Churches.

FARCE, v. FARCE, n. FA'RCEMENT. FA'RCICAL. FA'RCICALLY. } Fr. Farcir; Lat. Farcire, to stuff or cram. With respect to farce, the noun, it is said, by Menage, to be a mixture or medley of various sorts of viands; and applied, (with the It. Farsa,) to a species of comedy, quod rerum varietate farsa sit: because it is stuffed or filled with a variety of things, or with incidents of various kinds. See his Dict. Etym. and Orig. della Lin. Ital. in vv. Farce and Farsa.

To stuff, to cram. See FORCEMEAT.

His tipet was ay farsed ful of knives
And pinnes for to given fayre wives,
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 233.

Farce not thy visage in no wise,
For that of loue is nat themprise;
For loue doth haten, as I finde,
A beautie that cometh nat of kinde.—Id. Rom. of the R.

Which was farforth farsed, stuffed & swollē wᵗ venemous heresies.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 314.

Neuer was there puddyng stuffed so full of farsynge, as his holye feelynge faythefull folke are farsed full of heresies.
Id. Ib. p. 614.

He loued not these counterfaiting plaiers of farces and mummeries, and yet lesse trewandes, that ben natural fooles, luglers, and iesters for pleasure.—Golden Boke, c. 14.

The substance of the whole is nothinge else but flatteringe, and auancinge of the see of Rome, farced vp, and set out with lies and without shame.
Jewell. Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 238.

Besides, they could wish, your poets would leave to bee promotars of other men's iests, and to way-lay all the stale apothegmes, or old booke, they can heare of (in print, or otherwise,) to farce their scenes withall.
B Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Ind.

They often spoil a good dish, with improper sawce, and unsavory farcements.—Peltham, pt. 1. Res 93.

Farce is that in poetry, which grotesque is in picture. The persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind.—Dryden. Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

Farce-scribblers make use of the same noble invention, [laughter] to entertain citizens, country gentlemen, and Covent-Garden fops.—Dryden. Par. of Poetry and Painting.

By farce I understand, that species of the drama whose sole aim and tendency is to excite laughter.
Hurd. On the Provinces of the Drama, Introd.

So that whether the Alchemist be farcical or not, it will appear, at least, to have this note of farce, "That the principal character is exaggerated."—Id. Ib. c. 4.

FARD. FA'RDING, n. } Fr. Farder; of uncertain etymology. Menage derives it from the Lat. Fucus, thus: Fucus, furcardus, fuardus, fardus, fard: an etymology which, his editor says, cannot possibly be received. Cotgrave says, it is properly ceruse or white lead.

Painting, also, any coloured or adulterate beauty.

Truth is a matron: error a curtizan: the matron cares onely to concile love by a grave and graceful modesty, the curtizan with philtres and farding.
Bp. Hall. Sermon at Thebald, Sept. 15, 1628.

These present us with the Skeleton of History, not merely clothed with muscles, animated with life, and bearing the bloom of health upon its cheek, but instead of carrying a higher flush of health upon its cheek, and shewing a brighter beam of life in its eyes, rubbed with Spanish wool, painted with French ford, and exhibiting the fire of falsehood and wantonness in its eyes.—Whitaker. Review of Gibbon's Hist.

FA'RDEL. Fr. Fardeau; It. Fardello; Sp. Fardel; Dut. Fardeel; from the Lat. Farcire, to stuff, cram, or pack close.

A package, a bundle.

Heaping burden upon burden, ye laye vpō the shoulders of the simple people, a whole fardel vnpossible to be borne.
Udal. Luke, c. 11.

Which riches whiles the souldiers violently spoiled, they strowed the wais ful of packs & fardels, which they would not touch, in respect of the couetous desire they had to things of greater value.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 41.

The Atheuians being come down unto the haven of Pirœa, he made as though Pallas target (on the which Meduza's head was graven) had been lost, and was not found with the image of the Goddess; and feigning to seek for it, he ransacked every corner of the galleys, and found a great deal of silver which private persons had hidden amongst their fardels.—North. Plutarch, p. 103.

You could hardly cross a street but you met him puffing and blowing, with his fardel of nonsence under his arm, driving his bulls in haste to some great person or other to show them.—Dryden. Remarks on the Empress of Morocco.

——— But never more,
O happier thought! can we be made the same
It is enough in sooth that once we bore
These fardels of the heart—the heart whose sweat was gore.—Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4

FARE, v. FARE, n. FAREWE'LL, v. FAREWE'LL, adj. FAREWE'LL, n. } A.S. Far-an, to go. Fare, in Fare-well, is the imperative of Far-an, to go or to fare. "So it is equally said in English, How fares it? how goes it?" (Tooke.) And, consequentially, How is it with you; how proceed, or succeed you; what do you get; how are you treated; how provided for.

To go or move on, to proceed, to advance, to succeed; to be treated or provided for.

Fare, the n.—the sum paid for going, for the passage. Also, treatment, provisions.

Fare, in the second example from Chaucer, may be interpreted by the word, ado; made ado; and seems (as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes) to have been derived from the French verb, Faire. For other instances, see Mr. Tyrwhitt's Gloss. to Chaucer.

The past part. is Fared, far'd, fart.

——— He toke galeis tuenty
And busses that were gode o hundreth of the most,
To fare opon the flode, to wait wele bi that coste.
R. Brunne, p. 104.

My godes that he has thare, my men diliuere of hond,
And distorbe not our fare, we salle to the holy lond.
Id. p. 158.

Grete wer the parties, that ferd in to the felde.—Id. p. 60.

Foure kyngtes it herd, withouten any more
To Canterbiri thei ferd, & slough Thomas right thore.
Id. p. 131.

So it fareth by ech a persone, that possession forsaketh
Piers Ploughmen, p. 268.

Ryght so ferde Reson by the, for thi rude spoche.
Piers Ploughman, p. 227.

Moost dere brother of alle thingis I make preier that thou entre and faire welefulli, as thi soule doith welefulli.
Wiclif. 3 Jon.

Beloved, I wish in al thinges that thou prosperedest and faredest well, euē as thy soule prospereth.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

She thanketh him upon hire knees bare,
And home unto hire husbond is she fare,
And told him all, as ye han herd me say.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,850.

For which the wardein chidde and made fare,
But ther of set the miller not a tare:
He craked bost, and swore it n'as not so.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 3997.

And if you liketh knowen the fare
Of me, whose wo there may no wight diseriue
I can no more. Id. Troilus, b. v.

Farewel physike: go bere the man to cherche.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2762

For he, whiche thanke deserue wolde
Unto this lady gothe and tolde
Of his message, howe it ferde.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

For of the Goddes perueiance
It felle hym on a daie perchance
That he in all his proude fare,
Unto the forest gan to fare
Among other. Id. Ib. b. i.

For since I came to Pharao to speak in thy name, he hath fared foule with this folke, and yet thou hast not delivered thy people at all.—Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 5.

And sir, they say they nat ben acustomed to go farre afote, wherefore they sende you worde, that if ye wyll sende the your horses, they wyll come to what place ye will apoynt them to fyght wyth you, and to kepe their day. Fayre fared, quoth the constable, we are nat in mynde to do to our enemys so moche auantage, as to send to thē our horses.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 369.

For as the soyle of Gallia was not to bee compared with the soyle of Germanye, so the vsuall fare of Germanye was not to be compared with the fare of Italia.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 24.

And therewithall she said vnto the child: farewel my own swete sonne, God send you good keping, let me kiss you ones yet ere you goe, for God knoweth when we shall kis together agayne.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 51.

We truckt with them for a few skinnes and dartes, and gaue them beads, nailes, plumes, needles, and cardes, they pointing to the shore, as though they would show vs great friendship but we little regarding their curtesie, gaue them the gentle farewell, and so departed.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 117

It fortuned as they together far'd,
They spide where Paridell came pricking fast
Upon the plaine, the which himselfe prepar'd
To giust with that braue straunger knight a cast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10

For as a fierce, courageous mastiff fares,
That having once sure fasten'd on his foe,
Lies tugging on that hold, never forbears,
What force soever force him to forego
The more he feels his wounds, the more he dares.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Here sent she up her dolphins, and they plyde
So busily their fares on every side,
They made a quicke returne
Browne. Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Thus we to beasts fall from our noble kinde,
Making our pastur'd bodies all our care,
Allowing no subsistence to the Minde,
For Truth we grudge her as a costly fare.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 1

——— Where, past the noblest street
He to the forest gives his farewell, and doth keep
His course directly down into the German deep.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 15.

The stranger now counts not the place so good,
He bids farewell, and saith, "The silent wood
Shall me hereafter from these dangers saue,
Well pleas'd with simple vetches in my caue."
Beaumont. Horace, Sat. 6.

Phil. ——— She called for music,
And begg'd some gentle voice to tune farewel
To life and griefs Christalla touched the lute,
And wept the funeral song.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iv. sc. 4

But as a bark, that in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to,
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

Yet, labouring well his little spot of ground,
Some scattering pot-herbs here and there he found,
Which, cultivated with his daily care,
And bruis'd with vervain, were his frugal fare.
Dryden. Virgil. Georg. b. iv.

Your answer yesterday from the Chancellor was about rejecting your Speaker by the King's prerogative. And will you sit down and give up your right for a compliment? if so, farewell chusing a Speaker for the future.
Parliamentary History. Charles II. an. 1678, 9.

The hardy veteran, proud of many a scar,
The manly charms and honours of the war,
Who hop'd to share his friend's illustrious doom,
And in the battle find a soldiour's tomb,
Leans on his spear to take his farewell view,
And, sighing, bids the glorious camp adieu.
Tickell. On the Prospect of Peace.

If joys hereafter must be purchas'd here
With loss of all that mortals hold so dear,
Then welcome infamy and public shame;
And, last, a long farewell to worldly fame.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

The question itself is, whether the peace now proposed, such as it is, be better, or not, than a continuation of hostilities?—Whether, according to a familiar mode of speech, we may not go farther and fare worse.
Windham. Speech. Peace of Amiens, Nov. 4, 1801.

Then farewell love, and farewell youthful fires!
A nobler warmth my kindled breast inspires
Far bolder notes the list'ning wood shall fill:
Flow smooth, ye rivulets, and ye gales, be still.
Jones. Solima. An Arabian Eclogue.

There Harold gazes on a work divine,
A blending of all beauties; streams and dells,
Fruit, foliage, crag, wood, cornfield, mountain, vine,
And chiefless castles breathing stern farewells.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

FA'RINA. } Fr. Farineux, from Lat. Fa-
FARINA'CEOUS. } rina, meal, from far, corn; far molitum.

See the quotations.

Some fly with two wings, as birds and many insects, some with four, and all farinaceous or mealy-winged animals, as butter-flies and moths.—Brown. Vul. Errours, b. iii. c. 15.

Mankind take as aliment all the parts of vegetables; but their properest food, of the vegetable kingdom, is taken from the farinaceous, or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants, as oats, barley, wheat, &c. &c.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 3. Prop. 4.

This is divided into many cells which contain a great number of small seeds covered with a red farina.
Grainger. The Sugar-Cane, b. iv. Note.

FARM, v. } Fr. Ferme, which Menage
FARM, n. } derives from the Lat. Firmus,
FA'RMER. } (q.d.) un lieu ferme, un clo-
FA'RMERESS. } serie; to a firm place, an en-
FA'RMERY. } closure: fermer, the verb, also
FA'RMERSHIP. } denoting to enclose, to fortify.
FA'RMHOLD. } And he rejects the opinion of FA'RMING, n. } Spelman, adopted by Skinner, that it is from the A. S. Fearm-ian, feormian, victum præbere, to supply food; husbandmen or farmers (as they allege) not originally paying their landlord money, then very scarce, but food (victum) and other necessary articles. And see the quotation from Blackstone, who adopts the opinion of Spelman and Skinner. By application, to farm, is—

To hire or take upon hire; to hold or take for certain rents or sums to be rendered, or other considerations required and performed; to let land or other property upon such conditions; to till or cultivate land.

Vor wanne eny byssop, other abbod deyde in Engelond,
Her londes & her rentes the kyng huld in hys honde,
And other wule to ferme tok. R. Gloucester, p. 414.

He was the beste begger in al his hous:
And gave a certaine ferme for the grant,
Non of his bretheren came in his haunt.
Chaucer. The Prologue.

In every good towne there is a drunken tauerne, called a Eursemay, which the emperour sometime letteth out to farme, & sometimes bestoweth for a yeare or two on some duke or gentleman in recompense of his seruice.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 314.

As for example: farmes or granges which containe chambers in them, more than fiftie cubits in length, tenne in breadth, and twentie in height.—Id. Ib. p. 577.

God saue you good man, pray you be nat miscontented, for I take you for a farmour of myne in Essexe, for ye are lyke him.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. p. 96.

The moonke anon after went to the farmarie, & there died (his guts gushing out of his belly) and had continuallie from henseforth three moonkes to sing masse for his soule, confirmed by their generall chapter.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 233. King John poysoned by a Monk.

These were the lucky first fruites that the Ghospel brought forth for his rent and fermership.—Udal. Acts, c. 2.

Geue eare thou proud rich man what euer thou bee, that heapest together possessions and landes vpon landes: that art in euery corner a builder of houses, of fermeholdes, of mainours, & of palacies.—Id. Luke, c. 2.

And whan the messagiers called vpon them, euery man made his excuse: one sayed, he must go se his mainour or farme-place, yt he lately bought.—Id. Matt. c. 22.

And for our coffers, with too great a Court,
And liberall largesse, are growne somewhat light,
We are enforc'd to farme our royall realme,
The reuennew whereof shall furnish vs
For our affayres in hand.—Shakes. Rich. II. Act I. sc. 4.

As when two greedy wolves doe break by force
Into an heard, farre from the husband farme,
They spoil and rauine without all remorse:
So did these two through all the field their foes enforce
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

Cato would have this point especially to be considered, that the soil of a farme (situate as hath been said) be good of itselfe, and fertile also, that neare unto it there be store of labourers: and that it be not farre from a good and strong towne; moreover, that it have sufficient meanes for transporting of the commodities which it yieldeth, either by vessels upon water or otherwise by waines upon the land.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 5.

He [Lycurgus] met one day as he went in the street, a publican or farmer of the forrein taxes and tribute for the city, who had laid hands upon the Philosopher Xenocrates, and would have laid him to prison in all haste, because he paid not the duties imposed upon strangers.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 762.

He had no lesse regard of the cittles fermours of tillage, and other undertakers and pursuiours of the publike corne, then of the people and commons of the cittie.
Id. Suetonius, p. 58.

19 May, 1672. Went to Margate: and the following day was carried to see a gallant widow, brought up a farmoresse, and I think of gigantic race, rich, comely, and exceedingly industrious.—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

Crofts, with several others in the kingdom, was appointed to raise money for the king, by farming out his lands there, and selling the wards and marriages of such as were in the king's homage.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

The jury was not called out of the toun, for they would not trust it to them; but out of the farms of the chapel.
Burnet. Hist of the Reformation, an. 1543.

So Cymon led her home, and leaving there,
No more would to his country clowns repair,
But sought his father's house with better mind,
Refusing in the farm to be confined.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

Of which number one was named Matthew, or Levi, who was before a publican, or one of the farmers of the publick revenues belonging to the crown in that place.
Bp Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 84.

They have even voluntarily put their own territory, that is, a large and fine country adjacent to Madras, called their jaghire, wholly out of their protection; and have continued to farm their subjects, and their duties towards these subjects, to that very Nabob, whom they themselves constantly represent as an habitual oppressor, and a relentless tyrant.
Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Farm or feorme, is an old Saxon word signifying provisions, and it came to be used instead of rent or render, because antiently the greater part of rents were reserved in provisions: in corn, in poultry, and the like, till the use of money became more frequent. So that a fermer, firmarius, was one who held his lands upon payment of a rent or feorme: though at present by a gradual departure from the original sense, the word farm is brought to signify the very estate or lands so held upon farm or rent
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

The farming out of the defence of a country being wholly unprecedented and evidently abused, could have no real object but to enrich the contractor at the Company's expense.
Burke. Articles of Charge against Warren Hastings.

FARRA'GE. } Lat. Farrago, from Far.
FARRA'GO. } See the quotation from Pliny.
FARRA'GINOUS. } Applied generally to—
Any kind of medley or mixture.

As for that kind of dredge or farrago which commeth of the refuse and light corne purged from the red wheat far, it ought to be sowne very thicke with vetches, otherwhiles mingled among.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 16.

I return you my most thankful acknowledgments for that collection, or farrago of prophecies, as you call them, (and that very properly in regard there is a mixture of good and bad,) you pleased to send me lately.—Howell, b. iii. Let 22.

For being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sex, and ages it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many waies inconsistent with truth.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

The whole treatise is a farrago, or collection from several other writers, as Ruffinus, Cæsarius, Pope Gregory I., and Ivo Carnotensis.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 315.

This latter, which makes up the large farrago of dreams, is the only kind that needs an interpreter, on which account Macrobius defines a dream to be the notice of something hid in allegory, which wants to be explained.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 4.

But the great farraginous body of Popish rites and ceremonies, the subject of my learned friend's letter from Rome, had surely a different original.—Id. Ib. Notes.

FA'RRIER, v. } Fr. Maréchal ferrant; It.
FA'RRIER, n. } Fabbro ferraio, or ferraro,
FA'RRIERY. } Lat. Ferreus faber, a worker in iron; from the Lat. Ferrum, iron. Applied to—
A shoer of horses; and also, to one who undertakes the care or cure of the diseases of horses.

Poppæa, the empresse, wife to Nero the Emperour, was knowne to cause her ferrers ordinarily to shoe her coach horses and other palfries for her saddle (such especially as shee set store by, and counted more daintie than the rest) with cleane gold.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 11.

So tooke she chamber with her son, the God of Ferrary.
With firme doores made, being joyned close, and with a privy key,
That no God could command but Jove.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

Some of whom might, without disparagement to their profession, do it an usefull piece of service, if they would be pleased to collect and digest all the approved experiments and practices of the farriers, graziers, butchers, and the like, which the ancients did not despise.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 169.

But Cæsar, at his return, knowing him to be a cheat, banished him out of Italy: since, instead of being what he pretended to be, he was found only a farrier whose true name was Herophilus.—Middleton. Life of Cicero, s. 8.

FA'RROW, v. } A. S. Farh, porcellus, a
FA'RROW, n. } farrow, a little hog, a young pig, (Somner.) The Lat. Verres, or, with equal probability, (as Skinner acknowledges) the Lat. Parere, has furnished this word. Jamieson decides for the Lat. Verres. But the word may originally be northern. Fara, (A. S. Far-an, to go,) is used in Swed. for coire; and in A. S. Fare, the noun, is, familia, comitatus; and faras, generationes, (see Hire and Lye,) and may have been applied to any fruit or produce of coition, of going or coming together; and thus, to any thing begotten or brought forth.

To bear or bring forth.

There were three sucking pigs serv'd vp in a dish,
Ta'en from the sow as soon as farrowed,
A fortnight fed with dates, and muskadine,
That stood my master in twenty marks a piece.
Massinger. The City Madam, Act ii. sc. 1.

They farrow commonly twice a yeare; they bee with pigge four moneths, one sow may bring at one farrow twentie pigges, but reare so many she cannot.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

Wish'd woman might have children fast,
And thought whose sow had farrow'd last.
Swift. Baucis & Philemon

FA'RTHER, v. } See FAR, and FURTHER;
FA'RTHER, adj. } of which latter farther is pro-
FA'RTHER, ad. } bably a corrupt manner of FA'RTHEST. } writing and speaking.
FA'RTHERMORE. } To move further; to ad-
FA'RTHERMOST. } vance, to promote.

And ferthirover, for as moche as the caitif body of man is rebel both to reson and to sensualitee, therefore it is worthy the deth.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Then goth he farther & declareth wherfore he washed theyr feete, as he before said to Saint Peter, that he should know it afterward.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1517.

Fardermore, saith Saynt Johan, I sawe an infynite hoost of angels beholdinge the face of the heuenlye father.
Bale. Imagy, pt. 1.

The Hiero-cæsarienses fetchte their matter from a farther beginning, inducing their Dianapersica, and a temple dedicated by King Cyrus.—Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 83.

These enterprises were very much farthered by the copie of a letter that went commonly through mens hands (true or false I wote not) of Otho now deceased, to Vespasian.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 244.

No sooner was the moone risen, but in order of battaile they marched on farther, having for their guides such as were skilfull in their wayes.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 364.

So in the church findeth he in way of spiritual instruction and education, all these degrees nearer and farther off, untill he come unto that farthermost, of being all united under the universal government of Christ his vicar.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 641.

2 Noble. Yet here's the comfort, my lord; many times,
When it seems most near, it threatens farthest off.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act iv.

If it had been true that I had taken their verses for my own, I might have gloried in their aid; and like Terence, have farthered the opinion, that Scipio and Lælius joined with me.—Dryden. A Discourse on Epic Poetry.

You have therefore no reason to think I had partially represented Eusebius, when I said, that he made no farther use of the observation about the article, than to prove against Marcellus that the Λογος is a distinct real person, and not the Father himself.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 178.

My opinion is, that the printer should begin with the first Pastoral, and print on to the end of the Georgiques, or farther if occasion be, till Dr. Chetwood corrects his preface, which he writes me word is printed very false.
Dryden. To Mr. J. Tonson, Dec. 1697.

I cannot certainly indicate to the reader any particular work of this master, [John of Padua,] but these imperfect notes may lead curious persons to farther discoveries.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 5.

Nay farther, if we consider all circumstances, it is to me a full proof that the laws now in being are sufficient for punishing those players who shall venture to bring any seditious libel upon the stage, and consequently for deterring all the players from acting any thing that may have the least tendency towards giving a reasonable offence.
Chesterfield. Miscellaneous Pieces, No. 46

Parliament will certainly rise the first week in April at farthest, when his Majesty proposes going to Hanover, to settle the tranquility of the north.—Id. Ib. b. ii. Let. 47.

FA'RTHING, i. e. a fourth-ing or dividing into four parts, (Tooke, ii. 28.) Any very small thing; as in Chaucer, "No ferthing of grese;" not the smallest spot, (Tyrwhitt.)

Eche wer a thousand marc, & nout a werthing lasse.
R. Gloucester, p. 507.

That Roberd, ne non hise, salle ask Henry the Kyng
This dette on non wise, peny no ferthing.
R. Brunne, p. 99.

——— Peers gan swere
Ich nolde fonge a ferthing, for Seynt Thomas's shryne.
Piers Ploukman, p. 121.

A ferthing worth of fynkel sede, for fastinge dales.
Id. p. 106.

Hire over lippe wiped she so clene,
That in hire cuppe was no ferthing sene
Of grese, whan she dronken hadde hire drauht.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 134.

Wherefore wyllinge to helpe to the furtherance of so godly an intente, and to bringe in, at the leaste, my farthinge into the treasorye of the Lord, I haue loked ouer againe my sayde translation, and haue amended the places that wer faulty.—Udal. Ep. to Titus, Advert.

Too popular is tragic poesie,
Straining his tip-toes for a farthing fee,
And doth beside on rymeless numbers tread,
Unbid iambics flow from careless head.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 4.

Sept. 5. A proclamation went forth that the Butchers in London should sell beef, and mutton, and veal, the best for a penny farthing the pound, and necks and legs at three farthings the pound, and the best lamb eight-pence the quarter.—Strype. Memorials. King Edw. VI. an. 1552.

The money I received from the king was for bringing a libel, called "The King unveiled, and the Lady Portsmouth's articles." I call God to witness, I never had a farthing charity from the king.—State Trials. E. Fitzharris, an. 1681.

See how you like my rueful face.
Such you must wear if out of place.
Crack'd is your brain to turn recluse
Without one farthing out of use. Green. The Grotto.

FA'RTHINGALE, or FA'RDINGALE. Fr. Vertugalle, vertugadin; It. Vertugalla; Sp. Vertugado. Menage and Minshew—a vertendo. The latter gives as a reason,—quod circum lumbos in gyrum vertatur.

She passed not vpon daintie fare, not costly raiment, nether coulde away with Romish Prēchhodes (otherwise called myters) nor with foistie farthingales coarded ouer the alter.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 63.

Phan. By my faith, that spoils all the former, for these farthingales take up all the room now-a-days.
Brewer. Lingua, Act iii. sc. 6.

B Mak. I have such a treacherous heart of my own, 'twil throb
At the very fall of a farthingale.
Middleton. The Mayor of Quinborough.

Our grandmothers, they tell us, wore
Their fardingale and their bandore.
King. The Art of Love, pt. xii.

A pale Roman nose, a head of hair loaded with crowns and powdered with diamonds, a vast ruff, a vaster fardingale, and a bushel of pearls are the features by which every body knows at once the picture of Queen Elizabeth.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

FA'SCES. FA'SCICLE. FA'SCICLED. FASCI'CULATED. Lat. Fascis, a bundle. Fasces is applied to the bundle of rods carried before the Roman consuls; and thence generally, to an emblem of authority.
Fascicle, (Lat. Fasciculus,)—a small bundle.

The British Amphitrite, smooth and clear,
In richer azure never did appear;
Proud her returning Prince to entertain
With the submitted fasces of the main.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

You must submit your fasces to theirs, and at best be contented to follow with songs of gratulation, or invectives, according to your humour, the triumphal car of those great conquerors.—Burke. On the Affairs of Ireland.

Flowers fascicled, fragrant just after sunset and before sunrise, when they are fresh with evening and morning dew, beautifully diversified with tints of orange-scarlet, of pale yellow, or of bright orange, which grows deeper every day, and forms a variety of shades according to the age of each blossom, that opens in the fascicle.
Sir W. Jones. On Select Indian Plants.

Asterias, or sea star, with twelve broad rays finely reticulated, and roughened with fasciculated long papillæ on the upper part.—Pennant. British Zoology, vol iv.

FA'SCIATED. FASCIA'TION. Lat. Fascia, a band or ligature.
Bound or banded, swathed.

For the armes not lying fasciated, or wrapt up after the Grecian manner, but in a middle distention, the including lines will strictly make out that figure.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

Which yet to prevent or restore, was of equal facility unto that rising power, able to break the fasciations and bands of death, to get clear out of the cere cloth, and an hundred pounds of ointment, and out of the sepulchre before the stone was rolled from it.—Id. Urn Burial, c. 1.

And even diadems themselves were but fasciations, and handsome ligatures, about the heads of princes.
Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

FA'SCINATE, v. FASCINA'TION. Fr. Fasciner; It. Fascinare; Lat. Fascinare; from Gr. Φασκω καιν-ειν, oculis, sive aspectu occidere; and, in confirmation of this etymology, Vossius quotes Pliny: "Isogonus addeth, that such like these are among the Triballians and Illyrians, who with their very eiesight can witch (effascinent) yea and kill those whom they looke wistly upon any long time," (Holland, Plin. i. 155.) Cotgrave calls it, To eye-bite.

To charm, enchant or bewitch, by the eyes, the looks; generally, to charm or enchant; to hold or keep in thraldom by charms, by powers of pleasing.

They may judge this severing from such temptations and fascinating vanities, to be a state of real infranchisement, and esteem the other giddy agitation of their persons up and down the world, floating upon their fancies, but as a prisoner's dream.—Mountague. Dev. Ess. pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 5.

All such as will not be impudent strangers to the discerning spirit of that king who first cherished him, cannot but impute it to a certain innate wisdom and vertue that was in him, [the Duke of Buckingham,] with which he surprised, and even fascinated all the faculties of his incomparable master.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 193.

We see the opinion of fascination is ancient, for both effects; of procuring love; and sickness caused by envie: and fascination is ever by the eye.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 944.

But when his tender strength in time shall rise
To dare ill tongues, and fascinating eyes;
This Isle, which hides the little Thunderer's fame,
Shall be too narrow to contain his name.
Dryden. Britannia Redivivo.

The ancients imagined that spitting in their bosoms three times, (which was a sacred number) would prevent fascination.—Fawkes. Theocritus, Id. 6. Note.

Books are not seldom talismans and spells,
By which the magic art of shrewder wits,
Holds an unthinking multitude enthrall'd.
Some to the fascination of a name
Surrender judgment hoodwinked.—Cowper. Task, b. vi.

FA'SCINE. Fr. Fascine, a bundle (sc. of sticks.) See FASCES.

Where it was found impossible, orders were given to the horse of the second line of the allies to provide themselves, each squadron with twenty fascines, to facilitate the passage.
Tindal. History of England. Anne, an. 3. (1704.)

Our general had been busy for the last two hours, throwing up an entrenchment with fascines, earth-bags, and chevaux de frize.—Swinburne. Spain, p. 42.

FA'SHION, v. FA'SHION, n. FA'SHIONABLE. FA'SHIONABLENESS. FA'SHIONABLY. FA'SHIONER. FA'SHIONIST. FA'SHIONLY, adj. Fr. Façoner; from the Lat. Fac-ere, to make. Of fashion in clothes, Skinner says,—that form which the tailor gave the clothes, dum faceret.

To form or make, to shape or mould; to fit, to suit.

Fashion, in dress or appearance, action or speech, is that form or manner, mode or method, most commonly followed at a particular time or place.

Her necke was of good fassion
In length and greatnesse by reason.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

As Dunstane in the house of a widdowe was fashionynge a prieste's stoole, his harp hanging vppon the wal without touchinge sounded the note of Gaudet in celis
Bale. English Votaries, pt i.

Notwithstāding the faithful father leaueth not the matter on this fashion, but also taketh awaye soche fonde ymaginacions as wolde cause mē to surmyse, yᵗ Christe s bodye shulde be in mo places at ones then one.
A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 55.

Fashions in all our gesterings,
fashions in our attyre,
Which (as the wise haue thoughte do cum,) and goe in circled gyre.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 2.

In whiche act, as the man is principall doer and fashioner, so is the womanne, but the matter and sufferer.
Udal. Corinth. c. 31.

Fashiond above within their inmost part,
That neither Phœbus' beams could through them throng,
Nor Æolus sharp blast could worke them any wrong.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

It would be helpful to us if we might borrow such authority as the rhetoricians by patent may give us, with a kind of Promethean skill to shape and fashion this outward man into the similitude of a body, and set him visible before us, imagining the inner man only as the soul
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

To make good infanterie, it requireth men bred, not in a seruile or indigent fashion, but in some free and plentifull manner.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 74.

No beauty to be had, but in wresting and writhing our own tongue? Nothing is fashionable, till it bee deform'd; and this is to write like a gentleman.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

These are the hard tasks of a Christian, worthy of our sweat, worthy of our rejoycing, all which that Babylonish religion shifteth off with a careless fashionableness, as if it had not to do with the soul.—Bp. Hall, Ep. 3. Dec. 3.

Neither doth Saul goe fashionably to worke, but does this service heartily and painfully, as a man that desires rather to effect the command, then please the commander.
Id. Cont. The Meeting of Saul & Samuel.

I now begin to see my vanity.
Shine in this glasse, reflected by the folie!
Where is my fashioner? my feather man?
My linnener? perfumer? barber? all?
B. Jonson. Staple of Newes, Act v. sc. 1.

And thou gallant, that readest and deridest this madnesse of fashion, if thine eyes were not dazzled with like fashions at home and a more fashionly monster of thy self.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, c. 9. s. 2.

The literal translation of the Greek [of Irenæus] may run thus, "man, being created and fashioned, is made after the image and likeness of the uncreated God: the Father designing and giving out orders; the Son executing and creating; the Holy Ghost supplying nutriment and increase."
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 311.

But had Joseph out of a vain vagrant humour, travelled into Egypt (as some do into France, and other places) only to see the country, and to learn fashions (as the word goes) and in the course of his travels fallen in Potiphar's house, probably he might have given that lewd proposal another kind of entertainment, and while he was learning fashions not to have refused so fashionable a temptation.

South, vol. vi. Ser. 5.

The latter are little trifles, scarce welcome to any but children in understanding, and admired only for a gaudy effeminate dress, which will quickly either be sullied or worn out; and a fashionableness which will within a short while perhaps be ridiculous.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 306.

But as a rich and glittering garment may be cast over a rotten, fashionably diseased body, so an illustrious, commanding word, may be put upon a vile and ugly thing; for words are but the garment, the loose garments of things

South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

For some, who have his secret meaning guess'd,
Have found our author not too much a Priest.
For fashion-sake he seems to have recourse
To Pope, and Councils, and Tradition's force.

Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Unskillful he to fawn, or seek for pow'r,
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour;
Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

He [an etymologist] brings it from facio, which, among other things, signifies to do. Hence, he supposes people of fashion, according to the old derivation of lucus a non lucendo, to be spoken of those who do nothing: but this is too general, and would include all the beggars in the nation.

Fielding. The Covent Garden Journal, No. 37.

Taste is now the fashionable word of the fashionable world. Every thing must be done with Taste. that is settled; but where and what that Taste is, is not quite so certain.—Chesterfield. Common Sense, No. 16.

The difference is greater or less, according as the fashionableness and scarcity of the wine render the competition of the buyers more or less eager.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

For he, with all his follies, has a mind
Not yet so blank, or fashionably blind,
But now and then perhaps a feeble ray
Of distant wisdom shoots across his way.—Cowper. Hope.

FA'STEN, v.
FAST, adj.
FAST, ad.
FA'STENER.
FA'STENING, n.
FA'STLY.
FA'STNESS.

Goth. Fast-an, A. S. Fastnian, afæstnian, figere, firmare, confirmare, to fix, to fasten or make firm and fast. Dut. Vasten; Ger. Vesten, festen; Sw. Faesta.

